He furnished many facts from memory to the historian, and published some valuable sketches of early times. In the summer of 1812 he was called into the service of his country as brigade major, in Gen. E. W. Tupper's brigade of Ohio militia. This brigade was composed of troops mostly from Southern Ohio, and was called into service shortly before the surrender of General Hull at Detroit. The men were ordered to the frontier—Ohio then being a frontier State—and spent most of the winter near Urbana and McArthur's block-house. They suffered much from bad quarters, bad food, poor clothing and the severity of the winter. Later they were advanced to Fort Meigs, where they remained until their return of service expired. The service rendered was important and severe,

*He was afterward, upon his return to this country, settled at Marietta.

Major Nye returned home in the spring of 1813, and during the following summer engaged successfully in business at Putnam, Ohio.

Few men ever lived who have established a better character for uprightness of purpose and unbending integrity. He scorned the idea of bending his principles to expediency or of smothering his honest convictions. He was a reader, a thinker and a keen observer of men. For 30 years he was a member of the Presbyterian Church, and to know the right was with him to do it. Always the friend of the slave, he was an advocate of immediate emancipation.

In 1835 his life and property were threatened by a Zanesville mob. There was a little band of Abolitionists in Putnam, of which he was one, and when the mob threatened to burn the town, he saw no reason to change his views, but armed himself under the authority of the mayor, and purposed to fire at the word of command. He would have braved the dungeon or the stake in defense of the inalienable rights of man.

He was born at Chesterfield, Massachusetts, June 8, 1786, and died at Putnam, Ohio, February 15, 1859.

CAPT. JASON R. CURTIS was born in 1785 at Warren, Litchfield County, Connecticut, removed to Marietta in 1792, and married Mary Clark, daughter of Maj. John Clark. Capt. Curtis served during the War of 1812, as aide-camp of Governor R. J. Meigs, with the rank of captain. Jason R. Curtis, father of Hon. William F. Curtis, died in Marietta September 12, 1834.

CAPT. ROBERT C. BARTON came to Marietta during the War of 1812. We have not been able to obtain any facts as to him, except that he commanded a company under General Harrison at the battle of Tippecanoe, and was mentioned by General Harrison in his report of that battle for gallant conduct. He was afterward, during the same war, first lieutenant under Capt. Timothy Buell in a company of mounted volunteers, and was also on duty with Governor Meigs, probably as aid-de-camp.

CHAPTER XXVI.

THE CIVIL WAR.

CAUSES OF THE WAR—LEADERS, NORTH AND SOUTH, POLITICAL CAMPAIGN OF 1860—POSITION OF THE PEOPLE OF WASHINGTON COUNTY AS TO THE WAR—THE UNION BLUES RESPOND TO THE CALL FOR TROOPS—THE MILITIA SYSTEM OF OHIO—APPEAL TO THE GOVERNOR FOR AID—CAMP PUTNAM ESTABLISHED—GOVERNOR DENNISON'S PLAN OF A CAMPAIGN SUCCESSFUL—M. & C. RAILROAD GUARDED—GRIM-VISAGED WAR—THE FIRST GREAT CALL TO ARMS—FIRST THREE YEARS' COMPANY FROM THE COUNTY—CAMP TUPPER ESTABLISHED—MILITARY COMMITTEE APPOINTED—BEGINNING OF GOVERNOR TOD'S ADMINISTRATION—FIRST VOLUNTEER KILLED IN BATTLE—SHILOH—WASHINGTON CITY IN DANGER—PARKERSBURG THREATENED—THE DRAFT—CAMP MARIETTA ESTABLISHED—CORINTH, ANTIETAM AND SOUTH MOUNTAIN—DEPARTMENT OF WEST VIRGINIA ESTABLISHED AT MARIETTA—EMANCIPATION—UNION LEAGUE—CHANCELLORSVILLE—GETTYSBURG—VICKSBURG—THE MORGAN RAID—BUFFINGTON'S ISLAND—THE MILITIA—CHICKAMAUGA—OHIO NATIONAL GUARD—ATLANTA CAMPAIGN—MARCH TO THE SEA—SHENANDOAH VALLEY—BATTLE YEAR, 1864—1865—CELEBRATION OF THE FALL OF THE REBELLION.

Reader, let us stand together on a crest of the Alleghanies, commanding a splendid prospect to the westward. It is a bright clear day in September, the year 1788. Here lies the course of the wagons of the mountains up from the east and down to the west, the grand thoroughfare of emigration, now scarcely begun westward. We see spread out before us a grand expanse of forest and stream. In the far distance from north to south is the Mississippi River. On the hither side, like a silver thread from the northeast to the southwest, winds the Ohio River. On the north, like burnished shields, lie the great lakes Erie, Huron, Michigan and Superior, and spread out between these bounds, like an open scroll, lies the Northwest Territory. The pleasing fancy cherished so long in Connecticut and Virginia that those old commonwealths owned strips of country from the Atlantic westward to the South Sea, or more familiarly the Pacific, have been exploded and abandoned, and the claims of those States in the Northwest Territory formally released.

Look at the vast expanse of forest in the foreground, undulating like the green waves of the ocean and traversed by silvery streams flowing to the Ohio or to the lakes. Westward in the far distance the country breaks away from the forests and spreads out into broad savannahs, studded with groves, and beyond the eye detects the sheen of the Father of Waters.

This vast domain possesses the finest climate of the continent. In a similar climate the human race has attained its highest development. Neither too hot or too cold, but finely tempered as a Damascus blade. Mother of energy, endurance, enterprise and civilization, this beautiful land lying before us will certainly be fruitful and productive. Vast in extent, encumbered by the finest timber, the growth of centuries, it is now a wilderness. The primeval forest clothes it like a garment. The great valley of the Ohio falls away to the southwest with nothing to disturb its placid stillness but here and there an Indian guiding his rude canoe.

Excepting a few settlements on the hither side of the Ohio River, the whole is one vast solitude—but hold, there at the junction of the Ohio and Muskingum, the blue smoke curls up, and a clearing appears. The white man has come to take possession, and he has come to stay; now through the aisles of the stately forest is heard the woodman's axe. The Indian pauses on the trail while hunting the bear, the deer, or the wild turkey, to listen; and he creeps through the thicket to obtain a view of the newcomers, who are soon to dispossess him and bring a nobler race to take possession. But, reader, think not these fertile acres, fraught with such great possibilities, have been overlooked and forgotten.

This settlement is but the result of a cause that went before. That cause was as subtle in its results as the falling dew or gentle rain, and came as silently. Every inch of land, from the great lakes on the north to the Ohio on the south, is held as firmly as though caught by hooks of steel, and every man, woman and child destined to be born in and to occupy and cultivate this land can not, if they would, escape its influence. The Ordinance of 1787, the second great charter of American progress and liberty, has silently gone into possession. Law, enthroned in a temple built without hands, has assumed sovereignty over a vast domain, having as yet but few occupants, but waiting for the teeming millions of the future. "Law it is," as the Hindoo says, "which is without name or color, or hands or feet, which is the smallest of the least and the largest of the large; all, and knowing all things; which hears without ears; sees without eyes; moves without feet, and seizes without hands."

Let us now turn to the southward, there lie Virginia and Kentucky soon to be settled from eastern Virginia and the Carolinas by a brave and hardy race, but wedded to the institution of human slavery. There is but the narrow Ohio between the north land and the south, yet even at this early date the forerunners of the millions to come are separated very widely in sentiment by the institution referred to. And their children shall grow up with the cherished sentiments of their parents, instilled into their minds at their mother's knee, to be intensified by each political contest, and confirmed as time advances in their various opinions. Time will show to what dread extent two great contending ideas will carry the sections. Oh! pine on the crest of storm-swept Alleghany sigh, and ye mothers in the far off clearings weep for the evil days to come, and that so fair a patrimony should be destined to witness so fierce a struggle between such noble men, children of a common brotherhood,

When this soft turf, that rivulet's sands,
Were trampled by a hurrying crowd,
And fiery hearts and armed hands
Encountered in the battle-cloud.

Ah! never shall the land forget
Th'w-gushed the life blood of her brave
Gushed, warm with hope and courage yet,
Upon the soil they fought to save.

CAUSES OF THE WAR.

It is necessary in writing the military history of the first county and the oldest settlement in the Northwest Territory to bring prominently to the front that great ordinance which has so largely shaped the destinies of the populous commonwealths of Ohio, Illinois, Michigan and Wisconsin, especially as that ordinance contained the germinal cause that made the States named side with the government, when the crisis of revolution came.

Let us therefore examine very briefly that part of the ordinance which pertains to the subject in hand—the cause of the War of the Rebellion. That it was no sudden growth all will readily admit. The men, south of the Ohio and north of the same, were generally of a common origin, Americans all. It will not do to say that these States would have gone with the North in 1861, had there never been such an ordinance as the one referred to. Indiana, Illinois, and Ohio, at least, could have been Slave States as easily and consistently as Virginia and Kentucky, having substantially the same climate, the same products and therefore the same demand for slave labor; but the fundamental law governing the territory, out of which all these States were erected prohibited slavery, and thus each State Constitution contained a clause of similar prohibition.

The article of the ordinance referred to is as follows:

ARTICLE 6. There shall be neither slavery nor involuntary servitude in the said Territory otherwise than in punishment of crimes, whereof the party shall have been duly convicted: provided always that any person escaping into the same from whom labor or services is lawfully claimed in any one of the original States, such fugitive may be lawfully reclaimed and conveyed to the person claiming his or her labor or service, as aforesaid.

The Jeffersonian ordinance of 1784, providing for the government of Kentucky and the Southwest, contained nothing in regard to slavery; an amendment had been offered, putting an end to the peculiar institution after the year 1800, but failed of passage by one vote, the delegate of one State, New Jersey, being temporarily absent. On what a slender thread often hang the destinies of millions! The Resolutions of 1798, as passed by the Kentucky Legislature were pre-eminently a "States Rights" document. They were a natural outgrowth of the doctrine of slavery; and as that institution increased so did the "States Rights" heresy.

We quote the first resolution which is a sample of all the others:

Resolved, That the several States composing the United States of America are not united on the principle of unlimited submission to their General Government, but that by a compact under the style and title of a Constitution of the United States, and of amendments thereto, they constituted a General Government for special purposes—delegated to that Government certain definite powers, reserving, each State to itself, the residuary mass of right to their own self-government; and that whenever the General Government assumes undelegated powers, its acts are unauthorized, void, and of no force; that to this compact each State acceded as a State, and as an integral party, its co-States forming as to itself, the other party; that the Government, created by this compact, was not made the exclusive or final judge of the extent of the powers delegated to itself; since that would have made its discretion, and not the constitution, the measure of its power; but that as in all other cases of compact among powers having no common judge, each party has an equal right to judge for itself, as well of infractions, as of the mode and measure of redress.

Similar resolutions were passed by the Legislature of Virginia the year following. They were afterward repealed, but not until they had largely sown the seed of rebellion and revolution.

In the earlier days of the republic, the great question of slavery, and especially of "States Rights," had already been formulated and stated in terms that were not materially altered during all the great political contests that followed.

Patrick Henry, June 4, 1788, in the Virginia Convention called to ratify the new Constitution of the United States, said:

That this is a consolidated government is demonstrably clear; and the danger of such a government is, to my mind, very striking. I have the highest veneration for those gentlemen (the framers of the constitution); but, sir, give me leave to demand, What right had they to say, We, the people? My political curiosity, exclusive of my anxious solicitude for the public welfare, leads me to ask who authorized them to say, We, the people, instead of we, the States? States are the characteristics and the soul of a confederation. If the States be not the agents of this compact, it must be one great, consolidated National government of the people of all the States. * * * I need not take much pains to show that the principles of this system are extremely pernicious, impolitic and dangerous.

Washington, in his Farewell Address, said:

Citizens by birth or choice of a common country, that country has a right to concentrate your affections. The name of American, which belongs to you in your national capacity, must always exalt the just pride of patriotism more than any appellation derived from local discriminations.

Alexander Hamilton, June 18, 1787, in the debate on the new constitution, said:

The general power, whatever be its form, if it preserves itself, must swallow up the State governments, otherwise it would be swallowed up by them. It is against all the principles of good government to rest the requisite powers in such a body as Congress. Two sovereignties cannot exist within the same limits.

The people of the States formed out of the Northwest were by education and tradition, and more especially by virtue of the moulding power of a great fundamental law, opposed to slavery and to the doctrine of "States Rights." They naturally went with the North; and we believe we are justified in saying that the North could not have succeeded in the war for the Union if the States named had refused to cooperate.

LEADERS, NORTH AND SOUTH, POLITICAL CAMPAIGN OF 1860.

Previous to the war, through much discussion and many political campaigns, the people of the States named, as well as the balance of the great North, had settled, as far as they were concerned, the momentous question forced upon them by the slave power. The venerable John Quincy Adams, ex-President, in his gallant fight for the right of petition in Congress, was one of the first to take up the gage and begin the battle, and he was successful. Then followed that noble galaxy of leaders, Joshua R. Giddings, William Lloyd Garrison, John Greenleaf Whittier, Henry Ward Beecher, William Cullen Bryant, Wendell Phillips, Charles Sumner, Gerritt Smith, Cassius M. Clay, Owen Lovejoy, Benjamin Lundy and a host of others, who appealed to the North in the name of liberty and humanity, and eventually carried the great majority to victory in the Presidential campaign of 1860.

The people of the South were also led by men of ability, who fought long and hard for what they considered truth and justice, and they have left their mark upon their generation. Some of them, indeed, in certain localities, are deemed martyrs to a noble cause, lost, and hopeless though it be, forever. Beginning with John C. Calhoun, the great advocate and expounder of the "States Rights" doctrine, there were Jefferson Davis, Judah P. Benjamin, Henry A. Wise, R. Barnwell Rhett, Alexander H. Stephens, James M. Mason, John Slidell, John B. Floyd, William L. Yancy, Robert Toombs, Isham G. Harris, and many others, under whose teachings and leadership the great States of the South were induced to try the arbitrament of the sword to decide their grievances.

Thus the two sections of the country with the leaders named and entertaining the principles they did, glowing with the white heat of a great political campaign, gradually drifted asunder. In the South, free speech was denied to Northern men. Northerners at the South on business were violently treated and hundreds returned, bringing the story of their treatment home. John B. Floyd, Buchanan's Secretary of War, had quietly removed cannon and other munitions of war to Southern arsenals, and these and many other events which occurred in swift succession, enhanced the excitement. Early in January, 1861, news of an alarming character began to be received, and the "War News" headings of the newspapers had come to be so common as to be regularly looked for by the people.

Mr. Dennison, Governor of Ohio, while reviewing the situation in his message to the Legislature, January 7, 1861, says:

The patriotism of the country is justly alarmed. The unity of the government is denied. Doctrines subversive of its existence are boldly advocated and made the basis of State action, under the pretended right of a State to secede from the Confederacy at its pleasure, in peace or war, constitutional liberty is imperilled, revolution is meditated, and treason is justified. * *

On the occasion of my inauguration I felt it to be my duty to warn my countrymen of those hostile designs against the Federal Union. But then they were in speculation only. Now they are in act. Shall they be consummated? Shall the National Government be degraded into a mere league between independent States, existing only by their appearance, subordinate to them and subject to be destroyed at the pleasure of any State of the Confederacy? Or shall it continue to be maintained, as it has always been maintained, as a government proper—sovereign within its prescribed sphere—as the States are sovereign within their prescribed spheres--founded on the adoption of the people as were the States, and creating direct relations between itself and the individual citizens, which no State authority has power to impair or disturb, and which nothing can dissolve but revolution.

POSITION OF THE PEOPLE OF WASHINGTON COUNTY AS TO THE WAR.

The people of Washington County fully endorsed these sentiments. They had stood arrayed against each other in the two great political parties, but when the Union was threatened, irrespective of party they gave their allegiance to the government of the fathers. On the evening of January 8, 1861, pursuant to a call for a union meeting, the people of Marietta and vicinity, including a number of citizens from the adjoining county of Wood, (West) Virginia, assembled at the Court House, in Marietta, and the mayor, Hon. William A. Whittlesey, was chosen chairman; Hon. Thomas W. Ewart and Charles F. Buell, secretaries. Thereupon, a committee consisting of Melvin Clarke, Arius Nye, Rufus E. Harte, Andrew W. McCormick, Davis Green, Douglas Putnam, William West, David C. Skinner and Charles F. Buell, were appointed to draw up resolutions expressive of the sentiment of the people on the condition of the country. The meeting then adjourned to 2 P. M., January 12th. On the day named a large number of citizens of Washington County and of Wood county, (West) Virginia, without distinction of party, assembled at the Court House, and the committee, through Melvin Clarke, reported resolutions at length, condemning the secession movement and affirming their devotion to the cause of the Union.

The following are the second and seventh resolutions passed:

no warrant in the constitution, but, on the contrary, is in its effects fatal to the Union, and subversive of all the ends of its creation; and in our judgment secession is revolution; and while we fully admit the right of revolution for the causes set forth in the Declaration of Independence, or for others of equal force, and while we are grieved to say that the Government and citizens of several States, both north and south, have been guilty of acts of great injustice toward others, yet facts do not exist which warrant a resort to that last and final remedy, revolution, and we have still an abiding faith in the capacity and adaptation of the General Government to redress all grievances suffered by its citizens, whatever their origin.

VII. Notwithstanding former differences of opinion on this subject, for the purpose of making a final adjustment of the unfortunate controversy now raging in our country, we are willing to accept as the basis of a compromise, the reenactment of the eighth section of the Missouri Compromise act; or we are willing to adopt the principle, that the whole subject of slavery in the territories, shall be left to be determined by the will of the bona fide residents of such territory, provided they also be left free to elect their own officers, executive and judicial, as well as legislative.

The history of the progress of public sentiment in this county is but a repetition of that of many others in the State. The people of Ohio would have compromised with the south gladly; but it is an old story, often told, how the Southern leaders disregarded all overtures. They were bent on having a new government founded upon the institution of human slavery and awaited their opportunity. In the fullness of time that opportunity came.

But, reader, come again with me to the crest of high Alleghany and let us look once more westward. It is noontide of a beautiful day in April, 1861. Seventy-three years have elapsed since the first settlement of the Northwest Territory. To the southwest are the broad valleys of the Ohio. In the far west, by the shore of the Mississippi, is Illinois. On the north, like burnished shields, lie the great lakes. The forests have melted away. No more does the Indian lurk in the thicket or guide his rude canoe on the broad Ohio; but the great Anglo-Saxon has built his domicile beside every stream, and his cattle graze upon the hills and in all the valleys. On the Ohio the great steamer, bearing the commerce of populous States, pursues her way. Instead of a few hamlets, we see the populous valleys of Virginia. In place of the lone wagon trail over the mountains, is the wonderful railroad, connecting Ohio and the East. Instead of the small settlement at the mouth of the Muskingum, we see a thriving city, and the county of Washington with 36,500 inhabitants.

The wilderness has been subdued, and out of it has grown Ohio with 2,340,000, Indiana with 1,355,000, Illinois with 1,750,000, Michigan with 750,000, and Wisconsin with 780,000 inhabitants. Cultivated fields interspersed with woodland extend as far as the eye can reach and the thrifty son of toil has made the land "to blossom like the rose." Peace and prosperity have wrought their perfect work. Great cities have sprung up. Thousands of manufactories giving employment to a million of workmen, dot the land. Institutions of learning are scattered here and there over the whole land. Unexampled prosperity! Amazing transformation! Surely this Northwest Territory has more than fulfilled its early promise. Sad, that the wheels of industry should be stopped, the plough left standing in the furrow, the college deserted, and that the red hand of war should paralyze a State in the full tide of prosperity, sending mourning to so many hearts and disaster to so many homes; but such is war.

At the hour of 4:30 on the morning of April 12, 1861, the boom of a mortar on Sullivan's Island, in Charleston harbor, gave notice to the country and to Major Anderson, pent within the wall of Fort Sumter, that the war was begun. The news was not wholly unlooked for, yet the dread reality was difficult to comprehend. Soon, however, the patriotic impulse of the people obtained control and carried everything before it. Washington County was thoroughly aroused.

THE UNION BLUES RESPOND TO THE CALL FOR TROOPS.

The news of the beginning of hostilities reached Marietta on Saturday morning, April 13th, and on Monday morning the call of the President for 75,000 men was received. Capt. Frank Buell, of the Union Blues, a Marietta company, called his men together the same evening, and the company promptly tendered their services, were at once accepted by the Governor, and ordered to march on the following Monday morning. The company was soon filled more than to the maximum, officers elected and preparations made for departure at the date named.

As this was the first company from this county to offer its services to the government and as this was an event of great moment at the time, we give the names of this company and a short sketch of the events attending their departure.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Captain Frank Buell, First Lieutenant Dennis O'Leary, Second Lieutenant William H. Bisbee, elected major of Eighteenth Ohio volunteer infantry, May 29, 1861; Second Lieutenant Wallace Hill.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

First Sergeant John Theis, Second Sergeant Daniel Y. Hill, Third Sergeant Owen O'Neal, Fourth Sergeant Theodore G. Field, First Corporal Wallace W. Withrow, Second Corporal John D. Holden, Third Corporal Samuel C. Skinner, Fourth Corporal George B. Haskins, Musician Louis Fourgeres, Musician Manly Warren, Musician Ebenezer Corry.

PRIVATES.

Mordecai Amos, Eli P. Boring, Frank H. Bosworth, R. H. Bull, William Bryan, Robinson Blain, Jacob Bower, Benjamin Bragg, Absalom Boring, George R. Burris, Alexander H. Bukey, John F. Booth, Guy Barrows, Henry Claus, John Clark, Peter L. Coniffe, Stephen H. Collins, Charles Clogston, George Coon, Joseph Corey, E. Corey, Daniel Close, John Chase, John Calvert, David Craig, Thomas Dyar, David Dow, George W. Devin, Juthro Davis, Thomas Driscoll, Thomas C. Daily, Hannibal Dibble, D. T. Deming, Henry Eastman, William N. Foulke, Thomas Fisher, Jeremiah Fairhurst, Daniel Goodman, Allen Green, William Gay, L. R. Gren, Milton Gillingham, Henry Henning, John Henning, George B. Haskins, Albert Hamilton, Thomas Hatfield, William Holden, Henry Kellner, August Kropp, Herman Ketchner, Lafayette La Grange, Philip Loufman, Levi F. Lamotte, Frederick Living, J. H. Lapham, Milton H. Laughlin, Augustus Morris, John Mahnklin, Wesley Miner, John N. Miner, George Moore, Wilbur F. Morse, Leonidas R. Meriber, Lewis Monroe, Thomas McNamara, John McCullough, George McCadden, John Neigham, Reuben L. Nye, Thomas North, James S. Parker, Anthony Padden, Wallace W. Pixley, William Parker, George Pixley, Michael Padden, James Phelps, Jewett Palmer, Jr., Thomas Phelps, Daniel Quimby, Philetus S. Ripley, George W. Ridgeway, John Ranger, William Robinson, Walter Rappert, Milton Regnier, William Ranger, James H. Sniffen, William Stewart, Daniel Soler, John L. Shaw, Elijah G. Smith, Peter Sherrer, Jacob Shaw, William Spence, Smith, Peter Sherrer, Jacob Shaw, William Spence, Ordram Snier, Horatio Stark, John W. Smith, Robert Shiers, Henry B. Stanton, James Stanley, William N. Scott, William H. Snodgrass, Charles W. Sprengle, Tarnus J. Stewart, Hiram S. Doud, Shadrach James Turner, Thomas R. Thorniley, Samuel Tracey, Abner Tucker, T. W. Terry, Oscar Underwood, George Vickers, James Voschel, Gordon B. West, Charles B. Wetson, Jacob Wood.

CEREMONIES ON DEPARTURE OF FIRST COMPANY.

Quite a number, whose names appear in the above list, were not accepted, being under age, over age, or physically unfit for service. On Sunday evening before the departure of the company, a meeting was held at the Congregational Church in Marietta, members of all the other churches meeting at the same place.

The church was crowded with an earnest and attentive throng, seats being reserved at the front for the volunteers. They marched in. The choir sang the national hymn "My Country 'Tis of Thee." After which Rev. Dr. Wicks preached from the text—Isaiah xi: 4—a sermon full of patriotic zeal and devotion to country. The concluding part of his sermon was more directly to the volunteers.

Dr. Wicks was followed by Dr. L. G. Leonard, of the Baptist Church, who with Rev. Mr. Wakefield, of Harmar, and Rev. Mr. Mumford, of the Unitarian Church, occupied the pulpit. D. P. Bosworth, Sr., president of the Washington County Bible Society, then addressed the volunteers and presented each with a neat pocket edition of the New Testament. At the close of the ceremony Reuben L. Nye, one of the volunteers, ascended the pulpit stairs, "and responded in behalf of the company in an exceedingly appropriate and eloquent speech."

Dr. Leonard then closed the exercises with the benediction.

This was in the oldest church in Ohio, and these ceremonies are said to have been the most impressive and affecting ever witnessed within its walls.

Before the volunteers left for Columbus on Monday morning, the ladies of the city of Marietta presented them with a splendid silk flag. This was in the presence of an immense crowd on the commons, Melvin Clarke making the presentation speech and Capt. Frank Buell responding.

Thus cheered and encouraged, and with the benediction of the entire community upon them, the first company of volunteers from Washington County left for the war. Their progress up the Muskingum was like a triumphal march. People flocked to the landings to greet them as the steamer approached. At Lowell the entire population turned out, and cheer upon cheer was given. Speeches were made, and a purse of over sixty dollars was raised for them. After the boat was gone, Albert Chandler and Warner Green started a subscription paper to raise money for the equipment of a company, and for the support of the families of those who should volunteer. In one hour's time, $1,300 were subscribed, one man, James S. Stowe, pledging $500. At Beverly, the citizens had already formed a company of home guards of over 100 strong, and as the steamer approached they fired a salute. The Beverly brass band then played a patriotic air, and were followed by the Beverly vocal band, who sang the stirring song, "My Native Land." Speeches were made—George P. Buell responding on behalf of the company. It is said, on good authority, that Col. E. S. McIntosh, an old citizen, probably upon a timely suggestion, bought up all the underwear in town and presented it to the volunteers. The company went into quarters at Camp Jackson, Columbus, and were assigned to the Eighteenth Regiment as Company B, of that organization.

A company of volunteers of about 100 strong was organized at Beverly, April 23rd, called the Washington Guards. The following were the commissioned officers: John Henderson, captain; Thomas Ross, first lieutenant; Oliver H. P. Scott, second lieutenant. They became Company K, of the Eighteenth Regiment.

THE MILITIA SYSTEM OF OHIO.

Under the fostering care of Governor Chase, had, at the beginning of the war, grown to be an institution of some consequence, and in nearly every county of the State could be found one or more companies, with more or less proficiency in drill, depending on the length of time such companies had been organized and the efficiency of their officers.

When the war broke out, these military organizations were of great utility in furnishing men somewhat familiar with the military art, to take the lead in forming companies and regiments out of the mass of raw volunteers offered the State.

Ohio was, at the time, divided into military divisions. The Seventh Division comprised the counties of Fairfield, Hocking, Perry, Scioto, Lawrence, Jackson, Pike, Newton, Washington, Athens, Meigs, and Gallia. The whole of this large district was under the command of Maj. Gen. Jesse Hildebrand—headquarters at Marietta. This division was subdivided as follows: Fairfield, Hocking, and Perry counties, under command of Brig. Gen. N. Schleich—headquarters at Lancaster; Scioto, Lawrence, Pike, Jackson, and Vinton counties, under command of Brig. Gen. Peter Kinney—headquarters at Portsmouth; Washington, Athens, Meigs, and Gallia counties, under command of Brig. Gen. Robert A. Constable—headquarters at Athens.

General Hildebrand's staff was as follows: Col. A. W. McCormick, assistant adjutant general and division inspector; Col. John Marshall, assistant quartermaster general; Col. Melvin Clarke, assistant judge advocate general; Col. A. L. Haskins, assistant engineer-in-chief; Maj. J. B. Hovey, Maj. I. R. Waters, and Maj. W. B. Whittlesey, aids.

On April 22, 1861, in pursuance of orders received from Columbus, General Hildebrand issued his general order No. 1, calling on the people of the Seventh Division for 10,000 men. Whenever 80 men should be secured, they were authorized to form an infantry company, and if 40 men be secured, a light artillery company, and to elect one captain, one first lieutenant, one second lieutenant, four sergeants, four corporals, and two musicians. This was promptly responded to, more men being offered than could be used, under the President's call, the quota of the State being 13 regiments.

The language of the general order as to the disposition of the men was as follows:

All companies which may be organized in counties near the Ohio river to remain where organized, to defend the frontier, while all other companies will hold themselves in readiness to march when and wherever the President of the United States, through the Governor of Ohio, may direct.

General Hildebrand and his staff soon afterward tendered their service to the Government; but the general and the most of the members of his staff were destined to other duties, and to act important parts on widely separated fields, and in commands tried by the storm of battle, where the glory of a militia uniform was little thought of. The general himself died in the service, at Alton, Illinois. He was a man of good presence, brave, and did good service as commandant of a brigade at Shiloh. His career will be more fully noticed further on.

APPEAL TO THE GOVERNOR FOR AID.

During the first two years of the war there was great fear along the border and in Washington County, of raids by the Rebels. News came to Marietta on Sunday, April 21, 1861, that a large body of Rebels was about to descend on Parkersburg, and great alarm was felt as to the threatening attitude of affairs, and the following dispatch was sent to the capital:

MARIETTA, OHIO, April 21—5 P. M.

TO GOVERNOR, CINCINNATI.

It is rumored that Rebel troops are on their way to Parkersburg, Virginia. We do not know what credit to give this report. It is, however, reasonable to suppose that Parkersburg, being the terminus of one branch of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, will be made in any event a base of operations by the Rebel military, and that we are in danger of being overrun by foraging parties and perhaps worse events. We therefore feel that an absolute necessity exists of being at least prepared with a full supply of arms and ammunition, of which we are wholly destitute. We may also need more troops than can be raised on the border, and experienced drill officers. We shall at once organize a home guard, which we believe it to be of the utmost importance to arm. We want especially cannon, and as many as we can have. We think there can be no possible doubt of the existence of an overwhelming necessity for the occupancy of this point and Belpre, opposite Parkersburg, at once. A messenger will leave for Columbus to-night.

A. T. NYE,

Of Major General Hildebrand's staff.

The messenger sent was Beman Gates, Esq., who went to Columbus and laid the matter before the Governor, with what success will be seen further on.

On the next day, pursuant to a resolution passed by the city council of Marietta, on Saturday, April 20th, a large number of citizens of the county assembled at the court house to arrange for home defense. Two committees were appointed to carry out the objects of the meeting, one to raise money for the benefit of the families of volunteers, consisting of Hon. William R. Putnam, J. S. Sprague, and Henry Fearing; the other a committee of safety, consisting of Col. John Mills, William P. Cutler, William R. Putnam, Davis Green, Anselm A. Nye, Harlow Chapin, Rufus E. Harte, David C. Skinner, and the mayor, Hon. William A. Whittlesey.

Measures for the defense of the county, and especially of Marietta City, were adopted. Arms and ammunition were needed, and very few, if any, arms were to be had. Meanwhile, in order to utilize the means of defense at hand, two iron cannon, in the city, were put in readiness for active service, and an order was given to the foundry of A. T. Nye, Jr., to cast solid shot for fixed ammunition. In response to the dispatch and to the personal application of Mr. Gates, the Governor ordered the First Regiment, Light Artillery, Third Brigade, Fourth Division of Ohio volunteer militia, from Cleveland and vicinity, to report at Marietta for the defense of that point. The regiment was made up of six companies of 20 men each, and six guns, under the command of Col. James Barnett.

CAMP PUTNAM ESTABLISHED.

On Tuesday night, April 23rd, the regiment arrived and went into camp at the Fair Grounds. This was the first camp established, and was named Camp Putnam, in honor of Gen. Rufus Putnam, of the Revolutionary War. These were the first troops to arrive in Washington County. The next was the Fourteenth Regiment Ohio volunteer militia, raised in the Tenth Congressional District, and commanded by Col. James B. Steedman. Then came the Eighteenth Regiment, on its way to Virginia. The latter regiment was made up as follows:

Company A, Lawrence County Guards, Captain Caldwell; Company B, Lawrence County Guards, Captain Caldwell; Company C, Lawrence County Guards, Captain Caldwell; Company D, Vinton County Guards, Captain Caldwell; Company E, Lawrence County Guards, Captain Merrill; Company F, Meigs County Guards, Captain Curtis; Company G, Gallia County Guards, Captain Aleshire; Company H, Meigs County Guards, Captain Walker; Company K, Washington County Guards, Captain Henderson; Company L, Jackson County Guards, Captain Hoffman. Regimental officers, elected at Parkersburg, Virginia: Colonel, J. R. Stanley, of McArthur; lieutenant colonel, William Boiles, of Ironton; major, William H. Bisby, of Marietta; quartermaster, Beman Gates. Mr. Gates afterward resigned, and John C.

At this point it will be well to understand the situation. The Rebels had penetrated Western Virginia and pushed their forces along both branches of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, from Grafton westwards, toward Parkersburg, and along the northern branch toward Wheeling, burning bridges and trestle works as they went. This spread general alarm throughout Western Virginia to Wheeling, Parkersburg, and along the border in Ohio.

GOVERNOR DENNISON'S PLAN OF A CAMPAIGN SUCCESSFUL.

Governor Dennison resolved that the line of battle should not be on the border of Ohio, but along the natural line made by the Alleghanies. And this was against the advice of General McClellan, who counseled delay, but the Governor was positive, and his plan prevailed. Accordingly, on the 26th of May, the following movement was ordered: The Fourteenth Regiment, Colonel Steedman, stationed at Zanesville, and the Eighteenth, Colonel Stanley, stationed at Camp Jackson, were ordered to Marietta to support Barnett's Battery. The Seventeenth Regiment, Colonel Connell, stationed at Lancaster, was ordered to Zanesville. The Fifteenth Regiment, Colonel Andrews, stationed at Zanesville, was ordered to Bellaire, to await orders. The Sixteenth Regiment, Colonel Irvine, stationed at Columbus, was ordered to Zanesville to support Colonel Andrews. The Nineteenth Regiment, Colonel Beatty, and the Twenty-first, Colonel Norton, stationed at Cleveland, were ordered to Columbus, there to await orders. Colonel Steedman, with the Fourteenth and a part of Barnett's Artillery, crossed to Virginia on the morning of May 27th, arriving at Parkersburg at 11 o'clock, being the first troops to enter Southern territory, Ellsworth, with the New York Zouaves, entering Virginia from Washington at 2 P. M. After putting a quietus on the Secession element in Parkersburg, they moved out on the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, rebuilding bridges and trestle works as they advanced. Colonel Irvine, with his regiment at Bellaire, crossed the day following, and was joined by a regiment of loyal Virginians, under Colonel Kelley, and they pushed on out the northern branch of the Baltimore & Ohio, repairing and rebuilding bridges and trestles. The two columns met and formed a junction at Grafton, Virginia. After them the gallant sons of Ohio and Indiana went pouring into Virginia, driving the Rebels before them. Fifteen miles beyond Grafton, at Philippi, they fought the first battle of the war and gained a victory.

Thus, by the foresight and energy of Governor Dennison, was West Virginia saved to the Union, important railway communications recovered and held, and Ohio and the border protected from invasion and predatory warfare.

M. & C. RAILROAD GUARDED.

On the 23rd of June, pursuant to an order of the adjutant general of the State, the following militia companies arrived and were distributed along the railroad between the city of Marietta and Athens to guard the Marietta & Cincinnati Railroad, now known as the "old line." General McClellan feared that his communications would be interrupted and that his supplies might be cut off by the destruction of the bridges and trestle works on this railroad, which was an important matter at that time. These companies were: Company F, First Regiment, Captain Miller, 30 men; Company B, Second Regiment, Captain King, 30 men; Company F, Second Regiment, Captain Garrett, 30 men; Company D, Second Regiment, Captain Menken, 15 men; Company E, Third Regiment, Captain Buckner, 40 men; Company G, Third Regiment, Capt. J. H. Carter, 60 men. The whole under command of Lieut. Col. A. E. Jones. Afterwards four of these companies were relieved by four Washington County companies, one of which was the Union Blues company, recruited up after the three months' men had gone, commanded by Capt. William B. Mason; the Firearm Zouaves, Capt. S. F. Shaw—both companies from Marietta—one company from Harmar, Capt. Joseph B. Daniels, and one—the Belpre Guards—commanded by Capt. F. H. Loring, from Belpre. They were distributed along the railroad in squads, and were armed, clothed and subsisted the same as other volunteers. This service, although not especially dangerous, was important, and as these companies are not elsewhere recorded we give them below as far as possible to ascertain their names:

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Captain F. H. Loring; Lieutenant James King

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Orderly Sergeant A. P. Sherman, Sergeant J. L. O'Neal, John Mitchell, C. W. Stone, John Drain.

CORPORALS.

A. H. Browning, P. W. Simpson, E. M. O'Neal, A. D. Stone.

PRIVATES.

H. G. Allen, D. C. Allen, James R. Barrows, George Ballard, Daniel Breckenridge, William Baker, W. W. Botkin, William Berry, Samuel Barkley, Jacob

Clark, A. F. Downer, Moses Dugan, George Dunlevy, J. G. Ellenwood, Council Flowers, George Flowers, L. R. Forbes, George Gage, Alexander Galbraith, George Hutchinson, John Haddow, George A. Howe, John Hutchinson, D. B. Horton, C. B. Kirkpatrick, Fremont Kirkpatrick, Henry Kirkpatrick, Corwin H. Loring, George Lysle, George M. Cnaughey, Joseph Marsh, Joseph Miller, James Mendenhall, James McGaffey, F. F. Newport, J. R. Newport, M. Noland, Joseph Noland, F. Odenahan, E. R. O'Neal, William Powell, James Powell, Josiah Rutherford, Jacob Rutherford, B. B. Stone, Frank Stone, George G. Stone, William F. Shee, Joseph Sterlin, William F. Sayre, Henry Schram, Harrison Smith, John A. Shipe, S. C. H. Smith, Milton Stone, F. B. Simpson, Martin Tharp, John Thompson, William White, Noah Welch.

Roll of Capt. William B. Mason's Company D, in the First Regiment, Third Brigade, Seventh Division of Ohio volunteer militia, enrolled on the 27th day of July, 1861, and mustered into the service of the State of Ohio the 27th day of July, 1861.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Captain William B. Mason, First Lieutenant James McCaddon, Second Lieutenant James Lewis.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

First Sergeant W. L. Theis, Sergeants George W. Kennedy, Robert H. McKittrick, Louis Schmidt; Corporals Jacob Unger, John Mahuken, John Plug, William L. Porterfield; Bugler Louis Schlieker.

PRIVATE.

George Baldwin, Frank Braddock, Peter Beck, George Booth, John Burke, Frederick Becker, John Dow, John Danker, Henry Estman, John W. Eaton, David M. Grimes, William Hose, Seymour J. Hathaway, Andrew Holden, Luther M. Ingraham, David F. Jones, Frank E. Jett, Arthur Nye Kennedy, Joel Kennedy, David H. Lewis, Dennis Mulhane, John J. Medlicott, Patrick C. Meers, Frank McCaddon, Theodore McCaddon, Frederick Mahnken, Michael Manly, George W. Reynolds, John Ratgen, Nicholas Roeder, William Robinson, Frank Shafer, William W. Skinner, William H. Storrs, Richard Siebers, William Salzman, Samuel Tracy, Frank Towsley, Jacob Wood, J. Henry Wellbrook, Julius Wenland.

Muster-roll of Capt. Joseph B. Daniels' company, First Regiment, Third Brigade, Seventh Division, of Ohio volunteer militia, commanded by Maj. O. Bennett.

COMMISSIONED OFFICER.

Captain Joseph B. Daniels (both lieutenants refused to respond to the call).

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

First Sergeant Arthur B. Chapin, Sergeants William S. Judd, Diton Fearing, George Maxon; Corporals George Reppert, George Marsh, Abrah Daniels, Otis J. Chambers, Drummer John Knox.

PRIVATE.

Daniel Bingham, William Bingham, Joseph Boyd, John Chambers, Salmon Chambers, Charles Dugan, James Doughitt, William Dugan, John Edleston, Dennis A. Finch, Charles L. Gates, John Huff, Isaac Lucas, Solon Mathews, Horatio W. Mason, Thomas McCnamara, Henry E. Nugent, Samuel H. Niece, Madison J. Naylor, James S. Parker, William Parker, Samuel H. Putnam, Simon Readin, Byron P. Reppert, William W. Rice, Darwin A. Scott, William Snodgrass, William Tunncliffe, James Wright, Luther Wright, John L. Young.

GRIM VISAGED WAR.

We have now passed the opening chapter of the war as far as it relates to Washington County. This was the romantic period of the contest, if such a thing can be said of so grim a subject. The hardships, dangers and privations of active service had not been fully realized. The theory at first entertained that armed resistance could be put down in a three-months' campaign was soon dismissed, and the enormous strength of the Rebellion began to be understood.

THE FIRST GREAT CALL TO ARMS.

On July 21st the great battle of Bull Run was fought and lost, the flower of the Union Army destroyed, or turned into a fleeing rabble, and a great mass of war material swallowed up in the vortex of war. It was hard to believe this news, but what seemed at that time a dire disaster proved, in reality, a loud note of warning, and to that extent, at least, beneficial. It broadened the views of the administration as to war measures. Henceforward the war was to be carried on more aggressively, and on a gigantic scale. The President, on the day after the battle, issued a call for 500,000 three-years' men. Another outburst of patriotic feeling ensued. This was the first great call to arms. The country was stirred to its center, and the scenes of volunteering that followed were grand. It was from these 500 regiments that the vital power to crush the Rebellion came. They furnished the great bulk of the officers who finally led our armies to victory.

The Representative of this district at that time was Hon. William P. Cutler, who was attending a called session of Congress. Having received enquiries about raising a regiment in Washington County he telegraphed as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C. July 23, 1861

M. Clarke and J. Hildebrand:

Give me a full company of an infantry regiment of ready men in ten days. Can you raise one? I will bear all marketing expenses of raising it. Answer.

WILLIAM P. CUTLER

The response sent was that Washington County could and would do it.

This was the beginning of the Thirty-sixth Regiment, companies for which began to rendezvous immediately at Marietta.

THE FIRST THREE-YEAR'S COMPANY FROM THE COUNTY.

Col. John Groesbeck, of Cincinnati, had offered to raise and equip a regiment at his own expense, and the liberality of this offer attracted general attention and commendation. The companies for that regiment were about this time gathering at Camp Colerain, near Cincinnati. There was a company in Marietta known as the "Washington County Rifle Guards." They resolved to join Groesbeck's regiment. Lieut. W. H. Edgerton came from Newport with a battalion of men and joined the Guards, the election of officers resulted as follows:

John C. Fell, captain; William H. Edgerton, first lieutenant; Henry W. Shepard, second lieutenant.

This was the first three-years' company that left the county. They numbered 115 men. Upon leaving Marietta July 22, 1861, for the war, they were escorted by a Marietta company called the "Fireman Zouaves," Capt.

S. F. Shaw, the German brass band, and a large concourse of citizens, relatives and friends. They marched through the streets, Ohio and Front, from their headquarters at the old woolen factory, now Nye's foundry, and across to the Harmar depot. The Zouaves, finding that the guards had no colors, presented their beautiful flag, through Captain Shaw, who made the presentation speech, which was responded to by Captain Fell in appropriate words, and which act of courtesy was received with cheers by the departing volunteers. This company became Company B, and Groesbeck's Regiment, the Thirty-ninth Ohio Volunteer Infantry.

The second company was "Koenig's German Rifles," which was raised in one week. It was composed mainly of Germans, and included many of the best shots of that nationality in the county. They elected Jacob Koenig captain, and left for Camp Colerain July 31, 1861, deferring the election of the other officers until their arrival in camp. The company became Company F, Thirty-ninth Ohio Volunteer Infantry.

About the first of August, 1861, the "Muskingum Company" went into camp at Marietta, the first of the gallant Thirty-sixth Regiment. They were composed of the young men of the valley of the Muskingum, immediately above Marietta. Twenty of them were from Rainbow and the neighborhood of Devol's Dam, and comprised the best, and in fact, nearly all the young men in that locality. They were officered as follows: Captain Hiram F. Devol, First Lieutenant J. Gage Barker, Second Lieutenant J. C. Selby, First Sergeant Miles A. Stacy. The next company was the Salem Light Guards," a splendid body of men, officered as follows: Captain Jewett Palmer, Jr., First Lieutenant James Stanley, Second Lieutenant Ernst Lindner, First Sergeant John A. Palmer. Soon the Thirty-sixth Regiment was full.

Capt. T. W. Moore's company was raised in the vicinity of Tunnel station, in Washington County, and were considered a fine body of men, and Captain Adney's was from the west end of Washington and from Athens County. The Governor appointed Melvin Clarke, lieutenant-colonel; Prof. Ebenezer B. Andrews, major; Benjamin D. Fearing, adjutant; and John M. Woodbridge, quartermaster. Neither of these officers had any military education, and it was decided to secure a regularly educated army officer, if possible, as colonel of the regiment. Maj. E. B. Andrews, to carry out this idea, went to Columbus to lay the matter before Governor Dennison. At first it was supposed that Colonel Sill would be appointed, but Colonel Sill, a member of the governor's staff, was needed in organizing the thousands of raw recruits then flocking to the Ohio camp. Major Slemmer, however, of the regular army, inspector general on the staff of General Rosecrans, was designated as commanding officer, for the time being—the same Lieut. Slemmer who was in command of Fort Pickens, at the entrance of Pensacola harbor, Florida, when the war began, and who, by his prompt refusal to surrender, and promptness in preparing for defense, saved that important fortification to the Union.

The Thirty-sixth was, on August 30th, ordered into Virginia, Major Slemmer joining the company at Parkersburg; but soon after Col. George Crook, of the Eighth United States Infantry, was assigned to the command of the regiment, and began at once the task of drilling and disciplining both officers and men.

The advent of Colonel Crook was an event of great importance to the Thirty-sixth. He won the confidence and respect of the men, and imparted to the regiment a character for discipline and good behavior that they never lost during subsequent terms of service.

During the months of September and October of 1861, several important commands were in process of formation in Washington County. Col. T. C. H. Smith, of Marietta, was commissioned as lieutenant-colonel of the First Ohio Cavalry; and soon after, on September 11th, Capt. Thomas J. Patten, and Lieut. John D. Barker went into Camp Putnam with 60 men for that regiment, which became Company L, First Ohio Volunteer Cavalry.

At the same time Pierpont Battery, De Beck's Battery, Huntington's Battery, the Sixty-third Ohio Volunteer Infantry, the Seventy-seventh Ohio Volunteer Infantry, were all enlisting men—the men that were shortly to do such gallant service for their country.

Capt. Frank Buell, who was always devoted to his men, had become dissatisfied at Ohio's treatment of the volunteers, and with the delay of the State authorities in paying off his men, recently returned from the three-months' service, and he therefore resolved to raise a company of artillery for the new State of West Virginia. He had no difficulty in securing a sufficient number of men, many of the old company of three-months' men joining him, the entire company being from Marietta and vicinity. They were accepted by Governor Pierpont, whose name they took, and were known as Buell's Pierpont Battery and Battery C, First Regiment, West Virginia, Light Artillery. They left October 9th for Camp Carlisle on Wheeling Island, West Virginia. A large concourse of citizens and friends witnessed their departure. The Young America brass band accompanied them to Wheeling, the leader and one of their number, William Jenvey, having joined the battery.

At this time Capt. William Craig, of the regular army, had charge of the army stores and military depots at Bellaire, Marietta and Parkersburg, with headquarters at Marietta. He desired to raise a regiment for the war, and was commissioned by Governor Dennison as colonel, for that purpose. He was a graduate of West Point, and was much esteemed as an officer and a gentleman. The prospects for raising the regiment seemed good, and it was christened the Sixty-third Ohio Volunteer Infantry. Alexander L. Haskins, a civil engineer of Marietta, was appointed major, and the lieutenant-colonelcy temporarily left vacant.

About the same time a vigorous movement was inaugurated to raise a regiment for Col. Jesse Hildebrand, who stood high in the State militia service, and had strong hold upon the popular heart. He had, for a long time, been the favorite military man of the county, and many people wished to have him command a Washington County regiment. His friends had expected that he would command the Thirty-sixth, but a regular army officer was appointed. His cause was urged upon Governor Dennison, but to no purpose. The Governor was hampered in some way, and could not act. He had learned by this time that there was a War Department in this country, and governed his actions accordingly. Colonel Hildebrand finally tendered his service to Governor Pierpont, who did not need any urging to take advantage of the situation, and at once issued a commission to Hildebrand as colonel, and ordered him to rendezvous his men at Parkersburg. This led to an emphatic protest by the friends of the colonel. About this time the War Department authorized Governor Dennison to commission all Ohio officers who were promised commissions by Governor Pierpont, and so the merits of Colonel Hildebrand were recognized, and he was immediately commissioned by the Governor to raise a regiment of three-years' men in Washington County. W. De Hass was appointed lieutenant-colonel, and Benjamin D. Fearing, at that time serving as adjutant of the Thirty-sixth, was appointed major.

Here then were two regiments authorized to be raised at the same time, in the county, and this naturally led to some friction between the parties interested in these different organizations. The fact of Colonel Craig being a West Pointer acted against him as well as in his favor. The volunteer could never exactly understand the regular army officer's manner and style of doing things, and they often charged him with being haughty and tyrannical with the common soldier. No doubt great injustice was done Colonel Craig in this way, but he had able defenders, and they only intensified the opposition. The result was that the Seventy-seventh was soon full and ready for service, while the Sixty-third was slow in getting men. Finally the Sixty-third was ordered to Columbus to consolidate with the Fifty-second, but that proved an unfortunate combination, and the Sixty-third returned again to Marietta for the purpose of filling up its ranks. The Twenty-second Regiment, a fragmentary organization at Camp Dennison, was ordered to Marietta to consolidate with the Sixty-third, and arrived January 30, 1862. Col. William Craig having resigned the colonelcy, John W. Sprague, a captain in the Seventh Regiment, was appointed colonel, and after remaining in Camp Putnam until February 18, 1862, they received marching orders and departed for Paducah, Kentucky.

CAMP TUPPER ESTABLISHED.

Col. Jesse Hildebrand, immediately after being commissioned by Governor Dennison, received orders to form a camp and recruit up a regiment, which was to become the gallant Seventy-seventh. Accordingly, he chose a public square in Marietta, the Quadranaou, and named it Camp Tupper, for Gen. Anselm Tupper. On the south side, along the line of Third street, he built 10 barracks, for as many companies, and on the elevated square in the camp a field-piece was placed for firing a morning and evening gun. The regiment was rapidly filled. Many of the recruiting lieutenants held meetings through the east side of the county, as did Rev. William Pearce, who afterward became the chaplain of the regiment. On January 9, 1862, the regiment received marching orders, and went to Camp Dennison.

MILITARY COMMITTEE APPOINTED.

Governor Dennison, in the fall of 1861, finding that the recruiting and handling of a large number of soldiers entailed an immense amount of labor upon the executive department, and especially on the adjutant general, resolved to systematize and divide the work so that each county would have its share, and at the same time have competent supervision and proper attention given to details incident to the service. He accordingly divided the State into military districts, which were the same as the congressional districts. Each district had over it a district military committee, appointed by the governor, and they appointed a committee of five for each county, and the county military committee appointed a committee of three in each township. These were the men to whom the Governor, appealed in emergencies, and they appealed directly to the people. Their duties were varied and often arduous, at times requiring their constant attention, to the exclusion of all other business. They served without pay, and considering the character and value of the service rendered, deserve to be gratefully remembered.

The military committee appointed in the fall of 1861 for Washington County were William R. Putnam, chairman, Samuel F. Cooke, secretary, and John Newton, Mark Green, and George W. Baker.

The township committees appointed at the same time by the committees were as follows:

Adams—Dr. William F. Clark, Dennis Gibbs, Jonas Mason, Aurelius—Thomas Ellison, Samuel L. Berkley, Theodore Jevres. Barlow—J. W. Merrill, H. E. Vincent, William Breckenridge, Belpre—O. R. Loring, John Stone, Joseph Potter, Decatur—William P. Gamble, Jonah McGirr, W. C. Smith, Dunham—J. J. Hollister, William A. Chevalier, Edward McLarty, Fairfield—Dr. J. W. Marsha, John B. Farris, William Thompson, Fearing—Joseph W. Stanley, Orin Chapman, F. G. Guittau. Grandview—Samuel F. Cooke, Moses Meeks, John Pool. Independence—John G. Thomas, Squire D. Riggs, Dr. Valentine. Lawrence—A. J. Dye, A. W. Dye, J. M. Caywood. Ludlow—George W. Harvey, Christopher Dickson, William Bell. Liberty—Jackson A. Hicks, John H. Jamison, John Roberts. Newport—Luther Edgerton, Aaron Edgell, Edgar O'Neal. Palmer—John Breckenridge, Sr., J. M. Murdough, D. J. Richards. Salem—Josiah Morgan, Henry Schofield, Moses Blake. Marietta City—George Benedict, First Ward; David C. Skinner, Second Ward; Thomas W. Ewart, Third Ward. Muskingum—Col. William West, William F. Curtis, Johnson Bean. Harmar—David Putnam, Col. D. Barber, Henry Fearing. Waterford—Enoch S. McIntosh, Samuel B. Robinson, Mathew Patterson. Warren—Moses Morris, Dean Briggs, Augustus S. Bailey. Wesley—S. C. Van Law, Robert Hodgins, J. P. Bruce. Watertown—W. F. Laasure, Henry McGrew, H. L. Deming. Union—Wesley Coombs, T. B. Dyar, Samuel Maxwell.

It was upon the county military committee, however, that the most of the labor and responsibility fell. They were charged with the entire business of recruiting in their counties; and could adopt such measures to hasten the work as they thought proper. All candidates for commissions had to have an endorsement by the county committee, and they were enjoined to be very careful whom they recommended. They were also charged with collecting clothing and supplies for the army. No further praise need be bestowed upon the conduct of the military committee of Washington County than to say that through all the emergencies and trying ordeals of four years of the war the same men first appointed were retained to the end.

In closing the year 1861 there are many things that might be said in regard to the management of military affairs outside as well as in this county, about which there was great difference of opinion at the time, but it is not the province of this history to discuss such matters nor have we room for an extended examination, but one thing should be said, at least, a word in justification of Governor Dennison. The Governor was not renominated, but was passed with a commendatory resolution, and David Tod, a war Democrat, taken up in his stead and elected. Governor Dennison sought no vindication nor asked any one to defend his course, but left it to the future and the sober judgment of the citizens of Ohio to vindicate him, and he has, indeed, been fully justified. He said "Ohio must lead in the war," and he nobly endeavored to make good the promise. The war found him a plain but versatile and talented civilian, with no knowledge of military affairs and with a staff totally unacquainted with the demands and emergencies about to overtake them. When hostilities began and the thousands of citizens soldiers began to crowd into the capital city, it was utterly impossible to meet their demands with even the barest necessities of camp life, and so on, during the succeeding weeks, as each new exigency arose, it was met manfully and all demands filled as soon as possible; but Governor Dennison fully realized the great burdens imposed upon him and laid his plans to meet them, and in a short time he had so fully mastered the situation that he was enabled to give his attention to other matters than the mere details of military organization. He planned the first campaign against the enemy in West Virginia, which was a grand success, but enough offense had already unavoidably been given to the volunteers, fresh from the comforts of home, to raise a great clamor against him, which extended to every part of the State from which a three-months' man had come. The Legislature took up the cudgel also and asked for the resignation of certain members of his staff, but the Governor, firm, yet dignified, declined to dismiss them, and knowing that he was doing all that could be done, continued to work out his task, and the sequel showed that he did his work well and that a greater part of the complaints were causeless and unjustified by the facts.

BEGINNING OF GOVERNOR TOD'S ADMINISTRATION.

When Governor Tod took the reins of government in January, 1862, he found the State fully organized and ready for a vigorous war administration. Many of the men who were subsequently to distinguish themselves and reflect honor upon their native State had already been commissioned by Governor Dennison, and gone to the field.

Whitelaw Reid, in "Ohio in the War," says of the opening of Governor Tod's administration:

With trained assistants, and organized system, and the work thus gradually coming upon him, Governor Tod speedily mastered his new duties. There was no opportunity for distinguishing his administration by the redemption of a State, or the appointment of officers who were soon to reach the topmost round of popular favor, or the adoption of independent war measures during a temporary isolation from the General Government. But what there was to do he did prudently, systematically, and with such judgment as to command the general approval of his constituents.

There was, however, room for all the zeal of patriotism to have full play. The war was constantly affording opportunities for men in authority to show what they were made of, and the year 1862 furnished its full share.

FIRST VOLUNTEER KILLED IN BATTLE.

The first soldier from Washington County to be killed in action was Albert W. Leonard, private of Company C, Second West Virginia Cavalry. He was killed in an action on Jennie's Creek, Kentucky, January 7, 1862. His command was in pursuit of Humphrey Marshall, and, on turning a curve in the road, was attacked by the enemy, young Leonard falling at the first volley. He was the son of J. D. Leonard, at that time living in New Matamoras, but for many years previous a resident of Marietta. His captain, Thomas Neal, said of him: "Officers and men will attest to his bravery on the field, his exemplary conduct as a soldier, and his honest, upright course as a comrade."

SHILOH.

On April 6, 1862, the great battle of Shiloh took place. It was a momentous and memorable event, as being the first great engagement for our Western troops, and one exciting especial interest in Washington County, as being the first battle in which the Seventy-seventh Regiment was engaged, having seven companies from this county. It was not until the 9th that the full news of the battle was received, and it revealed a tale of slaughter and suffering that startled and aroused the community. On April 10th a public meeting was called at the Court House in Marietta to provide means of assistance for the wounded. Beman Gates, William F. Curtis, George M. Woodbridge, Henry Fearing, Dr. Benjamin F. Hart, and George Benedict were sent at once to Cincinnati to make arrangements with the Sanitary Commission for the relief of the wounded from Washington County, and if necessary to go directly to the battle-ground. Meanwhile ladies assembled at the Episcopal Church and made up four boxes of hospital stores, which, together with $300 in money, were sent along with the committee. A standing committee consisting of Davis Green, W.

R. Putnam, William F. Curtis, I. W. Andrews and Stephen Newton were appointed to raise subscriptions and render such aid to the wounded as occasion might thereafter require.

In this engagement the Seventy-seventh bore a gallant part, and on the third day, while in the advance in pursuit of the enemy, were charged upon by Forrest's Texan cavalry and rode down and literally cut to pieces. Their conduct was worthy of regulars. The commanding general of the division neglected to have the Union cavalry within supporting distance, which exposed the infantry to a destructive charge. General Hildebrand, in his official report, says of the battle:

Early on the morning of Sunday, 6th inst., our pickets were fired upon, and shortly after seven o'clock the enemy appeared in force, presenting himself in columns of regiments, at least four deep. He opened immediately upon our camp a heavy fire, following up rapidly with shell. I ordered an advance. The Seventy-seventh and Fifty-seventh regiments were thrown forward to occupy a certain position, but encountered the enemy in force within three hundred yards of our camp. Unfortunately, we were not supported by artillery, and were compelled to retire under cover of our camp, the engagement becoming general along the entire front of the command. A battery having been brought to support our right, the Fifty-seventh and Seventy-seventh stood gallantly side by side for four hours, contending with a force of at least four to one. The battery having been forced from its position, and the infantry both on our right and left having fallen back, it finally became necessary that the regiments forming part of my command should fall back lest their retreat be effectually cut off. * * The night I passed on the battlefield in company with Colonels Buckland, Cockerel, Rice and other officers.

That night was one of intense interest on both sides. Beauregard, impatient for the morning light, that he might complete the work so auspiciously begun; and Sherman and Grant hoping for Buell with his fresh divisions, to reinforce the Union Army. Buell arrived and crossed, and one of his officers remarked to a gunboat officer, "We will show you some man-of-war fighting tomorrow," and they kept the promise well. Marching to the front they relieved the exhausted troops engaged the day before and drove the Rebel Army back, regaining the lost ground, and the victory was complete.

General Hildebrand says of Monday's battle:

On Monday morning I marched near the field of battle, forming near the rear, holding my force in readiness to enter into action at any moment, when called upon. We remained in this position, until the enemy had retreated and the victory achieved.

On the 8th instant, in compliance with your order, I marched my brigade, accompanied by a large cavalry force, also by Buckland's brigade, on the Corinth road, about four miles from camp. Halting in an open field, skirmishers were sent forward, who discovered Rebel cavalry in considerable force, exhibiting a disposition to fight. The skirmishers immediately fired upon enemy, when the Seventy-seventh Regiment, under command of Lieutenant Colonel De Hass, was ordered up to support them. Soon after forming in line a large body of cavalry made a bold and dashing charge on the skirmishers and the whole regiment. So sudden and rapid was the charge, shooting our men with carbines and revolvers, that they had not time to reload, and fell back, hoping our cavalry would cover the retreat. Unhappily our own cavalry was not sufficiently near to render essential assistance. The Rebel cavalry literally rode down our infantry, shooting, sabering, and trampling them under foot. We sustained a loss in killed, wounded, and missing of 57—19 killed on the spot, 30 wounded, and the balance missing. Of the latter, two captains and one second lieutenant are numbered. Captain A. W. McCormick and Capt. A. Chandler were meritorious officers. This I may also say of Lieutenant Criswell. * * *

With regard to the officers and men who participated in the battle of Pittsburg, and the affair of Tuesday, I am happy to bear testimony to the fidelity, bravery, and devotion of all. * * *

Major B. D. Fearing, who was immediately in command of the Seventy-seventh Regiment, acquitted himself with as much skill, bravery and military bearing as an old officer of long experience, and was not excelled by any other field officer who came under my observation.

The roll of killed, wounded and missing of the Seventy-seventh sufficiently attests the brave stand they made. The following is a recapitulation of the whole number:

Company A—4 killed, 13 wounded, 1 missing; total, 20. Company B—4 killed, 10 wounded, 6 missing; total, 20. Company C—3 killed, 10 wounded, 3 missing; total, 16. Company D—5 killed, 18 wounded; total, 23. Company E—6 killed, 13 wounded, 10 missing; total, 29. Company F—2 killed, 11 wounded, 1 missing; total, 14. Company G—1 killed, 10 wounded, 1 missing; total, 12. Company H—4 killed, 8 wounded, 19 missing; total, 31. Company I—1 killed, 10 wounded, 1 missing; total, 12. Company J—5 killed, 9 wounded, 16 missing; total, 30. Total—42 killed, 119 wounded, 31 missing; total, 192.

Colonel Hildebrand himself exhibited fine, soldierly qualities in this action, and when the Union line was driven back on Sunday, he was of great service in rallying the men, not only of his own brigade but of other brigades, and his portly figure and fearless demeanor inspired many a company with renewed confidence and turned them again to the front; and, he was, no doubt, of great service in saving the army from complete rout before overpowering numbers.

WASHINGTON CITY IN DANGER.

On the 26th of May the startling news was received that Washington City was about to be attacked, followed by a dispatch from the Governor of the State calling for troops. The call designated three classes that would be received for the term of three years, for the term of three months, and for guard duty within the State, and saying: "Everything is valueless to us if our Government is overthrown."

This dispatch was accompanied by another, directed to the Washington County Military Committee, as follows:

Assuming as the fact may be, Washington City is in imminent danger. You will please raise, without delay, one hundred men, and send them as fast as raised to Camp Chase, where they will be organized and equipped; and such as are not willing to proceed to Washington will perform guard duty in place of the regiment now at Camp Chase.

DAVID TOD, Governor.

At meeting of citizens was immediately called to take action. Upon assembling at the usual place of holding such meetings in Marietta, Rufus H. Harte was chosen chairman, and G. R. Rosetter, secretary. Judge Green then addressed the assembly, and was followed by William R. Putnam, who made a stirring appeal to men of all ages to respond promptly to the call of their country. Rev. D. H. Moore, a Methodist minister of Marietta, spoke, saying that he had held back from enlisting by the advice of his friends long enough, and now he was bound to go at all hazards. The Court House was filled to overflowing, and this declaration of the reverend gentleman had a stirring effect. Others followed in patriotic appeals, and enlistment rolls being circulated quite a number of names were secured. The students of Marietta College held a meeting and 25 young men offered themselves as volunteers.

The following is a closing part of an appeal sent out through the country as a hand-bill:

We call upon our fellow citizens at once to stand forth for their country in this emergency! Your country calls, and it is the duty of patriotic citizens to obey the call! Old Washington to the rescue! Volunteers along the banks of the Muskingum River should be in readiness to take the steamer for Zanesville on Wednesday. Volunteers from other parts of the county will report themselves immediately to the undersigned at Marietta.

WILLIAM R. PUTNAM,

Chairman military committee Washington County.
Marietta, May 26, 1862.

On the 28th the company embarked on the steamer "Emma Graham" for Zanesville, and a large concourse of citizens assembled on the commons at Marietta to see them embark. The company was named the Putnam Guards, in honor of Judge William R. Putnam, chairman of the military committee. On arriving at Camp Chase they elected Rev. D. H. Moore captain (who was afterward lieutenant-colonel of the Eighty-seventh when in the three-years' service); T. S. Aleshire, first lieutenant, and J. R. Jenkins, second lieutenant, and became Company A, Eighty-seventh Regiment. This regiment was at Harper's Ferry, under Colonel Miles, when the surrender took place, and were paroled, their time being out.

On the 2nd of July, 1862, the President called for 300,000 more volunteers for three years, and Ohio's quota was about 40,000. Governor Tod issued an earnest appeal to the military committees and the citizens of the State, calling upon them to furnish the men. The military committee of the county resolved that old Washington should not be behind in any emergency, and invited a general meeting of the citizens of the county in Marietta, on July 19th. Meantime a meeting of the military committees of the counties comprising the third military district was held in Marietta, to promote concerted action, and to provide officers for the new regiment, which was to be the Ninety-second.

On the 15th of July they assembled, members present:

Athens: J. M. Dana, T. F. Wildes, W. R. Golden, and W. T. Brown.

Meigs: J. V. Smith, G. W. Cooper, J. J. White, D. A. Smith, and George Eiselstein.

Noble: E. G. Dudley, Jabez Belford, W. H. Frazier, and Dr. M. Martin.

Washington: William R. Putnam, G. W. Barker, John Newton, and S. F. Cooke.

Monroe: Not represented.

Col. William R. Putnam, chairman; J. M. Dana, and J. Belford, secretaries.

A committee consisting of G. W. Cooper, of Meigs, E. G. Dudley, of Noble, W. R. Golden and G. W. Barker, of Washington, having been appointed to devise a plan of organization for the new regiment, reported that the several counties of the district should furnish the following number of companies: Washington, three; Noble, two; Monroe, two; Athens, one, and Meigs, one. Monroe County not being represented, they adjourned until July 22d, and at the adjourned meeting elected officers for the Ninety-second Regiment, and passed the resolutions following:

Resolved, That we pledge ourselves one to another, to use all diligence in recruiting our respective portions of the Ninety-second Regiment, and that we will exert ourselves to the extent of our ability to maintain harmony and good feeling in our proceedings, upon which we feel will depend, to a great degree, our success, as well in recruiting as in every other branch of the service in this military district.

Resolved, That we call upon every loyal man in this military district to aid us with his might and strength and means to recruit the men called for to fill up the Ninety-second Regiment.

Resolved, That we go home and go to work.

Resolved, That we make everybody else go to work.

With this declaration of purpose to raise a regiment for the war, these gentlemen went home, and we shall presently see with what success.

The mass convention of the citizens of the county, called to meet on the 19th of July, assembled at the Court House in Marietta, at 10 o'clock a. m. of that day, and Col. David Barber, of Harmar, was chosen chairman, and S. B. Robinson, of Beverly, secretary. The object of the meeting having been stated by the chairman of the military committee, the following gentlemen were appointed to report resolutions: Rufus E. Harte, Davis Green, C. R. Rhodes, E. S. McIntosh, and Douglas Putnam. After the resolutions had been prepared, Mr. Harte reported them, and they were unanimously adopted; they declared the confidence of the citizens of the county in the government and in the power of the country to sustain itself in the struggle for equal rights and in the integrity of the Union, and pledged anew the men and means of the county to carry out the war to a successful issue. After remarks by George Benedict and William F. Curtis, an effort was inaugurated to raise a fund to assist in recruiting 300 men in the county for the new regiment. $2,100 was raised in about five minutes. In the afternoon Hon. William P. Cutler, having returned from a session of Congress, made an eloquent and forcible speech upon the situation of public affairs. Further subscriptions raised the total to $3,515. This amount was further increased to $4,026 by the 24th of July, Henry Fearing, of Harmar, donating a house and lot in Beverly, worth $900. August 1st, the war fund amounted to $5,081. William Pitt Putnam, of Belpre, obligated himself to pay $8 a month to two volunteers and to a third volunteer, $15 bounty.

PARKERSBURG THREATENED.

On July 28th the following despatch was received at Marietta:

WASHINGTON, JULY 28, 1862. (C. O. 1.)
TO THE SECRETARY OF WAR.

Send us all the men and arms you can at once. We are about to be attacked by a force of Rebels.

M. P. AMISS, Mayor.

Soon 100 men were raised, and Lieut. George T. Rice, being home on recruiting service from the Thirty-ninth Regiment, was placed in command, as captain, also Lieut. Robert Booth, of the Sixty-third regiment, and

Lieut. C. B. Way, of the Eleventh Virginia, were appointed lieutenants, and Manly Warren, orderly sergeant. They marched to the depot to take a train for the beleagured city, but there received a second dispatch "we are not yet attacked and no reinforcements are needed now."

THE DRAFT.

On August 4th the call for a draft of 300,000 nine-months' men came, and this, in addition to the call for three-years' men, made the quota of Washington County under both at 2,030. The total number enrolled militia at that date was 6,089, making two calls equal to about 33 per cent. of the whole number of militia in the county.

The draft commissioner for this county was George Benedict; provost marshal, William F. Curtis, of Marietta; examining surgeon, Dr. James Little, of Beverly. After several postponements by Governor Tod the draft finally took place on October 1st as follows: Adams, 11; Barlow, 9; Fairfield, 4; Mer, 3; Union, 1; Fearing, 15; Grandview, 6; Independence, 2; Lawrence, 9; Liberty, 6; Ludlow, 10; Palmer, 3; Union, 1; Warren, 7; Watertown, 7; Wesley, 16—total, 107, which was afterward increased to 131. A great effort was made to save the county from the draft, and large sums of money were raised in all parts of the county to facilitate enlistments. Barlow was down for over $200; Waterford, over $1,200, in addition to $1,000 subscribed to the county war fund previously. To this must be added large sums in every township, of which we can find no record, running up into the thousands. It should be said, however, in regard to drafted men from this county, that a greater portion of them volunteered for three years when they reached Camp Dennison, and some even before. Noble County had over 300 men drafted, Monroe 61, Morgan 167, Muskingum 293, and Gallia 217.

Athens, Lawrence and Scioto escaped.

CAMP MARIETTA ESTABLISHED.

Judge William R. Putnam having been placed in command of the post at Marietta, with the rank of colonel, was authorized to lease ground and erect additional barracks. Accordingly, in September, of 1862, he selected a site which, at that time, lay between the Fair Grounds and the Muskingum River, and constructed quarters to accommodate the new regiment. By the 19th of September the Ninety-second Regiment was complete; it contained as good material as any regiment from this part of the State, the men being from among the best citizens of the district, and its subsequent history fully justified the expectation of its friends. The time in camp at Marietta was devoted to drill and disciplining the men for active service. On October 7th they received orders to march, and left Camp Putnam for Gallipolis. Many of those who marched out on that October day with such fine martial bearing were destined never to return. Again Washington County was sending forth her bravest and best, but the sacrifice was not considered too great for the issues at stake.

CORINTH, ANTIETAM AND SOUTH MOUNTAIN.

The great battle of Corinth took place on October 4th, resulting in a crushing defeat to the armies of Price and Van Dorn, and not without great loss to the Union army. The Sixty-third Regiment, containing two companies of Washington County men, stood the brunt of the charge at Fort Robinet, and lost very heavily in officers and men—fully 45 per cent. Col. J. W. Sprague said of his regiment: "The loss of my regiment has been terrible, but I have the consolation of believing that no braver or truer set of men were ever taken into battle. Every officer distinguished himself for gallantry and daring."

On July 17th, the Thirty-sixth was hotly engaged in the great battle of Antietam, in which its colonel, Melvin Clarke, was killed, and losing heavily in non-commissioned officers and men.

On October 12th the battle of South Mountain was fought, in which the Thirty-sixth was engaged. It was in this battle that the future brigade commander of the Thirty-sixth was severely wounded—Col. Rutherford B. Hayes, the successor of Grant to the Presidency.

In October, 1862, Capt. Arthur D. Eells recruited a company of cavalry for a new regiment authorized by the Governor. Captain Eells' company was recruited very rapidly, as he was a popular man and had seen service as captain of Company F, Second West Virginia Cavalry, from which position he resigned in May, 1862, on account of ill-health, but by October of the same year was again engaged in the service of his country, as captain of Company H, Seventh Ohio Volunteer Cavalry. At the date of leaving for the front the company had 101 men, officered as follows: Captain, Arthur D. Eells; first lieutenant, William L. Tripp, second lieutenant, John J. Smith.

The year 1862 was one of great military activity in Washington County. Over 2,000 men were sent out, many to fill up old regiments, but the greater part to form new organizations, which were, in the main, recruited for three-years' service. The danger of invasion from Virginia had thoroughly aroused the county, and the militia companies throughout the townships were called out for drill at regular intervals. The citizens of Marietta during the summer closed their places of business at four o'clock p. m., and all the able-bodied men, including the Silver Grays, turned out to drill.

On Tuesday, August 26th, Col. William R. Putnam, commandant of Camp Marietta, received a dispatch from Governor Tod, saying, "You are in danger of invasion on the border; prepare for it." The citizens of Marietta then had the following companies: Silver Grays, Capt. D. P. Bosworth, First Lieut. C. J. Sheppard, Second Lieut. Rufus E. Harte; Home Guards, Capt. Charles R. Rhodes, First Lieut. James Lewis, Second Lieut. John B. Dutton; First Ward company, Capt. Robert Booth, First Lieut. Dan Y. Hill, Second Lieut. Philip Schramm; Second Ward company, Capt. Rufus E. Harte (promoted from Silver Grays), First Lieut. Samuel C.

Skinner, Second Lieut. Lewis Theis; Third Ward company, Capt. John S. Conley, First Lieut. S. J. Dutton, Second Lieut. Joseph L. Stephens; Bloomfield Guards, Capt. Nathaniel F. Bishop, First Lieut. Joseph E. Hall, Jr., Second Lieut. D. A. Belden; Putnam Light Artillery, Capt. A. T. Nye, Jr., Lieut. Charles A. Hall, Gunner John Hall. On September 13th Ernst Lindner, having resigned as adjutant of the Thirty-sixth Regiment and residing for the time being in Marietta was placed in command of the companies of Marietta and Harmar, by order of the commander of the Washington County militia. The companies were lettered as follows: A, Capt. Charles R. Rhodes; B, Capt. Rufus E. Harte; C, Capt. Nathaniel F. Bishop; D, Capt. Oscar Underwood; E, Capt. Robert Booth; F, Capt. I. W. Andrews; G, Capt. D. P. Bosworth; H, Capt. Casper Crouss; I, Capt. John W. Conley; K, Capt. W. B. Hollister. Smith J. Dutton was appointed adjutant, and D. P. Bosworth, Jr., sergeant major; George Payne, Sr., drum major. We give these details to show how pressing the emergency was considered and how the men of those days rallied to meet it. The city of Marietta was laid off for the purposes of guard duty into beats, and for many weeks the night patrol paced the streets expecting a border foray.

Many brave sons of Washington County fell in the year 1862, among them Capt. Frank Buell, Capt. Theodore Greenwood, Col. Melvin Clarke, and Lieut. J. J. Steenrod.

DEPARTMENT OF WEST VIRGINIA ESTABLISHED AT MARIETTA.

The closing event of the year was the arrival in the county of Maj. Gen. J. D. Cox and staff on December 7th, who established at Marietta the headquarters of the Department of West Virginia, which included the State of West Virginia and the bordering counties of Ohio from Wheeling to the Big Sandy. General Cox remained until April 8, 1863, when he went to Columbus, Ohio, having been assigned to a new command.

EMANCIPATION.

The year 1863—the great battle year of the war—was ushered in by two important events; the memorable battle of Stone River and the emancipation proclamation striking the shackles from three millions of slaves. Washington County had not been strongly for the abolition of slavery, but the fierce logic of war had convinced the most conservative that the time had come and they heartily approved the action of Abraham Lincoln when he issued the emancipation edict to take effect January 1, 1863, and the grand Union party of Ohio, which swept everything before it in the great political contest of the year, endorsed the conduct of the war by a hundred thousand majority for John Brough. The partisan feeling that characterized this campaign was something fearful to contemplate; the party of the Union could brook no resistance, and there was a strong tendency to brand as traitors all who were not in its ranks, when in fact many good and true men of the opposition were devoted to their country and to the preservation of the Union; but some of the opposition were not for the Union or the war, and were so outspoken and active in their course that they were arrested in their course as was their leader C. L. Vallandigham, but not like him arrested, tried, convicted and sent south.

UNION LEAGUE.

On the 31st of March the citizens of Marietta, Harmar and vicinity formed what was known as the Union League, with the object of binding together all loyal men of all trades and professions, in a common union to maintain the power, glory and integrity of the nation, to spare no endeavor to maintain unimpaired the national unity, both in principle and territorial boundary, and to vote for no man for office whose loyalty was questionable or who was not willing to support the principles set forth in the foregoing declaration. The officers elected were George M. Woodbridge, president; H. H. Brown, vice-president; S. S. Porter, secretary; W. F. Curtis, treasurer; M. H. Needham, J. H. Best, Daniel Y. Hill, John M. Hook, W. S. Ward, Thomas F. Jones, Beman Gates, Lewis Lenhart, B. F. Pixley, W. W. Hutchinson, George E. Stratton, and William H. Smith, executive committee. The formation of this society was doubtless prompted by the formation of lodges of Knights of the Golden Circle and Sons of Liberty in the county by the opposition.

CHANCELLORSVILLE.

On the 1st of May occurred the great battle of Chancellorsville in which Huntington's, De Beck's and the Pierpont batteries were engaged, and when J. F. Huntington's battery H. First Ohio Light Artillery, made a gallant stand against great odds, holding the enemy in check until deserted by the supporting infantry. For his conduct in this battle, Captain Huntington was promoted to chief of artillery of his division.

In the same action Col. Rufus R. Dawes, an old Washington County boy, bore a conspicuous part, in carrying out "Fighting Joe" Hooker's plans for crossing the Rappahannock prior to the battle. A surgeon of the Sixth Wisconsin, which regiment Lieutenant-Colonel Dawes then commanded, was an eye-witness to the achievement. He says:

The steep bank on the opposite side was lined with rifle-pits from which our troops on this side tried in vain for several hours to dislodge the enemy. It was impossible to lay the pontoon bridges on which to cross the corps until the rifle-pits were cleared, and to throw troops across in boats for this purpose was a necessary condition of success.

It was regarded by all as a most desperate and perilous undertaking, and none but troops of tried valor could be relied on.

The Sixth Wisconsin was one of the two regiments (Twenty-fourth Michigan was the other) which had the honor of being the "forlorn hope" selected to cross the river and carry the heights beyond. When the order was given to "fall in" not a man faltered or hesitated a moment, though fully conscious of the danger he was to meet. I shook hands with Lieutenant-Colonel Dawes, as I honestly believed for the last time, and said "God bless and protect you." Our troops double-quickened down the slope on this side, sprang into the boats, and pushed out boldly across the river under a perfect storm of bullets. The river, which is about one hundred and fifty yards wide at this point, was soon passed and our brave men, sprouting ashore, dashed up the hill, capturing the rebels in the rifle-pits, and in less than twenty minutes from the time the order to march was given on this side, our regiment was formed in line of battle on the top of the opposite shores. Lieutenant-Colonel Dawes stood up in the boats while crossing, and assisted in pushing his boat along and seized the colors to rally the regiment as soon as a landing was effected. I rejoiced greatly when I saw the rebels on the opposite side "skedaddling" in fine disorder. It seemed a miracle no more were hurt.

Early in June the threatening movements of the enemy under Lee alarmed the cabinet in Washington, and the President issued a call for 100,000 six-months' men to be raised in the States of Maryland, Pennsylvania, Ohio, and West Virginia. Lee had divided his army into three grand divisions, cut loose from his base, and it was reported that one of these divisions was intended for the invasion of West Virginia and Ohio, another to strike the western part of Pennsylvania, and the third to invade Maryland. Under this call Ohio was to have furnished 30,000 men, but the call for six months was soon found to be very injudicious, and 2,000 was the total number from Ohio, of which none were from Washington County. Lee's movements were witnessed with great alarm, but it was soon evident that he was not expecting to divide his forces but bent on taking Philadelphia and New York, and carrying the war into the North.

GETTYSBURG.

The Rebel invasion culminated at Gettysburg, where he was met by General Meade with the Army of the Potomac, and the greatest battle of the war and the one most momentous in the results involved, was fought. Washington County was represented by Buell's Pierpont Battery, Huntington's Battery and De Beck's Battery under command of Capt. J. F. Huntington. They fought nobly and stood to their guns as only veterans can. Who can describe the battle, who will ever adequately chronicle the deeds of heroism there enacted? It will never be done. Lines of battle five miles long, Round Top, Cemetery Hill, Culp's Hill, Wolf Hill, Power's Hill, Benner's Hill, all the scenes of charge and countercharge, and all in one great battle. Let us take a bit out of this great master-piece, this crowd of heroic achievements and let it stand for all the rest: "Agate" then the nom de plume of Whitelaw Reid, correspondent of the Cincinnati Gazette, wrote:

Let me give one phase of the fight—fit type of many more. Some Massachusetts batteries—Bigelow's Captain Phillips' and Captain McGilroy's, of Maine—were planted on the extreme left, advanced, now well down to the Emmitsburg road, with infantry in their front—the first division, I think, of Sickles' corps. A little after five, a fierce Rebel charge drove back the infantry and menaced the batteries. Orders are sent Bigelow on the extreme left, to hold his position at every hazard short of sheer annihilation, till a couple more batteries can be brought to his support. Reserving his fire a little, then with depressed guns opening with double charges of grape and canister, he smites and shatters, but cannot break the advancing line. His grape and canister are exhausted, and still, closing grandly up over their slain, on they come. He falls back on spherical case, and pours this in at the shortest range. On, still onward, comes the artillery-defying line, and still he holds his position. They are within six paces of the guns—he fires again, once more, and he blows devoted soldiers from his very muzzles. And, still mindful of that solemn order, he holds his place, they spring upon his carriages, and shoot down his horses! And then, his Yankee artillerymen still about him, he seizes the guns by hand, and from the very front of that line drags two of them off. The caissons are further back—five out of the six are saved. That single company, in that half hour's fight, lost 33 of its men, including every sergeant it had. The captain himself was wounded. Yet it was the first time it was ever under fire! I give it simply as a type. So they fought along that fiery line!

The Rebels now poured on Phillips' Battery, and it, too, was forced to drag off the pieces by hand, when the horses were shot down. From a new position, it opened again; and at last the two reinforcing batteries came up on the gallop. An enfilading fire swept the Rebel line: Sickles' gallant infantry charged, the Rebel line swept back on a reflux tide—we regained the lost ground, and every gun just lost in this splendid fight.

Buell's Battery was in the thickest of the battle and fired over 1,200 rounds. De Beck's Battery lost two pieces. Huntington's Battery was forced to retire for fresh ammunition. Let Captain Huntington tell the story himself: "Started from Taneytown with my brigade, at 4 a. m., second inst., reached Gettysburg at 2 p. m., and about four o'clock was ordered to relieve some of the First Corps, who were in the battle the day before. Position of our army peculiar, the line forming a triangle with the apex towards the enemy, whose line was in front around ours, we having the advantage of being able to throw troops across, while the enemy had to go around. The salient part of our line was an elevated piece of ground just on the edge of town, on which was a beautiful cemetery, and here, at the center, my batteries were posted—a position fine for artillery, yet quite exposed, being swept by Rebel batteries in front and on our left flank. Shelling was going on vigorously, when we took position, and we replied with great vigor. Meanwhile the tremendous attack was made on our left. Had this been successful, every battery on the hill must have been taken, as our only line of retreat was by the Baltimore pike, directly in our rear. At one time when our left was forced back by a tremendous charge of the enemy, I thought 'the jig was up' with us, but fresh troops were just brought up, and the enemy fell suddenly back. Just, before dark, another column attacked our batteries on the hill, which were supported by part of the Eleventh Corps, who, as their custom is, gave way, and part of Captain Ricketts' Battery of my brigade, in the extreme front was actually taken. General Carroll, with his brigade, of old Shield's fire-eaters, came up just in the nick of time. Carroll sung out, 'Where is Huntington?' 'Here I am, General,' said I. 'I am sent here' he continued, 'to support something or some one—where is the enemy?' I showed him their advancing line, and he commanded, 'Forward! double quick march!' And in they went, turned the advancing Rebels and saved the batteries. It was sharp while it lasted. Ricketts' Battery lost 17 killed and wounded and five prisoners in that charge." We quote further:

The night was spent in preparing for the struggle of the next day (July 30th). At 4 A. M., Friday, the enemy attacked the right of our line. From that to eleven the musketry never slackened for a single moment. Such a sustained fire I never heard before, and to look at the place it was terrible. The Rebels charged up a hill against log breastworks, lined with our splendid infantry. I was on the ground afterwards. It was a sickening sight. In one place I traced the line of an entire company, shot dead where they stood, with the captain at his post. Here General Ewell's adjutant general was killed, while trying to rally his men.

After this fight there was a lull, but about 2 P. M., while a knot of officers were lying down near my battery to avoid the sharpshooters, who were constantly firing at us, all at once there came a most terrible storm of iron. They had been quietly placing their batteries in position, and opened at a signal. The howling of the shells, the deadly hiss of the solid Wentworth, and the crash of the 12-pound spherical case, was awful beyond description. Most of the fire came from the left, and my battery was then faced to the front; we had to change the position of the guns under that fire. For the first time the men of Battery H hesitated to obey my orders; but they were almost exhausted by fatigue and intense heat, and it was only for a moment that they forgot their duty. We soon had our guns around, and opened one section to the left, another to the front, and the third I could not work for the want of men able to stand on their feet. Capt. Wallace Hill's Battery (Pierpont) behaved most nobly. I never saw guns served better than theirs, until they fired their last round. I ordered them to leave the field, and replaced them with Captain Edgell's (New Hampshire) battery. Meanwhile, my own was about exhausted, and, feeling the importance of maintaining the fire at this point, I started to the reserve headquarters, with Orderly Fred Regnier, to run the gauntlet of the enemy's batteries for a mile, every shot that came over our batteries striking in our track—no pleasure trip to be sure—but we got through. Could obtain no relief, as every battery was already engaged. Starting back, I met my battery coming out, its ammunition exhausted, and one piece dismounted by solid shot. Under cover of this fire, the enemy made their last charge on our left, suffered awfully, and were utterly routed—their last effort.

VICKSBURG.

General Grant, after a series of battles and brilliant manoeuvres around Vicksburg, had penned up the Rebel general Pemberton, and by July 4th had compelled him to surrender. The Fourth of July, 1863, was a glad day for the national cause. "To whom shall we Grant the Meade of praise?" was telegraphed throughout the country; but Grant's star was in the ascendant. Meade's victory was grand, but his tactics were defensive, while Grant's were aggressive. These victories occasioned general rejoicing. The friends of the Union throughout the North now saw the beginning of the end. The gloom that had overshadowed the past year was dissipated, and the name of Grant was thenceforth to be the watchword to victory and the omen of success.

THE MORGAN RAID.

It was in July of 1863 that John Morgan made his raid through Southern Ohio, passing through Washington County, an account of which follows.

John Morgan, with his bold troopers, had, up to July, 1863, made numerous raids and forays across the mountains of Eastern Kentucky and Tennessee into the Blue Grass region of Kentucky. These forays were a source of alarm to the Unionist, and exultation to the Secessionist. He generally captured all of the good horses within his reach, provoked a vigorous pursuit, and although he uniformly had to get out much faster than he came in, he generally accomplished all that he intended.

Encouraged by his successes, he planned a grand raid to the northward, which should give the Northern people a taste of war as well as the "Sunny South." General Bragg, however, ordered Morgan not to go beyond the State of Kentucky. Bragg was then confronted by General Rosecrans, at Stone River, and the object sought to be accomplished was to strike the communications and rear of the Union Army, and divert the flanking column of Rosecrans from annoying Bragg, the supposition being that a strong force sent to the rear would engage the attention of a large part of the Union cavalry, and the sequel proved this to be true.

Collecting a body of cavalry, numbering about 2,500 men, with two 20-pound Parrott rifle cannon and four other guns of smaller calibre, he was ready for the enterprise. Basil Duke, the "brains of John Morgan," was second in command, with Colonels Cluke, Dick Morgan, and others of lesser note commanding regiments.

He crossed the Cumberland at Burkesville, Kentucky, July 3, 1863, and, marching rapidly north, drove or evaded all the Union forces that disputed his progress, and on the 8th arrived on the banks of the Ohio at Bradenburg, Kentucky. He gave out as he went that he should attack Louisville. He captured two steamers, the "J. J. McCoombs" and "Alice Dean," and, disregarding his instructions, crossed the Ohio, burned the steamers, and disappeared among the hills of Indiana.

General Judah, commanding the Union cavalry in Kentucky, began at once a vigorous pursuit. Colonel Garrard, of the Seventh Ohio Cavalry, in command of a brigade composed of the Seventh and Second Ohio Cavalry, Forty-fifth Ohio Mounted Infantry, Law's Howitzer Battery, and the First Kentucky Cavalry, started the same day Morgan crossed the Cumberland, where Garrard had been watching him, and was joined, at Bardstown, Kentucky, by General Hobson, with Shackelford's brigade, consisting of the Third, Eighth, Ninth, and Twelfth Kentucky Cavalry, and two pieces of artillery. Hobson assumed command, and the whole force hurried on after the raider.

Morgan, after getting safely across into Indiana, gave out, seemingly as in confidence, to prisoners, that he was moving on Indianapolis, but immediately afterwards bore off to the eastward, crossed the Ohio line, and was soon in the neighborhood of Cincinnati. Upon nearing that city, he gave out that he expected to attack Hamilton, but instead passed by so close to the great city that part of his command, embarrassed by the darkness and the labyrinth of streets in the suburbs, came near losing their way. This was the night of July 13th.

General Burnside was in command in Cincinnati and General Judah was there also hurrying up with fresh cavalry.

Ohio was soon thoroughly aroused. Governor Tod, July 12th, issued a proclamation calling out the militia of all the Southern and Southwestern counties.

Morgan, no doubt, endeavored to enhance the prevailing alarm, hoping to make his escape more certain amid the general uproar before any definite or concerted action could be taken to intercept him. Onward he went eastward, his men plundering everybody without fear or favor, through the counties of Warren, Clermont, Brown, Adams, Pike, Jackson, and

Meigs, while detachments from the main body made detours through other counties, and the whole body bringing up at Portland, near Bufington's Island, on the evening of the 18th, and would doubtless have crossed at once but for the threatening appearance of an earthquake then and there appearing.

Morgan had run the gauntlet of the militia through the State, with Hobson but a few hours in the rear, eager to bring the raider to bay after the long pursuit. Tired, jaded and harrassed, and withal heavily loaded with booty, the Rebels rested at the river, expecting in the morning to make a short job of the earthwork and cross to the Virginia shore.

Let us now return to the scene of operations in Washington County, and see what was being done there to capture the bold raider.

Governor Tod, in his proclamation, had ordered "all the militia companies in Washington, Monroe, Noble, Meigs, Morgan, Perry, Hocking, and Athens, to report forthwith to Colonel William R. Putnam at Camp Marietta, who was to organize them into battalions or regiments and appoint temporary officers therefor." Immediately following the proclamation came a telegram from Governor Tod to Colonel Putnam, stating that 3,000 militia had been ordered to Marietta. At this date there were 175 six-months' men in camp, including Company A, One Hundred and Twenty-eighth Ohio Volunteer Infantry. Governor Tod telegraphed on the fourteenth that Morgan had crossed the Little Miami, and was probably making for some ford near Marietta. Colonel Putnam at once began to act—first, to prevent Morgan crossing the Ohio; second, to keep him west of the Muskingum; and, third, to shut his forces between the Ohio River and Marietta & Cincinnati Railroad if possible. He, therefore, set about guarding the fords as the first part of the program. On the 14th there were 457 men in camp, but no arms had arrived, although a thousand stand had been promised by the Governor. At this time, Capt. D. L. Wood, of the Eighteenth United States Infantry, was stationed at Marietta, and Lieut. J. W. Conine, aid-de-camp to General Cox, was in immediate command of the six-months' men at Camp Marietta. On July 10th the following order was issued:

HEADQUARTERS, CAMP MARIETTA, O., July 15, 1863.
Special Order No. 1.

The following companies now at camp are hereby detached under command of Captain D. L. Wood, Eighteenth United States Infantry, and will put themselves in readiness to march:

Marietta Artillery company, Lieutenant Nye commanding.

Volunteer mounted company, Captain Bloomfield commanding.

Company A, One Hundred and Twenty-eighth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, Captain Stedman commanding.

Captain J. P. Putnam's company, Captain Putnam commanding.

Post Quartermaster Croxton will provide transportation and forage for five (5) days for fifty (50) horses. Post Commissary R. B. Treat will turn over to Charles Jones (who will act as quartermaster of the detachment), twelve hundred and fifty (1250) rations.

Surgeon S. D. Hart will be acting surgeon.

By order of WM. R. PUTNAM,
Colonel Commanding.

Captain Wood's instructions were as follows:

You are hereby ordered to assume command of the troops detached by special order No. 1 of this date, and proceed with them to the ford below Parkersburg, where you will make such disposition as you deem fit and proper to prevent the rebel forces now in the State from crossing at that place.

WM. R. PUTNAM,
Colonel Commanding.

But now an unforeseen difficulty arose. Lieutenant Conine refused to allow the United States troops in Camp Marietta to be moved without orders from a higher source. Governor Tod was telegraphed, and all that day spent in waiting for an answer. The answer came finally ordering Lieutenant Conine to obey all orders from Colonel Putnam, and Captain Wood started early on the morning of the 16th. The expedition numbered about 300 men. The cannon were two iron pieces that had been used in Marietta and Harmar for firing salutes, and the arms for the infantry and cavalry were such as could be hastily gathered in the city and Camp Marietta. Captain Wood reached Blennerhassett's Island the same day, and began entrenching, informing

Colonel Putnam by telegraph of the fact. Capt. Wood had stopped short of the point intended to be covered by the movement. At this time 4,259 men reported for duty, and Capt. R. B. Wilson, of Meigs County, was ordered to proceed to Mason City, West Virginia, with his company and that of Capt. George G. Woodward armed as infantry, to prevent Morgan crossing at that point. On the same day (17th) the following order was sent to Captain Wood, at Blennerhassett's Island:

The shoal at the foot of Blennerhassett's Island is deemed impracticable on account of quicksand. The ford you were to guard is at the foot of Buffington's Island. You will therefore take your forces to that point. Use the flats and steamer Logan in conjunction with Captain Wilson, in transporting your forces, sending baggage overland, if necessary. Delay Captain Wilson as little as possible.

Lieutenant Conine will report to you with reinforcements as soon as they can be armed.

By this arrangement Captain Wood and his little force reached Buffington at 7 P. M. of the 17th, and at once began to intrench, throwing out pickets and preparing for such defense as his limited means afforded. Captain Wilson proceeded to Mason City.

In the meantime Capt. Henry Best, on July 13th, with his own company and those of Captains Stone, Dana, Pugh, and Rutherford, had been ordered to proceed on the steamer "Buck" to Blennerhassett's Island and open the channel so that the gunboats could pass, and on the way down remove all boats of every description to the Virginia shore, which order was faithfully carried out. Captain Wilson arrived at Mason City at 11 P. M. of the 17th, and hearing that the Rebels had appeared about five miles back of Middleport he crossed the river and advanced promptly but cautiously through the darkness and took up a position three miles to the rear of that place. Here Morgan's men, or a part of them, advanced, captured a scouting party of Captain Wilson's force, pushed on to within a quarter of a mile of Wilson, when they were fired on, and delayed until noon of the 18th, when the Twenty-third Ohio Infantry came up, and an attack was immediately made by the two commands on the Rebels, resulting in their retreat. On the 19th, Captain Wilson was ordered up to Bowman's Run, seven miles up the Ohio from Middleport, where he made such dispositions of his men as to capture 77 men and officers, and 80 horses. Captain Wilson took his prisoners to Pomeroy, when he was ordered six miles below to guard another ford, and arrived just in time to prevent a body of Morgan's men from crossing, and turned them back on their pursuers, who captured them.

By July 17th a thousand stand of arms arrived, and Colonel Putnam ordered Lieut. J. W. Conine, with a detachment consisting of the companies of Captains Knowles, Moore, Jaynes, Brown, Seaman, Dyar, Jenkins, Comley, and Davenport, to proceed on board the steamer "Eagle" and reinforce Captain Wood, and report to that officer for orders. The "Eagle" got fast aground on a bar, and Conine disembarked, marched his men to the mouth of the Little Hocking, and bivouacked, deciding to act independent of Captain Wood. At this time there were reported for duty 7,064 men, with scarcely any arms in camp, but in order to utilize these men as far as practicable they were provided with spades, axes, and picks, and sent to the proper places to fell trees and obstruct the lines of retreat along the supposed route of Morgan.

Hon. William P. Cutler on the 18th was ordered to obstruct the roads between the line of the Marietta & Cincinnati Railroad and the Ohio River. He had in his command the railroad employes, Captain Holmes' company, and that of Captain Grewell; and at Cutler's station and Big Run he was joined with three more companies under Captains Waugh, Maxwell and Dee. With these forces, Mr. Cutler says, in his report: "We succeeded in accomplishing the object in a thorough manner from Big Hocking (including all roads leading into the ravines of that stream), as far east as the road leading from Vincent to the Ohio River by way of Daniel Shaw's, in Dunham township."

On the 17th General Burnside telegraphed

Colonel Putnam that if Morgan was driven from the ford at Buffington, he would probably strike for Marietta, the roads therefore were to be well obstructed, the flooring of the bridge across the Muskingum torn up, and rifle-pits so constructed as to command the crossing. General Cox, who was with General Burnside at Cincinnati, telegraphed that if the roads were so obstructed as to prevent Morgan dodging north between Athens and Marietta, there was force enough following to crush or capture him. Three companies under John Newton were sent up the Muskingum to remove all boats to the east side of the stream, and three more under command of Capt. Levi Barber were sent to blockade the roads between Coolville and the Little Hocking. Meantime, mounted scouts were sent out from Mr. Cutler's camp, and from all points practicable, and the best information possible obtained as to the enemy's movements. Several companies were stationed at the Marietta bridge, and such arrangements made that the drawbridge could be turned at a moment's notice. In addition to the rifle-pits a barricade of bales of hay was made commanding the bridge and the ford below. On the night of July 17th, Col. B. P. Runkle's forces arrived at Scott's landing, three miles below Marietta.

Let us now return to Morgan's command, whom we left on the evening of the 18th near Buffington's Island.

Basil Duke, in his "History of Morgan's Cavalry," says:

July 18th, at 3 A. M., we moved on. By this time the militia had turned their attention seriously to felling trees, and impeding our progress in every conceivable way. Advanced guard was forced to carry axes to cut away frequent blockade. In passing on the 18th near Pomeroy, there was one continual fight, but not wholly with militia, for some regular troops now appeared. We had to run a terrible gauntlet for nearly five miles, through a ravine, on the gallop. * * * We reached Portland (Buffington) about 8 P. M., and the night was one of solid darkness. General Morgan consulted one or two of his officers upon the propriety of at once attacking an earthwork, thrown up to guard the ford. From all the information he could gather, this work was manned with about three hundred infantry—regular troops, and two heavy guns were mounted in it. Our arrival at this place after dark had involved us in a dilemma. If we did not cross the river that night, there was every chance of our being attacked on the next day by heavy odds—by infantry sent after us from Kentucky, and by gunboats at the ford, which we could not drive off, as we had not more than three cartridges apiece for our artillery. General Morgan fully appreciated these reasons for getting across the river that night, as did those with whom he advised, but there were also very strong reasons against attacking the work at night; and without the capture of the work which commanded the ford, it would be impossible to cross. Attacks in the dark are always hazardous experiments, in this case doubly so as we knew nothing of the ground and could not procure guides. Our choice of the direction in which to move to the attack would have been purely guesswork. The defenders of the work had only to lie still and fire with artillery and musketry directly to their front, but the assailants would have had a line to preserve, and to exercise great care lest they should fall foul of each other in the obscurity. * * * He determined, therefore, to take the work at early dawn, and hoped to effect a crossing rapidly before the enemy arrived.

Captain D. L. Wood, in his report to Colonel Putnam, says: "On the morning of the 18th I made a line of entrenchments covering the approach to the ford, sent out cavalry scouts and ascertained that the enemy were advancing on me in force. I had all my stores removed to the boat (steamer 'Starlight') and ordered it to be ready to move. At half past seven o'clock the enemy appeared in force in front of my works, at which time my forces were in line to receive them as best I could. At twelve o'clock, having received an order from General Scammon to retire, I did so. Being hardly pressed by the enemy, I was obliged to abandon my artillery."

Lieut. C. B. Lewis, of the One Hundred and Twenty-eighth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, was officer of the day; posted pickets at different points around the ford to watch for the approach of the Rebels, and while out on the picket line was taken prisoner by the Rebels the night before the battle.

BUFFINGTON'S ISLAND.

The valley in which Morgan encamped on the night of July 18th was about 800 yards wide at the lower end and gradually narrowed above until the hills approached near to the river at the upper end. The river road coming from Pomeroy was upon the bank of the river. About midway of the valley a road winds into the valley to the river. The Rebels had encamped on the night of the 18th (Saturday night) in the cornfields at the end of a private lane running parallel to the road on which General Judah was approaching from the direction of Pomeroy. A dense fog covered all the bottom lands. General Hobson had with his command followed Morgan for two weeks, and on the night of the 18th went into camp to rest both horses and men. Colonel Garrard, of the Seventh Ohio Cavalry, remonstrated with Hobson for delaying the march at the critical point of the pursuit, but Hobson decided to halt. Colonel Garrard then asked permission to continue the pursuit that night, and in reply was informed that he might take his regiment and "go to hell." So Garrard kept on in pursuit. General Judah pressing forward during the night with his command was, with his staff including Maj. Daniel McCook, early in the morning of the 19th, in advance, and when within a short distance of the ford, there being a dense fog, came unexpectedly upon the Rebel cavalry, who received them with a volley and pursued, killing Major McCook, wounding several and taking some prisoners together with one piece of artillery. General Judah now hurried his forces forward and the fog suddenly lifting disclosed the enemy in the valley before them. While Judah was bringing his forces into action, Lieutenant O'Neil, of the Fifth Indiana Cavalry, appeared on another road with but 50 men and charged two different regiments so desperately that they were broke and left the captured gun, also their prisoners. Meanwhile Colonel Garrard with the Second and Seventh Ohio Cavalry came in by the road about the middle of the valley and charged them in flank and rear. Captain Fitch with the gunboat "Moose" now attacked from the river, playing on them with his 24-pound Dahlgren guns. With Judah up, Hobson up and the gunboats up, the situation of Morgan became not only interesting but desperate.

Judah and Hobson, from different points, soon opened on the Rebel ranks with shell, and according to Basil Duke's account, the air was fairly filled with pieces of shell, compelling the enemy to retreat. Duke was in command of the line designed to cover the retreat, with instructions to make the best fight he could, and but for being attacked in the flank would have given General Judah a more stubborn resistance than they did. General Duke attempted to retreat in good order, but soon a regular stampede took place, many made a rush for the ford, others ran from point to point over this field, taking a new direction at the chance explosion of a shell near by. The most of the Rebels, however, still clung to the booty stolen on the march.

The victors now closed in on them and captured between seven and eight hundred, including Basil Duke, Col. Dick Morgan, Colonels Smith, Ward and Hoffman. All their artillery, wagons, etc., were captured. About 1,200 men, under Morgan, escaped, and, pressing on up the river, tried to cross at Belleville, but were headed off by the gunboat "Moose." A few got across, and some were killed in the river. The bulk of the raiders, however, turned away from the river and disappeared among the hills. It is a remarkable fact that two out of the six or seven guns captured were 20-pound Parrots, which Morgan had dragged over his extended line of march, and, had he not run out of ammunition, would doubtless have given the gunboats as well as his other pursuers a more desperate battle than he did. The Union loss was five killed and 25 wounded. Rebel loss, 20 killed, wounded not known.

In regard to the conduct of Captain Wood, the "Rebellion Record" has the following:

Captain Wood of the Eighteenth regulars, while stationed at Marietta as recruiting officer, was ordered to take command of two companies of volunteers, and proceed to Buffington bar on Saturday. He found the steamer "Starlight" aground, with only two men aboard, and loaded with three thousand barrels of flour. He immediately unloaded the vessel, raised steam and manned the boat, from the captain to the deck-hand, with his men, and run her out of the range of Morgan's guns, which, before he could get away, had arrived on the bank. Before leaving with his little band of true gallants, he rolled his two heavy pieces of artillery over into a ravine, so that the enemy could neither take nor use them. After the fight, Captain Wood reported to General Judah for duty with the boat, and was highly complimented by the general and placed in charge of several hundred of the prisoners to bring to Cincinnati. Had the boat not been seized by Captain Wood when it was, Morgan would have had it and crossed the river with it, for the gunboats did not arrive till Sunday morning, while Morgan was there the night before. So let Marietta be proud of her gentlemen soldiers who were not too proud to carry coal or do any work which would hinder the enemies of the Union and help her defenders.

Captain Wood and his command returned to Camp Marietta from Cincinnati, July 25th.

When Major McCook was shot, the country lost a noble patriot, who had sent his distinguished sons to the war and only remained at home himself on account of the infirmities of age. The horse he rode remained in the hands of the enemy. There is an interesting incident related in regard to the horse, "Old Joe," as he was called, which we will give as we heard it:

When Capt. Arthur D. Eells, Company H, Seventh Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, on the failure of his health, left the army at Somerset, Kentucky, he sold his horse "Joe" to Maj. John Dalman, at that time paymaster, who took the horse to Cincinnati. Very soon after this John Morgan made his raid through Indiana and Ohio.

When Morgan and his troops were passing near Cincinnati, a force of volunteers gathered to pursue him. Old Major McCook went to Dalman's stable and took the horse Joe, and, with the others, followed Morgan, overtaking him, as we have seen, at Buffington. As soon as Major McCook fell, the horse galloped over the field at will. Soon the Seventh Ohio Cavalry attacked the Rebels on the flank and rear, and the horse, doubtless recognizing familiar voices in the direction of the gallant Seventh, galloped through the tumult and confusion of the battle to the position of the Seventh Cavalry and took his wonted place in the line, much to the edification of the boys, who shouted, "Look! there comes Captain Eells' horse, Old Joe."

So ended the battle of Buffington's Island, in which there were more men killed than in some of the famous battles in Mexico.

About 350 Rebels succeeded in getting across at the different fords, and between one and two hundred were taken prisoners after becoming detached from the main body. Morgan himself was half way across at the upper Buffington ford, when he saw that a large part of his command were so hard pressed that they would not be able to escape, and he turned back and continued his flight north, but doubled on his track and again attempted to cross near Blennerhassett's Island, but was foiled in this and compelled to make a detour to get out of the trap set for him by Colonel Putnam. In order to do this he marched outside the lines of Mr. Cutler and Lieutenant Conine and the other forces sent out to obstruct and hold the roads leading to the river. He was, however, followed by Shackelford, and also by a force of militia sent forward by Colonel Runkle, under command of Colonel Hill. These moved by boat up the Muskingum, and landed at McConnelsville July 23rd, just as Morgan crossed at Eaglesport, seven miles above. Colonel Hill took an unfrequented road over the hills and succeeded in flanking Moran, and getting his artillery into position, opened on the Rebels and threw them into confusion. They dropped their guns, booty, and everything that would impede progress and fled, followed by Hill as long as his artillery could get positions from which to shell them, keeping up the pursuit until about four P. M., when General Shackelford's cavalry came up and relieved the militia, now very much exhausted, whom Colonel Hill ordered back to the Muskingum.

Thus harassed the remnant of the raiders pursued their toilsome march. General Brooks, who had taken up his headquarters at Wellsville, Ohio, finding that there was a strong probability of Morgan crossing the Cleveland & Pittsburgh Railroad at Salineville sent Colonel Gallagher, with a regiment of six-months' men, to a point about two miles from that place, and had them posted advantageously near the supposed place of crossing. Major Way, with the Ninth Michigan Cavalry, was also moving up to the same point. In a short time the expected Rebels made their appearance, coming around a bend in the road. On catching sight of the infantry, they halted and turned their horses' heads in another direction. Before they could get out of the trap Major Way, with 200 men of the Ninth Michigan

Cavalry, dashed among them and commenced cutting right and left. The Rebels made but a brief resistance, when they broke in utter confusion. The scene that followed was almost ludicrous, and could only be matched by the previous stampede at Buffington's Island. Men dismounted, threw down their arms and begged for quarter, whilst others galloped around wildly in search of a place of escape and were "brought to time" by a pistol shot or saber stroke.

Morgan himself was riding in a carriage drawn by two white horses. Major Way saw him, and galloping up, reached for him. Morgan jumped out at the other side of the carriage, leaped over a fence, seized a horse, and galloped off as fast as horse flesh spurred by frightened heels, could carry him. About 200 succeeded in escaping with him. In the buggy thus hastily evacuated by Morgan were found his rations, consisting of a loaf of bread, some hard-boiled eggs, and a bottle of whiskey.

The number of Rebels killed in this engagement was five or six; number wounded not stated; prisoners, about 200, together with horses and arms. A few Union cavalry men were wounded.

About two o'clock P. M. of the same day the forces in pursuit of Morgan closed in around him in the vicinity of West Point, between New Lisbon and Wellsville. The Rebels were finally compelled to take refuge on a bluff, and, finding escape impossible, they surrendered to Colonel Shackleford and the militia, who now started on a general hunt for straggling Rebels, brought in numbers of them found concealed in the woods, all of whom were sent to Columbus.

A Rebel account states that Morgan on this raid captured 6,000 prisoners, all of whom were paroled, destroyed 34 important bridges, and the railroad tracks in 60 places, that they lost 28 commissioned officers killed, 34 wounded, and 250 men killed, wounded and captured; that by Federal accounts, they killed more than 200, wounded at least 350 and captured as above mentioned, 6,000; that the damage to railroads, steamboats and bridges, added to the destruction of public stores and depots, cannot fall short of $10,000,000; that they captured three pieces of artillery, and one 24-pounder at Lebanon, which they destroyed, one Parrott three-inch gun at Brandenburg, and a 12-pounder at Portland; that the Copperheads and Butter-nuts were always in the front opposing them; that occasionally they would meet a pure "Southern" generally a person banished from the border States.

The above-mentioned account was written by one of the raiders who escaped at Buffington, and as far as it relates to the Union loss, is not trustworthy, being an over-estimate, but as far as relates to the destruction of property, it is doubtless not up to the mark.

Morgan and his officers were confined in the Penitentiary, at Columbus, from which prison Morgan and six others made their escape November 27, 1863, by cutting through the stone floors of three cells with knives carried off from the prison table, till they reached the air chamber below and tunneling thence under the prison walls into the outer yard, and climbing the surrounding prison wall by aid of ropes made from their bed clothes. An investigation into the cause of the escape showed that the usual routine of sweeping the cells was omitted in the case of those occupied by the Rebels, and they were thus enabled to cover up and conceal their work. The omission to sweep was at the suggestion of one of the directors of the Penitentiary.

Morgan reached his hiding place beyond the mountains of Kentucky and Tennessee in safety, and afterward led several bands of raiders into the Blue Grass, in one of which he was killed in a skirmish, while endeavoring to escape from a house in a little village in East Tennessee.

THE MILITIA.

Under the order to organize the forces assembled at Camp Marietta during the Morgan raid, Colonel Putnam appointed on his own staff:

Josiah H. Jenkins, assistant adjutant general; P. B. Putnam, quartermaster; George O. Hildreth, post hospital surgeon; James Little, post hospital surgeon; F. D. Howell, post hospital surgeon; B. F. Culver, post hospital assistant surgeon; John W. White, post hospital assistant surgeon; Michael Edwards, post hospital assistant surgeon; Joseph M. C. Moorhead, examining surgeon; William Beebe, examining surgeon; William Acklev, examining surgeon; besides a corps of clerks and assistants.

ATHENS COUNTY MILITIA.

A. D. Jaynes, colonel; E. L. DeWitt, colonel; Jared Maris, adjutant.

Names of Company Commandants—Charles Matheny, E. D. Harper, reported July 14th; Charles Goodspeed, Elias Grewell, Edward Wheeler, C. Cooper, F. L. Junrod, C. Winget, I. C. Shotts, A. D. Jaynes, H. Nauna, and Daniel Fulton, reported July 16th; Charles Stout and James M. Holmes, reported July 17th; S. H. Smith, E. Stalder and E. P. Pickett, reported July 18th.

Highest number of men from Athens County, 1,082; total number companies, 17.

MILES COUNTY MILITIA.

Nathaniel M. McLaughlin, colonel; William B. Skrevenir, major.

Names of Company Commandants—I. H. Rutherford, L. E. Campbell, John Barrot, G. G. Woodward and R. B. Wilson, reported July 16th; John F. Martin, Miner Reed and S. Riggs, reported July 17th.

Total number companies, nine; highest number men reported 706.

MONROE COUNTY MILITIA.

Joseph Kelley, colonel.

Company Commandants—R. T. Beiber, S. C. Kelley, Henry Scott, J. M. Evans, reported July 17th; J. L. Watson, S. F. Ellsworth, G. W. Bennett, C. M. Stewart, J. M. Jones, J. A. Fleischmann, C. B. Way, H. R. Mason, Joshua Way, J. Daugherty, Max Albert, A. C. McElroy and Elias Hoppmann, reported July 18th; Peter Dover, George Ring and J. Roemer, reported July 20th; John Mallory, J. J. Hurd, James Adams, J. F. Culverhouse and J. Rupp, reported July 21st; W. Truax, July 22nd; and M. Thoenen, John Bellman and John Monroe, July 24th.

Total number companies, 29; highest number men reported, 1,397.

NOBLE COUNTY MILITIA.

William P. Sprague, colonel; William H. Frazier, adjutant.

Company Commandants—Pearson Mordeck, James A. Morrison, B. B. Taylor, Asa Barton, and John Hesson, reported July 15th; D. L. Weems, July 16th; J. R.

Rickley, Louis Headly, Lorenzo Powell, Israel Harris, July 17th; Dudley Evans, Enoch Wilkinson, William Fowler, J. M. Walters, James Gibson, William L. Parks, William Ogle, C. Clymer, David McGary, Robert Bary, and Robert Hayne, July 18th. J. F. Briggs, George E. Geddes, July 19th.

Number of companies, 23; highest of men reported on any one day, 2,112.

PERRY COUNTY MILITIA.

W. Cook, colonel; S. F. Muzzy, colonel; A. W. Poundston, adjutant.

Company Commandants—D. W. Marsh, John S. Nixon, Obediah Larimer, J. Mackin, and W. H. Spencer, reported July 17th; John Dike, A. T. Sharp, J. Clark, James C. Ritchey, James R. Fulton, and W. L. Harbough, July 18th.

Number of companies, 11; highest number of men reported, 856.

HOCKING COUNTY MILITIA.

David Little, colonel.

Company Commandants—Samuel Creighton, Abraham McLain, John O. Kennedy, D. Little, and John Oaks, reported July 18th.

Number of companies, five; highest number of men reported, 344.

MORGAN COUNTY MILITIA.

John C. Ellston, Jr., colonel; William B. Loomis, adjutant; Frederick W. Wood, colonel; Bearly Davis, adjutant.

Company Commandants—J. H. Roland, reported July 14th; A. J. Harte, J. McVay, H. R. Seaman, Sidney Newton and Thomas Hammond, reported July 15; J. D. Lashley, George Hedges and William Balding reported July 16th; J. L. Pierrot, S. S. Jenkins, William Miller, James B. Tannehill, John Henderson, H. R. Hughes, E. G. Caulson, H. B. White, Charles McCarthy, John Preston, reported July 17th; H. C. Harvey, P. D. Danford, John Rollison, William McIntire, G. B. Fowler, F. G. Phillips and Thomas Vicroy, reported July 18th; D. D. Scott and John Fouraker, reported July 19th.

Total number companies, 28; highest number of men reported, 2,362.

WASHINGTON COUNTY MILITIA.

J. Mills Kendrick, colonel commanding; Thomas W. Moore,* colonel First regiment; Joseph B. Kinkead,* colonel First regiment; Thomas Day, colonel First regiment; Edwin Cood, colonel Second regiment; Joseph Dyar, colonel Third regiment; O. P. Scott, colonel Fourth regiment.

Company Commandants—Augustus Dyar, and A. T. Nye, Jr., reported July 14th; S. S. Knowles, J. W. Tripp, John Holst, Jr., K. Krauss, Elijah Locker, John W. Conley, Henry Kelley, David P. Pugh, P. L. Cole, J. H. Brown, W. L. Baldwin, and J. L. W. Newton, reported July 15th: D. Y. Hill, E. M. Howland, Loring E. Stone, J. P. Sanford, Charles A. Cook, George Davenport, John Magee, Charles H. Cook, R. P. Dilley, B. Racer, H. M. Brown, M. Ryan, J. W. Brabham, J. M. Warren, E. D. Smith, and Thomas W. Moore, reported July 16th: Oscar Liackey, J. A. Brown, Jacob Hagar, G. R. Goddard, Washington Wilson, G. B. Turner, July 17th; J. P. Kinkad, Charles Luckens, C. H. Goddard, John E. Smallwood, John Dretchell, J. F. Desher, and S. P. Willis, July 18th; William Smith, J. D. Gates, July 19th, J. C. Campbell, and Israel N. Dye, July 20th.

*Relieved to command men on detached duty.

Total number of companies, 47; highest number of men reported, 2,039.

Besides these, there were volunteers under command of S. Mason, Major Bloomfield, J. W. Brabham, D. Y. Hill, 108 men, and six-months' men in camp at this time numbering 250. In addition to the companies already enumerated, six others from counties outside the first military district came in with 634 men. The daily aggregate of forces reported at Camp Marietta during the Morgan raid was as follows: On July 13th, the day after the Governor's proclamation, there were in camp 175 men—the militia had not yet started; July 14th, 457; 15th, 1,732; 16th, 4,259; 17th, 7,064; 18th, 11,782; 19th, 12,082; 20th, (owing to an order from the Governor to send the militia home), 6,434; 21st, 5,826; 22nd, 3,939; 23rd, 2,721; 24th, 3,372; 25th, 2,466; 26th, 2,389; 27th, 2,384; 28th, 449; 29th, 284; all the militia disappearing again.

On July 19th there were reported at Camp Putnam, either as on duty or in camp, militia and other soldiers, as follows:

NAMES OF COMMANDANTS	NO. OF MEN.
Col. E. L. DeWitt, Athens County, militia.....	1,036
" D. Little, Hocking County, militia.....	337
" N. M. McLaughlin, Meigs County, militia....	708
" Joseph Kelley, Monroe County, militia.....	1,355
" J. C. Elston, Jr., Morgan County, militia....	2,364
" W. P. Sprague, Noble County, militia.....	2,117
" L. F. Muzzy, Perry County, militia.....	827
" J. M. Kendrick, Washington County, militia..	3,039
All others .....	252

Total .....12,082

The results of the operations planned at Camp Marietta were to compel Morgan to make an extended detour to the northward, thereby saving a large tract of country from devastation. Another and more important result was the preventing of his escape across the river, at Buffington. There is no doubt but that the timely arrival of Captain Wood at Buffington, and the construction of the earthwork mentioned, prevented Morgan from crossing with his entire command the night before the battle. The statement of Gen. Basil Duke, heretofore referred to, fully corroborates this fact. Captain Wood left the fortification under orders from General Scammon, of the Kanawha department, a superior officer, and he left none too soon. Six hours later and the Rebels would have attacked him, overpowered his small force, captured the steamer and ferried their troops across before either Judah or Hobson, or the gunboats, could have prevented it.

There are few men that could have handled so large a body of men so well, under such circumstances, as Colonel Putnam did these who came so suddenly upon his hands. They came by the thousands, wholly unarmed, undisciplined, unequipped and unorganized. His action in this situation was admirable, preserving his usual fine equanimity through it all; and superintending the details of the whole camp, he still had time enough to plan for the capture and detention of Morgan. Down the Ohio, out on the line of the Marietta & Cincinnati Railroad as far as the Big Hocking, up the Muskingum, up Duck Creek, up the Little Muskingum as far as Woodsfield, and up the Ohio, everywhere his regiments and companies were prepared to repel and delay the invaders. While we say this of the commandant of Camp Marietta, we must not forget that grand array of militia, 12,000 strong, who sprang to the defense of their invaded State, many of them leaving their crops unharvested in the fields, and often compelled to march by their own fields that needed their attention, and doing it without a word of complaint; many leaving their stores, their shops, and employments that required hourly attention, to engage in an uncertain enterprise, the danger of which at the time seemed threatening and hazardous.

It was fully demonstrated by Morgan's raid that no invasion, no matter how well planned or how well carried out, could succeed on Northern soil, and this raid was the last of the kind ever attempted.

CHICKAMAUGA.

On September 19th and 20th occurred the battle of Chickamauga, in which the following regiments having Washington County companies in them were engaged: The Ninety-second, Thirty-sixth, and Eighteenth Infantry, and First Ohio Cavalry. They fought nobly to save the day in this most desperate battle, losing heavily—the Ninety-second seven killed, 78 wounded, including Col. D. B. Fearing, and 20 missing; the Thirty-sixth, 12 killed, including Colonel Jones, 65 wounded, and 18 missing.

The First Ohio Cavalry, in this battle, were ordered to charge, through some mistake, and had started toward the enemy's line, some 300 in number, with saber's drawn; it would have been a second Balaklava, where the famous "six hundred" composing the Light brigade, made such a hopeless charge, but for a timely countermand of the order.

The famous charge at Chickamauga, made by Turchin's brigade, in which were the Thirty-sixth and Ninety-second regiments, should not be passed without adequate mention. A correspondent of the Cincinnati Commercial says:

After resisting several heavy charges the brigade changed direction by filing to the left, into the woods skirting the road on that side, and were halted and brought to a front, leaving the brigade in columns by companies, forming two lines of battle, the Eleventh Ohio and Eighteenth Kentucky in front, and the Ninety-second and Thirty-sixth in the rear. Hardly had this been completed when a Rebel battery opened a perfect storm of shell and grape-shot into our ranks. This was entirely unexpected to us. It seems a whole division of the enemy had passed entirely around our left, and, coming up in our rear, expected to capture the entire left wing of our army.

Just at the moment the Rebels opened General Turchin's brigade up:

"Whose brigade is this?"

"General Turchin's" was promptly answered.

"General, can your brigade break through those lines?"

"Yes, I guess so, if any brigade can."

"Very well, do it at once."

General Turchin had been commanding our brigade but a short time, but long enough to gain the confidence of his men. Rising in his stirrups he gave the command—"About face—forward, double-quick—charge bayonets—march!" With a yell, the volume of which was decreased not a whit by the fact that the men fully realized that everything depended on the success of this movement, they did charge.

The enemy were drawn up in three lines in an open field, and as we emerged from the woods delivered a volley that tore through our ranks, but failed to check the onward course of our men, who returned the fire, charged bayonets, and dashed into them before they could reload.

The Rebels broke in the wildest confusion, while cheer upon cheer from our brave boys added swiftness to their fight. A running fight now ensued which baffles description. The smoke arising from the discharge of so many guns, and the thick clouds of dust completely obscured both Rebel and Federal, while the hoarse commands of the officers, endeavoring to keep their men in line, the lurid flash of artillery, and the bursting of shell and rattling of grapeshot, which the Rebels continued to pour into our ranks, at short range, from three points, made up a picture as nearly resembling Pandemonium as any one need wish to see. * * *

On this charge our brigade captured about 600 prisoners and four pieces of cannon, but were so closely pursued that we had to abandon the cannon, and half of our prisoners escaped in the confusion, but 300 hundred were marched along and sent safely through to Chattanooga that night.

Officers of the reserve, who had a fair view of the whole charge, describe it as the grandest spectacle imaginable.

MISSIONARY RIDGE.

The next great battle in which Washington County figured was Missionary Ridge. Rosecrans had planned to carry the enemy's position on the ridge and on Lookout Mountain, and when Grant relieved him, everything was ready to his hand. Bragg, with his Rebel legions, 40,000 strong, held high Lookout and Missionary Ridge fully fortified and bristling with cannon; but Sherman, with the Army of the Mississippi, had re-enforced Grant, and now everything, by November 23rd, was ready. Sherman, by a detour, had quietly taken position to the northeast unknown to the enemy, and was now ready to cross the Tennessee River and attack the northern fortifications on the ridge. Hooker had crossed the Tennessee by a pontoon bridge at Bridgeport, southwest of Chattanooga, and was ready to storm Lookout Mountain. Meanwhile "Pap" Thomas, with the army that had fought its way from Stone River to the Chattanooga, moved out from the center. Let an eye-witness relate the story.*

The day was bright and beautiful; the rays of the sun, reflect from ten thousand bayonets, dazzled the beholder's eyes; the most warlike troops, as if for battle, proud steeds, bearing gallant riders, galloped along the lines; every eminence about the city was crowded with spectators; and for the first time in my experience I saw soldiers of the Union march to battle to the beat of the spirit-stirring drum. This was indeed the "pom-pom and circumstance" of war; and it is no wonder that the Rebels whom we afterward captured declared they did not think we were going to make an attack upon them, but had our troops out for a review or dress parade.

* * * On the eventful day of which I write, I saw an exultant and lofty pride, a high and patriotic hope, a firm and deep resolve expressed in the countenance of each soldier as I had never seen them expressed before, and no one could doubt, as he looked upon them, that they would go that day wherever they were bidden, even should they be compelled to pass through surges of vindictive fire.

Thomas' men moved out swiftly, drove in the enemy's pickets, and captured his first line, known as Orchard Ridge, where they intrenched. The next day, the 24th Hooker attacked Lookout, and fought his celebrated "battle among the clouds," driving the Rebels from their position; and Sherman, having constructed a pontoon bridge across the Tennessee, above, had attacked and carried the north end of Missionary Ridge. Accordingly, on November 25th, everything was ready for the final grand assault on the stronghold of the enemy on Missionary Ridge. The Rebel General Bragg, trusting to the natural strength of his position, had sent off part of his command, under Longstreet, to capture Burnside at Knoxville, and from his eyrie on the ridge surveyed with complacency the preparations of his foe for the attack. At last Grant was ready, and at the preconcerted signal of six guns, fired at intervals of two seconds, the assault began, all along the line, up the steep side of the mountain. Soon the grand roll of musketry, and a line of smoke encircling the mountain, told that they had started the enemy from his lair. A long line of blue, broken into triangles, with their points toward the crest of the mountain (15 of them) and at each apex a stand of colors marks the center of the regiment. Upward they rush. Anon, a standard goes down, which means that the entire color guard have been shot.

Mr. Furay continues:

And still the Union troops pressed on, scaling unwaveringly the sides of Missionary Ridge; the blood of their comrades renders their footsteps slippery; the toil of the ascent almost takes away their breath; the Rebel musketry and artillery mow down their thinned ranks—but still they press on! Not once do they even seem to waver. The color-bearer goes ahead and plant their flags far in advance of the troops; and at last—O, moment of supreme triumph!—they reach the crest and rush like an avalanche upon the astonished foe. Whole regiments throw down their arms and surrender: the Rebel artillerists are bayoneted at their guns; and the cannon which had a moment before been thundering on the Union ranks, are now turned about, pouring death into the midst of the mass of miserable fugitives who are rushing down the eastern slope of the ridge.

Lieut.-Col. H. F. Devol, commanding the Thirty-sixth Regiment in this battle, in his official report, says:

My regiment was assigned to the center of the first line, the Eleventh Ohio Volunteer Infantry on my right, and the Ninety-second Ohio Volunteer Infantry on the left. Two companies, B and H, were thrown forward as skirmishers. Remaining there until three o'clock, we moved forward a short distance, halted, deployed, and immediately again moved in line of battle through a skirt of woods. As soon as we reached the open ground, the enemy opened on us with artillery from the top of Missionary Ridge. We were then ordered to double-quick, which we did, passing the second line of the enemy's breastworks, which were occupied by General Beatty's brigade; reached the base of the ridge, where also were some troops under cover. We rushed up the ridge as fast as possible, under a terrible enfilading fire from both right, left and front. Near the top, and about six rods from the enemy's breastworks, we passed over (I think) the Ninth Kentucky Volunteer Infantry. Reaching the breastworks, where the enemy lay, a terrible, almost hand-to-hand fight ensued. Stubbornly did the enemy contest the works.

Thomas' men penetrated the position, and I passed to the rear without a guard. Those of the enemy who escaped made a second stand on the crest, from four to six rods beyond; but they were at once killed, captured or routed. On our left was a heavy force of the enemy's infantry and two pieces of artillery. The enemy kept up a constant fire. The artillery fired two rounds, when we made a charge on it and captured two pieces, but not until they had succeeded in getting them some distance down the eastern slope of the ridge to the rear. They were unlimbered and immediately hauled back to the top of the ridge by the men, and placed in position. The taking of the artillery was done, mainly, under the superintendence of Sergeant Adney, of company B, and Sergeant Holliday, of Company H. Some men from the Eleventh and Ninety-second Ohio Volunteer Infantry assisted in hauling the guns back. * * * Capt. J. C. Selby, Company K, was wounded in the right arm (which has since been amputated) near a log cabin, to the left of where we went up the ridge. First Lieut. O. J. Wood, Company B, when in command of the company, was seriously wounded, the ball passing in command of the company, was seriously wounded, the ball passing through from left to right side and through the right lung. Second Lieut. J. W. Hanlin, Company H, was slightly wounded in the leg.

*W. S. Furay, correspondent Cincinnati Gazette, 35

It would be in vain for me to try to express how nobly and with what daring both officers and men conducted themselves, in this their fifth great battle. Never as yet have they fallen back under fire in the face of the enemy. In this all seemed eager to fight, and under the leadership of their general, felt confident of success. I would particularize, did I not have to mention the whole.

The Thirty-sixth lost nine killed, 65 wounded and five missing, and the Ninety-second, 12 killed and 42 wounded. Among the former killed were Capt. W. Beale Whitteley and Adjutant George B. Turner, both promising young officers, from Marietta, a fuller account of whose lives will be found further on. Lieut.-Col. Douglas Putnam, Jr., received a severe wound in the ankle. Missionary Ridge was the most peculiar battle of the war. No other presented such natural obstacles to be overcome at such high altitudes. Bragg had 40,000 men, and Grant 75,000, but the advantages of position in Bragg's favor fully made up for the disparity of numbers. Grant went to Chattanooga on crutches to relieve Rosecrans, but now his fame traveled on the wings of the wind. To Vicksburg, through a fortunate turn of affairs, he added Missionary Ridge, and the country went wild with enthusiasm for Grant. He was made lieutenant-general, and Sherman taking command of the army at Chattanooga, soon began his march on Atlanta.

The year 1863 closed without any further great battles, and the Union armies generally went into winter quarters. Nearly all of the three-years' men re-enlisted as veterans, showing their devotion to country and the flag, and their great interest in carrying the conflict to a successful close.

The regiments having companies from Washington County, who re-enlisted, furnished veterans as follows: Eighteenth Regiment, 62; Thirty-sixth Regiment, 364; Thirty-ninth Regiment, 534; Sixty-third Regiment, 455; Seventy-seventh Regiment, 304; First Cavalry, 285; Second West Virginia Cavalry, 353; First Light Artillery, 515; and also Pierpont Battery, 80. The Thirty-ninth Ohio furnished more veterans than any other regiment from Ohio, and Washington County more veterans than any other county in the State, except Hamilton.

Upon the return of the veterans from the front on 30 days' furlough, they were met with a continuous ovation. The citizens of Washington County greeted them with gratitude and respect.

The roll of dead officers and soldiers for the year 1863 includes many good names, none, however, more lamented than Col. Jesse Hildebrand, a fuller notice of whose life will be found in another part of this work.

Governor Brough entered upon his term with a more emphatic endorsement than any former governor ever had in the State, receiving over 100,000 majority, of which Washington County contributed as follows: Home majority, 865; soldiers' majority, 804; total majority, 1,669. This was a very decided endorsement of the war policy and was an emphatic pledge to devote the resources of the county to the prosecution of the war, not only by furnishing additional soldiers, but money through taxes and voluntary contributions to support the families of the soldiers left behind as the wards of the nation, and the history of 1863, 1864 and 1865 shows how fully the county came up to the work. The whole amount of money thus furnished can never be known. The value of the service rendered could not be measured by money because it involved the expenditure of the best energies, finest talent and noblest courage, involving loss of life and all that men hold most dear; but the feeling was benevolent and deep seated in the hearts of the people, that no sacrifice was too costly to serve the Union, for without union all the rest was worthless. Now the fine theories of other days, the high periods and eloquence of the statesmen and patriots of the illustrious past were being forged into the life and experience of the nation. Men were living what before they had only dreamed. The great battle year of 1863 had developed heroes and leaders. A nation had grappled with and worsted the foe, and it was now only a question of time as to how long the Rebellion would hold out.

OHIO NATIONAL GUARD.

In the spring of 1864 the Legislature passed a new militia law, repealing the one enacted the previous year requiring military encampments. The new body of State soldiery thus summoned into existence was the Ohio National Guards that was soon to become so famous in the annals of the States.

From the time Governor Brough was inaugurated a new impetus was given to all the military affairs of the State, which in no way reflected on the able administration of his illustrious predecessor, David Tod. Governor Brough was a man of strong feelings and convictions, and he greatly desired to see the war end in an honorable peace. He was anxious to help the President and vigilant in watching for opportunities to help on the good work. The invasion of the State during the last year had induced the Governor and Legislature to favor a thorough militia organization, and Governor Brough, fearing incursions by the enemy along the southern border of the State, sent Ex-Governor Dennison to Washington to urge upon the Secretary of War the necessity of putting State regiments into the service along the border and on the Northern line at proper posts, to discourage any invasion from Canada which was feared, but the Secretary denied the necessity. Failing in this, and the circumstances of the situation showing that soon all must either be gained or lost by striking heavy blows, thick and fast, Governor Brough adopted the theory that the next best way to prevent invasion was to keep the enemy busy at home. He, therefore, argued that all veterans and volunteers should be in the field in the immediate presence of the enemy, ready to push him to the wall, and that all soldiers on guard duty should be relieved and sent to the front. The National guards offered a partial solution of the problem, and seeking the co-operation and counsel of the governors of other States, he arranged for a meeting of the governors of Indiana, Illinois, Iowa and Wisconsin, to be held at Washington, where it was decided to offer the President the services of the militia of the States named for 100 days. The offer was couched in the following terms:

WAR DEPARTMENT WASHINGTON CITY, April 21, 1864.

To the President of the United States

I. The governors of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, and Wisconsin, offer to the President infantry troops for the approaching campaign, as follows: Ohio, thirty thousand; Indiana, twenty thousand; Illinois, twenty thousand; Iowa, ten thousand; Wisconsin, five thousand.

II. The term of service to be one hundred days, reckoning from the date of muster into the service of the United States, unless sooner discharged.

III. The troops to be mustered into the service of the United States by regiments, when the regiments are filled up, according to regulations of the War Department; the whole number to be furnished within twenty days from date of notice of the acceptance of this proposition.

IV. The troops to be clothed, armed, equipped, subsisted, transported, and paid as other United States infantry volunteers, and to serve in fortifications, or wherever their services may be required, within or without their respective States.

V. No bounty to be paid the troops, nor the services charged or credited on any draft.

VI. The draft for three-years' service to go on in any State or district where the quota is not filled up, but if any officer or soldier in this special service should be drafted, he shall be credited for the service rendered.

JOHN BROUGH, Governor of Ohio.

O. P. MORTON, Governor of Indiana.

RICHARD YATES, Governor of Illinois.

W. M. STONE, Governor of Iowa.

The President accepted the offer two days after, and on the same day the adjutant gen-of Ohio received a dispatch from Governor Brough to call out 30,000 of the Ohio National Guard for 100 days' service. They were to rendezvous at the nearest practicable point in their respective counties. A week was given for the muster, and by sundown of May 2, 1864, over 30,000 of Ohio's substantial citizens reported for duty, and demanded to be sent on to the post of duty. Such an uprising had not been seen since the first alarm of Sumter. Governor Brough at one stroke, like that of a magician's wand, had summoned an army into existence. Over 40 regiments, containing 34,000 men, responded to the call and were accepted, thus relieving 30,000 veterans to go to the front.

The situation in Washington County as to the draft at this time was very encouraging. Under all the calls of 1863, and the calls of March 14, 1864, for 200,000 more, there was an excess of 192 to the credit of different townships, but as the credit of one township would not help the deficiency of another, it so happened that 54 men were drafted as follows: Belpre, 10; Decatur, 21; Dunham, 1; Lawrence, 4; Liberty, 15; Ludlow, 3.

The draft, therefore, had nothing to do with the great uprising of the National Guard, although the guards were, by a subsequent arrangement, credited to Ohio on her quota.

The Washington County regiment of the National Guard, organized under the militia law of 1863, remained substantially the same under the new law creating the Ohio National Guard. It was the Forty-sixth Regiment but the number was changed to One Hundred and Forty-eighth. The regiment was commanded by Col. Thomas W. Moore, of Warren township, and all but two companies were from Washington County. Three companies having come from Vinton County, they were consolidated with the eight from Washington County, and on May 22, 1864, they left Marietta for Harper's Ferry. A fuller account of the services of the regiment will be found further on in this work.

RED RIVER—MARKS MILLS.

General Banks, supported by Commodore Porter, with a fleet of gunboats, during the month of March, 1864, started up the Red River, and General Steele with the army under his command from Little Rock, Arkansas, to effect a junction with Banks, but the Rebels, having driven Banks back, turned their whole force upon Steele. On April 25, the brigade, consisting of the Thirty-sixth Iowa, Forty-third Indiana, and Seventy-seventh Ohio regiments, under command of Lieutenant-Colonel Drake, of the Thirty-sixth Iowa, was sent from General Steele's army to guard an empty train of 270 wagons returning to Pine Bluffs. The whole force numbered about 1,500, with a battery of four guns. When the train reached Marks Mills it was attacked by Shelby's cavalry, estimated at 7,000, and the Thirty-sixth and Forty-third, after a gallant fight were driven back; the Seventy-seventh guarding the rear hurried up on the double quick, to the help of the Forty-third and Thirty-sixth, running over five miles. They charged the enemy with a yell, and killed them by the score, but found an overpowering force of Rebels closing in on them from every side. "They fought desperately hand-to-hand and foot to foot," says an eye witness, but all in vain; they were all taken prisoners except one lieutenant and 40 men, who cut their way out and escaped to the Union lines after traveling over 100 miles, swimming many streams and eating nothing for 48 hours. Captain McCormick and Lieutenant Smithson were taken prisoners with the rest, and marched from the battle-field to the prison pen at Tyler, Texas, marching 52 miles in 24 hours. The negro servants of the officers were shot at once after the surrender.

This was the second term in Rebel prisons for Captain McCormick, he having been rode down, shot and captured at Shiloh, by the Texan cavalry.

One of the men of Company C, Seventy-seventh, tore the colors from the staff and wrapped it around him, when the Rebels were within 20 yards of it, cut his way through the Rebel lines and brought the colors into the camp, in triumph. The flag has nineteen holes in it.

The Union loss in killed and wounded was about 250, the Rebel loss was much larger, estimated at the time by Union officers at 1,000. The Seventy-seventh lost as follows: Killed, seven; mortally wounded, one; severely wounded, 14; slightly wounded, 17; wounded prisoners, six; prisoners, 300; paroled, seven; missing, 18; total, 370.

In June the great raid of Generals Hunter, Crook, and Averill, took place. They destroyed the military institute at Lexington, Virginia, and did great damage to the enemy. The Second Virginia Cavalry and Thirty-sixth Regiment took a gallant part in this expedition.

July 24th the Thirty-sixth Regiment was in the battle of Winchester, and lost heavily, and all along the line the soldiers from Washington County were getting in their work.

ATLANTA CAMPAIGN.

The war had now resolved itself into two great movements—Grant on Richmond and Sherman at Atlanta. Sherman had gathered within his grasp the armies of the departments of the Ohio, the Cumberland, the Tennessee, and the Arkansas, and after a thorough understanding with Grant, he began his famous campaign against Atlanta. Washington County had companies in five regiments which took part in this campaign, the First and Ninth Cavalry, the Thirty-ninth, Sixty-third and Ninety-second regiments, besides men in the Seventy-third, Thirty-third, and other regiments.

Sherman, by a series of brilliant flank movements to the right, compelled the enemy to abandon every position from Dalton to Atlanta, and fought the battles of Rocky Face Ridge, Resaca, Pumpkin Vine Creek, Kenesaw Mountain, Niojack Creek, Peachtree Creek, the battles around Atlanta and Jonesborough. In all these battles, making about 120 days of nearly constant fighting, he lost but one—that of Kenesaw Mountain, which was immediately retrieved by another movement on the right flank, compelling the enemy to evacuate Kenesaw. The Rebel authorities being dissatisfied with the Fabian policy of Johnston, removed him and placed Hood in command at Atlanta, where by July 22, 1864, Sherman had extended his lines in the form of a semi-circle, partially enclosing the city and the enemy's works. Hood, on the day named, wishing to begin a strong and aggressive policy, quietly stole out and got on the flank and rear of the gallant McPherson, before the movement was fully known to the Union generals. Here occurred one of the most desperate and hard fought battles of the war, the Rebels hoping to surprise and beat McPherson, and then each of the other divisions in turn made charge after charge on our lines. The Thirty-ninth Regiment was in the thickest of this engagement, and suffered severely, losing one-third of the entire number in killed and wounded. Our line was beaten back and several batteries captured, but more than all, McPherson killed. Sherman hurried Schofield up to the scene and after a hard struggle, lasting until night, drove the enemy back with a loss of 8,000, the Union loss being 3,722.

Sherman finally, by another movement to the right and rear of Atlanta, cut the enemy's communications, destroyed all railroads leading into the city when it was abandoned, and on September 1st Sherman's triumphant legions marched in and took possession. Reorganizing his army and sending part of it with Thomas to Nashville, Sherman retained and consolidated the remaining forces into four Corps, the Fourteenth, Fifteenth, Seventeenth, and Twentieth, which, together with Kilpatrick's cavalry, numbered about 65,000 men.

MARCH TO THE SEA.

After perfecting his arrangements, Sherman by November 11th was ready to begin his famous "March to the Sea." The army marched in two columns, the right with the Fifteenth and Seventeenth corps, commanded by Gen. O. O. Howard, and the left, with the Fourteenth and Twentieth corps, led by Gen. H. W. Slocum. Each wing had a pontoon train, and kept their line of march about 20 miles apart. Kilpatrick, with the cavalry, hovered around the front demonstrating first on one flank and then on the other to deceive the enemy as to the real intentions of Sherman. By thus widening his lines he enabled the foraging parties to cover 40 miles of territory from which to obtain subsistence for the troops, and they lived well. On December 10th, after marching 255 miles, being six weeks on the way, they arrived at Savannah. Soon Fort McAllister fell, and the grand march was successfully ended. It is an extra honor to have been with Sherman on this "March to the Sea" for history presents few parallels to it, and though little fighting was done it was a grand, achievement, and far-reaching in its results.

After resting and refitting his army, Sherman, on February 1, 1865, started northward through the Carolinas, devastating the country and teaching the South Carolinians a few lessons in the hardships of war as he went. General Johnston having been restored to the command of the decimated divisions of his old army, hurried up from the Southwest on the trail of Sherman, to intercept him, but by skillful handling of the cavalry, General Sherman deceived Johnston into believing that he was going to Charlotte, North Carolina, and as soon as the Rebel force had concentrated there turned to the eastward and started direct to Goldsborough, where he expected to be joined by the divisions of General Schofield. Johnston, however, by rapid marches intercepted four divisions of the left wing on March 15th, at Averbysborough, on a narrow, swampy neck of land, between Cape Fear and South rivers, North Carolina. The Rebels under General Hardee, estimated at 20,000, attacked the Union lines with great spirit, hoping to beat them before re-enforcements could be brought up. By a rapid movement to the left the enemy's flank was turned, and being pressed in front by other divisions, they were repulsed.

A gallant officer from Washington County, Gen. B. D. Fearing, commanding the old "McCook brigade," was on the left line, and General Davis ordered him "to check the enemy and hold them if it cost his whole brigade." The charge of General Fearing was made with spirit and accompanied with hard fighting.

At Bentonville, on March 18th, the enemy made their last attack, Johnston hoping by a swift and heavy assault to break the left wing before the other could be brought to reinforce it. Johnston accordingly made several desperate charges on our left wing. In the first, two brigades of Carlin's division were driven back, losing three guns. Slocum thereupon stood on the defensive, placing four divisions in line to the front and making such slight defensive works as they could, while Kilpatrick attacked the enemy on the left. The left received six fierce assaults from Johnston's army. They came on after the old style, line upon line, closing up the gaps made by our fire but were met by equal discipline and coolness, and by superior numbers. Our artillery did terrible execution on the foe, inflicting heavy loss on his devoted ranks. The Rebels had hoped to crush Slocum, but they were disappointed. Night came and nothing had been gained; and during the night Slocum brought up and disposed three more divisions, rendering his position safe, and Johnston fortified, but made no more attacks. Sherman and his entire army came up next day, and movements were immediately begun to cut off the wily Johnston, but he decamped that night, and Sherman, with his entire army, moved on to Goldsborough. After paying a hasty visit to Grant at City Point, Sherman again began operations against the enemy, which speedily ended in the surrender of Johnston and the collapse of the Confederacy.

SHENANDOAH VALLEY.

While these memorable events were transpiring, and Sherman was establishing for himself a name and fame equal to that of any military chieftain of modern times, equally brilliant successes were attending the Union arms in other fields, in which Washington County figured.

In August, 1864, Grant desiring to have a trusty lieutenant on the Potomac and Shenandoah, sent Gen. Phil Sheridan to take command of those armies. Sheridan's instructions were comprised principally in two words—"Go in!"—and in he went.

On September 13th he confronted the Rebel general Early on Opequan Creek, near Berryville, in the Shenandoah Valley, a few miles south of Harper's Ferry, and on the 19th at 2 A. M., began dispositions for battle. General Crook, with the Eighth Corps (the Army of West Virginia), including the Second Virginia Cavalry and the Thirty-sixth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, was sent out on the right to turn the enemy's left flank, while the Sixth and Nineteenth corps assaulted the enemy in front, but were met with a vigorous resistance, and Grove's and Rickett's divisions were repulsed with great loss.

A height in the rear, still held by the enemy, was soon stormed by Crook and carried, and Early retreated to his second position. Fisher's Hill, south of Winchester, but was attacked by Sheridan's victorious columns, beaten and compelled to retreat ignominiously, followed by Sheridan's cavalry, destroying everything as they went, and what they missed going up they destroyed on their way back, "so that nothing should be left to invite the enemy to return."

On October 9th, General Sheridan, in compliance with an order from Washington, went to that city, and by the 18th had returned as far as Winchester. Meanwhile, Early, chafing under his recent defeats, had demanded and received re-enforcements. Planning to take advantage of Sheridan's absence and effect a surprise, he stole out of his lair at dusk on the evening of the 18th, and to insure silence his men were divested of canteens and other equipments that would likely make a noise in marching. The Union Army, six miles distant, lay encamped at Cedar Creek, with Crook's Army of West Virginia in front, the Nineteenth Corps half a mile behind, and the Sixth Corps to the right and rear of the Nineteenth, Kitching's division behind Crook's left, and the cavalry, under Torbert, on the right of the Sixth. This army was perfectly unsuspecting of an attack, as they were in a measure justified in being. Early had divided his forces in two columns to take our army on both flanks. An hour before sunrise the Rebels were in position, and had not been discovered by our pickets, and our army slumbered in peace with the deep slumber of the early morning upon them, when all at once there came a crash of musketry on the morning air, and the Rebels' rushed over the trenches and upon the gallant veterans of so many well-fought fields. They seized their arms, the hurried command is given to form, but the Rebel line presses them out of their camp, and by their rapid pursuit prevent any formation. The enemy, perfectly familiar with every foot of ground, rushed on, and the Army of West Virginia took its way as best it could toward Winchester. The Sixth Corps attempted to stay the Rebel advance, and the Nineteenth, to the right, offered a stubborn resistance to the Rebel onslaught, but gradually fell back.

The Sixth fell back in good order, and the whole army, after losing 24 guns and 1,200 prisoners was in full retreat. The Rebels stopped to plunder our camps. Meantime, Sheridan riding out of Winchester found the first stragglers of the retreat and at once took in the situation. Putting spurs to his horse he rode with all speed to the scene of action, turning back the soldiers and cheering them with such remarks as, "Face the other way, boys! we are going back to our camps—we are going to lick them out of their boots!" Hastily reforming the broken divisions, he arranged anew a line of battle and in two charges sent the Rebels flying up the valley, capturing 23 guns and 1,500 men and recovering the guns lost in the morning, and camping at the old camp so hastily abandoned in the early part of the day. This was the last of the Shenandoah campaign. Early's army was destroyed, and Sheridan had no enemy worth his attention to molest him in the valley.

BATTLE YEAR—1864.

Washington County was represented at the battle of Nashville by one company in the First and one in the Seventh Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, one company in the Eighteenth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, besides a large number distributed through other Ohio regiments. This battle, fought December 15th and 16th, 1864, was the crowning triumph of Gen. George H. Thomas, a perfect Waterloo to General Hood and the Rebel Army in the West. Thus ended the eventful year of 1864. From the beginning of the year to the end it was a series of Union victories, and Washington County's sons were on every field. All during the great battle year she had kept a steady stream of recruits going to the front, where they stepped into the places made vacant by the loss in battle or in hospital. She had sent out nearly a thousand of her best citizens for the 100 days' service. She had furnished more veterans for re-enlistment than any other county in the State excepting Hamilton, the number being 440, Stark being next with 400. The counties of the Fifteenth District stood as follows: Meigs, 245; Athens, 246; Washington, 440; Morgan, 251; Monroe, 238—total number of veterans, 1,420. During this year the grand Army of the Potomac, under General Grant, had engaged the flower of the Rebel Army in Virginia, who fought stubbornly for every inch of ground. It was on May 11th that Grant telegraphed the Secretary of War:

We have now ended the sixth day of very heavy fighting. The result to this time is much in our favor.

Our losses have been heavy, as well as those of the enemy. I think the loss of the enemy must be greater.

We have taken over five thousand prisoners, whilst he has taken from us but few except stragglers.

I propose to fight it out on this line if it takes all summer.

U. S. GRANT,
Lt.-Gen. Commanding.

It was this tenacious spirit and steady hammering that gradually overcame the Rebel armies.

By the battles of the Wilderness and the other great engagements fought during the year 1864 between Grant and Lee, the Rebel forces were terribly reduced in number, so also were ours, but the great North stood ready to fill the ranks and to furnish the treasure to carry on the war indefinitely, while the South, already exhausted, could scarcely hope to supply fresh regiments or more money. Thus although Grant did not succeed in giving Lee a crushing defeat, he so weakened him that when he set down before Petersburg and began his series of movements towards Richmond, he left Washington and the rear in a measure secure from molestation, that city being fully fortified and the fortifications being manned by the artillery of the reserve—the heroes of many battles—who were not needed at Petersburg. Among them were our Washington County Pierpont Battery, also Huntington's Battery.

The war had lasted nearly four years. Long and dreary they were, but filled with intensely exciting episodes. The people of the North were heartily tired of war and longed for peace. They had sent their bravest and best to the support of the Union and were ready for further sacrifices.

1865.

The newspapers of the year 1864 were filled with discussions of the terms of peace and propositions for settlement of the existing war, but nothing could be accomplished. It remained for Grant, Sherman, Thomas, and Sheridan to show the way to an honorable peace. At the beginning of the year 1865, Sherman had virtually completed his part in the great drama. Thomas had defeated and utterly routed and destroyed the Rebel Army under Hood, at Nashville, leaving nothing to fear in the west. Sheridan, by his crushing defeat of Early, in the Shenandoah valley, had made a good beginning on his part, and with Crook, Custer, and the others commanding that splendid body of cavalry, started on their great raid toward Richmond, broke down all opposition like a whirlwind, swept through Virginia at will, destroying railroads, canals, and everything in their track, and joined Grant at Petersburg on March 27th. The final surrender of Lee and his remnant of an army was only a question of time, but Grant had his plans fully matured, and he now considered the time most opportune to close in on the Rebel stronghold. He accordingly continued the flank movements to the left, placing Sheridan with his trusty cavalry on the extreme left with orders to proceed southwestward and develop the enemy's position and strength. Washington County was represented in Sheridan's cavalry by Company F, Second Virginia Cavalry, as well as in other regiments. Heavy masses of infantry were sent out to support Sheridan, and then began the most skillful and brilliant handling of large bodies of cavalry of any part of the war. The enemy were compelled to throw out a heavy force to meet this new movement, and thereby weakened the garrison at Petersburg and Richmond. A series of engagements took place, in which the Union troops were successful, taking many prisoners, and gaining many new and important positions, so that by April 2nd, Lee, realizing that his extended works around the two beleaguered cities had become untenable, sent the following dispatch from Petersburg to Jefferson Davis, at Richmond: "My lines are broken in three places. Richmond must be evacuated this evening." It was Sunday, and Davis was at church. He at once went out, and by 10 P. M. the Rebel government was well on its way toward Lynchburg, securing their own safety, and leaving the army stores that Lee depended on for support during the retreat at Richmond. Lee, therefore, had to forage for subsistence, which greatimpeded his retreat. It was indeed a losing game from the first, to contend with hunger and greatly superior forces at the same time. Four trains of provisions had been sent from Lynchburg to Appomattax station, and the Rebels were pushing on with all haste to gain that point, but their horses were worn out, and they had no cavalry of any consequence. A man will stand hunger and fatigue and outlast several horses, in an emergency. So with Lee's grand Army of Northern Virginia, now reduced to barely 30,000 men, the veterans of so many battles, they could still offer a stubborn resistance, but the dumb brutes, that pulled their wagons and cannon, were totally exhausted. Sheridan, taking in the situation, dispatched Crook and Custer to capture the four trains, intended for the Rebel Army. This they did by a rapid march, riding up to the astonished train men before they were aware of their danger; and when Lee's advance guards came up they found no provisions, but saw an impenetrable wall of blue-coats, blocking their further advance. Lee, coming up, ordered a charge, supposing there was nothing but cavalry to oppose him. Accordingly, on came the charging column, when at the proper time, Sheridan rapidly drew off his cavalry, and revealed a heavy force of Union infantry, outnumbering the Rebels two to one. The Rebel line wavered, and seeing the cavalry on the right getting ready to charge their flank, they immediately sent in a white flag, which led to the famous interview between Grant and Lee and the surrender at Appomattox—the final collapse of the Confederacy—the consummation so devoutly wished.

CELEBRATION OF THE FALL OF THE REBELLION.

The glorious news caused the greatest rejoicing throughout the North. Governor Brough issued a proclamation announcing the great victories, and recommended April 14th the anniversary of the fall of Sumter, as a fitting day on which to celebrate the fall of the Rebellion.

The people of Washington County needed no proclamation to urge them to celebrate. The news was no sooner received at Marietta, than the streets were filled with a joyful throng made up from all classes, old and young, grave and gay—every one that could make any kind of a gleeful noise was resolved to do it. The tinnerns did a good business in tin horns that day. Platoons of the best citizens went arm in arm down the street like drunken men, and the whole community was given up to rejoicing.

The program for the 14th was as follows: National salute and ringing of bells at sunrise; 10 A. M., grand procession—Capt. A. W. McCormick and Maj. Jewett Palmer, Jr., just returned from the war, and Capt. Levi Barber, commanding; 2 P. M., assembly of the people to listen to speeches, songs, etc., at corner of Greene and Front streets, Marietta; in the evening, general illumination, procession, fireworks, music, etc.

Hon. W. E. Stevenson, of Wood County, West Virginia; President I. W. Andrews, of Marietta College, and Hon. George M. Woodbridge, of Marietta, were the orators of the day. Just as the procession was forming, a steamer landed, with the left wing of the Eighth United States Colored Infantry on board, 600 men, under command of Major Long. They marched up to the common in front of the Congregational Church for dress parade, in the presence of the assembled multitude. This occurrence, just at this time, was an eloquent commentary on the results of the great contest for human rights, now so successfully ended.

While these glad citizens were rejoicing and the illumination and fireworks were progressing so happily, there was being enacted in the far off capital of the nation a tragedy that on the morrow would send a thrill of horror throughout the country. Abraham Lincoln, that evening, was assassinated. Alas! that so sad a morn should succeed so joyful a day. The flags, that were displayed so proudly and exultantly Friday, on Saturday were draped in mourning for the great and good man, the martyred President. In compliance with the request of the Secretary of War, the day of the funeral, Wednesday, April 19th, was appropriately observed. The mayor of Marietta issued a proclamation asking all citizens of the city to desist from their ordinary occupations on that day, and attend religious services at the Centenary Methodist, and Congregational churches. This request was duly complied with, and the day was very generally observed. The speakers at the churches were Revs. W. M. Mullenix and C. D. Battelle, at the Centenary, and President I. W. Andrews and Rev. Thomas Wicks, at the Congregational. After the services an immense throng was formed in procession at the foot of Putnam street, under Col. William R. Putnam as chief marshal, assisted by Maj. Jewett Palmer, Jr., and Capt. Levi Barber. They marched in the following order: Music, pall-bearers, colors, pall-bearers, clergy, mayor and Council of Marietta, mayor and Council of Harmar, citizens. The procession moved up Putnam to Second, up Second to Scammel, and down Scammel to Front, where a hollow square was formed, and the benediction pronounced by Rev. C. D. Battelle.

Thus ended the great Rebellion. Washington County had done her part fully, and with distinguished honor, and it was the delight of her citizens during the next few months to welcome back to their homes and to the ranks of peace, the veterans, the citizen soldiery, where they took their places, started again the wheels of industry and resumed the occupations they had left, and in a few months the blue-coats were lost to sight, but the warriors were destined never to be forgotten.

CHAPTER XXVII.

THE CIVIL WAR—Continued.

WOMEN'S WORK IN THE WAR—UNION SOLDIERS' RELIEF ASSOCIATION—SOLDIERS' AID SOCIETY OF HARMAR—THE MARIETTA MILITARY HOSPITAL—SHORT SKETCHES OF THE MILITARY ORGANIZATIONS FROM THE COUNTY—BATTERY C, FIRST WEST VIRGINIA LIGHT ARTILLERY—BATTERY H, FIRST OHIO VOLUNTEER LIGHT ARTILLERY—BATTERY K, FIRST OHIO VOLUNTEER LIGHT ARTILLERY—BATTERY K, SECOND OHIO HEAVY ARTILLERY—COMPANY L, FIRST OHIO VOLUNTEER CAVALRY—COMPANY H, SEVENTH OHIO VOLUNTEER CAVALRY—COMPANY B, NINTH OHIO VOLUNTEER CAVALRY—COMPANY F, SECOND VIRGINIA VOLUNTEER CAVALRY—COMPANY F, EIGHTEENTH OHIO VOLUNTEER INFANTRY—COMPANIES A, F AND G, THIRTY-SIXTH OHIO VOLUNTEERS—COMPANIES B AND F, THIRTY-NINTH OHIO VOLUNTEERS—SIXTY-THIRD OHIO VOLUNTEER INFANTRY—COMPANY F, SEVENTY-THIRD OHIO VOLUNTEERS—SEVENTY-SEVENTH OHIO VOLUNTEER INFANTRY—NINETY-SECOND OHIO VOLUNTEER INFANTRY—THE SILVER GRAYS—THE "PONY SECTION"—ONE HUNDRED AND FORTY-EIGHTH OHIO VOLUNTEER INFANTRY—BIOGRAPHIES OF OFFICERS OF THE WAR OF THE REBELLION.

WOMEN'S WORK IN THE WAR.

While recounting the deeds of Washington County soldiers, let us not forget the noble part taken by the women of the county during that struggle, in ministering to the wants of the Union soldiers and in alleviating that world of suffering in the hospital and camp, and on the field of battle.

Their work was done quietly and without ostentation, and they modestly hoped that by helping the sick and wounded of the grand armies, to bear their burdens of pain and disease, they should be counted as having done something for the Union.

They had husbands, sons, brothers, fathers and other very dear friends with Grant, Sherman or Sheridan, at the front. Not a day passed but their hearts were troubled for the welfare of the loved ones. How anxiously did they look for the letters! If only a few lines were received, those few lines told the story that he was still among the living and battling for his country. How they tried the patience of the postmasters, especially after a great battle. "Are you sure there is no letter? Please look again," and then, perhaps, the mother, in her anxiety, before another mail, would send around the little boy to ask still again. Then there came too often, not the long-looked-for missive, but the telegram or hurried line from a comrade, stating that he was dead. Dead for his country, for liberty and union, in so much a great consolation, but how could even that console her who bent under the stroke? All the courage and fortitude was not displayed on the battle line. By thousands of hearthstones, here and there through the land, came occasions for great courage and great fortitude, especially when it was the bread-winner stricken down in his prime, leaving a young family, with none to provide.

Who can tell to what extent the loyal homes at the North influenced men in the field. The brave words sent, the noble sentiments penned by fair hands, all glowing with patriotism and love of country. All honor to the noble women of the great North.

UNION SOLDIERS' RELIEF ASSOCIATION.

On Monday, October 28, 1861, 75 ladies of Marietta and Harmar met at the vestry of the Episcopal Church, pursuant to a call of the United States Sanitary Commission, and organized by electing Mrs. Mumford, president; Mrs. Stephen Newton, vice-president; and Mrs. W. L. Rolston, secretary; Mrs. James Dunn, Mrs. Pardon Cooke, Mrs. T. P. Harshberger, Miss M. Woodbridge, Mrs. William S. Ward, Mrs. M. P. Wells, Mrs. C. B. Hall, Miss Phebe Fuller, Mrs. C. Reginier, Mrs. O'Leary, Mrs. Paul Bradbeck, Mrs. McLeod and Mrs. S. R. Turner, receiving committee; Mrs. James Ball, Mrs. Judge Green, Mrs. William Pearce, Mrs. L. Hathaway, Mrs. Bonner, Mrs. Beman Gates, Mrs. I. W. Andrews, Mrs. D. R. Sniffen, Mrs. H. Hill, Mrs. Levi Barber, Mrs. Oscar Chapin, Mrs. E. R. Cadwallader, committee for preparatory work.

The society was called the Union Soldiers' Relief Association. Each member paid a small initiation fee with liberty to contribute as much more as possible. Application was made at once for material to make up into quilts, socks, slippers, comforts, etc. Donations of canton-flannel, fruits, half-worn calico, etc., were also received, which were speedily made up, boxed and ready to ship. Gallipolis Hospital was the first place supplied, there being many men from Washington County lying there sick and destitute. Two boxes were sent within a few days, one filled with bedding and clothing from Marietta; the other with wine, jellies and fruit from Harmar.

The society met at the lecture room of the Episcopal Church during all the war, varying the frequency of its meetings with the demand made upon them—usually meeting once a week.

Mrs. Rolston, in the first report, dated April 28, 1862, a semi-annual one, says:

We have had 31 regular meetings, and three extra ones. The attendance has ranged from 70 to 80, and the average about 25, and at no time has the interest flagged, for when few were here they worked the faster.

* * * We have met from week to week, and this gathering has been a source of pleasure as well as profit, and will long be remembered a bright day amid the dark horrors of this war. The merry peals of laughter have lightened many a heart that came here sad.

* * * When we learn through reports from the different hospitals of the West, how much the sufferings of our wounded soldiers have been alleviated by the Sanitary Commission, we are amply repaid, and must feel like continuing our labors unwearied.

The German ladies of Marietta also formed a society, as did the ladies of Waterford, Barlow and Salem townships, and others of which we have no record.

In April, 1863, the Beverly Advertiser contained the following: "No accurate record of the contributions of the Waterford Township Soldiers' Aid Society for three-fourths of its existence can be procured, but recently its records show items, viz: $175 cash, 143 shirts, 174 pairs socks, 68 blankets, 53 handkerchiefs, with canned fruits, lint, bandages, etc., in abundance."

In this connection it should be said that the first woman to subscribe to the Soldiers' Relief Fund in the county was Mrs. William R. Putnam. On December 15 and 16, 1863, a special effort was made by the society at Marietta to raise funds by a sanitary fair. Contributions were sent in from all the townships in the vicinity, in money, apples, quinces, potatoes, turnips, onions, cabbages, pumpkins, butter, cheese, eggs, chickens, honey, dried and canned fruits, flour, buckets, ornamental and fruit trees, blankets, socks, furniture, and many other things—"almost everything that could be turned into money, or sent to the soldiers." From Union and Muskingum townships, large lots of fruits, vegetables and trees were received. From Rainbow, $50 in cash—Lowell, $86 in cash and a large contribution in socks and canned fruits. Belpre, Warren, Barlow, Fearing, Salem, and Newport, all gave large contributions. A dinner was donated by the citizens of Marietta, which added largely to the receipts, the net amount cleared being $1,991.75.

The following are the items:

Cash Contributions .....	$ 427 60
Receipts from door .....	234 70
" from dinner .....	108 00
" from supper .....	245 25
" from fancy tables .....	243 10
" from cake table .....	103 30
" from grab box .....	31 30
" from toys and confectionery .....	49 57
" from pictures .....	53 00
" from pipe of peace .....	33 50
" from ring cakes .....	30 00
" from guess cake .....	32 45
" from auction .....	82 00
Sums from various sources .....	73 49
Receipts from Harmar table .....	339 30
Total .....	2166 52
Expenses .....	174 77
Net .....	$991 75

Part of the above amount was paid over to the Harmar association—how much we cannot ascertain.

In Belpre the Ladies Union Circle on February 22, 1864, held a festival "for the aid of soldiers in the field," and cleared $370, and so in all parts of the county the generous-hearted women devoted themselves to the work.

At Bonn, in Salem township, they formed a branch—No. 420—of what was called the "Union League of Loyal Women of America," an organization which originated in Illinois, having the same purpose as similar societies. This was begun in the fall of 1864 and continued during the balance of the war. It had between sixty and seventy members, and notwithstanding the lateness of the start they forwarded a number of invoices of sanitary supplies to the Cincinnati branch of the United States Sanitary Commission, amounting in all to about $100. The fund remaining at the close of the war, amounted, August 2, 1865, to $17.20, which was donated to the Washington County Soldiers' Monument Association.

Among the many women of Washington County deserving of special mention, we can only notice one whose talents and industry gave her special prominence—Mrs. Francis Dana Gage, "Aunt Fanny Gage." She acquired a national reputation by her devotion to the cause of the freedmen and her untiring energy in working for the Sanitary Commission: "Through all the inclement winter weather (1863-64), through Pennsylvania, New York, Ohio, Illinois, and Missouri, she pursued her labors of love, never omitting an evening, when she could get an audience to address, speaking for soldiers' aid societies, and giving proceeds to those who worked only for the soldiers,—then for freedmen's associations. She worked without fee or reward, asking only of those who were willing, to give enough to defray her expenses—for herself—thankful if she received, cheerful if she did not." Mrs. Gage was the daughter of Joseph Barker, late of this county, and Elizabeth Dana, a descendant of Mary Bancroft, thus being allied on the maternal side to the well-known Massachusetts families of Dana and Bancroft. She has also acquired a reputation in literature from the beauty and pathos of her numerous poems.

On December 2, 1865, Mrs. Rolston made her final report, showing the work of the Marietta Soldiers' Relief Association from October, 1861, to June, 1865, when the meetings ceased, as follows:

During the three and a half years over two thousand garments were made. Articles made: One thousand forty shirts, three hundred and seventy-five pairs of drawers, sixty comforters, one hundred and sixteen sheets, two hundred and sixteen pillow-cases, fifty-nine pillows, two hundred and three towels, thirty-one pairs of slippers, two hundred and seventy-one pairs of socks, thirty-four pairs of mittens, twelve pairs suspenders, three hundred and thirty-four pocket-handkerchiefs, twenty-one dressing-gowns; in all, two thousand eight hundred and thirty, besides many other articles for hospital use.

The association has been well supplied with material, which was made into bandages, compresses, towels, pocket-handkerchiefs, lint, etc.

There have been bought four thousand three hundred and thirty yards of cotton and flannel, besides much donated. Goods were sent once a month, or oftener, where most needed, generally to the Cincinnati branch of the United States Sanitary Commission; but the hospitals here (at Marietta), and those at Parkersburg, Charleston and Cairo, and sometimes regiments in the field have been supplied.

Boxes sent: Sixty-five—containing shirts, sheets, drawers, socks, mittens, blankets, towels, etc., to the number of three thousand five hundred and forty-three, besides slings, wound-supporters, eye-shades, pin-cushions, compresses, bandages, lint, etc., too numerous to mention.

In February, 1863, the hospital at Marietta having been abandoned, the military committee gave the goods remaining there to the association.

More than six hundred cans and jars of fruit, at least forty gallons of pickles, several barrels sauerkraut, more than twenty bushels of dried fruit, with various articles of hospital aid have been sent.

The association has never asked in vain for anything that could be of service to the soldier, nor have the citizens ever failed to respond to the call for money. The association has not been for one day out of funds. Voluntary contributions of ninety-three dollars and fifty cents have been received from different sources. The military committee gave, at different times, forty-five dollars; four public entertainments realized one thousand six hundred and seventy-six dollars and sixty-seven cents; a fee of five cents per month from members raised fifty-two dollars and ninety cents; with one hundred and fifteen dollars and fifty-eight cents interest on the money deposited, gives the total receipts one thousand nine hundred and eighty-three dollars and sixty-five cents.

The expenditures have been chiefly for materials for work, with incidentals, such as fuel, boxes, although most of these have been donated. About fifty dollars have been given in small sums to soldiers and their families.

Receipts . . . . .	$1,983 65
Expenditures . . . . .	1,271 15
Balance in treasury . . . . .	709 50

This balance, by vote of the association, was given as follows: Two hundred dollars to the Washington County Soldiers' Monument Association; and five hundred and nine dollars and fifty cents to the Marietta Charitable Association.

After a vote of thanks to the vestry of St. Louis church for the use of the lecture room for over three years, the association dissolved.

S. C. ROLSTON,
Secretary and Treasurer.

The officers of the Marietta and Harmar society were as follows: 1861—Mrs. T. F. Mumford, president; Mrs. Stephen Newton, vice-president; Mrs. W. L. Rolston, secretary and treasurer. Work committee: Mrs. James Booth, Mrs. Beman Gates, Mrs. Davis Green, Mrs. Luther Hathaway, Mr. I. W. Andrews, Mrs. Bonner, Mrs. D. R. Sniffen, Mrs. Levi Barber, Mrs. Oscar Chapin, Mrs. E. R. Cadwallader.

1862—Mrs. Nahum Ward, president; Mrs. Melvin Clarke, vice-president; Mrs. W. L. Rolston, secretary and treasurer.

1863—Mrs. Nahum Ward, president; Mrs. William A. Whittlesey, vice-president; Mrs. R. P. James, second vice-president; Mrs. W. L. Rolston, secretary and treasurer. Work committee: Miss McFarland, Miss Hobby, Mrs. R. E. Harte, Mrs. Joseph Lovell.

1864 and 1865—Mrs. William A. Whittlesey, president; Mrs. B. W. Lovell, vice-president; Mrs. W. L. Rolston, secretary and treasurer. Work committee: Miss McFarland, Miss Hobby and Mrs. R. E. Harte.

The Harmar ladies formed a separate association in 1862.

After the first year the Harmar ladies had their own association, an account of which, by Mrs. John Pool, is given herewith.

SOLDIERS' AID SOCIETY OF HARMAR.

Immediately following the departure of our volunteers from Marietta, Harmar and the adjoining towns, in response to President Lincoln's call for troops in 1861, to suppress the great Rebellion,—the loyal women, all aglow with the patriotism which had inspired the hearts of those who had so recently left—anxiously inquired in what way they, too, could serve their country.

The weeks preceding had been eventful and stirring times in the history of our quiet town, for the call for troops had met with a hearty and ready response. Students from the college, mechanics from factories and workshops, clerks from offices and stores, and young men from country homes had volunteered their services—companies had been formed and drilled in military tactics,—while over dwellings and stores the stars and stripes waved, and the streets resounded with the notes of warlike preparation.

At length marching orders were received, and the volunteers had left, and then to the mothers, wives and children of these—some of whom were sick and destitute, the attention and sympathy of the patriotic women was directed. Subscriptions had already been received from many of the citizens, to meet the present necessities of such as needed help, and as far as possible, generous assistance had been proffered.

Then, followed letters from our volunteers in camp, or on the march, some of whom, unaccustomed to exposure, were sick, and requiring home comforts or articles of clothing. These supplies were immediately sent from private sources until, as the wants became greater, committees were appointed, who went from house to house soliciting donations.

Meanwhile, our troops had moved southward, rumors of anticipated battles were reported, and as the necessity of hospital supplies became apparent, meetings were held for consultation to meet the approaching emergency.

The various benevolent and church organizations were merged into soldiers' aid societies, and articles for the comfort of the sick and wounded were in constant preparation. The following ladies were prominently connected with the Harmar Aid Society, and until the close of the war closely identified with its interests: Mrs. Levi Barber, president; Mrs. Harlow Chapin, Mrs. Douglas Putnam, Mrs. David Putnam, Mrs. Henry Fearing, Mrs. Oscar Chapin, Mrs. Dr. Frank Hart, Mrs. L. Wheeler, Mrs. Dr. L. Hart, Mrs. S. Stratton, Mrs. W. Crawford, Mrs. Barber, Mrs. Rev. Wakefield, Mrs. Newton, Mrs. Fuller, and Mrs. L. Reppert.

To this committee a corps of young ladies was added, as follows: Miss Julia Barber, Miss V. Reppert, Miss Martha Putnam, Miss J. Wheeler, Miss E. Stratton, Miss E. Barber, Miss M. F. Newton, Miss Mary Hart, Miss A. Reppert. Through the newspapers, from the pulpit, and in every available way, urgent appeals were made for assistance, and from individuals and churches liberal donations were sent. From country societies and from sources unknown to us, supplies of delicacies, jellies, canned and dried fruits were added, which to the stores of clothing in readiness were carefully packed and consigned to surgeons in various regimental hospitals, who by letter had specified previously the articles most needed. From month to month this work went on, varied only by sad tidings of battles fought and the intelligence of many of our brave soldiers wounded or sick in hospitals, requiring special supplies, when boxes of bandages, lint, and the various appliances for hospital use were hastily prepared and dispatched. No official record has been preserved of shipments made to Western Virginia, Louisville, Pittsburg Landing, Murfreesborough and other points, which were forwarded in request of surgeons and officers in Ohio regiments, with whom our Society was in direct communication.

While sending supplies to distant hospitals, the ladies of the Aid Society and others were not unmindful of the present wants and needs of the Union soldiers at our doors, to whom a helping hand could be extended. There were regiments encamped temporarily within the precincts of our own town—some awaiting transportation to the front or for regimental supplies, which had been detained or interrupted on the route thither, in consequence of which the soldiers were exhausted from want of proper food. The presence of these troops would stimulate anew the patriotism of the citizens, whose generosity was unbounded; and everything which could be provided for their comfort was most freely bestowed.

In these kindly offices of hospitality, of which also no record has been preserved, the capacity of the dwellings and the resources of the larder were often tested to their utmost limit; our doors were thrown wide open, and all who could be accommodated were most cordially invited to enter and served with impromptu meals, calling forth, as our guests departed, their warmest thanks, and leaving us with the cheering thought that we had "done what we could."

There were also unwritten kindnesses which could be rendered our Union soldiers on these occasions—sometimes in writing letters at their dictation, to wives, mothers, and sisters, far distant, bearing messages of comfort and cheer; to others some forgotten or lost article could be supplied, or some needed repair of clothing made, while to all words of encouragement and kindness could be spoken, which were always gratefully appreciated. To those regiments, also, who were in transit to distant points, and who for long, weary hours were detained in railroad cars near the town, awaiting orders to move on—to these we could render service. On many a cold and chilly morning the intelligence would come that these soldiers, too, were within reach of sympathy and help; and as speedily as possible messengers would be dispatched with plentiful supplies of hot coffee and sandwiches, distributed amid the cheers of the soldiers, to whom this unexpected repast was a welcome surprise.

Each day brought special demands upon the time and attention of our Aid Society, either in supplying the wants of our troops passing through the town, or in preparing boxes of sanitary stores for points already designated.

There were also the families of our volunteers who needed assistance. Liberal subscriptions had been repeatedly made for this purpose, by the citizens, and also for the purchase of hospital supplies. Numerous collections had been taken in the churches for the same object; and as the larger cities and towns had raised sums of money by means of sanitary fairs and entertainments, it was proposed that a fair be held in Marietta, in which the ladies of Harmar be invited to unite. This plan met with hearty approval, and a committee was appointed, consisting of Mrs. Levi Barber and Mrs. John Poole, to make necessary arrangements. Subsequently other committees were added, to obtain articles of beauty and utility to be placed on sale, and for refreshments, etc., who canvassed the town thoroughly. After weeks of preparation the fair was opened, with an admiring throng of visitors in attendance, and its success was assured. The receipts were unexpectedly large, many pleasant acquaintances formed, harmonious feelings prevailed, and results were in every respect satisfactory. The receipts, of which the ladies of Harmar received a fair proportion, were expended for the relief of soldiers' families, and paid in weekly installments, after a careful investigation of the circumstances of each family had been made. The fund, amounting to several hundred dollars, was judiciously and systematically disbursed, bringing much comfort to the recipients and gratification to all those who by personal effort or influence had secured these results.

In all these beneficent efforts, extending through the war, and never ceasing until the conflict was over, the Aid Society was indebted to many of the citizens of Harmar for invaluable assistance, rendered in the prosecution of their work, at home and abroad, for which services, we record in behalf of the society, our appreciation and thanks.

The foregoing pages comprise but a fragmentary and imperfect report of the work accomplished by the Soldiers' Aid Society of Harmar; but are submitted in the hope that they may be of some interest to the home workers, who were thus privileged to minister to some of the Union soldiers, without expectation of either mention or reward but grateful then and now for the opportunity of expressing, in the slightest degree, their gratitude to those brave men who were willing to sacrifice their lives in the service of our country.

The foregoing is a brief record of the part taken by the workmen of Washington County during the great war for the preservation of the Union. It does not fully record their work. No historian will attempt to do it; for who could ever hope to adequately describe the burden of heart, the burden of work, and the burden of patriotism borne by the devoted women of the north during that eventful struggle. Let us honor them, and let posterity hold them in grateful remembrance.

THE MARIETTA MILITARY HOSPITAL.

About May 26, 1861, a hospital was opened for the soldiers then in Camp Putnam. It was located on the upper or eastern side of Second street, a short distance from the camp, and was conducted and supported by the ladies of Marietta and Washington County, assisted by the officers in command at the camp. Drs. Frank Hart, Samuel Hart and George O. Hildreth were in attendance when their services were needed, and always without pay. No records of this hospital have been preserved, but it was used more or less all through the war.

SHORT SKETCHES OF THE MILITARY ORGANIZATIONS FROM THE COUNTY.

Battery C, First West Virginia Light Artillery.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Captain Frank Buell, mustered March 30, 1862, died from the effects of wounds at battle of Freeman's Ford, August 23, 1862; Captain Wallace Hill, mustered August 1, 1862, promoted to captain August 1, 1862; First Lieutenant Dennis O'Leary, mustered March 30, 1862; First Lieutenant John G. Theis, mustered August 1, 1862, promoted to junior first lieutenant; Second Lieutenant Theodore G. Field, mustered December 23, 1863, promoted to first sergeant August 1, 1862, to second lieutenant December 23, 1863, vice Langley, resigned; Second Lieutenant John W. Jacobs, mustered December 29, 1863, promoted from corporal, vice Miner, resigned, December 29, 1863.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

First Sergeant William H. Goldsmith, mustered March 31, 1864, veteran; Quartermaster Sergeant Thomas Phelps, mustered March 31, 1864, veteran; Sergeant Owen O'Neil, mustered March 31, 1864, veteran; Sergeant Alexander H. Bukey, mustered March 31, 1864, veteran; Sergeant L. R. Miraben, mustered March 31, 1864, veteran; Sergeant David Dow, mustered March 31, 1864, veteran; Sergeant Adam B. Rook, mustered February 24, 1864, veteran; Corporal Turrell Cusack, mustered March 31, 1864, veteran; Corporal John Meighan, mustered March 31, 1864, veteran; Corporal William F. Minster, mustered March 31, 1864, veteran; Corporal Charles Clogson, mustered March 31, 1864, veteran, promoted January 1, 1864; Corporal William H. Ranger, mustered March 31, 1864, veteran; Corporal Milton H. Laughlin, mustered March 31, 1864, veteran; Corporal John Lehnhard, mustered September 2, 1862, promoted to corporal September 1, 1862; Corporal George W. Stanley, mustered March 31, 1864, veteran; Corporal Jeremiah H. Dooley, mustered March 31, 1864, veteran; Corporal John H. Miner, mustered March 31, 1864, veteran; Corporal James Wright, mustered March 31, 1864, veteran, wounded at Bull Run, August 30, 1862; Corporal Frank R. Benan, mustered March 31, 1864, veteran; Corporal William Jenvey, mustered March 30, 1862.

When President Lincoln made his first call for troops to serve three months, a company of infantry, under command of Capt. Frank Buell, left Marietta in April, 1861, and as heretofore noticed, became Company B, Eighteenth Ohio volunteer militia. The other officers were Dennis O'Leary, first lieutenant; William Bisbee, second lieutenant, who was afterward elected major of the regiment, and Wallace Hill elected to fill the vacancy.

The company served in West Virginia under General Hill, and was most of the time guarding railroads. There was no engagement with the enemy and it was mustered out in August, 1861. This company re-enlisted almost entire, as a battery of light artillery, the re-enlistment dating from September 1, 1861. Owing to a misunderstanding among those in authority in Ohio, the service of the battery was offered to Governor Pierpont, of West Virginia, and accepted, and was named by the captain in the Governor's honor.

The battery left Marietta for Wheeling, West Virginia, in October, 1861. The officers: Frank Buell, captain; Dennis O'Leary, junior first lieutenant; Wallace Hill, senior first lieutenant; John P. Theis, junior second lieutenant; William W. Witherow, second lieutenant.

The battery remained in Wheeling until ordered to Point Pleasant, West Virginia, for recruiting purposes, and from there to Charleston, West Virginia, where it remained until early in the spring of 1862, when it was ordered back to Wheeling and was mustered into the service of the United States, March 30, 1862. Here the injustice was done the battery of not dating the muster back to the date of enlistment, it having been in the service seven months.

These seven months had not been idly spent. Although not fully mounted, the battery had thorough and continued drill and practice in firing, with study of the tactics, so that when at this time they were fully equipped they were by no means raw recruits.

The battery was supplied with six 10-pounder Parrott guns. After the effective work done with these guns at Cross Keys, Bull Run, Gettysburg, and elsewhere, it would be hard to convince any member of this battery that it was not the most accurate shooting gun in the service.

General Fremont having taken command of the mountain department, the battery served under him during his campaign in West Virginia in the summer of 1862.

Leaving Wheeling in May for New Creek, West Virginia, they immediately proceeded to reinforce Milroy and Schenck, who were hard pressed by "Stonewall" Jackson on the upper south branch of the Potomac. Here they were assigned to Stahl's brigade, of Blencker's division. Arriving at Franklin, in Pendleton County, they found Generals Schenck and Milroy had fought Jackson at Bull Pasture Mountain, but had been compelled to fall back to Franklin.

In the meantime Jackson, instead of remaining in front, as it was supposed he would, had gone over the mountains into the Shenandoah Valley, and had driven General Banks out. In order to intercept Jackson, Fremont fell back from Franklin to Moorefield and crossed the mountains into the Shenandoah Valley and struck Jackson's army on his retreat at Strasburg. Jackson sent out a force and held Fremont in check near Strasburg, where he had quite a skirmish, while his army passed up the valley. The next day Fremont started in pursuit, and the battery was assigned to the cavalry advance, and the Eighth West Virginia Infantry and the Sixtieth Ohio Infantry under Colonel Cluseret—the infantry was called the Cluseret light brigade. This colonel, afterward General Cluseret, was subsequently in the war of the French commune.

TOM BROOK.

At Tom Brook, some few miles above Strasburg, the battery came up with the enemy's rear and forced him to give battle. Here, for the first time, the battery met the foe, June 2, 1862. Unfortunately two of the guns were temporarily disabled by losing the wheels while galloping into action, caused by the linch-pins bouncing out. This defect was afterward remedied throughout the army by using a pin with a clamp. The right and left sections, however, went into position under fire, which proved to be inaccurate, and when the center section came up the chief of artillery, Colonel Pilsen, moved it to a position to the right and front some 300 yards. The ground being very uneven, the progress was slow, which was trying to new troops going into their first engagement under fire, but every man stood to his post like a veteran, and all of them were complimented by the chief of artillery for coolness and accuracy of firing, which, all things considered, was admirable. The enemy was compelled to retreat.

The next day, at Woodstock, they met the enemy, and the next at Mount Jackson, where "Stonewall" Jackson, to delay the Union pursuit, burned the bridge over the Shenandoah. The river was very high and swift, which rendered fording impossible, and the current was too strong to admit of laying pontoons. They were compelled to wait till the water receded. The next morning was rather hazy. They were aroused very early by the "long roll" and the cavalry and artillery buglers calling to "boots and saddles." Orders were given to hitch up as quickly as possible, as the enemy had flanked us on the left. The river, some distance below the bridge, makes an abrupt turn, and the sentries had discovered, through the fog, as they thought, a six-gun battery, which would enfilade their position and would open on them as soon as the fog lifted. During the bustle and confusion of a change of front the fog cleared away and disclosed six beautiful piles of rails, at about the usual interval of a battery of field guns in position. After great delay in laying the pontoon bridge, which was a clumsy affair, the battery again started in pursuit, this time bringing the enemy to bay a short distance above Harrisonburg, where he had left the main turnpike and started on a cross-road to the left, where he was vigorously attacked by the light brigade and the Pennsylvania "Buck Tails." The deadly aim of the latter punished the Rebels severely. Among their slain was the notorious General Ashby, Jackson's chief of cavalry. General Fremont, not wishing to bring on a general engagement, the enemy were not pushed, but were allowed to retire unmolested.

CROSS KEYS.

The following morning the army of General Fremont moved out and found the enemy in position at Cross Keys, eight miles from Harrisonburg, and about nine from Port Republic. Stahl's brigade, including the battery, held the left, Milroy the right, and Cluseret the center. The battle had continued about four hours when Jackson massed on the left and swept Stahl's infantry from the field, driving all of the line to the left of the battery back to the rear, and leaving the battery in a very exposed position. Captain Buell hesitated to leave the field, and did not attempt to retire until the general in person ordered him to do so, as they were about to be surrounded and cut off. Finally the order was given to "limber to the rear." In doing so, they were compelled to pass to the left and rear through a wood, on the other side of which were the victorious "Johnnies," coming up to capture a lone, unsupported battery, as they doubtless imagined, but they were badly mistaken, for there was the "Buck Tail" battalion, who deployed among the trees between the battery and the Rebels, who, as soon as they saw the deer tails on their caps, fell back and allowed the battery to retire unmolested. Captain Buell, not wishing to desert his friends who had so bravely defended him, unlimbered the left section in the woods, determined to stand by the "Buck Tails." Although in a military sense this movement would have been considered highly imprudent, yet it showed the indomitable courage of the man. On coming out of these woods the balance of the brigade, mistaking our battery for the enemy, opened fire doing perhaps better firing than they ever did before, killing one of the battery horses. It was by force that a demoralized infantry color-bearer was induced to advance with his colors, when the firing was stopped. This ended the battle. Stahl's brigade lost about 500, while the troops to the right suffered but little loss and held their position.

At the request of Jackson, an armistice was granted to bury the dead, and in the night he folded his tents, and, Arab-like, stole away.

The next morning the army was to move to the attack at 5 A. M., the battery in columns of sections, the infantry in columns of divisions, with a strong skirmish line in front ready to deploy instantly into line of battle. The signal to move was to be two cannon shots in succession. For some reason this signal was not given until 9 A. M., or later, when we could distinctly hear fighting at Port Republic, where Carroll, with his brigade, was holding the bridge against Jackson's whole army. They moved on to Port Republic, arriving in time to see the rear of the Rebel Army passing over the Blue Ridge Mountains miles away.

The battery then fell back to Harrisonburg, thence to Moorefield, thence crossed over the Blue Ridge, at Thornton's Gap, and joined Pope's army at Sperryville.

The following is from an account by William Jenvey:

BATTLE OF FREEMAN'S FORD.

One evening at dusk, our colors checked up with orders to fall back to Culpeper without delay; then came some of the most trying and uncomfortable experience. We marched eleven days and nights, and never took the harness off our backs, and the only time we could get to cook would be when our advance would encounter the enemy, causing a check, or when we were guarding some ford while the infantry were passing. It was a terrible experience. At length the enemy were discovered strongly posted at Freeman's Ford.

Johnson's, De Beck's, Dickman's, and a portion of Weidrick's batteries had tried in vain to dislodge them, when we were ordered up with our long range Parrotts. This was August 22, 1866. I shall never forget the last order Captain Buell ever gave me. I was then his color-bearer. As soon as he received orders to go into position he turned with sparkling eye to me and exclaimed:

"Show your colors, Will."

I unfurled my colors and rode by his side up the hill. The Rebels having engaged so many of our batteries on that hill had the exact range, and every shell came thundering in our midst, cutting up the ground terribly. The Rebels picked out every conspicuous mark; my brigade flag (a present from the Marietta ladies) soon drew their fire, when Lieutenant Hill ordered me to draw off to the left, as it formed too good a target. The battle waged warmer and warmer; our boys having got the range were soon enabled to send as good as we received; this was perceived from the increasing wildness in the Rebel fire.

Captain Buell, mounted on "Billy," a light dun horse, formed a fair and easy mark, passing continually along the line, directing here, encouraging and applauding there; he appeared omnipresent. His daring recklessness soon drew the attention of officers on him. General Milroy, renowned for gallantry, turning to his staff, remarked: "Gentlemen, if you desire to see a brave man, look there." But all anticipations of our gallant captain's future were soon to be cut off. A shell, as fatally aimed as the bullet which laid our martyred President on a bloody bier, and set a nation in mourning, struck his horse in the shoulder, and, passing through, broke his left leg. So suddenly did the horse fall that the captain, unable to extricate himself, was thrown violently forward as the horse fell backward, injuring the captain internally. As he fell four boys sprang to his side and carried him from the field. I was watching him as he fell. It appeared as if the grave had suddenly yawned wide and taken father, mother, brothers, sisters, friends, all, so blank did life appear to us, and I have heard many of our bravest and truest say that they were not ashamed to confess that they cried like children. But our misfortune never for a moment interfered with the battle; if anything, all appeared to enter still more heartily into it, influenced, as they were, by a desire for revenge. Gun after gun was discharged with fearful rapidity. The men worked with a will that promised soon to turn victory's uncertain scale in our favor. Each and all appeared oblivious to all else than seeking a terrible retribution. Nor were our endeavors futile. Soon we beheld a wavering and wildness in their fire; soon one by one their guns ceased, until all became silent, and we saw them drawing from the field. Corporal A. H. Bukey, fortunately having his gun loaded, took deliberate aim as the last gun was leaving and fired. I saw horses rear, cannoneers scattered in a manner not laid down in artillery tactics, so I should judge the piece was dismounted. The battle was over.

Captain Buell died of his injuries, loved and lamented by his men, and respected and admired by all who knew him.

Orders came August 23, 1862, for the battery to leave its position at Freeman's Ford and take up the line of march with their corps. They had not gone far when they encountered the enemy at Sulphur Springs, where they gained an easy victory, after an hour's vigorous shelling, driving them from their position, and enabling the corps to resume its march in peace.

The next day, the 24th, they met the enemy at Waterloo bridge, and held the bridge until the army had all passed, when they witnessed its destruction by the Union troops, and again sped on. The march now became a race between the Union forces and the Rebels, on parallel lines, the objective point being Bull Run. During the still marches of midnight they could distinctly hear the rumbling of Jackson's artillery, and by day they would occasionally catch the gleam of lines of bright muskets in the sunlight.

SECOND BULL RUN.

The following is from an account by William Jenvey:

Bull Run was at length reached on the evening of the 28th of August, 1862. Milroy's brigade deploying, encountered their skirmishers, drove them, and pushed back a portion of their lines, and enabled our whole line to take position that night. All slept on their arms and tried to snatch a few moments' sleep to enable them to do well their parts on the coming morrow.

The next day's sun found us all bustle and activity. Aids-de-camp on jaded horses were dashing and tearing here and there, receiving and delivering orders. Brigade commanders were busy arranging and disarranging their lines. Division commanders, older and wiser, were coolly witnessing the preparatory maneuvers, and concentrating all their energies for the desired time.

Suddenly Milroy, advancing, sought the foe, and full soon did he find them, for with his characteristic recklessness he advanced too far and encountered a full Rebel division. Not a whit intimidated, he deployed his lines and opened with a murderous fire, but numbers soon told on him. Rapidly his lines thinned, and he stood in imminent danger of being cut off; but, collecting all his energies, he charged, extricated himself, and rejoined our line.

By this time the battle had become general. Our battery, being in position near the Washington pike, was keeping clear all before it. Maneuvers and counter-maneuvers took place, yet neither side gained any advantage. After noon, Hooker and Kearney coming up and taking position with us, we gained visible successes; gradually we gained ground, though every step was hotly contested. Night closed on the combatants, leaving the Union forces in possession of fully a mile of conquered ground.

The "sun of Austerlitz" scarcely dawned with prospects of a more sanguinary conflict than did the sun of the 30th. McDowell had abandoned Thoroughfare Gap, Lee had largely reinforced Jackson, and we had been reinforced by several divisions of McClellan's Peninsular army.

Our battery was scattered on three parts of the field. The right, under Lieutenant Witherow, was ordered to report to General McLean, of Schenck's division. The center section, disabled by the heavy and incessant firing of the previous day, was nevertheless kept close at hand ready for any emergency, while the left, under Lieutenant Hill, together with three brass guns, placed under his command, advanced up the Washington pike, and poking their noses fair in the midst of the Johnnies, soon created havoc and dismay in the Rebel ranks. The first day's fight taxed our energies greatly, but the exertions of the second were two-fold greater. The rebels outnumbered us greatly and punished us terribly. The part of the field on which our right section was in position, was a scene of terrible carnage; the Rebels opening with artillery strove in vain to dislodge us, the infantry was then called into requisition. Advancing in perfect order they attempted to take the place by assault, a terrible discharge of cannister met them and forced them back. Several times did they rally and advance, but as often were they repulsed. At last, largely reinforced, they took advantage of a piece of woods to our left and flanked us from that direction. Turning our guns on them we poured storms of cannister into their faces, cutting swaths through their massive ranks. Piercing their column appeared like piercing a rubber ball, the hole was scarcely made before it closed. Notwithstanding the dreadful havoc, on they came, and still on until they nearly grasped our guns. Our cannister had all been expended. Bukey, intent on fighting to the last, inserted a shell minus either fuse or cap in his gun and sent it as a solid shot right through their ranks. McLean's brigade, not unlike the British Home Guards at Waterloo, sprang from their cover, and as we limbered to the rear to fall back they closed in on our rear and opened such a storm of musketry that mortal men could not withstand it. The Rebel charge was thus checked, and we were allowed to draw off in peace. Lieutenant Witherow, on mounting his horse was badly wounded, eventually causing his discharge. Thomas Driscoll in the hurry forgot his sponge bucket, and on going back after it got several holes through his blouse, but fortunately none hit the brave fellow. Several horses were shot.

In the meantime Lieutenant Hill and the left section had been hard pressed. Being in position in the center of the pike, he presented a fair target to the whole of the Rebel artillery, and well did they improve their opportunity, for shot and shell and the more deadly shrapnell fell on all sides with one continuous roar and hiss, and added to this the whistling of the musket balls and the discharge of our own guns, it created confusion enough to try the bravest hearts. During the whole engagement Sigel remained in our midst, his uniform and splendid staff drawing the fire of the Rebel sharpshooters on us quite briskly. After a while Hooker established himself with us, and also for a while Reno and Kearney. These generals centering in us caused the tide of war to roll all around us. Assaults would be made in front, then the task would be comparatively easy, but when the flanking charges came then came danger. Sergeant Wes. Miner, having possessed himself of a musket, had busied himself during the whole engagement picking off sharpshooters. One in particular we saw roll in the dust from his unerring aim.

To the right and left of us the day was going badly. Fitz John Porter, lying within hearing of our guns and knowing of the fearful slaughter, refused to support us. Our overtaken and outnumbered boys were gradually obliged to give way, still we in the center held our own until the rebels concentrating their infantry and a portion of their artillery, opened on us most terribly; for a while it seemed as if nothing could stay there and live. At last a shell, surcharged with destruction, came hurtling along and striking Sergeant Goldsmith's gun on the right side, glancing, struck the elevating screw and bursting severely wounded Corporal James Wright and John Eaton, the former in seven places, the most of them severe, the latter in four places and mortally. For a time all appeared confounded, so close did the shell come to all, and so severe was the concussion. The shell passed over Summer Ellis' shoulder, for a time stunning him. Soon the confusion died away, and they found the extent of the injuries. To stay longer was madness, for certain death awaited them; so limbering up and carefully supporting their wounded comrades they coolly and slowly made way for the rear.

All had now become lost; "rout, ruin and panic scattered all." The baggage wagons, having been foolishly brought up to the very front, commenced a base and confused retreat; but one road led to the rear, and to this road all fled. Artillery, baggage wagons, ambulances and vehicles, of almost every sort were locked in utter and inextricable confusion, unable to move themselves, and preventing egress to those who were retreating in good order. In vain did officers ride to the rear and entreat, and curse and shoot, and cut, and do all that mortal man could do to stop the rout. No; fear had seized all, and all sought to save themselves. Our battery, by strange though lucky fortune, from their different parts of the field, found each other, and, although three pieces were disabled, we drew ourselves across the road, and drawing sabers and revolvers, refused to let a man pass. Staff and field officers perceiving our design, galloped to our aid and assisted in rallying. As soon as a battalion could be formed an officer would put himself at their head and march them back. Thus was our line restored, and we were enabled to hold the enemy in check. Many a man did I see who, having escaped death in the two days' engagement, would be either shot or cut down for refusing to halt. It was hard, but it was necessary. The cause of the Union demanded that they should be checked, and even though it should cause the loss of the best half of the army, still it had to be done. The field of Bull Run was a terrible one; full 8,000 had fallen, but the Capital was saved and the Rebel designs foiled. They marched into Maryland, and at Antietam they were most signally defeated.

The battery was not actively engaged at the battle of Fredricksburg, but was in all the marches of that disastrous campaign, and was waiting within easy reach of the field during the battle, the men listening to the uproar of the engagement, and expecting momentarily to be ordered to the front. Finally the troops were all back across the Rappahanock, and the retreat was commenced.

The following is from an account by William Jenvey:

CHANCELLORSVILLE, MAY 2, 1863.

Captain Hill and I rode to the scene of conflict and saw a scene! The Rebels under Jackson, numbering from thirty to forty thousand, had attacked our right and rear, and had driven brigade after brigade in inextricable confusion, until all organization was lost. Colonels and brigade commanders were slain, division generals were riding about, their staffs either killed or scattered, striving to restore the line; wounded men were pouring back; detachments began to give way, then all gave way, and from a retreat it became one confused rout; men refused to obey orders and were shot down; color-bearers in vain stopped on every elevation, striving to effect a rally; they rallied but to fall, for bullets from the throats of thirty thousand guns were carrying all before them. I retired with the retreating army until reaching my own battery, found the boys already loaded with cannister, and ready to fight to the last.

The rout at length reached our guns. We drew our sabers, hand-spikes, sponge staves, armed ourselves with stones, anything to keep the cowardly mob from our front. They crowded us so that we were unable to fire. At length all had got back, and we were left almost alone to check the onset of the victorious foe. As well might a child strive to dam up Niagara, but still we refused to give way, until General Schurz riding up, gave us peremptory orders to fall back. Nothing daunted, some one proposed "three cheers for the general," they were given, and then three times three. The general raised his hat in acknowledgment as gracefully as if on parade. After the battle we were complimented in a general order.

Captain Hill commanded "limber to the rear," and the order was executed without any confusion. The road was found completely blocked up, so we took to the woods. All went well until Sergeant Bukey's piece ran foul of a sapling; an axe was produced, the sapling cut, but by that time the Rebels were close upon us. About eight of us were there. Out of the eight—Corporal Ranger while lifting at the gun, was hit badly in the side; Smith Miner and Henry Hutchinson slightly wounded and Wiley Reeves captured, and five horses out of six fell. Can any one wonder that we were obliged to leave the gun. By this time the Rebels had brought a piece of artillery captured from us to bear on us. They were but a short distance off, and we saw they would soon have a clean sweep of the road; so, remembering that "discretion was the better part of valor," we dashed off and rejoined the battery.

Just as Lieutenant Miner, disdaining to fall back any farther, had placed the boys in position with the artillery of the Twelfth Corps, soon the Rebels announced their intention to charge by the usual yell peculiar to them, so we were ready for them. As soon as they made their appearance we fired on them such a storm of shot and shell as would stop a whirlwind, were it composed of animal matter; nothing could withstand it, however brave or desperate; back they went, and cheer on cheer and the most derisive yells arose from our lines. While they were reforming we improved the opportunity, and commenced throwing up intrenchments. Night was coming on, but a good moon furnished enough light to fight by. The Rebels, having reformed, advanced with deafening yells to encounter our iron hail. Trees were cut down on their heads, shell and shrapnel were exploded in their midst. At times it appeared as if the whole wood was lighted up, so continuous was our fire. Our line could be easily seen, as could the Rebel line, by the long glare of discharging muskets. Both lines stood close to each other; each seeking to destroy the other; but no human power of endurance could withstand the fire we hurled at them. The second time they broke and ran. Again while they were reforming did we further intrench ourselves. And thus did it continue, fight and intrench, fight and intrench, until tired nature could stand it no longer.

Morning at length dawned and brought with it prospects of a more sanguinary conflict than had been fought on the day and night previous.

We were encouraged as if ten thousand men had been captured by the report of "Stonewall" Jackson's death, as his name alone was sufficient to carry fear into the northern ranks.

I said the morning of the 3rd gave prospects of a terrible engagement, nor were they unverified, for with the early dawn began the battle in front of the Third Corps, and such musketry I never heard before or since. I was actually glad when our guns began their continuous roar so as to deafen me and prevent me from hearing the noise. I am safe in saying that at times from one hundred to one hundred and twenty-five thousand muskets would be going off at once, fairly making the ground shake with each discharge, and the battle in the woods made the noise doubly great. Little by little the Rebels gained ground, until at last the Chancellor house was reached. The brave Hooker refused to relinquish his headquarters, although surrounded by danger. At length it had to be abandone. Inch by inch we fell back, and every inch was hotly contested. At last night set in, and as it by mutual consent both armies wearied and worn rested from the contest.

On the morning of the 4th the Rappahannock was discovered to be rapidly rising and our provisions were nearly exhausted, with all of our trains on the other side. Hooker, fearful that the pontoons would be swept away, ordered the army to recross. We retired very reluctantly; to many of us it was the most reluctant thing we ever did, for we all went over confident of success.

Our boys behaved nobly throughout the whole engagement. Captain Hill, usually brave, surpassed himself. Lieutenant Miner acted in such a way as to receive the commendation of all, but were I to mention all who distinguished themselves, I should have to begin at the top of the battery roll and enumerate every one. Our casualties were as follows: W. L. Regnier, Smith Miner, Louis Fougères, Henry Hutchinson, wounded, and Wiley Reeves captured; 20 horses lost, three caissons and one gun captured; the latter, however, was recaptured the ensuing fall. By the evening of the 4th the whole army had recrossed and were ordered to Brook's station.

About the last of May, 1863, the battery was transferred from the Eleventh Corps to the artillery reserve, under Gen. R. O. Tyler, and they remained in that splendid organization ever afterward.

The following is an account by William Jenvey:

GETTYSBURG.

We at length reached Taneytown, Pennsylvania, just one day's march from Gettysburg. All of June 30, 1863, we remained here to allow the artillery to concentrate. All July 1st we heard the heavy and incessant cannonading, but could gain no tidings, until toward evening reports came in announcing the disaster to the First and Eleventh corps, and the death of General Reynolds. All this dampened our enthusiasm considerably, for we all perceived that our duties would be doubly severe to recover the lost ground and restore confidence. The morning of the 2nd we broke camp early and started briskly toward the contested ground, which we reached early, halted long enough to make coffee, when we were ordered into position on Cemetery Hill. Those who are familiar with the history of that memorable day, will remember that Cemetery Hill, situated as it was in the center, and being the most advanced position of the line, was, as a consequence, the most hotly contested part of the field. Directly in our rear lay the Baltimore pike, a most tempting bait, leading as it did to Baltimore.

On a gallop under a heavy fire we dashed up the hill, unlimbered and prepared for action. Soon the conflict raged with redoubled fury, reinforcements were coming up and rapidly taking position, and by noon both lines were completed.

Stretching off to our left in a valley intervening between the two lines, lay a long dark line of blue-coated men with gleaming bayonets. By their battle-flags we recognized the Third Corps, always on hand and always bearing their banners where death flies thick and fast. Their line was fully a quarter of a mile in advance of the Second Corps, on their right, thus leaving an interval between the two flanks. General Meade was explaining to General Sickles the danger of his position, when the enemy made a furious assault upon his lines. The moment the Rebel host appeared they discharged such a volley as to make the earth quake; their whole line blazed with a sulphurous light, their guns hurled death and destruction into the surprised ranks of our men. Gallantly the brave Third Corps held its position. Sickles, dashing into the thickest of the fight, sought to retrieve the fortunes of the day, but was soon brought off bleeding and mangled, almost lifeless, a ball having broken his leg.*

Mortal men could not stand such a fire. They wavered, then rallied, then wavered again, then broke, and with terrific and appalling yells the Rebel infantry pursued. Back fell our men, and still back until they were directly in our rear, until we thought our line was broken and all was lost, when lo! a long bright line of bayonets appear, quickly the men are deployed in the field, their knapsacks are unslung, their line formed and all are in readiness for the fray. By their battle-flags we discern that the Fifth Corps has opportunely come up, by the exultant and confident cheers they charged. A long bright flash burst from their ranks and havoc and dismay were sent into the enemy's ranks. Their line staggered. Another volley from our boys and they fell back. Just then a battery of 20-pound Parrotts secreted on Sugar Loaf Hill, opened on them and cut swaths in their retreating ranks, and the orderly retreat was turned to a mob, all organization was lost, and with it all hope.

Many a Southern hearthstone was minus a member, and many a sorrowing family can tell how their joy and pride was cut down in that fatal charge. Our lines were firmly re-established.

All this time we had been actively engaged with the Rebel artillery in our front. They were strong in force, and had been tasking us pretty severely. The sharpshooters, too, secreted behind a stone wall but a short distance away in our front, had been annoying us terribly, but as yet no casualty had taken place. All were congratulating themselves when a shell too surely aimed, came crashing through the air. Louis Fougères saw and avoided it, but poor Stephen Braddock, more unfortunate, was struck fair in the head, the shell taking as it went a portion off the top part of his head. If his body had been made of stone, he could not have fallen more rigidly. He threw out his arms, and with a gentle oh! returned his soul to Him who gave it. His death for a time threw a gloom over all, for no one knew but he would be the next. I am convinced from the suddenness of the blow that he never knew the cause of his death.

*This wound necessitated amputation, and we find it recorded in another place by one who saw him borne from the field, that after his leg had been taken off and the wound dressed, this impetuous leader was borne from the field on a stretcher, lying with his hat drawn down over his eyes, his arms folded tightly on his breast and a cigar in his mouth.

So hotly were we engaged that no one had a leisure moment to remove him; there he lay grim and ghastly. Although I was commanding the gun next to the one on which Braddock was killed, and was but a few feet from him, still I was ignorant of the fact until quite a time afterward, when Lieutenant Thies informed me. So you may imagine how actively we were engaged. A lull soon occurred in the firing when Braddock's remains were carried off, and laid in their last resting place. Truly a soldier's burial was his, the noise of war was resounding on all sides when we laid him in his grave. He was wrapped in his blanket, a good deep grave dug, and a head board with his name carved on by a comrade, placed at the head. We left his body, but carried away a just appreciation of his worth as a man and a soldier.

Soon, however, under the renewed energy of the battle all else was forgotten, and little by little accidents happened; two of my horses had their forelegs cut off by one shell, and so close did it strike to Charley Boyce, their driver, that it knocked the dust over him, and stunned him for a time. Supposing him killed, I ran to his assistance, but found him safe and cool as if nothing had happened. I ordered to unharness his crippled horses, take them to the rear, and have them shot, and am not positive that I did not see a glistening in the poor fellow's eyes, very much like a tear, when he received the order.

John Lehnhard and Martin Wendelkin, both cannoners on my gun, were standing side by side, taking ammunition out of the chest, when a shell came thundering between them, tearing off half the axle, and burying itself in the ground. Each looked at the other, and grasped their legs, thinking one at least was gone, so close did the shell pass, but finding themselves intact, they laughed and went on with their work. Another of my boys, whilst leaning against a wheel, heard a dull thud; on looking around, he found a musket ball, half buried in the wheel close by his head. Sergeant Dow seeing a shell coming too friendly a course, leaped aside and escaped death. Captain Hill, while walking up and down the line, encouraging all, nearly lost both his legs by a shell.

Seeing a shell coming bent on mischief, I called out "Look out." L. R. Moore on my right hearing me, fell to the ground, and the shell passed so close to him across his back, that he thought he was wounded, and placed his hands on his back like one in intense agony; he looked towards me, and seeing me laughing, found himself uninjured. He laughed aloud, and went on with his duty. It was now getting dark, and the fire of the artillery was beginning to die away, but still the sharpshooters kept up an incessant fire. I was standing by my gun when I felt a sharp stinging sensation in my throat. I clapped my hand to the spot, imagining myself badly wounded. I felt a second time, but found no blood, and came to the conclusion that it was nothing. The next morning, on mentioning the fact, I was told that there was a red streak across my throat.

About 10 o'clock P. M., the firing ceased, and every man laid down by his gun and slept.

The next morning, July 3d, we awoke refreshed and ready for the attack, nor had we long to wait, for with the break of day began the engagement, and we kept up a brisk fire until about noon, when a deadly calm fell on the whole field.

Early in the morning a general officer rode up to Captain Hill and told him that they had learned that the Rebels had designed concentrating all their artillery on our front, to be supported by ten thousand picked men under Rhodes. The artillery was to destroy our lines, when the infantry was to charge and occupy them. He further said that General Meade could not afford us any support, and that we must defend ourselves to keep clear our front, and asked the captain if he could do it. Captain Hill answered, "If any men can, mine can," or words to that effect. The general replied that our position must be held at all hazards, or the day was lost. Knowing as we did the immense responsibility resting upon us, we shut our teeth and vowed we would hold our position.

The intense calm over the whole field we knew portended the anticipated attack, nor were we long in anticipation, for at a signal from a gun on the Rebel right, the whole field was as convulsed as if an earthquake had occurred. The whole of the Rebel artillery, estimated at from two hundred and twenty-five to two hundred and fifty guns, by General Meade in his official report, had opened on us at once. Mortal pen cannot describe the horrors of that unparalleled cannonade. Nearly five hundred guns were going all at once. The air was alive with shrieking and bursting shells, guns discharging, men shouting, and many crying out in pain, horses rearing and neighing as they were being horribly mangled, caissons bursting, marring death and dismay to their possessors, until it appeared as if it was impossible for man to survive the destructive missiles. For four long hours did this continue. Men by scores and hundreds had been killed. In the first battery to our left forty men had been killed and wounded, and nearly all their horses. Four pieces had been disabled, and at one time we saw three of their limber chests blown up. I rode over their position the next morning, and the sight fairly sickened me. Their guns had to be hauled off in baggage wagons. Still, although our position was higher and more exposed, it appeared as though some guardian angel was watching over us, for our losses were but few. Charles Lacey, a driver on Sergeant O'Neil's gun, while keeping his horses still, was struck by half of a light 12-pounder shell above the right eye, killing him the same way as Braddock, but there he had to lay until after the battle, when we gave him a decent burial. James Loufman was struck in the breast with a piece of shell, but its force had been spent, causing no injury.

The battle still raged hotter and hotter. Our ammunition having given out, we fired back a few of the Rebel shells, hot as they were, literally paying them back in their own coin. Our ammunition being exhausted, we were compelled to withdraw.

Our journey down the Chambersburg pike was, if anything, hotter than the field itself, for it is proverbial that the rear is the most dangerous place, for on it is concentrated all the shot and shell that have passed over the front. We had no sooner got out of harm's way than the firing ceased. The artillery having failed to break our line, the Rebel infantry was drawn up in line to attempt it. Right nobly they came, but it was to their death, for our whole line opened on them with full force, and sent such a deadly storm of canister into their ranks that it appeared as if the whole line was doomed. Fully one-third fell, as many more threw down their arms and surrendered, and the rest, demoralized and scattered, sought the shelter of the woods. Thus ended this memorable engagement. Skirmishing, it is true, was still kept up, but the heavy fighting was over. Some of the boys, on going over the field to our front and left, said that fully three acres could be traversed without touching the ground, so thickly were the bodies strewn. I was content to take a view from our position. It was too horrible to take a nearer look at. We remained in position until noon of the 5th, when it was fully known that the Rebels were retreating.

The battle being over and the Rebels in full retreat, we started after them, nor were we loth to leave the place. For four days and nights had we been there almost without food, water or sleep. Is it any wonder that the place had no fascination?

Men blame Meade for not following Lee more closely, and preventing his escape across the Potomac, but had they been there they could readily have seen the reason.

THE LAST BATTLE.

Lee having got fairly away, we started by easy and pleasant marches towards our old haunts. We camped at Warrenton, then at Culpeper, and when in the fall Lee slipped by us and again made demonstrations on Washington, we again took part in that "masterly fall-back." Although the Rebels had the start, and the inside track, still, Meade hoped that by strategy he might defeat them. He placed the army in three columns, and marched them by three different roads, keeping each column in sight of the other nearly constantly, and the race became so close that when the head of our column reached and occupied Centreville Heights, the head of the Rebel Hill's column could be seen crossing the old Bull Run bridge. Lee maneuvered around a good deal, hoping to find an assailable point, but not finding any, he again fell back. We in this campaign fought our last battle. The Second Corps had been warmly engaged, their artillery had run out of ammunition, and it became necessary to relieve them. We were sent up to their relief, and hardly had we reached the front when a Rebel battery of four guns opened on us from Mitchell's ford. We asked no better fun than to engage them. Dashing into position we soon exchanged cards, and opened an intimate acquaintance. A short time was sufficient. They tired of our acquaintance and very unceremoniously withdrew, leaving us exulting over our easy, and on our part bloodless, victory. We followed Lee to the Rappahannock, where a part of our troops made such a gallant assault on his works, at Rappahannock station. Here the gun captured from us at Chancellorsville was, to our great joy, recaptured.

Our battery re-enlisted and came home on a veteran furlough, and returned expecting to take part in the anticipated engagements under Grant, but that general, having more artillery than he needed, sent us, in connection with a number of other batteries, to man the defenses of Washington, where we remained until peace was declared and we were allowed to return to our homes, proud that we should never have cause to blush at our record.

BATTLE RECORD OF THE BATTERY.

Strasburg, Virginia, June 2, 1862; Tom Brook, Virginia, June 3, 1862; Mount Jackson, Virginia, June 4, 1862; Cross Keys, Virginia, June 8, 1862; Port Republic, Virginia, June 9, 1862; Luray, Virginia, July 11, 1862; Cedar Mountain, Virginia, August 9, 1862; Freeman's Ford, Virginia, August 22, 1862; Sulphur Springs, Virginia, August 23, 1862; Waterloo Bridge, Virginia, August 24, 1862; Bull Run, Virginia, August 29, 1862; Bull Run, Virginia, August 30, 1862; Leesburg, Virginia, September 17, 1862; Catlett's Station, Virginia, September 25, 1862; Chancellorsville, May 2, 1863; Gettysburg, Pennsylvania, July 2 and 3, 1863; Mitchell's Ford, October 15, 1863.

Battery H, First Ohio Volunteer Light Artillery.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Captain James F. Huntington, mustered November 7, 1861, resigned on surgeon's certificate of disability October 26, 1863; Captain George W. Norton, mustered October 26, 1863, resigned March 21, 1864; Captain Stephen W. Dorsey, mustered April 13, 1864, mustered out with battery; First Lieutenant George W. Norton, mustered November 7, 1861, promoted to captain; First Lieutenant George Davenport, mustered November 7, 1861, resigned January 7, 1863; First Lieutenant Charles G. Mason, mustered March 12, 1862, resigned April 26, 1862; First Lieutenant William A. Ewing, mustered June 4, 1863, mustered out October 24, 1864; First Lieutenant Albert G. Merrill, mustered March 3, 1864, resigned October 12, 1864; First Lieutenant James Harris, mustered February 8, 1865, mustered out with battery; First Lieutenant William H. Perrigo, mustered February 8, 1865, mustered out with battery; Second Lieutenant Thomas M. Bartlett, mustered November 7, 1862, promoted; Second Lieutenant Martin B. Ewing, mustered November 7, 1862, promoted; Second Lieutenant Albert G. Merrill, mustered September 15, 1862, promoted; Second Lieutenant Frank B. Reckard, mustered January 7, 1863, promoted; Second Lieutenant Albert Reagler, mustered May 9, 1864, mustered out with battery; Second Lieutenant Lewis B. Maxwell, mustered May 2, 1865, mustered out with battery; Second Lieutenant Silas H. Judson, mustered May 2, 1865, mustered out with battery;

Second Lieutenant Wallace W. Pixley, mustered October 20, 1864, mustered out July 1, 1865; Second Lieutenant William E. Parmalee, mustered February 8, 1865, mustered out July 1, 1865.

In October, 1861, about 60 men were raised for the field artillery service, in Washington and Monroe counties. An arrangement was made to complete a battery by uniting them with about the same number of recruits from the vicinity of Toledo.

On November 6th the organization was perfected at Camp Dennison, and Battery H, of the First Light Artillery, came into existence. The following was the roster of commissioned officers at that date: J. F. Huntington, of Marietta, captain; G. W. Norton, of Toledo, senior first lieutenant; George Davenport, of Salem, junior first lieutenant; M. B. Ewing, of Cincinnati, senior second lieutenant; T. M. Bartlett, of Cleveland, junior second lieutenant.

The junior subaltern never reported for duty with the battery, and was afterward transferred. Private W. A. Ewing was promoted to the vacancy. Of the men thus brought together from opposite frontiers of the State, it is but justice to say, that in character and intelligence they were above the average.

The battery was armed with six James' guns—the old bronze six-pounder rifled to throw a 13-pound conical shot. It was admirably horsed—better than at any subsequent period.

In January, the battery being reported as ready for the field, it was sent to join General Landers' afterward Shields' division, near Cumberland, Maryland. It was first engaged at the battle of Winchester, March 22, 1862; losing one man, Private Jacob Tager, and one horse killed by the same shot. General Shields was wounded while sitting on his horse near the pieces watching the fire. The battery took part in the various operations in Shenandoah Valley for the next two months. In May the division was ordered to march for Fredricksburg and join McDowell's corps, then about to unite with the right wing of McDowell's army in an attack on Richmond.

When Shields' division was fairly out of the way, "Stonewall" Jackson returned and drove General Banks' small command out of the valley. The advance on Richmond was postponed, and Shields' division, followed by the bulk of McDowell's corps, was started post haste towards the valley. In combination with Fremont, who was to come in from Franklin, they were to "bag Jackson."

As usual, the string slipped—McDowell gave it up at Front Royal, and left Shields to follow Jackson on his own hook. The bridges of the Shenandoah had been burnt, and the stream unfordable. Shields had sent two brigades and three battalions, "H" among them, up the north bank to the village of Port Republic, where a bridge was standing.

Jackson proposed to cross at this point. He round these two brigades under General Tyler, of Ohio, likely to interfere with him. Fremont pressed him south of the river. On Sunday, June 8th, he checked that general at Cross Keys, and, crossing at Port Republic early the next morning, attacked Tyler's small command, expecting to wipe him out in season and return and join with Fremont. In this action Battery H was severely handled. Posted on the left flank, without infantry support, a thick wood sheltered the enemy within pistol-shot of the guns. It was charged in front and flanked by the "Louisiana Tigers," and forced to retire, leaving two pieces on the field, having several men killed and wounded, with a large number of horses. Tyler's command made a gallant fight, and the enemy made no serious attempt to follow their retreat. Shields' division retired to Front Royal; the general resigned his command, and the division was broken up.

In July Battery H arrived at Alexandria much reduced in strength by the casualties of service. Before the losses in men and material could be repaired, the battery was ordered to Marietta to join General Pike's army. At this place it was inspected and ordered back to Alexandria. Recruiting officers were sent to Toledo and Marietta who soon raised men to fill the attenuated ranks. The James' guns were turned in and replaced by six ordnance guns, three-inch wrought iron rifles. By this time General Pope was falling back on the defenses of Washington. The battery joined him in time for the battle of Chantilly. After various marches and counter marches the battery, permanently assigned to General Whipple's division, proceeded by rail from Washington to join McClellan in Maryland. Thenceforward it belonged to the army of the Potomac. The battery next came in contact with the enemy during a reconnoissance in Manassas Gap with Piatt's brigade early in November, 1862.

After General Burnside succeeded to the command, the battery marched to Fredricksburg and was detailed with others to cover the laying of the center pontoon preparatory to the bloody and disastrous battle of Fredericksburg. It took part in shelling the city, but did not cross the river. In Burnside's next attempt, known as the "mud march," Battery H was one of those assigned to cover the crossing at Banks' Ford. It reached the designated position and got back to the old camp by one of the hardest marches in its history.

During the winter of 1862-63, spent at Falmouth, Lieutenant Davenport resigned on a surgeon's certificate. Sergeant F. B. Reckard was promoted to the junior lieutenancy.

Battery H marched to Chancellorsville with Whipple's division of Sickles' corps. When the division went out to join the attack on Jackson's column as it crossed the front of Hooker's position, its batteries, H, First Ohio, First and Thirteenth New York Independent, were left in a field near the turnpike. Here it became their duty to meet and repel a strong attack from Jackson's advance after the rout of the Eleventh Corps. This was done so as to elicit the warmest commendation from General Sickles when he reached the field.

Early the next morning Battery H was left in the same field with two regiments of infantry to make a show of resistance till the new line of defense was completed. The front attack of the enemy was repelled, but being outflanked, the infantry support having retreated in confusion, the battery was forced to retire as best it could through boggy ground and across a creek. It sustained a heavy loss in men and material—two pieces had to be left across the stream, the horses being killed or disabled.

After the return of the army to Falmouth, the artillery was reorganized and a strong reserve formed under Gen. R. O. Tyler, United States Army. It was soon afterwards sent to Banks' Ford, on temporary duty, with the regular division of the Fifth Corps. It marched with that division as far as Manassas Junction en route for Gettysburg, then rejoined the reserve. Just before this, First Lieut. M. B. Ewing resigned to accept promotion into the First Regiment, Heavy Artillery. Sergeant Albert Merrill became the junior subaltern. At Fairfax Court House a new brigade was formed in the reserve, made up of Company H, First Ohio, Company C, First Virginia, Company L, First Pennsylvania, and First New Hampshire Independent Battery. Captain Huntington was assigned to the command; so the immediate charge of the battery devolved on Lieutenant Norton.

At Gettysburg the battery, posted on Cemetery Hill, was exposed to a heavy fire of artillery, as well as from sharpshooters near the edge of the town. Some of the best men in the battery fell in that hard-fought battle.

After the return of the army to Virginia, Battery H, with Huntington's brigade, did outpost duty on the Rappahannock and Rapidan rivers. In November, 1863, the battery was at Warrenton, Virginia.

Captain Huntington, in consequence of an injury, resigned on a surgeon's certificate, to accept an appointment in the Veteran Reserve Corps. Lieutenant Norton became captain. The battery took part in the Mine Run campaign, and passed the remainder of the winter of 1863-64 at Brandy Station.

In March Captain Norton resigned. Up to this time promotions had been made by seniority, a selection in the battery where the vacancy occurred. A new rule had been introduced about this time, under which Lieut. S.

W. Dorsey, as senior subaltern of the regiment, became captain of Battery H.

Soon after the opening of the spring campaign, the battery was transferred to the Sixth Corps, and with it fought at Spottsylvania. At the sanguinary action of Cold Harbor the battery was the first to take position, and was heavily engaged. In the advance on Petersburg the battery held a very exposed position of three days and nights, trying to prevent the enemy from crossing the railroad bridges. In July the battery had a little vacation from siege duties.

In consequence of Early's raid on Washington, it was sent to that city, but after a very brief stay was ordered to return to the front of Petersburg. For over two months the battery held the earthwork officially called Fort Sedgewick, but better known as "Fort Hell," the hottest place on the line. Constantly under fire, no amount of active field service is so harrassing and trying to soldiers.

The battery was among the first sent home after the surrender. The muster-out took place at Camp Taylor, near Cleveland, June 15, 1865. The roster of officers then stood as follows:

S. W. Dorsey, captain; James Harris and W. H. Perrigo, first lieutenants; W. W. Pixley and W. E. Parmelee, second lieutenants.

Battery H thus completed a record of arduous and honorable service. No man who ever fought at its guns need blush to tell his children, "I belonged to old Battery H." In the matter of losses in action the battery was remarkably fortunate. Few, if any, that saw so much service were equally so. The following is a resume of its career:

Whole number borne on the rolls during service, 262; killed in action, 28; died in hospital, 15; discharged on surgeon's certificates, 40; discharged expiration of enlistment, 36; discharged for promotion, etc., 18; mustered out at Camp Taylor, 125.

About six of the original horses went through with the battery. Promotions from the enlisted men were as follows:

To commissions in the battery, seven; commissions in other batteries, three; commissions in heavy artillery, two; commissions in infantry, two; commission in United States Navy, one; total, 15.

Battery H was present at the following battles and skirmishes:

Battles—Winchester, Port Republic, Chantilly, Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville, Gettysburg, Mine Run, Wilderness, Spottsylvania, Cold Harbor, Chickahominy, Petersburg.

Skirmishes—Edenburgh, Strasburg, Rudis Hill, New Market, Mount Jackson, Manassas Gap, Mitchell's Station, Banks' Ford, Weldon Railroad.

Battery K, First Ohio Volunteer Light Artillery.

ROSTER OF OFFICERS.

Captain William L. De Beck, mustered October 10, 1861, resigned May 11, 1863; Captain Louis Heckman, May 11, 1863, mustered out with battery; First Lieutenant George B. Haskins, October 10, 1861, resigned October 20, 1862; First Lieutenant John D. Holden, February 10, 1862, resigned March 27, 1862; First Lieutenant Henry F. Camp, March 27, 1862, died September 15, 1862; First Lieutenant Thomas M. Bartlett, September 15, 1862, resigned October 30, 1863; First Lieutenant Louis Heckman, October 20, 1862, promoted; First Lieutenant Charles M. Schilley, May 11, 1863, mustered out with battery; First Lieutenant Columbus Rodamour, October 15, 1863, mustered out with battery; First Lieutenant Andrew Berwick, October 30, 1863, mustered out with battery; Second Lieutenant John D. Holden, October 10, 1861, promoted; Second Lieutenant Louis Heckman, February 20, 1862, promoted; Second Lieutenant Henry F. Camp, January 7, 1862, promoted; Second Lieutenant Hiram B. Iams, March 27, 1862, resigned May 11, 1863; Second Lieutenant Charles M. Schilley, October 20, 1862, promoted; Second Lieutenant Columbus Rodamour, May 11, 1863, promoted; Second Lieutenant John H. Reis, May 11, 1862, promoted; Second Lieutenant Joseph Maloney, May 9, 1864, mustered out with battery; Second Lieutenant Otto Marolotze, May 2, 1865, resigned June 10, 1865.

Washington County has just cause to be proud of the three batteries she furnished for the Union during the civil war, viz.: De Beck's "L" and Huntington's "H," of the First Ohio and Buell's "C," of the First Virginia.

"De Beck's Battery," so-called in honor of its organizer and first commander, Capt. William L. De Beck, of Cincinnati, was first started in June, 1861, under authority from the State of Virginia with headquarters at Williams-town, West Virginia, opposite Marietta, but recruiting in "Dixie" proving slow, October 10th. of the same year, the command was offered to Ohio, which was accepted, and the company went to Camp Dennison, near Cincinnati, where it was designated as Company "K," First Regiment Ohio Volunteer Light Artillery. During the fall and winter of 1861, and 1862, the drilling and disciplining were incessant, and so proficient did the men become, that the Governor of Ohio, as a special recognition, furnished the company six of the famous Wierd steel guns. March 1, 1862, the command went to Parkersburg, West Virginia, and was incorporated into the Army of West Virginia, then under General Rosecrans. Two weeks later, it went forward to Cumberland, Maryland, and reported to Gen. Robert C. Schenck. A few days afterwards it was sent on a forced march, reaching the wire suspension bridge over the South Potomac, near Romney, and by its timely arrival prevented a raid upon the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad by a division of "Stonewall" Jackson's cavalry. For the promptness here displayed, the battery was publicly thanked by General Rosecrans, and Captain De Beck promoted to chief of artillery, on the staff of General Schenck. Early in April, 1862, "K" was engaged in engagements at Grassy Lick, Lost River, Moorefield and Crab Bottom Church, again receiving the thanks of the general.

May 8th of the same year, after a forced night and day march, of more than 100 miles, Schenck's army reached the overwhelmed forces of General Milroy, the combined army numbering 7,000, at once engaging Jackson's army of 23,000 in the fierce battle of Bull Pasture Mountain, which lasted till late in the night, and by mutual consent ending as a "drawn game." The Union Army under Schenck, being largely outnumbered, withdrew that night, closely followed by Jackson in its retreat, fighting at Mountain Summit, Ighs' Church, Handy's Gap, Washington's Meadow, and Franklin; in all of which Jackson's attempt to cut the army off from its base of retreat was frustrated. During the five days and nights of this terrible retrograde movement De Beck's Battery was assigned the first place of honor, in covering the retreats and driving back the fierce onslaughts of Jackson, in which it was again so successful that General Fremont who had succeeded Rosecrans, in the presence of his staff and other commanding officers, thanked Captain De Beck for splendid work he had done, General Schenck adding that Battery K had saved the army.

Fremont now started on his memorable march, to intercept Jackson in the Shenandoah Valley, during which were fought the battles of Strasburg, Middletown, Cedar Creek, New Market, Edinburgh, Woodstock, Mount Jackson, Harrisonburg, Rockingham Fields (where the Rebel cavalry general, Ashby, was killed), and Cross Keys, and in the latter the terrible firing of De Beck's battery, and work it did, exciting the greatest admiration of all officers and men from the highest to the lowest. Fremont was now succeeded by General Sigel, and Captain De Beck was chief of artillery of the army. While under Sigel, the battery took part in the great battles of Cedar Mountain, Freeman's Ferry, Kelly's Ford, Warrenton, Warrenton Junction, Bristow Station, New Baltimore (second), Chantilly, and the second Bull Run, all under Pope.

After this K was assigned to the army of the Potomac, closing the year 1862 by taking part in Burnside's great and fatal battle of Fredericksburg. Gen. Joe Hooker was now made commander, and K Battery was sent to the Eleventh Corps under Gen. O. O. Howard.

May 1st, 2d and 3d, Battery K was in the terrible field at Chancellorsville, its discipline and drill never proving of greater value than when the Eleventh Corps so unexpectedly became demoralized, and began its disastrous retreat. K Battery remained like a solid wall, and with canister and shrapnel again and again driving back the fierce charges of Jackson, remaining in position until our forces had either reformed their lines, or new troops came to the rescue. The next day, while temporarily serving in the Fifth Corps under General Meade, the battery again distinguished itself by driving back with cannister Longstreet's veterans. Captain De Beck being now called to another command, Lewis Heckman, senior first lieutenant, was commissioned captain, and took charge of the battery.

July 1, 2 and 3, 1863, was fought the greatest battle of the war, Gettysburg, in which Battery K was prominently engaged, its terrific fire on Cemetery Hill eliciting the highest encomiums.

In October the battery went to the West with the Eleventh and Twelfth corps under Hooker, and at Chattanooga was incorporated into the Army of the Cumberland, and while there, was participant in all of Grant's battles at Lookout Mountain, Missionary Ridge, etc., and during the rest of the war, remained at Stevenson and Bridgeport, Alabama, finally returning to Camp Dennison, where it was mustered out of service, delivering its guns over to the Ordnance Department of the United States, and having had the rare good fortune of never having surrendered a single gun to the enemy.

Gallant, noble Frank Buell died in battle, lamented and beloved by all the officers and men of the three batteries, while De Beck and Huntington had the good fortune to live through the contests, to see the country restored and reunited, and peace reigning throughout the land.

Battery K, Second Ohio Heavy Artillery.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Captain Daniel W. Hoffman, mustered August 22, 1863, promoted to major September 30, 1863; Captain Walter S. Bradford, June 16, 1865, mustered out with regiment; Captain Stowell S. Hazen, September 30, 1863, resigned June 24, 1865; First Lieutenant Richard Burns, August 25, 1863, promoted to captain of battery L; First Lieutenant Stowell S. Hazen, August 27, 1863, promoted to captain of battery K; First Lieutenant Thomas M. Sechler, September 30, 1863, resigned June 3, 1865; First Lieutenant Charles A. Manus, October 18, 1864, resigned June 24, 1865; First Lieutenant Francis Reichman, June 16, 1865, mustered out with regiment; Second Lieutenant Thomas M. Sechler, August 25, 1863, promoted to first lieutenant; Second Lieutenant Charles H. Newton, August 25, 1863, promoted to first lieutenant of battery D, and resigned January 19, 1865; Second Lieutenant George W. Bell, September 30, 1863, promoted to first lieutenant of battery B, on General Carter's staff at muster out of regiment; Second Lieutenant Thomas Underwood, September 15, 1864, mustered out with regiment; Second Lieutenant Henry A. Frary, mustered out with regiment.

This was a Washington County organization. By the middle of the year 1863, the national armies had made important captures of forts and other strongholds of the enemy. It became necessary to recruit a class of troops whose duty it should be to fortify, garrison and hold these captures. The Second regiment of heavy artillery was therefore authorized, and rank and file consisted of 2,400 men.

K Battery was mustered into the service September 7, 1863, at Covington barracks, Kentucky, and on October 11th, was removed to Mumfordsville. On May 26, 1864, it was transferred to Charleston, Tennessee, where, on the 18th of August, it was engaged with the enemy's cavalry, under Wheeler, and participated in the subsequent movements of General Ammen, moving to Fort Sanders and Knoxville, and on November 18, 1864, marched to open communication with the Union forces, then in a critical position at Strawberry Plains. On November 20th, returned to Knoxville, and on December 7th, marched with General Ammen's command to Bean's Station, Tennessee. It occupied fortifications at Clinch Gap, Tennessee, until December 31, 1864, when it returned to Fort Lee, at Knoxville. Shortly thereafter the battery was ordered to Greenville, Tennessee, and thence to Nashville, where, on the 23rd of August, 1865, it was mustered out of service. On August 29, 1865, it was finally paid and discharged at Camp Chase.

Company I, First Ohio Volunteer Cavalry.

(Gen. G. W. Thomas' Body Guard.)

REGIMENTAL OFFICERS.

Colonel Owen P. Ransom, mustered August 17, 1861, resigned; Colonel Minor Millikin, January 11, 1862, killed at Stone River December 31, 1862; Colonel Thomas C. H. Smith, December 31, 1862, revoked; Colonel Beroth B. Eggleston, April 1, 1863, mustered out with regiment; Lieutenant Colonel Thomas C. H. Smith, August 23, 1861, promoted to colonel December 13, 1862, appointed brigadier general by President November 29, 1862; Lieutenant Colonel James Laughlin, December 31, 1862, resigned April 1, 1863; Lieutenant Colonel Valentine Cupp, April 1, 1863, died September 20, 1863; Lieutenant Colonel Thomas J. Pattin, September 20, 1863, mustered out with regiment; Lieutenant Colonel Stephen C. Writer, December 9, 1864, mustered out with regiment; Major John D. Moxley, February 25, 1865, A. A. G. at Camp Webster, Nashville, Tennessee; Major William McBurney, February 28, 1865, mustered out with regiment; Major Minor Millikin, August 24, 1861, promoted to colonel; Major Michael W. Smith, October 31, 1861, resigned June 10, 1862; Major E. B. Dennison, November 27, 1861, resigned June 10, 1862; Major James Laughlin, June 10, 1862, promoted to lieutenant colonel; Major Beroth B. Eggleston, June 20, 1862, promoted to colonel; Major J. W. Robinson, June 1, 1862, died; Major David A. B. Moore, September 7, 1862, killed at Stone River December 31, 1862; Major Valentine Cupp, December 31, 1862, promoted to lieutenant colonel; Major Thomas J. Pattin, December 31, 1862, promoted to lieutenant colonel; Major Stephen C. Writer, April 1, 1863, promoted to lieutenant colonel; Major James N. Scott, April 1, 1863, mustered out with regiment; Major John C. Frankenberger, September 20, 1863, mustered out; Surgeon Rudolph Wirth, September 7, 1861, resigned May 23, 1862; Surgeon John Cannan, February 1, 1862; Wilson V. Cowen, December 16, 1863, resigned October 4, 1864; Assistant Surgeon John Cannan, October 10, 1864, promoted to surgeon; Assistant Surgeon John B. McDill, August 21, 1864, mustered out; Chaplain J. M. Drake, December 13, 1861, resigned May 23, 1862.

COMPANY OFFICERS.

Captain Thomas J. Pattin, mustered September 17, 1864, promoted to major; Captain John D. Barker, December 31, 1863, resigned January 21, 1864; Captain Henry C. Reppert, December 14, 1864, mustered out with regiment; First Lieutenant John D. Barker, September 18, 1861, promoted to captain; First Lieutenant Samuel H. Putnam, September 7, 1862, resigned October 26, 1863; First Lieutenant Henry C. Reppert, March 31, 1864, promoted to captain; First Lieutenant Robert B. Rhodes, January 6, 1865, mustered out May 5, 1865, as second lieutenant; First Lieutenant Daniel W. Dye, July 24, 1865, mustered out with regiment; Second Lieutenant Oscar H. Underwood, September 18, 1861, resigned May 29, 1862; Second Lieutenant Timothy L. Condit, May 29, 1862, killed at Stone River December 31, 1862; Second Lieutenant Samuel H. Putnam, November 20, 1862, promoted to first lieutenant; Second Lieutenant Henry C. Reppert, December 31, 1862, promoted to first lieutenant; Second Lieutenant Robert B. Rhodes, December 9, 1863, promoted to first lieutenant.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

First, second and third sergeants at date of muster out.

First Sergeant Edward P. Burlingame, March 31, 1864, mustered out with regiment; Quartermaster Sergeant John Huff, March 31, 1864, mustered out with regiment; Commissary Sergeant Henry Duden, March 31, 1864, mustered out with regiment.

The following sketch of Company L, First Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, was compiled from brief notes taken by Sergeant E. P. Burlingame from a journal kept by him during the war. Many soldiers kept journals, but few were as fortunate as Mr. Burlingame in getting through all the marches and battles and not losing them:

September 5, 1861, Governor Dennison authorized a regiment of cavalry to be raised for the three years' service. Through the efforts of the military committee of Washington County, and especially two members, John Newton, Esq., and Col. William R. Putnam, together with Thomas J. Pattin and John D. Barker, a company was raised in this county, and by September 14, 1861, 93 names were enrolled. Thomas J. Pattin was elected was captain, John D. Barker first lieutenant, and Oscar H. Underwood second lieutenant.

On the 17th of the same month the company reported at Camp Chase, and was assigned to the First Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, as Company L. They were mustered in on the 18th, received uniforms the 21st, horses the 28th, horse equipments October 22nd, sabres and belts November 25th, and revolvers December 3rd. Meanwhile they were exercised at mounted and dismounted drill, until they became very efficient in the manual of arms and cavalry evolutions.

December 11th, the regiment arrived at Louisville, Kentucky, and on the 20th were reviewed by Gen. Don Carlos Buell, commanding the department.

January 30, 1862, the company made a short tour in search of the Rebel chief, John Morgan, but failed to come up with him.

The regiment proceeded southward through Nashville, and on March 24th encamped at Spring Hill, Tennessee, where a detail from Company L, was made as an escort for Gen. George H. Thomas, under command of Lieut. John D. Barker.

April 6, 1862, while on the march with General Buell's army in the direction of Pittsburgh Landing, the cannonading at the battle of Shiloh was distinctly heard. The regiment arrived at Pittsburgh Landing April 8th, too late to take part in the battle, and were actively employed up to May 30th, having several skirmishes with the enemy, and lost one man, William M. Robinson—missing.

On June 4, 1862, they fought their first battle, Company L, with part of Company D, were on picket duty three miles from Booneville, at Carolina Church, when the Rebels, four companies strong, attacked them. Forming hastily they checked the enemy's advance, and then fell back in good order, to entice the enemy into the open ground. The Rebels, supposing they were retreating, charged with a yell, but our men wheeled by fours and faced the enemy, opening on them with their Sharp's carbines, Captain Pattin riding up and down the line, urging the boys to "give it to them." The Rebels having a larger force now endeavored to flank them. They consequently were compelled to fall back still farther, turning on the Rebels several times, and finally reached their supports at Booneville, when the enemy retired. The company escaped without loss; two of Company D, however, were wounded.

In July, 1862, the company was engaged in the siege of Corinth, and on the 24th of that month joined the regiment at Tusculumbia, Alabama. During August they were engaged in scouting along the line of the Nashville & Chattanooga Railroad. September 30th found the regiment at Louisville again under the command of General Buell, where they were clothed and equipped and received four months' pay.

On October 2d, Company L was thrown out of Louisville to make a flank movement on the Rebels who had taken possession of Mount Washington. Captain Pattin advanced part of the company, dismounted, who were supported by other troops; they were soon briskly engaged, when the enemy opened on them with grape and canister; they thereupon retired to give room to our artillery; moving now to the other flank the company got into the town, and the Rebels rapidly retreated. Loss, Henry Duden, wounded.

October 4, 1862, a detachment under Major Laughlin having been sent out to the front they left the direct road to Bardstown, and proceeding via Fairfield, came into it again at Bardstown fair-grounds. After some skirmishing we gained the road. Company L was formed parallel to the road, close up to the fence, and was on the left line, disconnected. We had commenced letting down the fence to enable us to get on to the road, but a rush of cavalry from the direction of Louisville caused us to make other disposition of our time. We were between a brigade of Texan rangers and Bardstown, and they were charging down upon us in columns of platoons, evidently intent upon cutting through. We fired a few rounds at a right oblique, and the right having broken, we had to fall back. The Rebels were between us and our reserves. We must run the gauntlet or jump a rail fence and take a wide circuit around. Captain Pattin's bridle-reign caught on a gate-latch, and he barely escaped capture. Corporal Daniel W. Dye having dropped his carbine, dismounted, and picked it up, and with the Rebels demanding his surrender, he put spurs to his horse and escaped. Jonathan H. Smith was mortally wounded after he had been compelled to surrender. Corporal Jacob Gano and privates Edward P. Bigelow, Calvin C. Broughton, Peter Cline, David M. Grimes, John Hoskinson and William Rice were captured and paroled. John Duden and William Reese were captured and dismounted, but watching their opportunity, they escaped.

On October 8th the detachment took part in the battle of Perryville, and bivouacked that night on the field.

By order of General Buell, Major Laughlin's detachment on October 10th started for Bardstown, with a large number of Rebel prisoners, and on the 14th joined the regiment at Danville, Kentucky.

After another fruitless chase after Morgan, the company was for some time engaged in carrying dispatches from Gallatin to General Rosseau at Tyree Springs, Tennessee.

The regiment was about this time (November, 1862) brigaded with the Third Ohio Cavalry, and the Second and Fifth Kentucky Cavalry, under Colonel Zahm of the Third Ohio. The Fourth Ohio Cavalry was afterwards substituted for the Fifth Kentucky.

On December 30, 1862, Captain Pattin was ordered to take his platoon and with a section of artillery, to drive some Rebel troops out of Laverne, Tennessee. Upon coming in sight of the town the artillery was brought into position, and a few shots were fired as "feelers." One of these passing through a house took off the arm of Mr. Tidd of Hammar, Ohio, who was employed by the government in putting up telegraph lines. The Rebels retreated. Pattin pursued and captured a number of mules. The Second platoon, under Lieut. Timothy L. Condit, accompanied the train, and both platoons met at Wilkes' crossroads, and went into camp there at 10 P. M.

STONE RIVER.

December 31st we were preparing to break camp, when, from the right over the fields, came excited soldiers with tales of disaster. General Willich's command had been surprised, and the plain was covered with his fleeing troops. The wounded, as they passed, inquired where they might find a hospital, and all seemed more or less panic-stricken. Hastily forming we proceeded to join the regiment, and hardly had we done so when the Rebels opened on us with artillery, one of the first shots killing our major, David A. B. Moore. Acting under orders, we fell back to a new position. The enemy, mistaking the movement for a retreat, set up a cheer and charged. Upon our again facing them, however, they came to a sudden halt, and we engaged them with our carbines. Colonel Millikin was cool and brave. "Give it to them, boys," said he, "and if they get too close take your sabres to them." The disaster to General McCook's corps made it necessary for us to fall back again, that the line of battle might not be disconnected. We were closely followed by the Rebels, who used the artillery at every opportunity. We had no artillery, and in this the enemy had the advantage. As we were compelled to go through fences we lost our formation and became mixed up. This kept getting worse; we were like a drove, and still harder pressed, the foe riding down on us, and with their revolvers firing upon us they came. We were nearing the pike; our line of communication to the rear, and the sight of the long line of wagons must have given the Rebels encouragement. At this juncture Colonel Millikin ordered "Charge!" repeating the command. Seventy-five or a hundred men wheeled and dashed toward the enemy, but they took to flight. We pursued and had nearly overtaken them when a strong force was hurled against our right flank, and made retreat a necessity. This was a matter of difficulty, and in trying to make it successful Colonel Millikin and Lieut. Timothy L. Condit, our best officers, were killed; Adjutant Scott was severely wounded, Sergeant George Warren and Bugler John Duly were taken prisoners, and James S. Parker was captured, disarmed and shot in two places. He managed to escape with his horse. The Rebels now had undisputed possession of the train. Our cavalry was scattered, discouraged and fleeing. It was late in the day ere we were again in order. Captain Pattin brought up the first battalion and took command of the company. The Rebels were driven from the road by the Fourth regulars, and the fighting for the day, as far as we were concerned, was over. Our Colonel died nobly. His loss was deeply lamented, for his place could never be filled. The death of Lieutenant Condit was a grief to all the company. He had no enemies; every one was his friend, and each felt an individual sorrow.

January 1, 1863. Colton, Tennessee.

killed by a cannon ball. He belonged to the escort of Major General Thomas, and was on the field when killed. His comrades bear testimony to his excellent qualities as a soldier and his uniform courtesy and gentlemanly bearing.

We were not actively engaged today. The Rebels advanced but once, and being met with grape and canister from a masked battery, they precipitately retired.

January 2d. The company was in order of battle all day. There was considerable skirmishing, but no general engagement by the Second brigade.

January 3rd. We held our position; raining all day.

The next day it was discovered the Rebels had left Murfreesborough, and pursuit was begun, Company L taking part, and on the 5th entered the town.

The company, soon after this battle, was assigned to duty carrying dispatches, until April 21, 1863, when the company was permanently detailed as escort of Gen. George H. Thomas.

Capt. T. J. Patten having been promoted to major, Lieutenant Barker was now promoted captain of the company.

The duties of escort to a general in the field are aptly illustrated by the following incident on July 15, 1863:

During the operations against Tullahoma, Tennessee, we were engaged as orderlies and couriers, and in time of expected battle, as General Thomas' personal escort on the field. We were now at Winnefred's Ford, at Elk River, six miles north of Derchard, Tennessee. Today General Thomas, accompanied by General Reynolds, went to General Rosecrans' headquarters at Estell Springs. When returning, as he was crossing Elk River, his horse stumbled over a stone and he was thrown in the water. Corporal John W. Price had charge of the detail then with the general, and was close behind him. The current was very rapid, and the general was being carried down stream unable to reach the shore. Corporal Price, without a moment's hesitation, sprang from his horse into the water, and, being over six feet high, by a few rapid strokes, reached the general and caught hold of his coat tail. Setting himself against the current he tried to check their progress down the stream, but to no purpose; at each surge the general went under. Finally they reached the shore, the general much exhausted.

CHICKAMAUGA.

September 18, 1863. At dusk General Thomas received a dispatch from General Rosecrans, through the signal corps, which caused orders to be issued immediately for breaking camp. We marched to Crawfish Springs, where General Thomas stopped to have an interview with General Rosecrans. The company, at 10 o'clock P. M., built fires and unsaddled, but remained ready for marching at a few minutes' notice. Troops and trains are passing rapidly towards Chattanooga. The fences on each side of the road are on fire, and diffuse light and warmth.

September 19th, at 2 o'clock A. M., we left Crawfish Springs and proceeded toward Chattanooga. A short time after daylight the general took a detail from the company, and with his staff took a road to the right, leaving the company to escort the headquarters train to Rossville. The road taken by General Thomas ran almost parallel to the line of battle which he proceeded to form as the troops came up. To secure certain advantages an advance was ordered early in the day, and the Rebels were driven to the creek, but soon after they advanced and drove our men, capturing some artillery. There was evidently a slight panic, and the movement to the rear was being made in confusion and haste. Officers and men were mixed indiscriminately, and they rushed by the general, paying no heed to the injunction "look behind you." Had they done so, they would have stopped, for the Rebels had ceased to advance, and of those of our men who had remained to oppose them quite a good line was formed. The detail under Sergeant Daniel W. Dye made efforts to stop those who were fleeing, but it was some time ere they could be convinced that they were out of danger. Fortunately this was confined to but one brigade, and in the remainder of the battle it proved faithful and courageous. Another detail joined the general in the afternoon and performed whatever service was required. At night we stood around the field headquarters, ready at a call. The general sat on a log in the wood near a dim fire, dictating dispatches to his aid. At twelve o'clock he went to see General Rosecrans, a part of the company going as escort.

September 20th those of the company who were with the train yesterday came to the field and those who were relieved to get rations and forage. These returned again in the afternoon. When the center was forced to give way the escort was used to supply additional aids with orderlies, and a number of the company performed very satisfactorily the duties of staff officers. Capt. John D. Barker, when returning from a distant point, whither he had gone with a message, not knowing that the center was so far driven back, came unawares upon the Rebels, who fired upon him, shooting his horse through the neck. Taking a more roundabout course he came in the rear of the left and was again fired upon. At this same place Gen. Jones A. Garfield, a few minutes later, had his horse shot from under him. Captain Barker reached the General and reported, and was sent with Captain Killogg, aid-de-camp, to conduct the loads of ammunition to General Reynolds. Here the services of the company were required. The Rebels were in the rear of General Reynolds' position, and the ammunition was in some danger of being captured. A number of the company were deployed as skirmishers, and with raised pistols we advanced through a piece of woods on the left supposed to be occupied by the extreme right flank of the Rebel army. This was not the case, however, until half an hour later, when General Turchin, with the Thirty-sixth and Ninety-second charged upon them and routed them completely. The ammunition was delivered to the proper officer and we returned to the general. During the afternoon a cloud of dust was seen to the rear at a distance, and as it came nearer troops were discovered. General Thomas had been watching them, and calling Corporal Franklin W. Prunty he instructed him to go and ascertain whether they were Rebel or Union troops, cautioning him to be sure to return with a correct report. Rapidly galloping toward the approaching column, Corporal Prunty discovered that they carried the flag of the Reserve Corps, and getting sufficiently near to remove all doubt of their being friends he turned back and reported the approach of General Steedman's division of the Reserve Corps. The general himself, a few minutes later, came up and was assigned to duty on the right of the line held by General Thomas. At sunset the divisions on the left began to retire, and the general, after seeing everything in order, started late in the evening for Rossville, where the troops were concentrating. We lay down around the fire and being warm and weary fell asleep.

During the entire engagement the officers and men of the company performed valuable services. Captain Barker was on the field all the time, and rendered efficient service as an aid-de-camp. Lieutenants Putnam and Repert were alternately on the field, and in command of the train guard. There was no manifestation of cowardice on the part of any member of the company. Those who witnessed the coolness of Quartermaster Sergeant John Huff, when danger was most imminent, will not forget it, and the quiet, determined manner in which private Benjamin S. Turner performed his duties was admirable. He realized that there was danger, but never let it keep him from his post of duty. Others are deserving of as great praise as these, but all did not become equally prominent.

After the battle of Chickamauga, Company I. was with General Thomas during all the movements and engagements from Chattanooga and Missionary Ridge to Atlanta. On November 19, 1863, the subject of re-enlisting as veterans came up and Corporal William H. Snodgrass re-enlisted at once, one of the first in the army to pledge his services to the country for another term of three years. Afterwards many others of the company took the same step. On December 5, 1863, Capt. J. D. Barker having been assigned to duty at headquarters of the Department of the Cumberland as acting assistant inspector general, Lieut. Henry C. Reppert assumed command, and retained that position to the end, receiving his commission as captain June 30, 1865.

On April 27, 1864, the company was joined by 35 recruits, and by May 4th they found themselves well equipped, rested, healthy, and ready for the arduous campaign before them. Then began General Sherman's brilliant movements, flanking the enemy to the right and compelling him each time to abandon one stronghold after another until he finally drew up before Atlanta, and then by another flank movement compelling him to abandon that also. During all these movements and battles Gen. George H. Thomas was an important figure, as well as a powerful factor in every important move. Sherman, no doubt, owed much of his success on this memorable campaign to his able lieutenants, his corps commanders. General Thomas was himself constantly in the field and his body guard were constantly subjected to dangerous and fatiguing service.

On September 2nd, about two o'clock in the morning, heavy explosions were heard in the direction of Atlanta, and they broke camp early and moved towards the city and on the 8th moved up to Atlanta and went into camp. Hood and his army having retreated.

On November 6th, arrived at Chattanooga and began at once to build winter quarters. On January 6th, 1865, arrived at Nashville.

The company continued in service after the fall of Richmond and the final collapse of the Confederacy, scouring the country in the neighborhood of Nashville, Gallatin, Harts-ville and Lebanon, Tennessee, looking after government property and protecting loyal citizens until September 26, 1865, when the company was paid and mustered out at Nashville. The company before disbanding did something that showed their high opinion and regard for

Gen. George H. Thomas, the "Pap" Thomas who was so brave, so able and so "popular with the boys." It was a tribute to his social and personal worth.

The company contributed $50 for the purchase of a full length colored photograph of Gen. George H. Thomas, which was taken in charge of by the committee to be placed in the hands of the military committee of Washington County, for exhibition in the soldiers' gallery in connection with the company. And so we part, some to take the evening train for home. Others to remain to spend a few days in Nashville as citizens.

Of the 91 enlisted men in the company, there were 41 farmers, 28 carpenters, smiths, machinists, moulders, masons, cooper, etc., 10 clerks and students, and 12 of various occupations. Six were commissioned, 30 discharged at expiration of term of service, 18 discharged for disability, one on writ of habeas corpus, 27 re-enlisted, one deserted, one missing in action, and eight dead.

Company H, Seventh Ohio Volunteer Cavalry.

REGIMENTAL OFFICERS.

Colonel Israel Garrard, mustered September 18, 1862, refused promotion, mustered out with the regiment; Lieutenant Colonel George G. Miner, September 18, 1862, on detached duty; Major William Reany, September 20, 1862, mustered out July 4, 1865; Major Augustus Norton, December 28, 1862, resigned January 30, 1864; Major James McIntire, July 1, 1863, resigned March 26, 1864; Major William T. Simpson, March 28, 1864, resigned August 26, 1864; Major John Leaper, July 13, 1864; Major Solomon L. Green October 12, 1864, mustered out with regiment; Surgeon Isaac Train, October 9, 1862, mustered out with regiment; Assistant Surgeon R. H. Tullis, November 6, 1862, died at Marietta, Georgia; Assistant Surgeon P. G. Barrett, June 9, 1863, honorably discharged October 26, 1864; Assistant Surgeon John Krapf, January 4, 1865, mustered out with regiment.

OFFICERS OF COMPANY H

Captain Arthur D. Eells, August 27, 1862, resigned June 28, 1863; Captain Theodore F. Allen, April 2, 1864, mustered out July 4, 1865; Captain Andrew Hall, brevet major, lieutenant colonel and colonel United States Volunteers, April 2, 1864, mustered out with regiment; First Lieutenant William L. Tripp, September 2, 1862, resigned December 25, 1863; First Lieutenant John J. Smith, April 2, 1864, resigned as second Lieutenant October 30, 1863; First Lieutenant Andrew J. Hardy, May 25, 1864, mustered out with regiment; Second Lieutenant John J. Smith, September 2, 1862, promoted to first lieutenant; Second Lieutenant Andrew J. Hardy, April 19, 1864, promoted to first lieutenant; Second Lieutenant Samuel C. Tappan, March 16, 1865, mustered out with regiment as first sergeant.

Company H, named at the time "Newton Guards," in honor of John Newton, Esq., of the military committee of Washington County, was organized at Marietta, Ohio, September 8, 1862. It had been speedily enlisted by that popular officer, Captain Arthur D. Fells, who became the first captain of the company. On October 25, 1862, they were mustered in at Camp Marietta, and on the 29th were ordered to Ripley, Ohio, where they became company H, Seventh Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, the famous "river regiment." Over sixteen hundred men were offered for this regiment, so popular was this branch of the service at the time.

They left Ripley on January 2d and arrived at Lexington, Kentucky, January 8, 1863. On February 3d they were sent on a scouting expedition to Mount Vernon, Kentucky, and on March 21st were again on a scout, this time meeting the Rebel raider, Basil Duke, near Mt. Sterling, Kentucky, on the 22nd and driving him from the State.

With the other forces under General Gilmore they engaged in the pursuit of the Rebel General Pegram's command, which had invaded Kentucky, and at Dutton's Hill, near Somerset, where the enemy made a stand in a strongly entrenched position, a sharp battle took place. "Companies G, I, K, L and M made a gallant sabre charge, which decided the day, and the enemy fled in the greatest confusion," leaving in the hands of the companies that charged up the hill 130 prisoners and 49 dead and wounded on the field. The Rebels, however, had sent some veteran cavalry around to the rear, and the Nationals had scarcely taken possession of the hill when from their rear was heard the Rebel yell, and two regiments of Rebels charged at full speed down the valley. They were met at once by a counter charge, led by Captain Saunders, of General Gilmore's staff (afterward General Saunders, killed at Knoxville), who charged with companies E, F, and H of the river regiment, routed and scattered the Rebel charging columns, capturing from them nearly 200 prisoners and two battle-flags. Then followed a vigorous pursuit of the enemy for five miles or more up hill and down, through woods, shooting, shouting, taking prisoners, and strewing the woods with wounded, slain and all the debris of battle. At one place they came unexpectedly onto a company of women from Somerset, who had taken refuge in the woods; these began screaming and were expecting doubtless to be killed in a very short space of time, but the gallant troopers halted in their mad career and allowed the women to pass and then resumed the pursuit, which continued until darkness intervened.

The next work in hand was to drive Pegram beyond the Cumberland mountains, in May, 1863, which they did. Pegram, however refused to stay whipped, and information being received that he had collected a force near Monticello, the Seventh, with four other cavalry regiments, all under Col. A. V. Kautz, attacked the enemy June 9, 1863, and drove him from that place. On the return march the river regiment was in the rear of the column, with companies D and H thrown out as rear guard. Presently a huge cloud of dust to the rear announced the approach of the enemy. The two companies nerved themselves to check the Rebel advance, and selected a position behind a stone wall. The enemy, coming up, received the well directed fire of the guard, which emptied several saddles; but the Rebels, charging gallantly, drove the guard from its chosen position. Galloping along the road, closely pursued by the enemy, the guard loaded their carbines, wheeled into line, and delivered a fire which checked the Rebel advance for a moment. The rear guard was soon reinforced by the entire regiment, and afterwards by other regiments and a battery, when a close and desperate fight ensued, lasting till after dark, when both parties withdrew. This engagement was known as that of Rocky Gap. General Burnside complimented the regiment, in orders, for their service in this action, which he announced as "the spirited cavalry engagement at Rock Gap, Kentucky."

The regiment next engaged in cutting the Knoxville & Chattanooga Railroad, at Lenoir station, marching from there to a point so close to Knoxville that they threw a few shells into the town. They then drew back and proceeded to Strawberry Plains, and burned a fine railroad bridge over the Holston, the depot, and large quantities of army supplies.

They next joined in the pursuit of the famous raider, John Morgan, who on July 3, 1863, had succeeded in crossing his command over the Cumberland, estimated at 3,500 men. On the 10th, Morgan crossed the Ohio at Brandenburg, Kentucky, with Shackleford and his cavalry in hot pursuit, the route taken being through Southern Indiana eastward through Ohio, Morgan having the advantage of 24 hours' start, and all fresh horses on the line of march. Morgan, becoming anxious for the safety of his command, had resolved to make a desperate effort to cross the Ohio at Buffington's Island. His pursuers, however, were too close upon him. At daylight on the morning of July 19th the advance guard of the pursuing column drove in the Rebel pickets, and the enemy was found in line of battle near Buffington's Island. The river regiment, being in the advance, was the first to attack, and being reinforced by other troops, a sharp engagement ensued, which resulted in the defeat of the enemy, who fled from the field in the greatest disorder, leaving their artillery and dead and wounded on the field. The pursuit continued until dark, up to which time 800 prisoners had been brought in, and the rest of the raiders scattered or hiding in the woods. After the pursuit ceased, a flag of truce was sent to Colonel Garrard, of the Seventh, the bearer announcing that Colonels Basil Duke and Howard Smith, of Morgan's command, with staff officers, had been cut off and were anxious to surrender. Two officers were sent to receive the surrender, and upon arriving at the designated place, found that two colonels and several other officers, and about 50 men had surrendered to one soldier, Sergeant Drake, of the Eighth Michigan Cavalry.

The river regiment took part in the movement against Cumberland Gap, the gateway to East Tennessee, which stronghold was invested and on September 9, 1863, the garrison of 2,600 men, with 15 pieces of artillery, surrendered, and the Seventh was detailed to receive the surrender.

On August 31st Company H was acting as advance guard of the force of the main column, they went into camp at a convenient place, and in the morning found they had gone into camp with a party of Rebels. The enemy, thinking there was a large force present "folded their tents and stole away" during the night, and stole some of the company's horses also. Camping with the enemy was an experiment they did not repeat.

On September 10th the Seventh Cavalry took part in the night fight at Carter's station, in upper East Tennessee, driving the enemy away. They then repaired to Bull's Gap, in Bey's Mountain, 40 miles east of Knoxville, and held that position until October 10th, when, in the battle of Blue Springs, it took part in the final charge, near nightfall, routing the Rebels, who heat a hasty retreat.

On November 6th occurred the disastrous defeat at Rogersville, Tennessee, where the gallant Seventh, the Second Tennessee Mounted Infantry, and Battery M, Second Illinois Light Artillery, in all about 1,000 combatants, under command of Colonel Garrard of the Seventh, made a desperate stand against greatly superior numbers, losing 112 men and some of its best officers. The orderly—Bugler Justus Schminke, a Company H man from Marietta, was shot at his post by the side of Colonel Garrard. The enemy were said to number 3,500 men.

From the 13th to the 17th of December, after the enemy retreated from Knoxville, the Seventh regiment was constantly fighting and skirmishing, subsisting during that time almost entirely on parched corn.

December 23, 1863, they engaged the Rebels at New Market, and drove them out of that town. Christmas Day they crossed Bey's Mountain and joined battle with a largely superior force of the enemy, and, after hard fighting all day, being surrounded at two different times, they were compelled to cut their way out.

The 10 days following New Year's Day, 1864, were the most dreary days in the history of the regiment; they and their comrades of the other regiments and army lay on the hills about Mossy Creek, half starved. A bushel of cornmeal was issued to a brigade of men for a day's rations. Horses died by the hundreds from starvation. It stormed fearfully, and the men were without shelter. There was but one blanket for every two men, and they were but scantily clothed for such severe weather.

On January 27, 1864, the regiment joined the forces of General Sturgis and gave battle to Morgan's and Armstrong's divisions of Wheeler's cavalry, at Fair Garden, Tennessee, defeating them and driving them across the French Broad River.

On June 11, 1864, the Seventh, with the force under General Burbridge, began the pursuit of Morgan's force, which had invaded Kentucky, and at daylight of June 12th, at Cynthiana, Kentucky, attacked, driving the Rebels in confusion from the field. The left wing, led by Company H, and commanded by Colonel Garrard, charged the enemy's right, broke through and reached the rear of the Rebel line before it gave way on the center or left, captured the bridge over the Licking River, on the Rebel line of retreat, taking position on the opposite bank, with the rallying cry of "Rogersville," killed, wounded and captured a large number of the same enemy who defeated them at Rogersville, Tennessee, November 6, 1863. The regiment followed Morgan into the mountains of Eastern Kentucky, until forage and supplies failed, when they returned. They had marched 272 miles in six days and nights.

The regiment was ordered to join General Sherman's army, then moving on Atlanta, and by July 26th arrived at that fated city, participating in all the movements around Atlanta, scouting and doing picket duty, until November 6th, when they were ordered to Nashville, where they arrived November 17, 1864.

On November 28, 1864, the Seventh was ordered to join the National forces, then retreating in the direction of Nashville, and at Duck River the regiment was surrounded by the enemy, and were compelled to cut their way out. At the battle of Franklin, Tennessee, the Seventh held the left of the line. In December, 1864, the regiment was assigned to the First Brigade, Sixth Division, Cavalry Corps, commanded by General Wilson.

On December 15th the regiment participated in the great battle of Nashville, and, charging by squadrons, drove the enemy in its front a mile and a half, and captured four pieces of artillery, with men and horses. On the second day of the battle the regiment was actively engaged; and in the pursuit of Hood's army, on December 17th, marching by a detour to cut off the Rebel rear guard, they struck the Rebel center at Franklin, and, charging into the town, found it swarming with Rebels, who were fleeing and endeavoring to hide from their pursuers. The Rebel officers were unable to bring their men into line, and hundreds of them were taken prisoners, including 700 officers and men, 2,700 Rebel wounded, and a large number of National soldiers wounded in the hospital at Franklin.

On Christmas day, 1864, the regiment engaged the Rebel rear guard at Pulaski, drove them from that place in disorder, and captured three pieces of artillery, an ammunition train, etc. The pursuit ended on December 27th, when the rear guard of the defeated army of Hood crossed the Tennessee.

The Seventh then went into winter quarters at Gravelly Springs, Alabama, where they remained until March 22, 1865. At that date the cavalry corps commanded by General Wilson, started on the last great raid of the war. This force numbered about 18,000 men, the finest and best equipped body of cavalry of the war. They moved southward with irresistible momentum, driving the few scattered fragments of the Rebel army like chaff before the wind. The object of the expedition was to cut off communication between the Rebel armies of the East and West. The line of march of the Seventh regiment lay through Jasper, Georgia, Plantersville, Alabama, where 300 prisoners were taken, Selma, Alabama, where a large number of prisoners were taken; at this place, on April 3rd, the regiment had 3,000 Rebel prisoners in their possession. On April 12th they passed through Montgomery, the capital of Alabama; April 15th, through Tuskegee, Alabama. April 16th the regiment attacked Columbus, Georgia, at night, and captured the same, and on the 18th moved down the railroad toward the Andersonville prison pen; and on the 20th, while skirmishing with the enemy, a Rebel officer appeared with a white flag, announcing the surrender of Lee at Appomattox, and end of the war. The pursuit was at once stopped, and the forces which a short time before had been engaged in deadly conflict joined hands and bivouacked on the same field.

The regiment went into camp at Macon, Georgia, on April 25th, and remained there until May 5th, when they were ordered to Atlanta, where they arrived May 9th.

On May 13th 18 men from Company H were detailed to guard Jefferson Davis, the President of the defunct Confederacy, who had been captured in woman's attire, endeavoring to effect his escape. He was taken to Augusta, Georgia.

On May 22nd the regiment was ordered to Nashville, where they arrived June 6th, completing a ride of 1,500 miles on horseback.

June 30th the "River regiment" was mustered out of the United States service, and Company H arrived at Marietta July 6, 1865.

The total number, including recruits, in the regiment during its service, was 1,400; when mustered out it numbered 840, showing a loss of 560 men by casualties of war.

Company B, Ninth Ohio Volunteer Cavalry.

REGIMENTAL OFFICERS.

Colonel William D. Hamilton, mustered December 2, 1863, brevet brigadier general April 18, 1865; Lieutenant Colonel William D. Hamilton, October 30, 1863, promoted to colonel; Lieutenant Colonel Thomas P. Cook, December 2, 1863, discharged September 9, 1864; Lieutenant Colonel William Stough, October 1, 1864, mustered out with regiment; Major William D. Hamilton, December 6, 1862, promoted to lieutenant colonel; Major Thomas P. Cook, October 30, 1863, promoted to lieutenant colonel; Major William Sims, October 30, 1863, resigned June 21, 1864; Major John Williamson, December 2, 1863, resigned July 28, 1864; Major Henry Plessner, December 7, 1863, discharged January 13, 1865; Major Elijah Hoague, July 13, 1864, resigned March 9, 1865; Major William Stough, September 8, 1864, promoted to lieutenant colonel; Major L. H. Bowlus, October 1, 1864, mustered out with regiment; Major John W. Macumber, February 10, 1865, mustered out with regiment; Major James Irvine, May 31, 1865, mustered out with regiment; Major Joseph B. Daniels, February, 1864, mustered out with regiment; Surgeon C. M. Finch, October 5, 1863, mustered out with regiment; Assistant Surgeon William McMillen, March 26, 1863, mustered out with regiment; Assistant Surgeon James C. Thorpe, October 5, 1863, discharged April 18, 1864; Assistant Surgeon Charles H. Pinney, April 22, 1864, mustered out with regiment; Chaplain Ezekiel S. Hoagland, January 18, 1863, resigned August 20, 1864.

OFFICERS OF COMPANY B.

Captain John Williamson, mustered November 16, 1862, promoted to major; Captain Joseph B. Daniels, December 2, 1863, promoted to major; First Lieutenant Joseph B. Daniels, November 6, 1862, promoted to captain; First Lieutenant Richard B. Mason, December 22, 1863, deceased June 25, 1864; First Lieutenant James Stonehawker, July 30, 1864, mustered out with regiment; First Lieutenant Allen J. Alexander, February 10, 1865, honorably discharged March 25, 1865; Second Lieutenant Richard B. Mason, February 2, 1863, promoted to first lieutenant; Second Lieutenant James Stonehawker, October 10, 1863, promoted to first lieutenant; Second Lieutenant Allen J. Alexander, December 22, 1863, promoted to first lieutenant; Second Lieutenant Edward Ashley, May 31, 1865, mustered out with regiment; Second Lieutenant Bishop Martin, May 31, 1865, mustered out with regiment.

Company B was from Washington County. They were raised in the fall of 1862, under the authority of Governor Tod, to make three new regiments of cavalry, the Eighth, Ninth and Tenth. Captain William D. Hamilton, of the Thirty-second Ohio Volunteer Infantry, then stationed at Winchester, Virginia, had been sent to Ohio to recruit another company for that regiment. He had secured 50 men, when his regiment, with others, was captured by "Stonewall" Jackson, on the 15th of September, 1862. Governor Tod then ordered Captain Hamilton to proceed at once to organize a cavalry regiment, to be called the Ninth Ohio Volunteer Cavalry.

The fifty recruits above referred to formed a nucleus for the new organization, which rendezvoused at Zanesville, and on December 1, 1862, seven companies were ready for muster. Three companies, however, were transferred to the Tenth Cavalry, then organizing at Cleveland, to complete that regiment. The four remaining companies were ordered to Camp Dennison. They were designated as the First Battalion of the Ninth Cavalry, were equipped and drilled until April 23, 1863, when they were ordered to Lexington, Kentucky. The battalion under command of Captain Hamilton, numbering 300 men, were soon actively engaged driving out raiders and marauders who were so frequently coming down from the Kentucky and Tennessee mountains into the Blue Grass region.

On June 15, 1863, they joined an expedition designed to penetrate into East Tennessee and find out the situation of the loyal inhabitants of that region. The whole force consisted of about 2,000 mounted men, of which 200 were from the battalion, including Company B. Crossing the Cumberland River on the night of June 16th, they were soon at Pine Mountain Gap, a Rebel stronghold. Here the garrison was surprised and captured without firing a shot, and they passed on to Big Creek Gap, the Ninth Cavalry Battalion in the advance. The Rebel force at this gap evacuated and fled.

The objects of the raid were accomplished without further opposition, and they returned to London, Kentucky. The battalion on July 5th was ordered to move out after John Morgan; but Morgan having passed the battalion was ordered to watch and embarrass the progress of the Rebel general Scott, who was reported moving to support Morgan. The battalion joined a hastily gathered force at Camp Dick Robinson, and went in pursuit of Scott, who had passed with his command to the right. They then had a running fight for 10 days; the battalion marching at the rate of 57 miles in 24 hours, the men living chiefly on blackberries gathered at the roadside while the horses were resting.

On August 1st the battalion went from Stanford to Glasgow, Kentucky, and were there assigned to a cavalry brigade for General Burnside's advance into East Tennessee. The capture of Knoxville was effected without much opposition, and Major Hamilton was appointed provost marshal of the city, and the First Battalion assigned to patrol and guard duty on the approaches of the city.

The Second Battalion was organized November 6th, and the Third Battalion December 16, 1863, thus completing the regiment. The two battalions were filled to their maximum, and together with 100 recruits for the old battalion, were rendezvoused at Camp Dennison and furnished with horses, equipped with sabres and Smith carbines, and carefully drilled until February 6, 1864, when they were ordered by water to Nashville, Tennessee. Arriving at Louisville they were disembarked to follow some guerrillas, who were reported to be making trouble in Kentucky. They marched through the country to Nashville without opposition. The regiment was then attached to the left wing of the Sixteenth Army Corps, and ordered to Athens, Alabama, for field duty along the Tennessee River.

Colonel Hamilton at this time went to Knoxville with orders from the First Battalion to join the regiment. The severe campaign through which the First Battalion had passed, ending at Knoxville, rendered an entire new equipment necessary. For this purpose they were ordered to Nashville, and after considerable delay waiting for horses, they were again ready for active service. Capt. Joseph B. Daniels was now placed in command of the First Battalion and so remained until the end—toward the last being in command of the entire regiment. The battalion now moved to Pulaski, Tennessee, and occupied that place about six weeks, Captain Daniels being in command of the post. Several movements were undertaken against the Rebel cavalry under Wheeler and Forrest, for which the whole regiment combined, but were not permanently united until all of the battalions reached Athens, in April, 1864.

On the night of April 13, 1864, a company of the Ninth, which with others had been sent out to look for stock, was surrounded in a barn where they were sleeping. The attack was made by an Alabama regiment, and after a short struggle, two officers and 39 men were captured. The remaining three companies soon came to the rescue, but not in time to rescue their comrades.

The non-commissioned officers and men thus taken were sent to Andersonville prison. Eight months after, a report from Orderly Sergeant Kennedy showed that 25 of their number had died from brutal treatment.

The two officers taken were Capt. Joseph N. Hetzler and Lieut. Frank H. Knapp, who were sent to Columbia, South Carolina. Lieutenant Knapp, after two efforts to escape, in which he was retaken by the aid of bloodhounds, finally succeeded in reaching Knoxville, Tennessee, after traveling three weeks, principally at night, securing food and assistance from the negroes. At one time he heard the hounds on his trail, and again would have been captured but for the generous assistance of a negro, who, after giving him something to eat, said: "Now, bress de Lord, massa Yank, you jist trust to me and we'll fool dem dogs. You trot along fust, den I'll come too, steppin' in your tracks. Go 'bout half a mile, den you come to some watah; you take right through dat, den I'll kep on t'other way. See dem dogs is used to huntin' niggers, dey knows de smell, and likes to follow de black man's foot." "But," said the lieutenant, surprised at this singular offer, "the dogs will catch you and probably tear you to pieces." "Oh, massa," said he, "let dis nigger alone for dat, I'se fooled dem dogs afore for de Yanks, and, bress de Lord, I'll try it again. Now trot along, massa, for I hear dem dogs a comin.' " Shortly after crossing the pond the lieutenant heard the hounds howling in the direction taken by the negro, and he was no longer disturbed by them. He afterward joined the regiment at Savannah, Georgia, in January, 1865. Captain Hetzler remained a prisoner until near the close of the war, when he was exchanged.

Another battalion of the Ninth was sent out in the vicinity of Florence, to guard the river, thus, for a distance of fifty miles, the Tennessee was patrolled by the two battalions of the regiment, having frequent skirmishes with the enemy.

On May 5, 1864, the regiment arrived at Decatur, Alabama, and on the 8th the place was attacked by the enemy. The Ninth moved out beyond the works a mile and a half, to develop the enemy's strength. The country was about equally divided between timber and level, open land. The Rebels formed on the open ground, and, as the Ninth swung around the timber, a battle ensued, in which the Rebels were driven back in confusion. The regiment lost one man killed and three severely wounded. From this time until June 1st, cavalry skirmishes were of daily occurrence.

The Seventh Illinois Infantry having been driven from Florence to Pulaski, the Ninth went to reinforce that regiment. After driving the enemy beyond Florence, they returned to Decatur.

The Ninth was engaged on various expeditions in the region about Atlanta up to the fall of that city, immediately before the evacuation being attached to the cavalry division under Colonel Garrard, on the extreme right of General Sherman's army. The First Battalion was engaged in the battle of Jonesborough.

Four hundred men of the Ninth were now ordered to Nashville to procure horses. On the night of September 2, 1864, while the train containing the men was passing Big Shanty, Georgia, it was thrown from the track and six cars demolished. The enemy, concealed beside the track, opened fire on the wreck; the fire was returned, and the cowards fled. One man was killed and three wounded by the accident, and two killed and five wounded by the enemy's fire. Failing to procure horses at Nashville, the regiment proceeded to Louisville, and having received fresh horses returned to Nashville en route to the front.

This battalion arriving at Nashville found the Rebel general Wheeler within 12 miles of the city, and they were sent out with other forces to meet and drive him back. They encountered him at various places during the next 10 days until he was finally compelled to retire beyond the Tennessee. They soon received orders to report at once to Marietta, Georgia, to join the regiment which was to form a part of one of Sherman's new cavalry divisions in the "March to the Sea." The battalion found Marietta burned, and pressing on rapidly arrived at Atlanta November 17th, and found it evacuated, having marched 80 miles in 36 hours. They proceeded on to McDowell, 17 miles southward, where they joined the balance of the regiment. They now numbered 700 effective men. From this time on they were busily engaged covering the march of the infantry, making false marches to deceive the enemy, and fighting almost daily, until December 4th, at Waynesborough, when a general engagement occurred, in which the Ninth made the second charge that broke the Rebel lines.

Arriving at Savannah, they were sent on an expedition during the progress of the siege, to destroy railroad communication with the city. Capt. Joseph B. Daniels, with the First Battalion, was ordered to approach and burn the bridge, and engaging the enemy with their Spencer carbines drove them to cover and burnt the bridge.

The army remained at Savannah after its evacuation until the latter part of January, 1865, at which time 150 men of the Ninth, that had been left with the army of General Thomas, and who participated in the battle of Franklin and Nashville, joined the regiment.

On the night of February 3, 1865, the cavalry division crossed the Savannah River at Sister's Ferry, 40 miles above the city, and entered upon the march through the Carolinas. On the 6th the Ninth, having the advance, engaged the enemy at a swamp near Barnwell. The men were dismounted and wading the swamp under cover of the timber, drove the enemy from their position. As they progressed through the Carolinas, the forage and grain grew scarce and together with wearing service in the swamps, rendered a great many horses unfit for service, and as a consequence many of the cavalymen were dismounted. These were organized into a "dismounted command." On the night of the 9th of March General Kilpatrick went into camp with the Third Brigade and the dismounted men, about three miles in advance of the remainder of his command. On the 10th the Rebels under General Hampton dashed in upon the camp, and captured the wagons, artillery and many of the officers and men before they had time to dress themselves. The dismounted men, however, opened a close and heavy fire upon the Rebels, who were pillaging the camp. A sharp fight ensued, during which the artillerymen recovered their cannon, and opened on the enemy. The Second Brigade soon arrived, and the Rebels were forced to retire. The loss of the Nationals was 25, and the Rebels, 75 killed in this short but desperate contest.

In the battle of Averysborough, on March 15th, the Ninth supported the right flank of the Twentieth Corps, and was in the thickest of the contest, and at the battle of Bentonville, North Carolina, March 18th to 21st, the final contest of the grand army under General Sherman. General Kilpatrick's entire command occupied the left flank. The enemy being defeated, they occupied Goldsborough, and remained there until April 10th. They entered Raleigh after a slight skirmish April 14th. On the morning of the 18th, part of the Rebel army occupied the village of Chapel Hill. General Wheeler's Rebel cavalry covered the approach to the town, occupying a swamp through which the road passed. At daylight the regiment was ordered to effect a crossing if possible. Arriving at the swamp, the second battalion was ordered forward, dismounted, through the water. They advanced under cover of the cypress timber until the enemy came within range of their Spencer carbines. A spirited engagement ensued, in which the enemy were driven from their position, leaving a captain and staff-officer of General Wheeler, and three men dead on the field.

Orders in the meantime arrived from General Sherman suspending hostilities.

After the surrender the command was ordered to Concord, North Carolina, where it remained until the last of July.

On August 2, 1865, the regimental colors and property were turned over at Columbus, Ohio, and the regiment was mustered out of service.

Company F, Second Virginia Volunteer Cavalry.

REGIMENTAL OFFICERS.

Colonel William M. Bolles, mustered September 16, 1861, resigned June 25, 1862; Colonel John C. Paxton, July 18, 1862, honorably discharged; Colonel William H. Powell, May 18, 1863, promoted to brigadier general; Lieutenant Colonel John C. Paxton, September 16, 1861, promoted to colonel; Lieutenant Colonel Rollin L. Curtis, August 10, 1862, resigned October 25, 1862; Lieutenant Colonel William H. Powell, December 5, 1862, promoted to colonel; Lieutenant Colonel David Done, May 18, 1863, resigned July 5, 1864; Lieutenant Colonel John J. Hoffman, July 14, 1864, mustered out; Lieutenant Colonel James Allen, November 26, 1864; Major Rollin L. Curtis, October 2, 1861, promoted to lieutenant colonel; Major John J. Hoffman, October 2, 1861, promoted to lieutenant colonel; Major Henry Stembach, February 5, 1862, mustered out; Major William H. Powell, August 10, 1862, promoted to lieutenant colonel; Major John McMahon, January 2, 1863; Major James Allen, April 29, 1864, promoted to lieutenant colonel; Major Charles E. Hambleton, July 14, 1864, mustered out; Major Edwin S. Morgan, November 26, 1864; Adjutant John P. Merrill, October 25, 1861, resigned June 5, 1862; Adjutant Elijah F. Gillon, November 5, 1862, resigned September 7, 1864; Adjutant Earl A. Cranston, November 12, 1861, resigned June 2, 1862; Adjutant George E. Downing, October 25, 1861, resigned May 1, 1862; Quartermaster Sayres G. Payton, October 2, 1861, mustered out; Quartermaster William Holden, October 23, 1861, resigned March 13, 1862; Commissary George S. South, January 2, 1863, mustered out at expiration of term; Surgeon Thomas S. Neal, October 25, 1861, resigned

February 9, 1864; Surgeon Matthew McEwen, January 17, 1863; Assistant Surgeon Lucien L. Comstock, November 6, 1861, promoted to surgeon of Eighth West Virginia Infantry; Assistant Surgeon Ozias Nellis, March 6, 1863, mustered out at expiration of term; Assistant Surgeon Edward L. Gillian, May 18, 1863; Chaplain Charles M. Bethausser, October 2, 1861, resigned October 12, 1862.

OFFICERS OF COMPANY F.

Captain Arthur D. Eells, November 22, 1861, resigned May 6, 1862; Captain Oliver H. P. Scott, June 26, 1862, resigned December 23, 1862; Captain George Millard, April 1, 1863, mustered out at expiration of term; Captain Henry F. Swentzel, November 26, 1864, promoted from Seventy-ninth Pennsylvania Infantry to Company E, and from Company E to Company F; Captain George W. Gilmore; Captain Ed. A. Rosser, promoted from Company B; Captain E. S. Fisher; Captain Oliver C. Ong; First Lieutenant Oliver H. P. Scott, November 22, 1861, promoted to captain; First Lieutenant William M. Fortescue, June 26, 1862, promoted to captain of Company I; First Lieutenant George Millard, November 5, 1862, promoted to captain; First Lieutenant Lloyd B. Stephens, April 1, 1862, resigned July 13, 1864; First Lieutenant Charles C. Clise, November 26, 1864; Second Lieutenant William M. Fortescue, November 22, 1861, promoted to first lieutenant; Second Lieutenant George Millard, June 26, 1862, promoted to first lieutenant; Second Lieutenant Lloyd B. Stephens, November 5, 1862, promoted to first lieutenant; Second Lieutenant Oliver C. Ong, April 1, 1863, mustered out; Second Lieutenant Elisha T. Fisher, November 26, 1864.

The Second Virginia Cavalry was recruited entirely from the border counties of Ohio. Commencing at Monroe all the counties were represented by one or more companies, ending with Lawrence County. Company F was the Washington County organization. Recruiting for it began in August, 1861, under the management of Capt. Arthur D. Eells, and by September the company was in camp at Parkersburg, West Virginia, where the regiment was mustered into service November 8th. The fall and early winter of 1861 were spent in drill on foot and sword exercise at Parkersburg, West Virginia. In January the regiment was moved to Guyandotte, West Virginia, where they received their horses and completed their drill mounted. The first engagement of the regiment was with Gen. Humphrey Marshall January 6, 1862, on Point Creek, Kentucky. The Union forces were under command of General (afterward President) Garfield. The first loss of Washington County in battle in the war was Albert W. Leonard, shot in the forehead while in a charge on Jennie's Creek, January 7, 1862. His body lies in Mound Cemetery at Marietta. On the 28th of April, Company F left Guyandotte with the half of the regiment under Col. William M. Bolles, and marched up the Big Kanawha and over the Sewell Mountains and joined the forces of Colonel Elliott of the Forty-seventh Ohio Infantry at Meadow Bluff, Virginia. The summer of 1862 was spent in raiding and scouting the counties of Raleigh, Wyoming, Fayette, Greenbrier, Union and Nicholas. These trips brought on many skirmishes and some battles, that of Lewisburg, May 23rd, being quite severe. Company F was with Colonel Paxton, who left Camp Piatt November 24, 1862, and surprised the Rebel general, Jenkins, at Sinking Creek, Virginia, capturing 117 prisoners, 110 horses, and 250 stand of arms. This was one of the most severe marches made during the war, both as regards cold and hard riding. The troops were in the saddle for seventy consecutive hours, on the latter part of their trip; and on their arrival at Summerville, West Virginia, numbers had to be lifted out of their saddle, they were so badly frozen. The winter of 1862-63 was spent at Camp Piatt on the Big Kanawha. With the spring of 1863 scouting began early. July 18th the company was in the severe fight at Wytheville, where both colonels were lost. Colonel Toland, of the Thirty-fourth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, in command of the expedition, was shot dead, and Col. W. H. Powell, of the Second Virginia Cavalry, wounded so badly as to be left and taken prisoner. In this battle 125 prisoners were taken and 75 Rebels were killed; Union loss, 78 killed, wounded and missing, the houses in Wytheville having been used as places of concealment from which to pick off the Union soldiers, even the women of the town taking part in the fight. The town was totally destroyed.

The regiment was also in engagements at Lewisburg, May 3rd, November 7th, and December 12, 1863.

The winter of 1863-64 was spent at Charleston, West Virginia, and it was at this place that the regiment was brought up to its high standard of drill. The regiment started March 16, 1864, on a scout through Hurricane Bridge, Guyandotte, Trout's Hill and Wayne Court House. The weather was very cold on this trip.

May 1st the regiment was attached to General Averill's division, and with him was in the raid to Wytheville on the Virginia & Tennessee Railroad. The route lay through Brownstown, Logan Court House, Wyoming, Tug Fork of Sandy and Jeffersonville. The Rebels were met at Cove Gap, a few miles this side of Wytheville, under Gen. John Morgan, and a very severe battle was fought. General Averill complimented the regiment in general orders, saying: "The general commanding desires to express his high appreciation of the steady and skillful evolutions of the Second Virginia Cavalry under Colonel Powell upon the field of battle. It was a dress parade that continued without disorder under a heavy fire for over four hours." Company F was with the regiment and participated in all of the engagements on the Hunter road to Lynchburg, Virginia; was also with it in the Shenandoah Valley, being in the fight at Bunker Hill, Stevenson's depot, Winchester, Newton, Kearnsstown, Fisher Hill, Mount Jackson, Cross Keys, Port Republic, Brown's Gap, Luray, Harrisonville, Weirs Cave, Opequan, Martinsburg, Williamsport, Hagerstown, Chambersburg, Pennsylvania; St. Thomas, Pennsylvania; Moorfield, Virginia, and many other places. The winter of 1864-65 was spent in the Shenandoah Valley, but when in 1865 General Sheridan went up the valley to Waynesborough and on over to the White House, Virginia, Company F was along doing fine service. This company held the key to the hill at Dinwiddie Court House, Virginia; was in the charge at Five Forks, Ford's Station, Deep Creek, Namozin Church, Jettersville, and in the first charge at Sailor's Creek; also in the desperate engagement at Appomattox Court House, and on the morning of the 9th of April took part in the final charge on the flank of Lee's army, which would have resulted in the surrender of General Lee to General Custer but for the arrival of General Grant on the ground. After the surrender, the company marched to Petersburg, where it remained with the regiment until the 23rd of April, when it moved to intercept Johnson's army in North Carolina, but was ordered back at Halifax Court House. From there the company marched to Richmond, Virginia, thence to Washington City. In the grand review, Company F led the cavalry column in review. On the 17th of June the regiment was ordered to Texas via Louisville, Kentucky, but was stopped at Wheeling and mustered out, June 20, 1865.

Company F lost the first and last man killed in battle from Washington County.

The neighborhoods that furnished the most men to this company were: first, Coal Run; second, Plymouth; third, Moss Run; fourth, Marietta.

Company F, Eighteenth Ohio Volunteer Infantry.

ORIGINAL OFFICERS.

(Three years' service).

Colonel Timothy R. Stanley, mustered August 6, 1861, resigned January 9, 1864. Colonel Charles H. Grosvenor, April 8, 1865, provost marshal; Lieutenant Colonel Josiah Given August 17, 1861, appointed Colonel Seventy-fourth Regiment; Lieutenant Colonel Charles H. Grosvenor, March 16, 1863, promoted to colonel; Lieutenant Colonel John M. Benedict, April 8, 1865, mustered out with regiment; Major Charles H. Grosvenor, July 30, 1861, promoted to lieutenant colonel; Major J. M. Welch, March 16, 1863, mustered out November 9, 1864; Major John M. Benedict, February 1, 1865, promoted to lieutenant colonel; Major Robert B. Chappell, April 8, 1865, mustered out with regiment; Surgeon William P. Johnson, September 24, 1861, mustered out November 9, 1864; Surgeon Horace P. Kay, February 20, 1865, mustered out with regiment; Assistant Surgeon William W. Mills, September 24, 1861, resigned February 28, 1864; Assistant Surgeon Charles H. French, January 1, 1863, mustered out November 9, 1864; Assistant Surgeon Arthur C. Newell, May 2, 1865, mustered out October 9, 1865; Assistant Surgeon S. A. Baxter, May 29, 1865, mustered out October 9, 1865; Chaplain John Dillon, September 16, 1861, mustered out November 9, 1864.

OFFICERS OF COMPANY F.

Captain John J. Jumper, mustered September 8, 1861, resigned October 4, 1863; First Lieutenant Robert R. Danford, September 8, 1861, resigned January 17, 1862; First Lieutenant William B. Williams, February 3, 1862, resigned February 8, 1863; First Lieutenant Charles M. Grubb, April 14, 1863, mustered out November 9, 1864; First Lieutenant David J. Searight, July 12, 1864, mustered out November 9, 1864; First Lieutenant John G. G. Carter, March 20, 1865, transferred to adjutant Eighteenth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, September 1, 1865; Second Lieutenant William B. Williams, September 8, 1861, promoted to first lieutenant; Second Lieutenant Charles M. Grubb, March 15, 1862, promoted to first lieutenant; Second Lieutenant David J. Searight, April 14, 1863, promoted to first lieutenant; Second Lieutenant John G. G. Carter, December 21, 1864, promoted to first lieutenant; Second Lieutenant James W. Slater, May 31, 1865, mustered out with regiment.

This company was made up of men from Beverly and Newport, Washington County, and Windsor and Ringgold, Morgan County, and was organized early in September, 1861, at Camp Putnam, Marietta, Ohio. John J. Jumper was elected captain.

About the middle of the month, Company F joined the regiment at Camp Wood, Athens, Ohio, and the regimental organization was completed at Camp Dennison, November 4, 1861.

From Camp Dennison the regiment went to Louisville, Kentucky, arriving November 7th and remaining there about a month, and marching from there to Bacon Creek, where they remained about two months and drilled. Arrived at Green River February 7, 1862, and on the next day started for Bowling Green, which place was occupied on the tenth. Remained there until the 23rd. After the fall of Fort Donelson, they proceeded to Nashville, Tennessee, a distance of 62 miles, in three days. At Nashville the regiment encamped until March 18th, suffering many privations and hardships, when they started for Huntsville, Alabama, arriving April 11th. Thence they went to Tusculum, Alabama, thence to Athens, Alabama, and deployed along the railroad.

May 1st they were attacked by Scott's Rebel cavalry and driven back towards Huntsville, Company F going as far as Madison station, where, falling in with a part of the Thirty-third Ohio, they halted and remained.

On May 3rd Company F and a detail from the Thirty-third Ohio and Twenty-second Kentucky acted as guard to a train that was gathering up cotton that had been used in fortifying at places between Huntsville and Athens, returning to the station at night, where they remained until the 9th, when they moved to Athens.

On the 21st Company F, with four other companies, guarded a supply train to Huntsville, returning the next day, and remaining at Athens until the 30th, when they started for Fayetteville, arriving next day, and where they remained until June 23rd, when they marched to Huntsville. All these movements were made under the command of Gen. O. M. Mitchell, who had been sent southward by Gen. Don Carlos Buell, commanding the army of the Ohio, to annoy the enemy and keep him busy while other and more important movements were being consummated.

The regiment at this time was brigaded with the Nineteenth and Twenty-fourth Illinois and the Thirty-seventh Indiana, under the command of Colonel Turchin. At one place during these movements, Tusculumbia, Colonel Turchin, with but a small force, including the Eighteenth Regiment, held the town, which was surrounded by a greatly superior force of Rebels. In order to keep up the appearance of a large force, however, he had the names of officers from a dozen regiments entered upon the hotel register of the town, whose regiments were supposed to be in camp, but in reality he had not more than 600 men, all told. No citizens were allowed to leave the town. Soon General Buell ordered all the territory west of Decatur evacuated, and the regiment went to Athens, Alabama.

At Battle Creek they found the enemy in force across the stream, and shelled them, but received no response. July 1st, Company F, with C and B, was on detached duty, but soon rejoined the regiment. July 13th the regiment started for Tullahoma, and camped at the foot of the mountain near that place, in the evening. On the 14th they passed up and over the mountain. Just at sunset they reached the summit, and began the descent by a very difficult route, reaching the valley about 8 P. M., without serious accident.

July 15th they marched from Decherd for Caledonia, where the regiment remained until July 24th, when they started for Tullahoma, arriving there the day following, when Company F was thrown out as a picket guard around the town. August 8th they left Tullahoma for Duck River, and from there went to Manchester. September 3rd the regiment arrived at Murfreesborough, and September 8th arrived at Nashville, and remained there until December 10th, when the regiment went down the Franklin pike about four miles, and encamped until the 26th, when a general advance was ordered, which was continued until December 30th, when they went into the great battle of Stone River which continued for three days with terrible carnage, in which the gallant Eighteenth did noble service.

In June, 1863, the regiment was with the force that crossed Lookout Mountain into McLamore Cove, and confronted Bragg at Dug Gap, September 11th, and the Eighteenth, with the balance of the brigade, held the enemy in check.

At Chickamauga the regiment did not participate in the first day's battle, but on Sunday, September 20th, was in the thickest of the engagement, making several brilliant charges.

From this time until the expiration of their term of service the regiment was on engineering duty, and on October 20, 1864, was ordered to Camp Chase, to be mustered out, and on November 9th it was mustered out. Nearly 100 men re-enlisted as veterans, and with those whose time had not expired numbered 225 men.

Upon re-enlisting, the First, Second, Eighteenth, Twenty-fourth and Thirty-fifth Ohio regiments were consolidated under the name of the Eighteenth Ohio, commanded by Lieut. Col. C. H. Grosvenor. The regiment took part in the battle of Nashville, December 6, 1864, losing four officers out of seven, and 75 men in killed and wounded, out of less than 200.

The regiment was engaged from this time to the end of the war in garrison duty. In July, 1865, the regiment was stationed at Augusta, Georgia, and Colonel (now general) Grosvenor was assigned to duty as provost marshal general of the department, where they remained until October 9th, when they were ordered to Columbus, Ohio, to be mustered out, and were there honorably discharged October 22, 1865.

Companies A, F, and G, Thirty-sixth Ohio Volunteers.

REGIMENTAL OFFICERS.

Colonel George Crook, mustered September 12, 1861, appointed brigadier general September 7, 1862; Colonel Melvin Clarke, September 7, 1862, killed at Antietam September 17, 1862; Colonel Ebenezer B. Andrews, September 17, 1862, resigned April 9, 1863; Colonel William G. Jones, April 13, 1863, killed September 19, 1863, at Chickamauga; Colonel Hiram F. Devol, September 19, 1863, appointed brevet brigadier general July 20, 1865; Lieutenant Colonel Melvin Clarke, July 30, 1861, promoted to colonel September 16, 1862; Lieutenant Colonel E. B. Andrews, September 7, 1862, promoted to colonel September 17, 1862; Lieutenant Colonel Hiram F. Devol, September 17, 1862, promoted to colonel; Lieutenant Colonel William H. G. Adney, May 9, 1864, mustered out; Lieutenant Colonel William S. Wilson, March 8, 1865, mustered out with regiment; Major E. B. Andrews, July 28, 1861, promoted to lieutenant colonel September 16, 1862; Major Hiram F. Devol, September 7, 1862, promoted to lieutenant colonel; Major William H. G. Adney, September 17, 1862, promoted to lieutenant colonel; Major Jewett Palmer, Jr., May 9, 1864, resigned November 29, 1864; Major William S. Wilson, December 30, 1864, mustered out; Major Benjamin J. Ricker, Jr., February 3, 1865, transferred from Thirty-fourth Ohio volunteer infantry; Surgeon Robert N. Barr, August 22, 1861, resigned February 26, 1862; Surgeon J. H. Whitford, March 8, 1862, mustered out with regiment; Assistant Surgeon J. H. Whitford, August 23, 1861, promoted to surgeon; Assistant Surgeon Colin Mackenzie, March 8, 1862, resigned May 19, 1863; Assistant Surgeon John Dickerson, July 4, 1862, promoted to surgeon of new regiment; Assistant Surgeon James P. Welch, July 24, 1862, resigned September 18, 1864; Assistant Surgeon B. F. Holcomb, March 14, 1865, mustered out with regiment; Assistant Surgeon A. M. Beers, June 26, 1865, did not accept; Chaplain George V. Fry, August, 1861, resigned January 31, 1862; Chaplain J. G. Blair, July 25, 1864, mustered out; Chaplain G. W. Collier, August 30, 1861, mustered out; Chaplain William S. Taylor, February 1, 1862, resigned April 30, 1862; Quartermaster First Lieutenant Levi Barber, August 31, 1861, resigned November 29, 1862; Quartermaster Captain Thomas M. Turner, December 30, 1864, declined promotion, promoted to captain December 1, 1862, from first lieutenant mustered out with regiment as regimental quartermaster; Quartermaster First Lieutenant John M. Woodbridge, July 31, 1861, resigned; Chief Musician Ebenezer Cory, August, 1861, mustered out at expiration of three years; Chief Musician John Tenney, September, 1864, mustered out with regiment.

COMPANY OFFICERS.

Captain H. F. Devol, mustered August 1, 1861, promoted to major September 7, 1862; Captain Thomas W. Moore, August 24, 1861, resigned March 5, 1862; Captain Jewett Palmer, Jr., August 24, 1861, promoted to major; Captain Reuben L. Nye, March 3, 1862, mustered out with regiment; Captain Joseph Kelly, March 5, 1862, mustered out with regiment; Captain James Stanley, June 6, 1862, honorably discharged November 25, 1864; Captain Augustus T. Ward, December 30, 1864, mustered out with regiment; Captain James Gage Barker, September 7, 1862, mustered out November 4, 1864; Captain James C. Selby, October 3, 1862, died of wounds September 14, 1864; Captain Wallace S. Stanley, December 30, 1864, mustered out with regiment; Captain James Haddow, December 30, 1864, mustered out with regiment; Captain Miles A. Stacy, December 30, 1864, resigned as first lieutenant December 1, 1864; Captain Jesse Morrow, December 30, 1864, mustered out with regiment; First Lieutenant James Gage Barker, August 13, 1861, promoted to captain; First Lieutenant Joseph Kelly, August 24, 1861, promoted to captain; First Lieutenant James Stanley, August 24, 1861, promoted to captain; First Lieutenant James C. Selby, March 5, 1862, promoted to captain; First Lieutenant A. F. Tiffany, September 17, 1862, resigned November 18, 1863; First Lieutenant O. J. Wood, November 20, 1862, resigned August 27, 1863; First Lieutenant Jesse Morrow, February 22, 1863, promoted to captain; First Lieutenant Miles A. Stacy, January 17, 1863, promoted to captain; First Lieutenant Augustus T. Ward, April 21, 1864, promoted to captain; First Lieutenant James Haddow, May 9, 1864, promoted to captain; First Lieutenant Samuel S. Grosvenor, December 30, 1864, honorably discharged as second lieutenant; First Lieutenant George W. Putnam, December 30, 1864, honorably discharged as second lieutenant; First Lieutenant S. W. Harvey, December 30, 1864, mustered out with regiment; First Lieutenant John A. Palmer, September 1, 1862, resigned June 18, 1863; Second Lieutenant James C. Selby, August 13, 1861, promoted to first lieutenant; Second Lieutenant A. F. Tiffany, August 24, 1861, promoted to first lieutenant; Second Lieutenant Ernst Lindner, August 24, 1861, resigned June 28, 1862; Second Lieutenant Reuben L. Nye, July 30, 1861, promoted to captain March 3, 1862; Second Lieutenant John A. Palmer, March 5, 1862, promoted to first lieutenant; Second Lieutenant O. J. Wood, February 5, 1862, promoted to first lieutenant; Second Lieutenant Miles A. Stacy, June 28, 1862, promoted to first lieutenant.

ant; Second Lieutenant Wallace S. Stanley, June 28, 1862, promoted to first lieutenant; Second Lieutenant Augustus T. Ward, September 17, 1862, promoted to first lieutenant; Second Lieutenant Jesse Morrow, July 28, 1862, promoted to first lieutenant; Second Lieutenant James Haddow, September 17, 1862, promoted to first lieutenant; Second Lieutenant Samuel L. Grosvenor, October 24, 1863, promoted to first lieutenant; Second Lieutenant George W. Putnam, October 24, 1862, promoted to first lieutenant; Second Lieutenant Ransom C. Wyatt, March 8, 1865, mustered out at expiration of service; Second Lieutenant Benjamin Bragg, March 8, 1865; mustered out with regiment; Second Lieutenant Samuel W. Harvey, April 21, 1864, promoted to first lieutenant.

Under the call of President Lincoln, July 22, 1861, for 500,000 men, Lieutenant Colonel Melvin Clarke was authorized to organize a regiment at Camp Putnam, Marietta, Ohio. He at once set about it, and hearing that a company was being formed at Lowell for the Thirtieth Ohio—Colonel Groesbeck—he met that company on its organization, August 1st, and made known his purpose, asking that the company report at Camp Putnam to form a nucleus for his regiment. He solicited the forming of companies in this and other counties, and the following reported and were mustered in: August 13th, Company A; August 14th, Company B; August 14th, Company C; August 22nd, Company D; August 22nd, Company E; August 24th, Company F; August 24th, Company G; August 24th, Company H; August 24th, Company I; August 31st, Company K.

Nearly the maximum number being mustered in, the regiment was armed with the old United States muskets, and uniformed. Not having a colonel, the line officers had a well-grounded notion that only a regular army of equal to the ambition of its members. This wish being favorably regarded by the field officers and the governor, efforts were made to secure one through the Secretary of War.

In this condition the regiment was ordered, August 30, 1861, to the field, taking transports at Marietta for Parkersburg. Six companies, A, B, F, G, H and I, under command of Maj. E. B. Andrews, were there met by Maj. A. J. Slemmer—at that time of General Rosecrans' staff—under the charge of Major Slemmer were transported by cars to Walker station—a few miles out. From that point marched over the mountains. Company A had one man killed that day by the accidental discharge of a musket—Private Steward, from Pinchville.

Arrived at Elizabeth after dark, foot-sore and weary. The object of this forced march was to clear the country of bands of guerrillas.

The next morning the advance was fired on by a squad of these fellows from a hill fronting the turn of the road. One of the men was wounded in the shoulder. A company was thrown forward as skirmishers and soon dislodged them. Camped at Reedy that night. The next day marched for Spencer, the county seat of Roane County. The place was surrounded by guerrillas and three of its loyal citizens had been killed by them. On the approach of the regiment they fled. The people were found in a truly pitiable condition—nothing but cornmeal to subsist on. Rations having given out the men were in much the same plight for two days. Scouts brought in a little beef, but salt there was none. This kind of diet was new, and on the whole it seemed as if the regiment was being roughly initiated. The supply train that three days later followed was surrounded at Reedy. A night march of two companies relieved and brought it forward. Guerrillas seemed to be upon all the hills and frequently their signals could be heard. Like the foxes, they knew the woods and were never seen at their houses during the day, so it seemed impossible to catch them. This was a new kind of warfare for the regular major, and when the regiment moved away—being relieved by another command—he ordered flanking parties as skirmishers in advance of the column.

The day before leaving Spencer it was thought best to unload the muskets. A target at fifty yards was placed and the men in turn tried their skill. The small men at every discharge would be either upset or faced about. The recoil of those old muskets with their heavy charge of powder, ball and three buckshot was about as fatal at the rear as in front. The target was not hit. Loud was the cursing of the men. They saw their guns were useless, which accounted for their never bringing down a single bushwhacker, despite their many chances. The march lay through Arnoldsburg, Bulltown, Sutton to Summerville, Nicholas County. Lieutenant-Colonel Clarke, with the other four companies, C, D, E and K, soon joined the regiment, and in a few days Col. George Crook, who had been appointed to command it, arrived to the great joy of the men.

At this period was laid the solid foundation which gave to the regiment confidence in the future, and secured for it a place second to none in the service. Colonel Crook instituted a perfect system of drill and a school in which officers were drilled, and recitations regularly held; and the officers drilled the men. A large drill house was erected that all could use at the same time. Leather stocks—called by the men “dog collars”—were worn under the chin to set the men up. The old muskets were exchanged for new Enfield rifles. The entire regiment was quartered in the houses of people who left at the approach of the Union Army. This crowding in houses, change of diet—this seasoning process—caused sickness, typhoid fever, pneumonia and measles. This was a sad era. Fifty deaths was the fearful record. Expeditions were frequently sent out to hunt guerrillas and to forage mainly for cattle—all quite successful. There was some lively skirmishing with the bushwhackers; but two men were seriously wounded. Early in the winter one company (A) was sent to Cross Lanes, eight miles distant, to hold that post and guard a ford over the Gauley River.

There was but little intercourse with the people; only a few were loyal to the flag; but we respected both person and property where they showed no open acts of disloyalty. Thus the winter passed. Our numbers were kept full by recruits. May 12, 1862, the regiment—1,000 strong—with cheerful hearts, took up its line of march in the direction of real business. Company B alone remained in charge of the train to come by another route. Forded Gauley River and marched much of the way by bridle paths. The march was a forced one, and the first two days were intensely hot, so that many gave out. The way led via Cold Knob and Frankfort, the object being to get in the rear of a Confederate force under General Heath, at Lewisburg. At the same time a force under Colonel Gilbert approached from Gauley Bridge. General Heath was too wary and eluded the trap. The Union forces united at Lewisburg, and consisted of the Thirty-sixth and Forty-fourth regiments and a battalion of the Second Virginia Cavalry, all under command of Colonel Crook—about 1,200 strong. From Lewisburg, Colonel Crook, with this small force, marched through the mountains to White Sulphur Springs and Covington, to Jackson River depot, and destroyed the bridge at that point. The movement was so bold and rapid, and the enemy so surprised, they dare not leave their mountain fastnesses to essay an attack.

A few days after the return of the expedition to Lewisburg, May 23rd, early in the morning, General Heath, with from 2,500 to 3,000 men, drove in the pickets and took a strong position on a hill on the opposite side of the town from where the Union forces were encamped, and commenced shelling the camp. The Thirty-sixth, under Colonel Clarke, and the Forty-fourth, under Colonel Gilbert, were ordered to charge the enemy in their position. Disappearing for a few moments in the streets of the town, the National forces suddenly emerged upon the rising ground in front of the Rebels—the Thirty-sixth on the left and the Forty-fourth on the right of the line of battle. The Rebel infantry was posted behind a rail fence, and between the lines was an open, clear field. Over this ground the Thirty-sixth charged with a yell, receiving a volley from the enemy.

Reserving fire until at close range, and giving the Rebels scarcely time to reload, the men were upon them, and they broke in complete rout. They escaped down the mountain, and firing the bridge over the Greenbrier River rendered further pursuit impossible. In this the maiden battle of the Thirty-sixth Regiment, it was pitted against the Twenty-second Virginia, which was recruited in the rich country of Greenbrier County and the Kanawha Valley, and was armed with Mississippi rifles. The result of this victory was a loss to the Thirty-sixth of seven killed, 44 wounded, and five captured on picket. The Forty-fourth lost much less. Rebel loss, 60 killed and left on the field, 175 prisoners, four pieces of artillery and 300 stand of small arms. They carried off many of their slightly wounded.

This being a fair stand-up fight, on ground of the Rebels' own choosing, the plan of attack also their own, it increased the men's confidence in the future. It being a Rebel town, the wounded who were straggling back were ill-treated; one was shot dead by a citizen. The Union dead were buried in a beautiful grove, and their graves surrounded by a picket fence by their comrades.

This battle occurring near the homes of many of the Confederate soldiers, their friends came in to care for both dead and wounded. The scenes there witnessed were very affecting. Mothers with their dead or wounded sons, sisters with their brothers, wives with husbands. It was truly a sad picture of the realities of war. Added to this was the mortification of defeat in their own country. The Union wounded were sent to Charleston in ambulances. Some were met there by relatives and taken home. Dyar B. McClure, of Warren, Washington County, badly wounded, died soon after reaching home.

After clearing up the wreck of battle and paroling the Rebel wounded, May 29th, the regiment took up the line of march to Meadow Bluffs to be more accessible to supplies. They were joined here by the Forty-seventh Ohio, and on June 22d the entire force, under command of Colonel Crook, started to return General Heath's early call on them at Lewisburg, by a visit to his camps at Union, Monroe County. Marched via Salt Sulphur Springs, forded the Greenbrier River the second day, and reached Union in the afternoon. The general, not caring for further acquaintance, had left for the mountains. The command then leisurely retraced its steps, and as it was a very fine country foraged its way back by another route. At Meadow Bluffs, drilling occupied most of the time until August 14th, when the regiment started for Camp Piatt, on the Kanawha River. Here, with most of the force under General Cox, they embarked on transports for Parkersburg, en route to Washington and the army of the Potomac.

At Parkersburg recruits were added to the regiment, increasing its numbers to 1,020. A happy day was spent here, the regiment mingling with their friends, who came to meet them, and to many it was the last meeting on earth. Left Parkersburg on stock and freight cars, and went through without change. Through Washington, over the long bridge, through Alexandria, arriving at Warrenton junction August 25th, in advance of the rest of the Kanawha division, and were assigned by General Pope to duty at his headquarters. General "Stonewall" Jackson having broken in upon General Pope's rear prevented any more of the division coming forward.

August 27th, in charge of headquarters, train fell back with the rest of the army, and encamped that night near the battle ground of Bristow Station. Marched through Manassas to Centreville, overlooking the second Bull Run battle. Company F was sent back to Bristow on special duty, joining the regiment next day.

In the succeeding battle of Bull Run, the Thirty-sixth was held in reserve by General Pope, and on the evening of that defeat, performed signal service in arresting stragglers and fugitives from the battle, thus preventing thousands from hurrying back to Washington and creating a panic of dismay similar to that after the first battle of Bull Run.

September 2nd the regiment fell back to Arlington heights, remaining there a few days. September 7th, marched through Washington; were reviewed by Secretary Chase and others from the balcony of the treasury department. The men were proud of their regiment, as compared with any they had seen in the Eastern Army, not merely because of their numbers (for they were often hailed with "What brigade is that?") but in their marching and drill they knew they were second to none. Colonel Strother, better known as "Porte Crayon," said of the regiment, after witnessing one of its dress parades, that it executed the most perfect manual of arms he had ever seen in his army experience.

September 7th, after being joined by the rest of the Kanawha division, left Washington, the object being to repel Lee's invasion of Maryland. The Kanawha division had the advance of the entire Federal force, now commanded again by General McClellan; met the advance of Lee's army (General Stewart's cavalry) on the 2nd, at Frederick, Maryland. They occupied the town. The Thirty-sixth marched to the attack in line of battle on the left of the pike, the Twenty-eighth Ohio on the right. Colonel Moore, of the Twenty-eighth, commanding brigade, kept the pike leading directly into the town with a section of artillery. The moment he reached the town a rush by the enemy's cavalry captured the brave colonel and a few others; then fell back without fighting. The command of the brigade devolved on Colonel Crook, and that of the regiment on Lieutenant-Colonel Clarke. The regiment never afterward had its old colonel as its commander. Reached Middletown the 13th; here opened the battle of South Mountain.

Early on the morning of the 14th, Gen. J. D. Cox, commanding the division, was ordered to storm the mountain. The Thirty-sixth had position in the center and its march lay through the only open ground, without cover of any kind. The enemy, first with shell, and, as the line advanced, with canister and grape, poured into them a destructive fire. The musketry followed. The line never wavered, although subjected to an enfilading fire from artillery, and musketry in front, posted behind a stone wall on the crest of the mountain. The regiment held its fire, the Rebels cursing and yelling "You can't come over here." With loaded guns and fixed bayonets they reached the wall, then over it rattled the brave lads with a yell.

Then followed a hand-to-hand fight with those who would not surrender or run away. Among the former was a Confederate surgeon, who kept firing with his revolver until pierced with a bayonet. The regiment pursued the enemy into the woods beyond, killing and capturing a number, until ordered back in line with the right of our forces, who had not been quite so fortunate. The rest of the day was spent in repelling the efforts of the enemy to retake that line.

The Thirty-sixth lost a number in killed and wounded. Corporal Courtland Shepherd, from Washington County, one of the colored guard, was killed. That night the regiment bivouacked among the Rebel dead on their chosen ground. A detail, rudely buried the Union dead at the rear near where they fell. In this, the second battle of the regiment, not a man was known to have failed in his duty. That night the enemy left the mountain, falling back and across Antietam Creek. Early in the morning the Union Army was in pursuit. That day (the 15th) and the 16th little else was done, but as the army came on to take up position, driving in the Rebel skirmishers, the Rebels from the heights about Sharpsburg commenced throwing with their cannon pieces of iron rails and sledge hammers as far as our line. General Burnside, the corps commander, gave his command to understand that it was to have an easy victory, as the enemy was out of ammunition. Alas, how fatal the delusion! About 10 A. M. on the 17th the Kanawha division was ordered to assault the stone bridge and carry it at all hazard. It could not be done till Colonel Crook by a skillful manoeuvre with a battery cleared the heights of the enemy at the opposite end. When a crossing was effected the division was rapidly deployed in line of battle and a charge at once ordered. The ground being clear, excepting fences, and the regiment about the center of the line, it drew a terrible fire from the enemy's artillery. In this charge Colonel Clarke fell, shot through the body by a large shell. The regiment drove the Rebel infantry from their first line and was then halted. This part of the field being vital to the enemy they massed a heavy force on the left of the Union line and doubled it back. Colonel Crook drew his brigade with the rest of the division a short distance back under cover of rolling ground. In this movement the regiment did not forget its beloved commander, Colonel Clarke, but carried his remains with them in a blanket. It is but just to say here that Colonel Clarke, by unexampled bearing, even temper and gentlemanly deportment, had steadily won for himself the confidence and a warm place in the hearts of the entire regiment. His remains were forwarded to his home at Marietta, where they now rest in the beautiful cemetery, and his grave is marked by a monument erected by his fellow officers.

The command of the regiment now devolved upon Major Andrews. That night the groans and cries of the helpless wounded of both armies between the two lines could be heard, but no help could safely reach them. The 18th passed with an occasional shot, but a vigilant watch was kept over the enemy. The following night Lee with his entire army escaped, fording the Potomac. After the battle the regiment was moved down near the mouth of Antietam Creek, where it remained until October 6th, when the Kanawha division was ordered back to West Virginia. The march lay via Hagerstown to Hancock, then over the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad to Clarksburg. The regiment and brigade left this town the last of October for Charleston. The march lay through Summerville, the old familiar quarters of the regiment. Reached Charleston about the middle of November. After the active work of the summer and fall it was supposed that here on the lower bank of the Elk River the regiment would winter. Accordingly all actively set about making quarters out of such material as was at hand. Some were completed and all nearly so when, January 25th, transports came up the Kanawha River to convey General Crook with his command to the Army of the Cumberland at Nashville, Tennessee. The men regretted to leave their newly constructed quarters, but such are the uncertainties of army life. Crowded on steamers the trip was exceedingly uncomfortable. Remained near Nashville till February 22nd, when the Thirty-sixth, Eleventh, Eighty-ninth and Ninety-second Ohio, and Eighteenth Kentucky regiments, and Twenty-first Indiana Battery, under command of General Crook, re-embarked for Carthage, Tennessee. At this place a good deal of important scouting occupied the time till early in June, when General Crook with his command marched to Murfreesborough. In the meantime Colonel Andrews resigned and William G. Jones was commissioned colonel of the regiment. General Crook's brigade was assigned to Major-General Reynolds's division, Fourteenth Army Corps, commanded by Maj. Gen. George H. Thomas. June 24th, General Crook with his (Third) brigade, in advance of the corps, took up the line of march on the Manchester pike southward. Late in the day the Thirty-sixth had a few men wounded at Hoover's Gap. Next day moved to the left, to flank the enemy's position at Tullahoma. Found him gone in the direction of Bridgeport, the railroad crossing over the Tennessee River.

The pursuit was necessarily and aggravatingly slow, owing to the wretched condition of the roads, it having rained incessantly since the command left Murfreesborough. At Big Springs, a day's march further on, General Crook was relieved of the command of the brigade and given a division of cavalry, Gen. J. B. Turchin taking his place.

In July moved up to University Place, a beautiful place on a mountain, remained there some two weeks, with little else to do but fight jiggers (a little insect thick on the bushes) and look out for rattlesnakes. In August moved down the southeastern slope into Sweden's Cove; stopped a few days at Blue Springs, on Battle Creek; marched on through the Sequatchie Valley to Jasper, Tennessee. This land abounded in very delicious peaches, of which many a heaping hatful was appropriated by the soldiers. September 2nd, crossed the river at Shell Mound in Flats. From this point the march lay over Sand Mountain into Lookout Valley; moved on in the direction of Trenton, Georgia. Further up the regiment and command performed the task of pulling both artillery and baggage train to the top of Lookout Mountain, crossing immediately down the other side into McLemore's Cove. Here, on the 17th, the enemy made some demonstrations from Catlett's Gap. Some manœuvring was done to mystify the enemy, and on the night of the 18th, after issuing a few rations, the entire command moved.

General Crittenden was being pressed in the direction of Rossville, northeast. This compelled a wearisome all-night march. At daylight, on the 19th, the regiment was at Crawfish Springs, and a little further on went into its place in line of battle. Soon the work of death commenced—the terrific battle of Chickamauga. Fierce cannonading for miles up and down the valley—a short lull—then the murderous work of the infantry began. The battlefield being largely in the woods seemed to impart a sentiment of awe to the work that was going on. The Thirty-sixth in position seemed a little to the left center. Suddenly on the right the firing grew nearer and nearer. Many wounded were passing to the rear, the front holding its ground. General Reynolds, division commander, ordered the brigade to change front to the right. Barely was this manœuvre accomplished when through the ranks rushed some National troops closely pursued by the enemy. The solid front presented checked them, and their broken masses took cover behind trees and logs, giving them great advantage. Not a man of the regiment was known to have turned back unless wounded. The slaughter was fearful, especially on the right of the regiment. The brave Capt. James Stanley's men, Company D, were falling right and left. Something must be done. General Turchin was not there. Colonel Jones was mortally wounded; Major Adney was wounded. At this critical moment Lieutenant-Colonel Devol ordered a charge. With an inspiring yell the men rushed forward and drove the enemy back and beyond their artillery. They had driven them several hundred yards when an aide was dispatched ordering the brigade back. Had the enemy closed that gap in the rear, the subsequent history of the Thirty-sixth and Eleventh Ohio and Eighteenth Kentucky Regiments would have had a different reading. There was but little fighting on that part of the line the rest of the day. Exhausted, the regiment lay on its arms, keeping a skirmish line in front. Early the next morning, the 20th, General Rosecrans caused word to be passed along the line that as it was the Sabbath fighting should not be provoked.

General Bragg, being reinforced by Longstreet's corps, was confident, and early opened the battle. The regiment was moved to the left and front. The enemy made repeated charges and as often were repulsed. Major General Thomas, in his official report of these charges, says: "The enemy attacked Johnson, Palmer, and Reynolds with fierceness which was continued at least two hours, making assault after assault with fresh troops, which was met by our troops with a most determined coolness and deliberation. Having exhausted his utmost energies to dislodge us, he apparently fell back entirely from our front, and we were not disturbed again till towards night." About four o'clock the enemy made a desperate effort and succeeded in forcing the lines back on the right and left of Reynolds' division, where, from the front and both flanks, the enemy poured their missiles of death. General Reynolds and other officers thought the entire division would have to surrender, and as evidence of their fears took off their shoulderstraps to conceal their rank. At this moment General Thomas, the "Rock of Chickamauga," ran the gauntlet and ordered a "change of front to the left of the enemy's flank, and get out, if possible." Like a statue he coolly sat on his horse, witnessed the execution of his order and then galloped back. The charge was a success. Many prisoners and a battery of artillery were captured. The latter could not be brought off.

The day closed with 70 dead officers and men of the Thirty-sixth Regiment lying in those woods. The night was spent in withdrawing to Rossville, next day (21st) held the gap through the ridge covering Chattanooga. The 22nd of September fell back into Chattanooga, and with the rest of the army vigorously set about fortifying. From this time to the first of November the army was in a state of siege on half rations. Early during the siege lost a dozen men on a reconnoissance. October 26th, Turchin's and Hayen's brigades were elected to take Brown's Ferry below Lookout Mountain and thus co-operate with General Hooker in relieving the beleaguered army. This was successfully accomplished by selecting experienced boatmen from the Thirty-sixth and Ninety-second Regiments. Quietly in the darkness of night they floated down in pontoons past the Rebel pickets, landing and storming the heights at the ferry. Hooker's arrival brought the first sound crackers and meat the regiment had had for a month. Parched corn had been the only good diet that could be had. The regiment returned to Chattanooga in a few days, Hooker holding the ferry and starting from it on his famous charge up Lookout Mountain.

November 25th, on the extreme left of the Fourteenth Corps and army, the Thirty-sixth and Ninety-second, side by side, with the battle cry of "Chickamauga," charged Missionary Ridge. The miles in length of the charging line of the blue, dotted here and there with the soldier's pride—his country's flag—was an inspiring sight, though the belching line of cannon and musketry from the enemy on the crest told fearfully on that column. The crest was reached, the breastworks taken—in many instances by a hand-to-hand fight. The regiment captured two pieces of artillery and many prisoners. Generals Grant and Thomas having followed closely, were cheered by the men as they passed by. The regiment lost in this charge 83 of its brave members. The following day pursued the enemy to Ringgold, Georgia, after which it returned to its tents in Chattanooga. Thus ended what commenced in the forests of Chickamauga and might be termed a continuation of the same battle.

As soon as possible the regiment made coffins and went out to Chickamauga (eight miles) to bring in its dead; only 37 could be recognized, however—they having been covered with a shovelful of earth where they fell. The rest had been gathered promiscuously with others and buried in rows, with only earth enough to partially cover them; near the widow Glen's house were long rows of the dead of both armies.

How the nation's destroyers gloated over their temporary success at Chickamauga, while like vultures they looked down from Missionary Ridge and Lookout Mountain, on its defenders! The men of the Thirty-sixth killed in these battles now rest in a lot selected by their comrades in the beautiful National Cemetery at Chattanooga.

In February, 1864, the regiment re-enlisted, and March 10th started for home on veteran furlough. At Cincinnati they separated for 30 days. At the expiration of that time were ordered to General Crook at Charleston, West Virginia—he having been sent there to take command of the Third Division, department of West Virginia. On reaching Charleston the regiment was assigned to the First brigade, commanded by Col. R. B. Hayes.

May 1st General Crook with his division started on a raid to the Virginia & Tennessee Railroad. Several attempts on it had been made, but had failed. The march lay via Falls of Kanawha, Raleigh and Princeton. Had a slight skirmish at Princeton, and a few miles further on found the enemy in strong position at Cloyd's farm. Their position was at once charged and a severe engagement ensued, which resulted in driving the enemy from their works, capturing two pieces of artillery and mortally wounding and capturing the notorious Rebel general, Jenkins. Being reinforced, they made a stand a mile to the rear of their first position, but were easily routed. They retreated through Dublin depot and across New River. At the depot a large amount of wagons and other quartermaster and commissary stores were captured. Destroyed all that were not available, and burned the railroad bridge. This severed the railroad connection of Richmond with the Tennessee Rebel forces.

Being so far from the base of his supplies, General Crook was obliged to return—over Salt Pond Mountain, through Union to Meadow Bluffs. Near Union, Lyman Perrin, from Rainbow, Washington County, was shot dead in the road by a bushwhacker.

On reaching Meadow Bluffs, orders were received to join General Hunter in the Shenandoah Valley. As soon as the bare and footsore men could be cared for, and the expedition otherwise fitted up, the march began. It lay over old familiar ground in part—through Lewisburg, White and Warm Sulphur Springs, and Goshen. At the latter place, a bridge spanning Calf Pasture River was burned and the railroad track destroyed nearly to Cranesville, where the mountain was crossed and a junction effected with General Hunter at Staunton. The march had been opposed by "Mudwall" Jackson, with a small force, which caused but little delay. June 10th the National forces left Staunton for Lynchburg, skirmishing most of the way, "Mudwall" Jackson retreating across the North River into Lexington. After firing the bridge he took courage and with the help of the students at the military institute delivered himself of a brisk little fight. He soon gave way.

On entering Lexington, by order of General Hunter, the military institute and ex-Governor Letcher's house were burned. The loss of the Thirty-sixth was three killed and five wounded. From Lexington the army moved by way of Buchanan, thence across the Blue Ridge, between the Peaks of Otter, to Liberty. From this place bridges were burned and the railroad destroyed to within a short distance of Lynchburg. At the old stone church, on the Liberty pike, the Rebels were encountered and driven inside their fortifications. Night coming on, operations were suspended. By morning, June 18th, affairs had assumed a different aspect. The Rebel general, Early, had arrived from Richmond with a heavy force, and at daylight opened with his artillery. It was evident that a greater than "Mudwall" was at hand. Heavy skirmishing was kept up by the infantry till about noon, when the Union force was most furiously assailed, but stood its ground, and in turn drove the enemy back within their works. General Hunter decided to withdraw, but effected to keep up appearances till after dark. The Thirty-sixth was deployed in front of the enemy, and an occasional shot delivered, giving time for the troops to get well under way; then quietly withdrawing, briskly marched until the rear of the column was reached. Then commenced one of the hardest marches of the war. Supplies were nearly exhausted, and foraging had to be resorted to, with an active enemy hanging on the rear. The retreat was continued via Liberty, Buford's Gap, Salem, Newcastle, Sweet and White Sulphur Springs, Lewisburg, and Meadow Bluffs, to Charleston, on the Kanawha. Chapters might be written of the sufferings of the soldiers, marching from within hearing of the guns at Richmond across all the mountain ranges to the Ohio River. Many men, exhausted, fell out, and never were heard of again. Night and day without sleep or rest, it was march, march—that or starvation. During the last nine days the average was 20 miles per day. From June 27th to July 10th the starving, worn-out army rested—ate, slept, and was re clothed. They then embarked for Parkersburg, en route east, General Crook having been ordered with his command east, to repel General Early in his invasion of Maryland. They reached Martinsburgh, by railroad, July 15th; thence marched to Halltown, near Harper's Ferry. General Crook was at Snicker's Gap, having followed and driven General Early across to the west side of the Shenandoah. Colonel Hayes' brigade (the Twenty-third and Thirty-sixth regiments) was ordered to form a junction with General Crook. They found the enemy in full force, and no possibility of communicating. After heavy skirmishing the little command found itself entirely surrounded by two divisions of the enemy's cavalry, and fought its way out towards Harper's Ferry. The Thirty-sixth lost three men killed and four wounded. July 22nd they joined General Crook at Winchester.

Two days later a battle was fought at Kernstown, three miles above Winchester, in which the Union troops were forced to retire, the enemy getting in on the flank in overwhelming numbers. The fighting continued till nine o'clock at night. The regiment lost in killed and wounded 127 men and officers. The army moved next day towards Martinsburg, the enemy pursuing closely. At Martinsburg the Rebel cavalry charged into town, when General Crook turned on them and drove them back, capturing a few prisoners. The Thirty-sixth had two men wounded. Under cover of this feint General Crook moved on quietly that night to a ford over the Potomac, at Williamsport, and marched down to Harper's Ferry. The enemy's cavalry having passed through Maryland into Pennsylvania, General Crook's division was ordered to intercept them, and moved up through Middletown. That day, July 28th, the regiment suffered terribly with the heat. Many, including its colonel, were stricken with sunstroke. Hearing that the enemy had burned Chambersburg and gone back, General Crook turned back to Harper's Ferry.

August 7th General Sheridan took command of the army, having added to it the Sixth Corps, and followed the Confederate forces up to Cedar Creek, but at once fell back to Halltown, followed by General Early, re-enforced from Lee's army. August 23rd the enemy attacked early in the morning but did not follow it up. Colonel Hayes' brigade (Twenty-third and Thirty-sixth Ohio and Fifth West Virginia, sallied out, and drove in the enemy's skirmishers, capturing a number. August 26th another sortie was made; in this they were successful in capturing a number of officers and men, all from Kernshaw's division.

Nothing more of interest occurred until September 3d. General Crook with his troops reached Berryville, halted, and were in the act of making coffee when rapid firing was heard in the direction of a regiment that had been sent forward on picket. At once the regiment started on the double-quick, but did not reach them till they were being driven back on the run, closely followed by the enemy. Taking advantage of a little embankment the regiment lay down until our pickets passed through. The enemy came on until within a few rods, when the men, with fixed bayonets, rose up and rushed forward to meet them, firing as they ran. The enemy was driven back on his main force and behind his artillery. Taking cover behind rocks and trees, firing was kept up till late in the night. General Sheridan, not wishing to bring on a general engagement here, the brigade was withdrawn. Captured a number of prisoners. The regiment's loss was 25 men. Capt. J. C. Selby, a brave and true soldier, was mortally wounded.

Much marching and counter-marching was gone through with up to September 19th. The Nineteenth Corps having come up, General Sheridan attacked General Early in his fortified position in front of Winchester, across the Opequan Creek. The Sixth and Nineteenth corps were ordered to attack the enemy in front. General Crook's forces were held in reserve, but were soon ordered to the right of the line and to fall upon the enemy's left flank. On reaching that point Colonel Hayes' brigade was formed in the first line and moved to the attack. The enemy discovering this movement turned their artillery upon it with vigor. The brigade hurried forward and soon came upon an impassable swamp, and were moved by the right flank a short distance where fording was possible. The enemy's skirmishers were driven in. A short delay ensued until all the forces could come up, when a rush was made—the enemy was doubled up and back and completely routed. General Crook's little command of about 4,000 now became the front, and pursued the fleeing Rebels. Passing many pieces of artillery, seven battle-flags were captured, the blue-coats and the "gray-backs" mingling together. A large number of prisoners were left to the rear. The pursuit continued through and beyond Winchester, till dark. The regiment's loss was 35 in killed and wounded. In this battle the division commander was wounded and Col. R. B. Hayes assumed command; Col. H. F. Devol, of the brigade; Lieutenant-Colonel Adney, of the regiment. Following the enemy up the valley they found him, September 22nd, in position at Fisher's Hill, his right resting against Massanutten Mountain, his left at the foot of North Mountain—a very strong position. As at Opequan, the Sixth and Nineteenth corps confronted the enemy.

General Crook with his command wended his way, through gulch and brush, by the flank, to the foot and up the side of North Mountain, unperceived by the enemy. When well on their flank, overlooking them, he halted, his orders were to "quietly move down on the enemy till within range, then raise the yell and go for them."

At the command, "Forward," the men broke in utter disorder, and like an avalanche, and yelling like demons, fell upon the enemy. Piece after piece of their artillery was abandoned. The Union forces not being able to overtake them, they fled on up the valley. Four men of the regiment were wounded. The regiment followed the fugitive army to Harrisonburg. Soon after, the army fell back to Cedar Creek. The creek crosses at right angles to the valley from the foot of Massanutten Mountain to North Mountain. On the lower bank of this creek the army took up its position. The Nineteenth Corps on the right, the Sixth Corps in the center, Army of Western Virginia (General Crook's command), on the left—Major-General Wright, the ranking officer, in command of the entire force. After this disposition General Sheridan left for Washington. General Early, re-enforced, came down and confronted the National forces, and from Massanutten Mountain could overlook the entire line, and from that point planned his attack. Early in the morning of the 18th, the entire Rebel Infantry was moved down the stream to a ford, which, by neglect of General Wright, was not properly guarded, and captured the picket without alarm. After crossing their forces, under cover of darkness and a dense fog, about 4 o'clock on the morning of the 19th, they attacked Colonel Thoburn (First division, which was to the left and front), with a heavy force, completely surprising him, capturing a battery, and putting to flight the entire division. The main force of the enemy, at the same time, in double column, moved partly to the rear of Hayes' (Second) division. At the first firing at the front, tents were struck, all packed, and lines were formed as the First division men came back. It was now light enough to see the enemy in large force. The Second division commenced firing and falling back held the enemy in check till General Crook's headquarters train was out of the way. Captain Beir, General Crook's adjutant general, and Colonel Thoburn were killed at this point. We were still forced back by weight of numbers and overlapping.

A little further back in some woods the First Brigade turned and charged the enemy, who had extended his line, driving that part of the line back which had the effect to check the pursuit and gave time for the reforming of the entire line at a new position about one and a half miles from the camps. Skirmishers were thrown forward. The enemy was contented with throwing an occasional shell and plundering the deserted camps. The men of the regiment were furiously angry, and eager to wipe out the stain of the morning.

In this new line the Second division was on the left and near the Winchester pike. About 10 o'clock General Sheridan came galloping up the pike, having heard the firing. He stopped in the rear of the Thirty-sixth Regiment, dismounted and heard from General Crook the story of the morning. Remounting, he rode along the line to the right and was cheered, all feeling that now there was an efficient head over all. Coming back, he again dismounted and lay down among the weeds in consultation with General Crook—sent aides directing the formation of the Nineteenth Corps which had not been engaged in the morning. They reported all in position, then he sent orders to be in readiness to move forward. General Custer, commanding cavalry, was posted on the right of the infantry. About half-past 2 P. M. the entire line advanced and drove the enemy at every point. As the Rebels could not cross their forces rapidly over the ford many were captured, and the cavalry swinging round in their rear took many more. These, with 49 pieces of artillery and most of the enemy's train, were the trophies of the last battle in which the Thirty-sixth Regiment participated, and the finale of Gen. Jubal Early's army. The regiment's loss in this battle was 30. The dead of the morning were stripped of their clothing. The regiment remained in the valley at and above Winchester. Marched to Martinsburg, in a cold rain, and January 1, 1865, embarked on railroad trains for Cumberland. In that ride, lasting most of two days and nights, the men suffered greatly from cold. While at Cumberland was consolidated with the Thirty-fourth Ohio, retaining its number, Thirty-sixth. In April was sent back to Winchester and thence to Staunton, the object being to head off any of the Rebel forces which might flee that way out of Richmond. At Winchester, April 15th, the news of the assassination of President Lincoln was received, and this was perhaps the saddest day in the experience of the regiment. Then soldier looked at soldier in silent wonder. It was truly the hush of death. The colors were draped, which emblem of respect never was removed. The regiment was at Staunton when General Lee surrendered and the Confederacy collapsed. In June was ordered back to Cumberland and thence to Wheeling. Perceiving there was no more need for soldiers in the field they made application at once to be mustered out. This took place at Wheeling, West Virginia, July 27th; went to Columbus, Ohio, were paid off and disbanded August 1, 1865.

To the above account of the Thirty-sixth

Regiment by Gen. H. F. Devol, which is briefly and modestly put considering the value of the service rendered, we take pleasure in adding the following farewell address by Gen. R. B. Hayes:

HEADQUARTERS SECOND BRIGADE, FIRST DIVISION, DEPARTMENT WEST VIRGINIA,
NEW CUMBER, WEST VIRGINIA, April 10, 1865.

To the officers and men of the First Brigade, First Division, Department West Virginia.

It is with very great regret that I have been compelled to part with the officers and men of the First Brigade. With many of you I have been associated in the service almost four years; with three of the regiments of the brigade more than two years, and with all the regiments during the memorable campaign of 1864, the battle of Cloyd Mountain, the burning of New River Bridge, and the night march over Salt Pond Mountain under General Crook in May, the days and nights of marching, fighting and starving on the Lynchburg raid in June, the defeat at Winchester and the retreat on the 24th and 25th of July, the skirmishing, marching and countermarching in the Shenandoah valley in August, the bloody and brilliant victories in September, the night battle of Berryville, the turning of the enemy's left at Sheridan's battle of Winchester, the avalanche that swept down North Mountain upon the Rebel stronghold at Fisher's Hill, the final conflict in October, the surprise and defeat of the morning and the victory of the evening at Cedar Creek. These and a thousand other events and scenes in the campaign form part of our common recollections which we are not likely ever to forget. As long as they are remembered we shall be reminded of each other, and of the friendly and agreeable relations which so long existed between us. It is very gratifying to me that I was allowed to serve with you until we received together the tidings of the great victory which ends the Rebellion. Whatever may be your future, I shall not cease to feel a lively interest in everything which concerns your welfare and your reputation. Under the able and gallant officer who succeeds me—under whom we have served together with so much satisfaction—I am confident that your future will be worthy of your past. As an organization and as individuals, you have my most fervent wishes for your happiness and success.

R. B. HAYES,
Brigadier-General.

The regiment during its entire term of service, had a most excellent drum corps. The first half of the time in charge of Chief Musician Ebenezer Corey, the remainder in charge of Chief Musician John Tenney.

If space would permit, an individual mention of every officer would be but justice; each one having an honorable record of patriotic deeds, which was wrought out with great personal sacrifice, not one having the slightest stain. They cherished toward each other throughout only the kindest feelings; no jealousy, no rivalry, or anything that ever marred the fellowship of the true and noble brotherhood.

Companies B and F, Thirty-ninth Ohio Volunteers.

REGIMENTAL OFFICERS.

Colonel John Groesbeck, mustered August 24, 1861, resigned July 8, 1862; Colonel A. W. Gilbert, July 8, 1862, resigned October 1, 1862; Colonel Edward F. Noyes, October 1, 1862, honorably discharged April 22, 1865; Colonel Daniel Webber, May 18, 1865, mustered out with regiment; Lieutenant Colonel A. W. Gilbert, July 27, 1861, promoted to colonel July 8, 1862; Lieutenant Colonel Edward F. Noyes, July 8, 1862, promoted to colonel October 1, 1862; Lieutenant Colonel Henry T. McDowell, October 1, 1862, mustered out; Lieutenant Colonel Daniel Webber, February 10, 1865, promoted to colonel; Lieutenant Colonel William C. Buck, May 18, 1865, mustered out as captain May 18, 1865; Lieutenant Colonel Henry A. Babbitt, June 6, 1865, mustered out with regiment; Major Edward F. Noyes, July 27, 1861, promoted to lieutenant colonel; Major Henry T. McDowell, July 8, 1862, promoted to lieutenant colonel; Major William H. Lathrop, October 1, 1862, colonel Third Alabama colored regiment April 20, 1864; Major John S. Jenkins, April 25, 1864, mustered; Major Daniel Webber, January 11, 1865, promoted to lieutenant colonel; Major Henry A. Babbitt, May 18, 1865, promoted to lieutenant colonel; Major George T. Rice, June 6, 1865; mustered out with regiment; Surgeon Oliver W. Nixon, August 20, 1861, resigned May 31, 1862; Surgeon Thomas W. McArthur, May 31, 1862, resigned September 3, 1862; Surgeon John A. Follett, September 3, 1862, mustered out with regiment; Assistant Surgeon Thomas W. McArthur, August 20, 1861, promoted to surgeon; Assistant Surgeon Christian Forrester, May 31, 1862, promoted to surgeon September 3, 1862; Assistant Surgeon Pierre S. Starr, December 13, 1861, mustered out with regiment; Assistant Surgeon Lionel J. Smith, September 5, 1862; Assistant Surgeon William J. Andrews, May 18, 1865, mustered out with regiment; Chaplain Benjamin W. Childaw, August 20, 1861, resigned April 9, 1862.

COMPANY OFFICERS FROM WASHINGTON COUNTY.

Captain John C. Fell, mustered July 31, 1861, resigned April 12, 1862; Captain Jacob Koenig, July 31, 1861, died; Captain William H. Pittinger, May 18, 1862, mustered out with regiment; Captain Ethan O. Hurd, July 3, 1862, resigned March 3, 1864; Captain William C. Buck, May 9, 1864, promoted to lieutenant colonel; Captain George T. Rice, January 11, 1865, promoted to major; Captain William H. Mintun, January 11, 1862, mustered out with regiment; Captain William Benze, January 11, 1862, mustered out; First Lieutenant William Edgerton, July 31, 1861, resigned June 25, 1862; First Lieutenant Ethan O. Hurd, July 31, 1861, promoted to captain; First Lieutenant Henry W. Sheppard, February 8, 1862, resigned June 10, 1862; First Lieutenant William C. Buck, June 25, 1862, promoted to captain; First Lieutenant August Kropp, July 3, 1862, resigned April 1, 1864; First Lieutenant George T. Rice, May 9, 1864, promoted to captain; First Lieutenant Ely Steen, January 11, 1865, mustered out with regiment; First Lieutenant Alexander McTaggart, February 10, 1865, resigned June 20, 1865; First Lieutenant William Snodgrass, May 18, 1865, discharged July 1, 1865; First Lieutenant Frank Fortman, July 20, 1862, resigned September 15, 1862; First Lieutenant William Benze, May 25, 1862, promoted to captain; First Lieutenant William H. Pittinger, January 11, 1865, promoted to captain; First Lieutenant Barney Shultz, February 10, 1865, mustered out with regiment; Second Lieutenant Henry W. Sheppard, July 31, 1861, promoted to first lieutenant; Second Lieutenant William C. Buck, March 19, 1862, promoted to first lieutenant; Second Lieutenant George T. Rice, June 25, 1862, promoted to first lieutenant; Second Lieutenant Alexander McTaggart, July 11, 1865, promoted to first lieutenant; Second Lieutenant William Snodgrass, February 14, 1865, promoted to first lieutenant; Second Lieutenant Daniel Otterbein, May 18, 1865, mustered out with regiment; Second Lieutenant Buell Congdon, May 18, 1865; Second Lieutenant Charles Miller, July 31, 1861, resigned June 16, 1862; Second Lieutenant Frank Fortman, July 18, 1862, promoted to first lieutenant; Second Lieutenant William Benze, June 20, 1863, promoted to first lieutenant; Second Lieutenant Barney Shultz, July 11, 1865, promoted to first lieutenant.

The regimental organization was perfected August 16, 1861, at Camp Dennison, Ohio; ordered to St. Louis, Missouri, where they arrived August 19th; moved up the North Missouri Railroad September 7th. September 12th, the regiment was divided, Companies A, B, E, I and K, going toward St. Joseph. This detachment remained in Northern Missouri until February, 1862. Companies A and I marched from St. Joseph to Liberty in pursuit of the enemy and back to St. Joseph, in September, then moved by rail to Chillicothe, when they rejoined B, E and K. These five companies marched from Chillicothe to Macon City, thence to St. Joseph and Chillicothe and back to Macon City and St. Joseph, at which latter place they arrived December 4, 1861. On the 5th of December they marched under Brigadier-General Prentiss toward the Missouri River, reaching it at Lexington; proceeded to Carrollton and returned to Utica December 8, 1861. December 20th, moved to Palmyra, Missouri, and remained there until the middle of February, 1862, when the detachment moved by rail to St. Louis. Companies C, D, F, G and H, moved from Utica, Missouri, as part of the command of Brigadier-General Sturgess to the relief of Lexington, which place was then besieged by the enemy under General Price. Arrived in sight of Lexington September 19th, but finding it impossible to cross the river, and having no artillery, the relieving force diverged and marched to Liberty, when they embarked on steamers for Kansas City, Missouri, October 15th, still under General Sturgess, took up line of march for Springfield, Missouri, by way of Osceola, Bolivar and Greenfield. Arrived at Springfield November 1st, having marched on that day 39 miles, to re-enforce General Fremont's grand army, which was reported to be in the presence of the enemy. On the 9th of November marched towards the Missouri River, reaching Sedalia by way of Warsaw November 16th, and by December 18th, reached Syracuse. February 2, 1862, took up line of march for St. Louis, by way of Boonville, Columbia, Fulton and St. Charles, and arrived at St. Louis February 19, 1862, when the entire regiment was reunited.

The regiment embarked on steamer February 22d, and arrived at Commerce, Missouri, on the 24th, and at New Madrid March 3d, when the regiment formed a part of Groesbeck's brigade, Stanley's division of General Pope's Army of the Mississippi. During the next 10 days made several reconnaissances and took part in the siege of New Madrid, March 13th and 14th. Assisted in the capture of the place March 14th crossed the Mississippi April 7th, and on the 8th, in conjunction with other troops, captured 5,500 prisoners at Tiptonville, being the Rebel force from Island No. 10. On the same day marched to Island No. 10, and on the 9th returned to New Madrid. April 13th embarked on steamer to go down the river, arrived near Fort Pillow on the 15th, started for Bushy Log Landing on the 17th, where the command arrived on the 23rd, and disembarked. During the siege of Corinth from April 23rd to May 29th, the regiment made many reconnaissances and was frequently engaged in skirmishes with the enemy. On the 30th they advanced upon the Rebel works, found them deserted, and the Thirty-ninth was the first regiment to enter the entrenchments. For several days they pursued the Rebels, and on the 12th of June returned to Clear Creek, four miles south of Corinth, and went into camp, where the regiment was armed with the Whitney rifle with sabre bayonet. August 20th, marched to Iuka under General Rosecrans and returned on September 12th. On September 14th the movement against General Price, who had occupied Iuka, began, and on the 19th they were engaged in the battle of Iuka, which was a bloody contest, resulting in a defeat to the enemy. They pursued the Rebel forces several days and then turned back and reached Corinth October 3rd. The Thirty-ninth, in the dispositions for the great battle impending at that point, was stationed near Fort Robinet. After dark the Ohio brigade, which consisted of the Twenty-seventh, Thirty-ninth, Forty-third and Sixty-third Ohio regiments, marched to relieve one of the brigades of General Davies' division, which had been resisting the enemy's advance in front. The Ohio brigade was ordered to occupy the high ground near Battery Robinet. Near the crest was formed the line of battle. Directly on the right of the earthwork covering the battery and stretching across the Chewalla road, stood the men of the Sixty-third, next came the Twenty-seventh and farther still to the right was the Thirty-ninth Regiment. On the left of the battery facing to the left and nearly at right angles with the main line, rested the Forty-third.

The locality above-mentioned was the scene of the desperate charge of October 4th, in which the Twenty-seventh, and especially the Sixty-third Regiment, lost heavily, the Thirty-ninth escaping with slight loss, and the enemy were terribly punished and routed. The Thirty-ninth followed in pursuit of Van Dorn and Price for four days, and on October 12th returned to Corinth, where they remained until November 2d, and marched southward to a point five miles south of Oxford, Mississippi. On December 18th they moved by rail to Jackson, Tennessee, to re-enforce General Sullivan, who was hard pressed by General Forrest's command. They then, on December 20th, moved toward the Tennessee River, and took part in the battle of Parker's Cross Roads, defeating Forrest there on December 31st. General Fuller says of this engagement, which was so overshadowed by the great battle of Stone River, in progress at the same time, that it never received adequate notice:

Colebad Dunham, of Indiana, was sent ahead with a brigade to intercept Forrest's march at Parker's Cross Roads, and the Ohio brigade was to follow the next morning. At four o'clock we started, and marched until daylight, when a halt was made for breakfast. That over, we moved on, and soon the sound of cannon in our front advised us that Forrest was attacking Dunham's brigade, and then began a struggle in which legs told. Within an hour and a half they marched seven miles without a halt, with ranks well closed; and when a hill was reached whence Forrest's men and guns were seen, the Ohio brigade formed in line of battle on the double-quick, and went down for them with such good will that every Rebel gun unlimbered and in action was ours in five minutes, and Forrest's forces were galloping away—not all, however, for many had dismounted in the fight, and their horses left in the rear were captured and their riders surrendered. Six guns, 400 horses, and 360 officers and men were captured. This was quite an achievement, for Forrest was not beaten every day.

January 8, 1863, the regiment returned to Corinth, having marched over 200 miles in three weeks, without government rations, transportation, or ambulances. The regiment remained at Corinth until April 20th, when it moved with the expedition under General Dodge to the Tuscumbia Valley, for the purpose of keeping the Rebels busy in that direction while another expedition cut the railroads in the rear of General Bragg's army. General Dodge was confronted by the Rebel forces under Forrest and Roddy, and on the 28th the regiment was engaged in the battle near Tuscumbia, defeating the Rebels. They then marched 16 miles beyond Tuscumbia, returned to Corinth May 2nd, and marched to Memphis, Tennessee, on May 10th. Here the regiment was allowed to rest and recuperate. General Fuller says:

"When Grant directed everything at Memphis to come to him at Vicksburg, the Ohio brigade was ordered to march and garrison the former city. This was your single 'soft spot' of the war. Excepting this, your lot was always at the front; but here for some months you lounged in camp, guarded the gardens, flirted with the ladies, and seldom missed a 'good square meal.'"

The regiment up to this time had lost, in killed and wounded and discharged, since its organization, about 300 men, and had recruited about 200, and had an aggregate of 830 ready for duty.

The regiment remained in Memphis until October 18th, when they went to Prospect, Tennessee, marching a distance of 250 miles, and arriving there November 13th. Here they lay encamped until the 27th of December, when the regiment re-enlisted as veterans, and returned home on furlough for 30 days. "The measured tread of an army, keeping step, is heard; and that wondrous scene unfolds, which the whole world beholds—the marshaling of the veteran hosts! The soldiers of the ranks stand forth! * * 'Muster us again! for all the war muster us in! From that patriotic hour was the doom of the Rebellion sealed.'"

The Thirty-ninth Regiment furnished more veterans than any other Ohio regiment. The Ohio brigade stood as follows: Thirty-ninth, 534 men; Sixty-third, 455; Forty-third, 436; and the Twenty-seventh, 437 men.

At the expiration of the furlough, the regiment returned to its former camp at Prospect, Tennessee, and from thence they moved on Decatur, Alabama. The town was captured by a night movement. The brigade was embarked above in 70 boats, which, with muffled oars, silently stole down until opposite, when, by the left flank, they were soon on shore, up the bank, and in line. The Rebels, after exchanging a few shots, retired, completely surprised and defeated.

*General Fuller's address before the Ohio Brigade.

On May 1, 1864, the regiment marched to join General Sherman's grand army at Chattanooga. Here the great Atlanta campaign was commenced. Meeting the enemy at Resaca, the Thirty-ninth was, on May 13th, 14th, and 15th, in the front line of battle driving the Rebels to their trenches with a loss of two men.

At Dallas, Georgia, on the 27th, they again met the enemy, driving him from his position, in which engagement the loss by the regiment was severe. The Rebel army was next encountered at the base of Kenesaw Mountain. Heavy skirmishing began on the 13th of June, in which the Thirty-ninth was constantly engaged during the several days' fighting, losing severely in killed and wounded. The Rebels were finally compelled to leave their stronghold.

On July 4th the enemy was again encountered at Ruff's Mills, when the Thirty-ninth, together with the Twenty-seventh, made a gallant charge on the enemy's works, driving them out in confusion, and not giving them time to remove their dead and wounded, and capturing quite a number of prisoners. This engagement is known also by the name of Nic-o-jack Creek. The colonel of the regiment, E. F. Noyes, lost a foot in this action and never joined the regiment afterwards. Company B lost four severely wounded.

The Rebels retreated, and the National Army pursued until they were finally driven into their devoted city, Atlanta, around which scenes of terrible slaughter were soon to be enacted.

On July 22, 1864, the regiment together with the Twenty-seventh Ohio, was ordered to a responsible position in the line of battle of that memorable day; and they held it.

"The men were directed to unsling knapsacks, fix bayonets, and lie down on the crest of the ridge, where the line was formed, for protection from the fire of the enemy which came from the wood in front. The Second division had formed a line conforming in the main to that of the Twenty-seventh and Thirty-ninth, on a parallel ridge to the left of the Thirty-ninth, but separated from that regiment by a deep transverse ravine. The enemy charged the Second division within a few minutes and were repulsed.

"Immediately afterward his line of battle came out of the timber in front of the Thirty-ninth and Twenty-seventh regiments, advancing in plain view and within easy range, when individual men of both regiments raised to their feet and taking deliberate aim discharged their pieces. No order could keep them down with such an opportunity to use their muskets effectually. In less time than it takes to relate it, both regiments were on their feet discharging their pieces with rapidity and telling effect on the foe; yet on he came until the Thirty-ninth and Twenty-seventh charged him in turn, driving him from the field into the wood. Meanwhile another body of the enemy in line of battle came out of the wood to the right of the Twenty-seventh, bearing down on its flank and rear. General Fuller directed that the three right companies of the regiment be retired to face this second assault. This was done, but it soon became evident that a change of front to the rear of the entire line was necessary. This change was made under a hot fire. In executing this movement necessarily made with celerity and under trying conditions, in the face of a defiant and rapidly advancing foe, the Twenty-seventh became somewhat disordered; and my thanks are due to General Fuller for his timely assistance in forming the new line. He grasped the colors of the Twenty-seventh and with them designated the ground he wished the new line to occupy. The line was promptly formed there; several volleys fired by the Twenty-seventh and Thirty-ninth Ohio regiments, Eighteenth Missouri and Sixty-fourth Illinois (the latter two regiments until then in reserve), followed by a charge again drove the enemy from the field. The line now laid down facing the wood which was on its right flank in the beginning of the battle, under a raking fire from the timber for an hour or more, when the enemy retreated and the greatest battle of the campaign was over. This was a stand up open field fight, with only such protection as the muskets and bayonets afforded.*

This stubborn resistance in this part of the field saved the left wing of Sherman's army from defeat; the old Thirty-ninth and Twenty-seventh stood as an impenetrable wall in front of the enemy, not giving an inch of ground and repelling several distinct charges by the Rebels. Our artillery, supported by the Ohio brigade, poured into the Rebel columns closed en masse, their deadly fire, musketry, grape, and canister, causing them to melt away like dew before the morning sun, leaving the National forces the victors of the field. The Thirty-ninth lost 144 killed and wounded.

The regiment then moved to the west side of Atlanta, forming the right wing, where on the 28th of July another severe battle was fought in which the Thirty-ninth participated, repulsing the enemy with great loss. Thus almost every day the regiment was engaged in skirmishing until the final evacuation of the city, which occurred on the 2nd of September, 1864, and in the meantime they marched to Jonesborough, 15 miles south of Atlanta, destroying 10 miles of the Montgomery Railroad while on the way. At the latter place we again met the enemy in force and repulsed him with great loss, driving him so far south as Lovejoy's Station. In all these movements the Thirty-ninth performed a conspicuous part. They then returned to Atlanta, where they enjoyed a rest of about 30 days. In the meantime Hood, with his army, had got in our rear, destroying our communications with Chattanooga and investing our stronghold at Altoona Pass. General Corse commanded at that point and had 1,944 men, the Rebel general, French, many times that number. The Rebels came on in full force and charged the devoted garrison, but were driven back with the loss of hundreds, still assault after assault was delivered with same result, while the Twenty-third corps under Gen. J. D. Cox were hastening to the rescue, and flags conveying from peak to peak, the message from General Sherman to General Corse to "hold the fort," and that he was "coming with re-enforcements." Sherman, on learning that Corse was there, exclaimed, "He will hold out! I know the man!" and he did hold out, though 707 (more than a third) of his men had fallen, when the enemy desisted, leaving 231 dead and 411 prisoners and 800 muskets on the field.

The Thirty-ninth was in the front during the pursuit of Hood, being the first regiment in the Ohio brigade commanded by Gen. J. W. Fuller.

The Rebels were driven across the Tennessee to be left to the tender mercies of Gen. George H. Thomas, while Sherman made all haste to get ready for his "March to the Sea." The regiment now no longer in the Ohio brigade, but in the First Division of the Seventeenth Army Corps, on the 15th of November, took up its line of march with that corps, down to the sea, with Sherman. They destroyed the railroads as they went, meeting with but little opposition until they arrived in front of Savannah, on the 9th of December, making a distance of 350 miles from Atlanta. Here they found the Rebels strongly fortified, with Hardee in his last ditch. After opening communication with the sea by way of St. Catharine Sound, taking Fort McAllister on the way, and having several days' hard fighting around the city of Savannah, in all of which the Thirty-ninth participated, the Rebels evacuated the city on the 21st of December, and it was immediately occupied by the National Army.

About the middle of January, 1865, the Thirty-ninth embarked with other troops on transports, and went to Beaufort, South Carolina, and assisted in driving the Rebels from their stronghold at Pocotaligo Station, 25 miles northwest from Beaufort.

On the 1st of February the Thirty-ninth, with other forces of the grand army, took up its line of march through the Carolinas, wading swamps and fighting the enemy from place to place. On the 4th of February they engaged the enemy at Rivers bridge, repulsing him with severe loss, the Thirty-ninth losing two killed and three wounded.

*Address of Gen. M. Churchill, late colonel of the Twenty-seventh Regiment, at the reunion of the Ohio brigade.

Continuing the march, they struck the Augusta & Charleston Railroad at Midway station, moving on that road to Columbia, thence north to Waynesborough, thence east to Cheraw, driving the enemy before them and capturing at that point a large amount of ammunition and artillery, thence marched to Fayetteville, North Carolina, thence to Bentonville, where a severe battle was fought March 21st, in which the First Division, Seventeenth Army Corps, was hotly engaged, the Thirty-ninth being in the center of the brigade on the right of the line of battle. They firmly held their ground, while those on the right and left gave way, leaving both flanks exposed to a raking fire. The brigade finally formed in the shape of a horse shoe and succeeded in repulsing the enemy. The brigade then moved to a stronger position, lay on their arms all night and in the morning were ready to resume the fight, but the enemy was gone. The next day they moved to Goldsborough. Our loss in this engagement was 23 killed and wounded.

Here they rested until April 10th, when they resumed the line of march toward Raleigh, and arrived there on the 15th and went into camp two miles west of the city, enjoying a few days of rest. We then joined in the pursuit of the Rebel forces under General Johnston. After marching 15 miles a proposal was received by General Sherman to surrender the Rebel forces, which was finally consummated, and we again returned to Raleigh. We then marched to Richmond, the late Rebel capital, a distance of 180 miles, in seven days, and from there to Washington City.

After participating in the grand review of all the armies by President Lincoln, the heads of departments, diplomatic corps, and a large number of distinguished officers of the army and navy, and an immense throng of rejoicing citizens, the Thirty-ninth moved to Louisville, Kentucky, where it was mustered out of the United States service on July 9, 1865, the war being over.

Engagements in which the Thirty-ninth Regiment participated:

New Madrid, Missouri, March 7, 10, and 13, 1862; Island No. 10, April 8, 1862; Farmington, Mississippi, May 8 and 9, 1862; Corinth, Mississippi, May 28 and 29, 1862; luka, Mississippi, September, 19, 1862; Parkers Cross Roads, Tennessee, December 31, 1864; Resaca, Georgia, May 13 and 14, 1864; Dallas, Georgia, May 31, 1864; Kenesaw Mountain, Georgia, June 18, 23, 26, and 27, 1864; Ruff's Mills, Georgia, July 4, 1864; Atlanta, Georgia, July 22, 29 and 30, 1864; Savannah, Georgia, December 10, 1864; River's Bridge, South Carolina, February 4, 1865; Bentonville, North Carolina, March 21, 1865.

The Thirty-ninth Regiment marched 3,521 miles, by rail 2,680 miles, by steamboat 2405 miles; total, 8,606 miles.

Sixty-third Ohio Volunteer Infantry.

REGIMENTAL OFFICERS.

Colonel John W. Sprague, detached January 24, 1862, promoted to major, then general volunteer; Captain Charles E. Brown, June 6, 1865, on detached duty at muster out of regiment; Lieutenant Colonel William E. Gilmore, October 17, 1861, resigned July 17, 1862; Lieutenant Colonel Alexander L. Haskin, July 17, 1862; Lieutenant Colonel J. Hunter Odlin, March 20, 1863; Lieutenant Colonel Charles E. Brown, March 20, 1863, promoted to colonel; Lieutenant Colonel Oscar L. Jackson, June 1, 1865, promoted and discharged as major; Major Alexander L. Haskins, October 1, 1861, promoted, and honorably discharged March 20, 1863; Major J. Hunter Odlin, October 1, 1862, resigned January 3, 1863; Major John W. Fouts, January 1, 1863, mustered out; Major Oscar L. Jackson, January 28, 1865, promoted to lieutenant colonel; Surgeon Isaac L. Crane, October 7, 1861, resigned January 28, 1863; Surgeon Arthur D. Monahan, January 28, 1863, mustered out July 21, 1865; Assistant Surgeon Arthur D. Monahan, November 7, 1861, promoted to surgeon; Assistant Surgeon J. O. Marsh, August 21, 1862, resigned October 2, 1862; Assistant Surgeon John B. McDell, March 11, 1863, resigned May 31, 1865; Chaplain B. S. Fry, February 13, 1862, mustered out September 27, 1864, at expiration of term.

COMPANY OFFICERS.

Captain John W. Fouts, October 28, 1861, promoted to major; Captain Christopher E. Smith, October 26, 1861, resigned December 22, 1862; Captain Rodney K. Shaw, December 20, 1861, resigned August 30, 1862; Captain Charles J. Titus, December 20, 1861, resigned June 18, 1862; Captain O. W. Pollock, June 18, 1862, mustered out with regiment; Captain George Wightman, August 11, 1862, discharged October 19, 1864; Captain Winslow L. Bay, January 1, 1863, mustered out with regiment; Captain A. C. Fenner, October 4, 1864, mustered out with regiment; Captain George B. Bartlett, November 12, 1864, mustered out with regiment; Captain M. A. Stewart, November 12, 1864, declined promotion; Captain Madison Hoon, June 28, 1865, mustered out with regiment; First Lieutenant Wesley J. Tucker, October 28, 1861, resigned June 18, 1862; First Lieutenant Henry S. Burt, December 20, 1861, detailed on staff duty; First Lieutenant O. W. Pollock, December 26, 1861, promoted to captain; First Lieutenant Louis Schmidt, February 13, 1862, resigned August 24, 1864; First Lieutenant Richard B. Cheatham, June 18, 1862, died July 18, 1863; First Lieutenant A. C. Tenner, August 11, 1862, promoted to captain; First Lieutenant George B. Bartlett, July 18, 1863, promoted to captain; First Lieutenant A. J. Howard, August 11, 1864, declined promotion; First Lieutenant M. A. Stewart, September 26, 1864, returned commission, mustered out; First Lieutenant Angus McDonald, September 26, 1864, promoted to captain; First Lieutenant Wallace S. Roach, September 26, 1864, returned commission; First Lieutenant Madison Hoon, October 4, 1864, promoted to captain; First Lieutenant Alexander H. Brill, January 20, 1865, mustered out with regiment; First Lieutenant Wallace C. Bay, January 20, 1865, resigned May 23, 1865; Second Lieutenant Robert Booth, October 1, 1861, resigned June 28, 1862; Second Lieutenant Benjamin Knight, November 12, 1861, resigned September 3, 1862; Second Lieutenant Lewis L. Grubb, February 13, 1862, resigned May 26, 1862; Second Lieutenant George B. Bartlett, May 26, 1862, promoted to first lieutenant; Second Lieutenant Winslow L. Bay, January 30, 1862, promoted to captain; Second Lieutenant A. J. Howard, January 1, 1863, honorably discharged November 9, 1864; Second Lieutenant M. A. Stewart, January 1, 1863, mustered out; Second Lieutenant Angus McDonald, July 18, 1863, promoted to first lieutenant; Second Lieutenant Wallace S. Roach, June 30, 1863, mustered out; Second Lieutenant Alexander H. Brill, November 12, 1864, promoted to first lieutenant.

The Sixty-third Ohio Volunteer Infantry was formed by the consolidation of a battalion of six companies raised at Camp Worthing, Chillicothe, with a battalion of four companies raised at Camp Putnam, Marietta.* It was originally intended for two regiments—the Twenty-second, to be raised under the direction of, and to be commanded by, Col. William E. Gilmore, and the Sixty-third, to be raised under the direction of, and to be commanded by, Col. William Craig, then quartermaster in charge at Marietta. In December, 1861, the call for troops to be sent to the front became so pressing that the order for consolidation came, and the two battalions were united; the Twenty-second furnishing companies A, B, E, H, I, and K; and the Sixty-third furnishing four companies raised in Washington County—Company C, commanded by Capt. Christopher E. Smith; Company B, commanded by Capt. John W. Fouts; Company F, commanded by Capt. Charles J. Titus; and Company G, commanded by Capt. Rodney K. Shaw. The command of the regiment was given to Colonel Craig; William E. Gilmore was made lieutenant-colonel, and Alexander L. Haskins, major.

On the 21st of December, 1861, the regiment removed to Camp Dennison; and on the 27th of the same month it returned to Marietta, and encamped at Camp Tupper.

On the 23rd of January, 1862, Colonel Craig resigned, and the command of the regiment was given to Col. John W. Sprague, formerly a captain in the Seventh Ohio. Colonel Sprague immediately took command, and proceeded to fit his regiment to enter the field by perfecting its drill and discipline.

On the 18th of February, 1862, Colonel Sprague with his regiment was ordered to the field, and to report at Paducah, Kentucky. The regiment left Marietta late in the evening of the 18th; six companies under the command of Colonel Sprague, on the steamer "Bostona, No. 2," and four companies under command of Major Haskins, on the steamer "T. J. Rattin." Marietta gave one of the best proofs of her sympathy and interest for the success of the Union cause by turning out en masse at the landing to witness their departure. On Saturday the 22nd of February, the command reached Paducah and reported for orders. Having been armed and drilled in

*By this consolidation it became practical to transfer, and by order of the war department, the Thirteenth Missouri Regiment, composed mostly of Ohio men and officers, was transferred to the credit of Ohio, and became the Twenty-second Ohio Volunteer Infantry.

Camp Marietta, it was ordered to proceed to Commerce, Missouri, and report to General Pope, then organizing the Army of the Mississippi at that point. The regiment reached Commerce, on Sunday morning, the 23rd of February, being the second regiment to arrive at the rendezvous. It immediately debarked, and encamped and occupied the cemetery on the high ground in the rear of the town. Later in the day it was joined by the Twenty-seventh, Thirty-ninth, and Forty-third Ohio Volunteer Infantry, its companions in the organization known as the Ohio brigade. These four regiments were brigaded together, and were made the First Brigade in the First Division of the Army of the Mississippi. Gen. Schuyler Hamilton commanded the division one day; the command was then given to Gen. David S. Stanley, one of Ohio's brigadier-generals.

From the 23rd to the 27th of February, the army was actually employed in the collection of stores, and the organization of divisions. On the morning of the 28th the line of march was taken up for New Madrid, the Ohio brigade taking the advance. The army arrived in sight of New Madrid on the third day of March, and at two o'clock in the afternoon of that day the Sixty-third was first brought into action. It moved forward in line of battle with the same steadiness and precision that it would in review. Its first experience gave it the morale of veterans. For three hours it remained in its trying position, exposed to the artillery fire of the two forts and a fleet of six gunboats, without the opportunity of using their arms. Late in the afternoon the army retired out of range, and went into camp. The day had been a cold raw March day, and in the afternoon it began to snow. En route the army had been restrained from using fences, or in any manner foraging. The cold and exposure brought from headquarters the order to take the top rail, for campfires. In a short time the boys were comfortable around the blazing campfires, and in the morning it was found the army "was not fenced in."

The Sixty-third shared in all the fights in and around New Madrid previous to its capture. In the reconnoissance on the 7th of March it took an exposed position, and for a short time the upper fort had its range, and made its situation uncomfortable, fortunately without casualty.

On the 13th of March the Ohio brigade was made the infantry support of the siege batteries. The Sixty-third on the right, the Thirty-ninth on the left, well up to the batteries, and the Twenty-seventh and Forty-third in reserve. The troops were exposed to a constant artillery fire from the dawn until sunset, when the cannonading ceased. The troops remained in the trenches at night, exposed to a most terrific thunderstorm, without shelter or fires, the ground flooded with water. The dawn revealed the fact that the enemy had abandoned the forts, and retreated during the darkness.

The Ohio brigade was complimented in general orders for its gallantry, and was awarded the privilege to first enter and plant their banners on the captured forts. On the evening of the 18th of March, the Sixty-third was detailed to haul one of the heavy siege guns from the forts at New Madrid to Point Pleasant, 14 miles below, and opposite Tiptonville, in Tennessee. This arduous labor was performed between dark and daylight, the regiment dragging its heavy load over roads impassable for teams. The next morning the Rebel fleet were surprised to find a battery opposite Tiptonville, their only line of communication with their garrison at Island No. 10.*

This severe labor and its attendant exposure permanently disabled many men.** The regiment returned to camp, and with the army awaited the action of the engineers in removing the obstructions from the bayou, for the passage of the gunboat fleet, and the transports.

*The first casualty in the Sixty-third occurred March 18th, 1862, when Elisha Roberts mortally and George W. Essex seriously.

†Lieut. W. N. [unclear] during the New Madrid campaign with the Sixty-third as acting quartermaster, and was present on the field during all the battles at that point, although never having been mustered; his name does not appear on the rolls.

On the morning of the 7th of April, 1862, the regiment with Stanley's and Paine's divisions of the Army of the Mississippi, embarked on the transports to cross the Mississippi River, and were transported to the Tennessee shore, opposite the lower port. The expedition took up its line of march down the Mississippi for Tiptonville, to intercept the enemy, if they should attempt to retreat. The route lay through muddy corn and wheat fields with occasionally a strip of woods, having no semblance of roads. The marching was tedious, frequent halts were necessary, as the feet would gather more of Tennessee mud than a man was able to carry. Night came upon them in the fields, and they were compelled to bivouac in the field, and without campfires. The march was resumed at daybreak, and it reached Tiptonville in time to witness the surrender of the army that had garrisoned Island No. 10, which had abandoned the forts, and attempted to escape by Tiptonville and the river. The expedition had been successful in intercepting and capturing them. The Sixty-third proceeded immediately to Island No. 10, and occupied the enemy's abandoned quarters for the night. The next morning the regiment returned on the transports to New Madrid and occupied its old quarters. It had borne a conspicuous part in all of the work of the Army of the Mississippi, resulting in the capture of all the forts on the Mississippi above Fort Pillow.*

On the 13th of April, 1862, the regiment embarked on the transport "Silver Wave" and moved with the army of the Mississippi to Osceola, Arkansas, and thence to Fort Pillow, and was present during the bombardment of that fort. On the 17th of April, 1862, the

The first slave was manumitted under the order of President Lincoln to manumit slaves escaping from the Rebel armies to the Union lines, was a body servant of Gen. Jeff. Thompson, who was in the lines of the Sixty-third at New Madrid and was manumitted by order of Gen. David S. Stanley. The manumitted contraband was afterward taken to Ohio by General Sprague.

Army of the Mississippi, having received orders to re-enforce the Army of the Tennessee, under Halleck, in front of Corinth, proceeded up the Mississippi and Tennessee rivers on the transports. On the 23rd of April, the Sixty-third landed at Hamburg, Tennessee, four miles above the battle-ground of Shiloh. Stanley's division was posted on the left flank of the army, moving to the capture of Corinth, and during all the movement for its capture, the Sixty-third held its position, as the flanking regiment. It actively participated in all the reconnaissances and engagements in front of Corinth, including those at Monterey and Farmington. When the enemy moved out of Corinth on the 30th of May, the Sixty-third moved out of the trenches in immediate pursuit of the retreating army. The Thirtieth Ohio, of our brigade, being the first to enter the Rebel works, and Wallace Bruce, of Washington County, being the first to mount the works. The Sixty-third was kept in pursuit of Price's wing of the retreating army, six companies under Major Haskins proceeding to the Tuscumbia River on the Jacinto road, where it found the bridges burned, and was then recalled, and proceeded with the main body of the army in pursuit of Beauregard's army, to Boonville, the Ohio brigade having the advance of the infantry in this movement. *From Boonville, where the pursuit was abandoned, the regiment proceeded to Camp Clear Creek, near Corinth, and remained in camp at Clear Creek, Bear Creek, Iuka and Burnsville.

On the 17th of September, with Stanley's division, it participated in the battle of Iuka. After a tedious and forced march it came upon the enemy at the beginning of dusk, immediately formed in line of battle, advanced, and opened "that steady fire that always distinguished it in action." It was just getting well into its work when darkness put an end to the fighting, and the two armies bivouacked upon the field. The pickets of the two armies were posted so near as to be able to communicate by ordinary conversation; and the pickets of the Ohio brigade were so far advanced as to cover the captured guns of Niel's Eleventh Ohio Battery, which the Rebels had been unable to remove. The morning's dawn revealed an abandoned Rebel camp, and Niel's Battery was restored to its gallant owners. An active pursuit was taken up, and from that time until the third of October, 1862, when it entered Corinth, the Sixty-third was with Rosecrans' army, beating the bush to find and engage the enemy.

*During the time of the Sixty-third's service before Corinth the Eighth Wisconsin Regiment was attached to Stanley's division, and the eagle, "Old Abe," was a companion in arms of the boys of the Ohio brigade.

The regiment took a most active and honorable part in the battle of Corinth on the 3rd and 4th of October, 1862, and it there proved itself worthy of a place in the history of a county named after the father of our country, to know that she was well and ably represented by an organization performing its whole duty in every great contest during the war, that upon the group of colors of her regiments and batteries are found the names of every great battle of the war. In the battle of Corinth the Sixty-third did great service, and won for itself a place beside the Eighteenth, Thirty-sixth, Thirty-ninth, Seventy-seventh and Ninety-second, Buell's and Huntington's batteries, and the First, Seventh and Ninth cavalry. The Ohio brigade took so important a part in the battle of Corinth, which would probably have been lost but for their terrific fight, that it deserves to be described at length. We here copy the admirable description of Gen. John W. Fuller, read at the brigade reunion on the 16th anniversary of the battle:

On the morning of October 3rd, just 16 years ago to-day, the enemy attacked the division of General Davies at the outer line of works, the line constructed by the Rebels when Sidney Johnston and Beauregard held possession of the town. Davies had been ordered there to retard the enemy's advance, until "Rosy" should be ready to let Van Dorn come in. Van Dorn's superior strength enabled him to drive Davies from this line, but Davies' men fought stubbornly, and fell back over that two or three miles so slowly, that it was near night when they approached the outskirts of the town, and when reinforcements enabled Davies to stop the enemy's advance. After dark the Ohio brigade marched to relieve one of the brigades of Davies' division, and was ordered to occupy the high ground near battery Robinet. Near the crest was formed the line of battle. Directly on the right of the earthwork covering the battery, and stretching across the Chewalla road, stood the men of the Sixty-third; next came the Twenty-seventh, and farther still to the right was the Thirty-ninth Regiment. On the left of the battery, facing to the left, and nearly at right angles with the main line, rested the Forty-third.

Let us go back through the intervening years, and in fancy place ourselves on the spot then occupied, and look again over that field which has since been famous. Before you, for three hundred yards, lie in confusion the few trees which have been felled to form a partial abattis. Beyond this stands the forest, and through both, leads, without obstruction, the road to Chewalla. To the right of the Thirty-ninth the line of battle is broken for three hundred yards, by an impassable swamp, beyond which we see the rising ground, occupied by several brigades of our infantry, and on the extreme right, perhaps a mile away, the earthwork called Fort Richardson. Turning to look over your right shoulder, you may see what transpires in the streets of Corinth. Without changing your position you may, by looking over the other shoulder, see a part of the division of General McKean, and the redoubt called Battery Phillips, which form the left of Rosecrans' line of battle. If you come to a right about, you see directly in rear the cut through the hill where lies the Memphis railroad, and just over this, on still higher ground, stands Fort Williams, with a 20-pounder Parrott looking out of each embrasure. Your own batteries, Company F, of Second United States, and Company C, of First Michigan Artillery, are ready for action on the high ground abreast of Fort Williams; all apparently so near, that but for their elevated position you might look down the cannons' throats. Here you waited during the long hours of the night of October 3rd, and here you fought on the morning of the 4th.

The removal of Davies' skirmish line, which by some mistake was not made known to us, permitted the enemy to advance so closely that, although hidden by the darkness, you could hear him planting his guns in the edge of the forest, not more than three hundred yards in our front; and during the night the commander of that battery (I think from New Orleans) reconnoitering the ground between his guns and your line, was quietly captured, mounted though he was, by Captain (since General) Brown, of the Sixty-third Ohio.

It was a night of suspense and anxiety to all. We knew that General Hackleman had been killed, and we had seen General Oglesby carried to the rear, with a wound we supposed was mortal. Hundreds more, wounded during the day's fight, had been borne to the hospitals, and the men of Davies' division, who had fought against great odds all day had been slowly driven back, seemed well nigh disheartened. You knew you had to meet an enemy not only strong and resolute, but who was also flushed with what he thought a victory. Hence you listened with anxiety to those sounds of preparation, so plainly heard from the hill, where, lying down without sleep, you waited for the assault. It seems strange, in view of the rapid and thorough mode of entrenching afterward acquired, that no attempt was made to fortify, especially since we now know how much superior the enemy was in numbers. But we had not then learned the use of spades.

With the earliest dawn of day, the Rebel battery in front opens its fire. What a magnificent display! Nothing you had ever seen looked like the flashes of those guns! No rockets ever scattered fire like the bursting of those shells! Not long, however, for as soon as there is light enough to aim, the 20-pounder Parrotts in Fort Williams suddenly belch forth and make the place occupied by the Rebel battery so hot that it is hurriedly withdrawn. Yet not all, for one gun has been abandoned, and some venturesome boys of the Sixty-third Ohio, with others of the First United States Infantry, run forward, and pull it into our lines by hand.* Then came fierce fighting between the skirmishers. The enemy had the cover of the woods, while our men crept from log to log, in the endeavor to gain the better cover of the forest. Re-enforcements to our skirmishers enabled them, after two hours' fighting to drive the Rebels back, and gave the shelter sought; but not far off, the conformation of the ground was peculiarly fortunate for the enemy. He could lie on the crest of a series of ridges and sweep everything in his front, scarcely exposing a man to view. Behind these ridges he was massing his men for the assault.

About ten or eleven o'clock our attention is diverted from the fierce skirmish in our immediate front by the advance of General Price's divisions, which are moving out of the woods to our right front, and marching upon the troops and fort which form the right of Rosecrans' line of battle. A splendid sight is that, as one Rebel brigade after another moves in fine style over the ground which our position overlooks so plainly. The attack is fierce, and we soon are shocked to see our line give way and retire into the very town. We notice, too, some of our batteries drawn out of position and rapidly pulled to the rear. The guns of Fort Williams, and of our own batteries directly in our rear, are all turned to the right, and an enfilading fire sweeps through the Rebel hosts with an effect very plainly visible; but, though disordered somewhat, they move on; fresh troops pour out of the woods, and we see the Rebels rushing over the works on our right, and pouring into Corinth itself. A rolling fire is heard in the streets, and soon after the Rebels begin to retire. They stand awhile at the works they had captured, but our boys are coming to the front again from the town. At this juncture, some regiments of Hamilton's division, not previously engaged, are thrown forward on the extreme right, where, as finely aligned as if on parade, they are pouring a stream of lead into the Rebel ranks. A little later, we say to each other, most joyously, "Our boys are driving them back again."

But a fiercer fire than ever opens on our own skirmish line, and a constant hum of bullets tells us that our turn is coming now; and it proves to be the Rebel center moving for the main attack upon the place we occupy. Looking through the trees before us, we plainly see the Rebel banners and their attacking columns advancing. The Forty-third changes front forward on its right company, and the Eleventh Missouri is rapidly brought forward and held in reserve, just behind the Sixty-third Ohio. Our skirmishers are driven back pell mell upon the line of battle; the artillery with us in Robinet, and the guns which play over our heads from the rear are firing rapidly, and some of your officers are running along the line ordering you to "Get down, and lie low, until they are close upon us." In another minute the head of a Rebel column, coming along the Chewalla road, is seen near by, heading straight for the Sixty-third and Battery Robinet. Now you rise to your feet, and pour into the enemy that steady fire which fills the road with his dead, and seems to cause a halt; for, though the rear of his column moves steadily on, the head of it comes no nearer, but appears to melt away. But the enemy is firing too. Along the whole length of the Sixty-third, and portion of the Twenty-seventh and Forty-third, officers and men are falling fast.

Some scenes here witnessed, though almost as brief as if revealed by a flash of lightning, are stamped indelibly upon our memories. Just where the Sixty-third adjoins the Twenty-seventh, three men go down together. One, in the front rank, is lifting his arms high in the air and slowly sinking down. The man behind, and covering the first, drops as if a thunderbolt had struck him; while another turns around, and with a look of agony upon his face, and trying to walk to the rear, moves but a step and falls. Captain McFadden of the Sixty-third shouts out his first command in battle and is dead! Lieutenant Webb, of the Twenty-seventh, endeavors to repeat the order to "fire low," and while his mouth is opened wide, a bullet enters. He throws up his hands, and falling on his face is still forever! But the men not hit, heed nothing; they fire incessantly, and their faces black with powder, make noticeable their flashing eyes and set teeth, so that they look like demons.

A minute later the column in the Chewalla road has disappeared, but a strong force a little farther to the west, is approaching the left of Robinet, and is making sad havoc in the ranks of the Forty-third. This regiment has hardly finished its maneuver of changing front, obstructed as is the field with logs and brush, and exposed moreover to a flank fire from the Chewalla road. A glance in their direction reveals a startling picture! Col. Kirby Smith, commander of the regiment, is down, rider and horse together. Some men now raise him up; his face falls over towards us, and we see his cheek is red with blood. Lieutenant Heyl, the adjutant, trying to keep his saddle, clutches his horse's mane, but gradually loses grip, and before a comrade with outstretched arms can reach him, he is on the ground. A dozen more along the line drop in that instant, and the enemy's fire, from front and flank, is so severe that for a moment a rout is feared; but only for a moment, for Swayne here takes command of the regiment and is steadying the line, and General Stanley, who rode over to the right when he thought that all the fighting was to be done there, gallops back in the nick of time to help. His coming at that critical moment seemed like the arrival of re-enforcements. And now this regiment takes sudden vengeance for its colonel's fall; for they drive back with great slaughter, the force which approaches to the left of Robinet, and shoot every Rebel who shows his head above the parapet or tries to climb through the embrasures of the battery, when the final effort is made very soon thereafter, to carry the work by storm.

*Companies B and G.

While the Forty-third is thus engaged, Colonel Rogers, commanding the Texan brigade, rides out from the woods, and with his troops moves along the Chewalla road heading for the battery and the Sixty-third. Another moment, his horse is shot and he is coming along the road on foot. His leading color-sergeant falls, when Rogers, picking up the colors, continues to advance with flag in hand. A cloud of Rebel skirmishers on either side of the road are firing heavily on the Sixty-third and left wing of the Twenty-seventh, until 48 per cent. of the men of the former regiment are killed or wounded, and the line is so much thinned that Colonel Sprague and I, standing behind, can look right through it, and distinctly see the advancing Rebels, now close at hand.

I shall always recollect how well Sprague looked at that eventful moment. Tall, and commanding in appearance, with sword in one hand and pistol in the other, he stood as a painter likes to portray an officer in battle. I shall remember, too, looking at the face of the Rebel Colonel, Rogers, when not distant more than thirty yards, and noting the peculiar expression it bore. He looked neither to the right nor left, neither at his own men nor at mine; but with eyes steadily upon us; and there flashed through my mind this question, "Is he stupid with drink, or is he simply resolved to calmly meet a fate which he foresees?" Before there was time to answer to myself the question, the Rebel column in the road seemed to gain some tremendous impetus from the rear, for it suddenly rushed on like a great wave, threatening to sweep into the gap which had been shot through the Sixty-third, and to carry the redoubt by storm. The supreme moment had now come; and I turned to give the signal to the Eleventh Missouri, in reserve, and close behind. The leader of this regiment, perhaps ten minutes earlier, had received his orders; they had been sung out over the heads of his men, so that every soldier in the ranks knew what was wanted, and there was no need to repeat them now. "Forward!" shouted the major, as the regiment sprang up, and I had to run to the right to let them pass. With a short, quick step, an alignment perfect, they filled up the gap which the enemy's fire had made, charging the Rebel column on the head. The Twenty-seventh, under Spaulding, which had lost heavily, yet still was full of fight, joined by the plucky remnant of the Sixty-third, rushed forward at the same moment, charging the column obliquely on its left flank, when in an instant the whole scene changed. Rogers, with many of his men, lay dead before us, and those who were not prisoners, were flying back to the woods.* One moment, the Rebels seemed to be swarming over us in thousands, our own lines looked thin and weak, we seemed threatened with destruction; the next, most of the living of the foremost Rebels were our prisoners, a few hundred, apparently, were running to the forest, while our boys seemed to have swelled into many thousands.

*At the time the Eleventh Missouri came up, a clean gap had been shot away between the two wings of the Sixty-third, and 18 men joined in the charge at the left of the Eleventh Missouri, and 127 between the Eleventh Missouri and the Twenty-seventh Ohio, and at the close of the charge the Sixty-third was the most advanced of the line and was requested to fall back and align with the Eleventh Missouri and the Twenty-seventh Ohio.

In the melee this banner of the enemy [pointing to a captured flag displayed in the rear of the speaker] was captured by a private of the Twenty-seventh Ohio, Orrin B. Gould, of Company G, whom I am glad to see here to-night. But there was one red flag, I think the banner briefly borne by Rogers, which escaped us by a miracle. Some bold Texan had picked it up almost from beneath our feet, and throwing the staff across his shoulders, ran in a zig-zag manner for the woods. He dodged behind a log a moment here, then behind a stump there; he was fired at by twenty men or more, and once, whether hit or not, tumbled headlong when striding a fallen tree. Yet he escaped with the banner after all; and as he passed over the ridge out of our sight, some of our boys who had missed him, gave him the cheer that was due a hero.

An incident may here be mentioned of the Forty-third. When the Rebels made their final effort to break through our lines, Lieutenant Robinet, of the battery, severely wounded in the head, fell senseless under one of his guns. At this, most of his men ran to the rear. A moment later, some of the men of Company A, of the Forty-third, entered the battery, and aided the few brave fellows who had stood their ground, to man the guns. The enemy was now retreating, and, in the excitement, a little drummer passed directly before the battery and jumped upon a log to see the Rebels run. A piece had just been sighted and "ready, fire," followed before the little fellow was discovered. When the smoke cleared up, we saw that both his legs were torn away. Somehow there seemed a sting in the recollection that men of his own regiment had fired this shot. And now came Colonel Noyes, of the Thirtieth, who was so far to the right that his men could only get an oblique fire, asking permission to bring his regiment to the Chewalla road, where they could take a hand when the next assault should come. Two minutes later the regiment was across the road, but the battle was over.

That thrill of ecstasy which victory brings, was here intensified by an act of the commanding general. Rosecrans had lost his temper when the troops attacked by Price had temporarily given away, and had hardly time to become appeased by their subsequent good conduct. Still nursing his wrath, and having seen Van Dorn had met with a different reception at the hands of this brigade, he was disposed to extol the men who fought near Robinet, at the expense of those who had fallen back. So riding to the crest we occupied and pointing to the right, he said: "I have just come from a part of the field where some of our troops retreated like old women; but now I know, not only from what I heard and what I saw at a distance, but also from these piles of dead along your front, that I am in the presence of brave men! So brave that I take my hat off in your presence, and thank you, in our country's name, for your great valor!" No soldier who heard these words will be likely to forget them, nor the appearance of Rosecrans as he addressed us, hat in hand.

The Sixty-third entered the fight with 275 men. It held its line stubbornly during the whole fight, and lost six officers and 134 men, killed and wounded. After the battle, the surviving half of the regiment joined in the pursuit of Van Dorn to Ripley, where the pursuit was abandoned and the regiment returned to Corinth. It remained in camp until the second of November, when it proceeded to join Grant's army. On the route it was re-enforced by a battalion of the One Hundred and Twelfth Ohio, which had been consolidated with it, and its depleted ranks filled up. *On the 11th of December it went into camp at Oxford, Mississippi. Late in the evening of the 16th of December, the Ohio brigade received orders to proceed to the rear and protect the lines of communication of the army, from the attacks of Van Dorn, and Forrest's cavalry. On the 17th of December it moved by rail to Jackson, Tennessee. Ten days were spent in marching and counter-marching, to intercept the enemy. On the 27th the regiment joined the command of General Sullivan. On the 30th of December Colonel Dunham with his brigade was sent to intercept Forrest at Parker's Cross Roads, and the Ohio brigade had orders to follow in the morning.

On December 31, 1862, at 4 o'clock A. M., the Ohio brigade moved out of its camp and marched until daylight, when it made a short halt for breakfast. Soon it is again on the move, in hunt of the raiders. Then the sound of cannon revealed to them that Forrest and Dunham are engaged, and that they were needed in the fight. In a moment the orders were given, "Unslung knapsacks!" and the road for a mile, occupied by the brigade, was strewn with knapsacks. "Brigade, forward, double quick, march!" Then began a march that was worthy of the name. The old brigade went to the front to the music of the battle on its muscle. It went for the purpose of getting there before the battle was over—and it made its legs tell.

Within an hour and a half it marched seven miles without a halt, with the ranks well closed and at a sight of the enemy deployed in line of battle on the double-quick, and within five minutes it had put Forrest's force to flight captured six guns, 400 horses, and 350 men.

This record presents one of the best contests made by an infantry against a cavalry force during the war, and fitly rounded up the service of the Ohio brigade for the year 1862. The regiment pursued Forrest's rearing force to the Tennessee River, and then marched back to Corinth over rough, frozen roads, without supplies, but subsisting upon forage gathered on the route. It arrived at Corinth on the 9th of January, and went into winter quarters. Their knapsacks had been gathered and brought into camp by train, and the scene when the soldiers reclaimed their effects was ludicrous beyond description.

When General Grant moved to Vicksburg, the Sixty-third was ordered with the brigade to garrison Memphis, and proceeded there May 16, 1863, and remained there until the 18th of October, 1863. This was the only garrison duty done by the Ohio brigade during the war. At the latter date, it left Memphis to join the forces moving to the relief of the Army of the Cumberland. On the 13th of November it arrived at Prospect, Tennessee. At that place, on January 2, 1864, the regiment re-enlisted as veterans, and returned to their homes in Ohio on furlough. The regiment reassembled at Columbus, Ohio, February 18th, and from that point returned to Prospect, Tennessee. Early in the spring the Ohio brigade crossed the Tennessee River, and dispersed the Rebel force at Decatur, Alabama. At that point it remained until it moved to join in the Atlanta campaign.

In the Atlanta campaign the Sixty-third participated in the battle of Resaca, Companies A, C, and H, deployed as skirmishers, were among the first troops to reach the river at that place. On the 16th of May, 1864, it crossed Oostenaula, and participated in the actions at Adairsville, and in and about Dallas. It sustained an important part in all the movements to dislodge the enemy from Kenesaw Mountain. After the evacuation of Marietta, Georgia, the Sixty-third, with Sprague's brigade, was the extreme left of the army; on the 20th of July moved to Decatur, Georgia, and had charge of the baggage train of the Army of the Tennessee, and the 21st it rested quietly in Decatur, without incident to disturb it. At noon on July 22nd, when the battle of that date was at its height,* Wheeler's cavalry with several batteries of artillery made a furious attack on Sprague's brigade, intending to capture it and the train. In this fight that slender brigade had a hand-to-hand contest for three hours with a superior force of Rebel cavalry, and succeeded in holding its ground and safely removing the train. The regiment lost heavily in officers and men. For his gallantry and the faithful work of his men in this fight, Colonel Sprague was made brigadier-general, and Lieut.-Col. Charles F. Brown and Capt. (afterward Lieut.-Col.) Oscar L. Jackson were brevetted brigadier-generals for gallantry in battle, and the regiment was complimented by special order for its gallantry. In this battle General Brown lost his leg while at the head of the regiment, and his adjutant, Fowler, was killed. After the fall of Atlanta the regiment was in the battle of Jonesborough. At the close of the Atlanta campaign, the Sixty-third joined in Sherman's "March to the Sea," sharing in all the dangers and privations of that campaign. It was engaged in the action at Oliver station, and participated in all the movements resulting in the capture of Savannah. It was at the front, and on the 10th of December, 1864, it charged across the Ogeechee Canal, under a heavy infantry and artillery fire, and obtained a lodgment on the Savannah side. The ground having been secured, the men stacked arms by running bayonets in the ground, removed their clothing and wrung it, and moved on to the fight; the enemy keeping up their artillery fire in the meantime. The Sixty-third entered the city of Savannah on the 21st of December, and remained in and around Savannah until the first of February, 1865. At that date it moved northward, on the line of the Salkehatchee River, and on the 3rd of February it was ordered to and made a gallant assault upon the fort at River's Bridges, which it was unable to reach by reason of the intervening river and swamps. At this point it remained in line of battle 24 hours, in water and ice from knee to waist deep, holding the enemy engaged in the fort until another force made a detour, crossed the river and turned the fort, when it was abandoned. It then proceeded northward and entered Columbia, South Carolina, on the 17th day of February. It continued its march with the army in a northeasterly direction, through the Carolinas; and it participated in the battle of Bentonville, the last battle of the war, and sustained its well earned reputation. On the 31st day of March the regiment had a lively skirmish with the enemy. The Sixty-third had shared, and borne a conspicuous part in all the great campaigns of the West, in Sherman's "March to the Sea," and in his campaign through the Carolinas. After the surrender of Johnston it proceeded northward from Raleigh by Petersburg, Richmond and Fredericksburg to Alexandria. Thus after sharing all the campaigns of the West, it had the privilege as a victor of marching over the battle-grounds of the east, where all the great campaigns of the Army of the Potomac were fought—and in its marches it had tramped the whole battle-ground of the war. It had fought in the lines with the infantry, and hand-to-hand successfully with the Forrest and Wheeler cavalry.

At Washington it took part in the great review, the grandest spectacle that the world ever witnessed—a veteran army in triumph, passing their country's capital, bearing their torn and battle-scarred banners, the emblems of a free and united country, eager to lay down their arms, to follow the advice and example of Washington, and pursue the avocations of peace. From Washington the regiment proceeded by railroad to Parkersburg, West Virginia, and thence by boat to Louisville, Kentucky, where it was mustered out on the 8th day of July, 1865. It was commanded successively by Col. John W. Sprague, Charles E. Brown, Maj. John W. Fouts and Capt. (afterward Lieut.-Col.) O. L. Jackson. Its colonel was made major-general by brevet, and Colonels Brown and Jackson brigadier generals by brevet for gallantry in action. Of the colonels of the Ohio brigade, J. L. Kirby Smith was killed, and Noyes, Swayne and Brown each lost a leg. Of its officers that became colonels of other regiments, one officer deserves special mention. Surgeon Arthur B. Monahan was always conspicuous for his humane, gallant and soldierly bearing. Whenever his regiment was in action, Surgeon Monahan was at the front, and the unfortunate wounded received immediate care and attention. Thus was many a life saved by his untiring devotion.

*It was in this battle that McPherson fell, near the Thirty-ninth Ohio, in the lines of the Ohio brigade.

The Sixty-third is proud that it was one of the regiments of a brigade that tramped the farthest of any in the army—a brigade that never turned its back to the enemy. It is proud of its battle-flag* and colors, and their staves bearing the names of New Madrid, Island No. 10, Farrington, Corinth, Iuka, Hatchie, Parker's Cross Roads, Decatur, Alabama, Resaca, Dallas, Kenesaw Mountain, Marietta, Decatur, Georgia, Siege of Atlanta, Jonesborough, Savannah, River's Bridges, Bentonville, and Raleigh.

Company F, Seventy-third Ohio Volunteers.

REGIMENTAL OFFICERS.

Colonel Orland Smith, mustered October 3, 1861, resigned February 17, 1864; Colonel Richard Long, February 17, 1864, resigned June 27, 1864; Colonel Samuel H. Hurst, July 13, 1864, not mustered, appointed colonel by brevet March 13, 1865; Lieutenant Colonel Jacob Hyer, October 3, 1861, resigned June 21, 1862, brigadier general by brevet March 13, 1865; Lieutenant Colonel Richard Long, June 21, 1862, promoted to colonel; Lieutenant Colonel Samuel H. Hurst, February 17, 1864, promoted to colonel; Lieutenant Colonel Thomas W. Higgins, July 13, 1864, mustered out as major; Major Richard Long, December 20, 1861, promoted to lieutenant colonel; Major Samuel H. Hurst, June 21, 1862, promoted to lieutenant colonel; Major Thomas W. Higgins, November 5, 1862, promoted to lieutenant colonel; Major Thomas Lucas, July 13, 1864, resigned as captain September 11, 1864; Major Abishai Downing, July 17, 1865, mustered out as captain; Surgeon Jonas P. Safford, October 26, 1861, dismissed February 18, 1863; Surgeon Isaac N. Hines, December 31, 1862, mustered out at expiration of term; Surgeon John C. Preston, February 1, 1865, mustered out with regiment; Assistant Surgeon Isaac N. Hines, October 26, 1861, promoted to surgeon February 1, 1863; Assistant Surgeon James Segafloor, August 15, 1862, resigned October 24, 1862; Assistant Surgeon William Richardson, March 18, 1863, resigned June 27, 1864; Assistant Surgeon John C. Preston, March 19, 1863, promoted to surgeon; Assistant Surgeon Smith D. Steer, February 1, 1865, mustered out with regiment; Chaplain Joseph Hill, March 13, 1862, resigned December 17, 1862; Chaplain James R. Stilwell, June 20, 1865; Adjutant Frederick C. Smith, December 20, 1861, died April 25, 1862; Adjutant John Spence, March 1, 1863, resigned May 16, 1864; Adjutant John B. Smith, June 1, 1865, mustered out with regiment; Quartermaster William D. Wesson, October 22, 1861, commissary of subsistence, July 17, 1862; Quartermaster Robert M. Rodgers, November 20, 1862, resigned November 5, 1863; Quartermaster William H. Eckman, May 11, 1864, resigned March 30, 1865; Quartermaster James Earl, March 27, 1865, served full term.

OFFICERS OF COMPANY F.

Captain Thomas Lucas, November 20, 1861, promoted to major; Captain George M. Doherty, January 1, 1863, died July 13, 1863; First Lieutenant Charles W. Stone, July 1, 1863, resigned July 5, 1864; First Lieutenant George M. Doherty, November 20, 1861, promoted to captain; First Lieutenant John Burke, March 28, 1865, served full term; First Lieutenant James Ross, May 1, 1865, served full term; Second Lieutenant John Mitchell, November 20, 1861, resigned December 23, 1862; Second Lieutenant Charles W. Stone, December 23, 1862, promoted to first lieutenant.

In September, 1861, Capt. Orland Smith of the "Chillicothe Greys," was invited to take the colonelcy of a new regiment proposed to be organized, and Jacob Hyer was tendered the lieutenant-colonelcy; both accepted, and the new organization became the gallant Seventy-third Ohio Volunteer Infantry. Company F of this regiment was raised mainly in old Washington County, by Capt. Thomas Lucas, and lacking sufficient men to raise it to the maximum number, he took the company to Chillicothe, where they were joined by a fragmentary company under George M. Doherty, who became first lieutenant, and John Mitchell, second lieutenant.

*Of the battle-flag of the Sixty-third that was once composed of the beautiful blue silk, with a silk embroidered eagle with spread wings, there remains but the fringe that adorned it when new, and about one foot square of the flag, near the spear point of the staff. The colors, torn and rent, still bear the names of their first battles (the latter ones being inscribed on the staff), and are stained with the blood of one of the color-bearers.

The other companies came from Ross, Highland, Pickaway, Jackson, Pike and Athens counties. It is needless in the space allotted us to go into separate history of Company F. Its history is so closely identified with that of the glorious old Seventy-third—that what we shall say of the regiment will include the company.

Few regiments had the fortune to participate in so many and so desperate engagements as this regiment. Starting as they did so early in the war and drifting almost at once into the great Army of the Potomac, they soon became familiar with great armies, great battles and great commanders. Company F was organized November 20, 1861, at Camp Logan near Chillicothe, and January 24, 1862, the regiment was ordered to West Virginia. Arriving at Fetterman, they there met the Fifty-fifth, Seventy-fifth, and Eighty-second Ohio regiments, also just entering active service. On the 3rd of February, the Seventy-third and Fifty-fifth Ohio moved to New Creek, where they found three regiments of Virginia infantry, a battery and a detachment of cavalry. They engaged the enemy at Moorfield for the first time, February 13th and 14th, driving him out, and were then ordered to Clarksburg, where they remained a month, when they went to Weston, where they remained three weeks, and then were ordered to cross the mountains and join Milroy, who took up a position at McDowell, near Bull Pasture River, where, on May 8th, was fought the battle of McDowell, in which the Union forces were out-numbered and compelled to retreat.

General Fremont soon took command of the "Army of the Mountains," and the Seventy-third joined its fortunes to that army at Franklin. On May 25th, General Fremont's army left for the Shenandoah Valley to engage "Stonewall" Jackson, who was driving General Banks' army down the valley. Then followed the battle of Cross Keys, the retreat of the enemy and the return of Fremont to Strasburg and finally to Middletown, where the regiment had a chance to rest and recuperate. While here Fremont was superseded by Sigel, and the "Army of the Mountains" became the First Corps, Army of Virginia. General Schenck was placed in command of the division, and Col. N. C. McLean of the Seventy-fifth Ohio became commander of the brigade to which the Seventy-third was assigned, including the Fifty-seventh, Seventy-third, Seventy-fifth and Twenty-fifth Ohio regiments. On the 7th of July, they were in motion, and crossed the Blue Ridge, encamping on the eastern side at Sperryville. At the battle of Cedar Mountain, July 9th, the Seventy-third came up in the night, went into position in line of battle and awaited the dawn of day, to join in the engagement, but the enemy did not wait for them. August 24th, at the battle of Freeman's Ford, the Seventy-third supported the principal battery engaged in that famous artillery duel. At the second battle of Bull Run, August 28th and 29th, the Seventy-third took a prominent part, going into the engagement with 312 men and losing 144 killed and wounded, besides 20 prisoners, leaving 148 for duty.

At the battle of Fredericksburg, the regiment was held in reserve and did not participate. In January, 1863, they were again on the war path, this time with "Burnside stuck in the mud" in his memorable "mud march" on Fredericksburg and masterly retreat.

Gen. O. O. Howard now took command of the First corps, superseding General Sigel at his own request, and the corps name was changed to Eleventh Corps, Army of the Potomac. General Barlow succeeded Colonel Smith in the command of the brigade. General Hooker now effected a thorough reorganization of the entire army, and armed and equipped them thoroughly. The work occupied the months of February, March and April, and the Army of the Potomac, 100,000 strong at that time, seemed capable of sweeping everything before it.

Then came the battle of Chancellorsville, May 2d, and the disheartening "fall back" across the Rappahannock. Then the race between Lee and Hooker for the north, Lee seeking to out-march and distance Hooker, and the latter bent on heading him off. Meanwhile Mead superseded Hooker, and on July 1st the two great armies confronted each other at Gettysburg, in which three days of tremendous engagements the Seventy-third lost half its number, among the rest Lieut. G. M. Doherty, of Company F. The regiment, with the rest of the victorious army, now returned to Virginia.

September 24th the Eleventh and Twelfth corps were ordered to Bridgeport, Alabama, to re-enforce the Army of the Tennessee, and the whole force of 20,000 men was transferred by rail in five days, arriving September 30th. They then marched up the Tennessee and joined General Thomas near Brown's Ferry. On October 27th, at about midnight, the enemy made an attack on General Geary and the Twelfth Corps at Wauhatchie, Tennessee, and the Seventy-third with the division was ordered to their support. The Seventy-third and Thirty-third Massachusetts regiments being in advance, and coming onto the Rebels charged up a steep and difficult hill, and upon arriving at the top were received with a deadly fire; but nothing daunted, they fixed bayonets and charged, driving the enemy in confusion from their entrenched position, breaking the Rebel line, and compelling the entire attacking force to retire from Geary's position. Indeed, as soon as the Seventy-third Ohio and Thirty-third Massachusetts opened their fire, the Rebel fire on Geary's line fell off. The conduct of the Seventy-third on this occasion was characterized in the official dispatches of General Grant as "one of the most daring feat of arms of the war."

In the battle of Missionary Ridge the Seventy-third formed a part of Gen. O. O. Howard's corps that was pushed out on the left to make a junction with Sherman, and took position on the banks of the Chickamauga, on Sherman's extreme left. Meanwhile Thomas and Hooker had made their famous charge and captured the ridge. On January 4th, the regiment went home on veteran furlough.

Upon its return the Seventy-third Regiment was assigned to the Third Brigade (Wood's), Third Division (Butterfield's), and Twentieth Corps (Hooper's), Army of the Cumberland. The Seventy-third took part in the great Atlanta campaign, and in the battle of Resaca so acquitted itself as to be complimented by the division commander for brilliant conduct.

In the battle of New Hope Church, they occupied the extreme left, and, though in an exposed position and suffering severely, held their position until nightfall, losing three officers and 72 men in killed and wounded.

Around Kenesaw Mountain the Seventy-third was in several severe engagements, losing heavily; in front of Marietta, Georgia, 16, and in another engagement 19 men in killed and wounded. On June 20th, they engaged in the battle of Peach Tree Creek, losing 18 men. The Rebels were now hotly besieged in Atlanta, and the Seventy-third was constantly under fire and in the front line of works. Upon the evacuation, two companies of the Seventy-third, forming part of a reconnaissance, were the first troops to enter the city. In this campaign of 120 days, the regiment had been under fire 103 days, and lost 210 men and eight officers out of less than 350.

On November 15th they started with Sherman on his memorable "March to the Sea," being in the Twentieth Corps under General Williams, and, in the left wing commanded by General Slocum. The regiment reached Savannah without firing a shot.

January 2, 1865, the regiment crossed the Savannah into South Carolina, and entered upon its last campaign. At the battle of Averysborough, the Seventy-third engaged the enemy, losing 15 wounded.

On Sunday, March 10th, they took part in the battle of Bentonville, the last engagement of the war, losing five men killed, and four officers and 21 men wounded.

After the march to Washington and the grand review, the Seventy-third was sent to Louisville, and on July 20th was mustered out, and returning to Camp Dennison, Ohio, was there finally paid off and discharged July 24th, after a service of three years and eight months.

(AS1)  $\Delta$  is a  $\mathbb{Z}$ -module. (H1)  $\Delta$  is a  $\mathbb{Z}$ -module.

Killed in battle, 95; died of wounds, 61; died of disease, etc., 129; dead of the regiment, 285; wounded, not fatally, 568.

Seventy-seventh Ohio Volunteer Infantry.

Colonel Jesse H. Hall, born April 10, 1801, died April 18, 1869; Colonel William B. Mason, April 18, 1804, mustered April 16, 1862, at the age of 51; Sgt. Colonel William E. Stevens,* March 7, 1866, mustered out Hays, October 5, 1864; Major General February 10, 1862, as lieutenant colonel; Lieutenant Colonel Willis De Lecompte, Colonel William L. Stearns,† March 19, 1864, promoted to colonel; Lieutenant Colonel Charles H. Morris,* March 7, 1866, mustered out as captain; Major Benjamin D. Fearing, December 17, 1861, appointed lieutenant colonel Ninety-second Ohio Volunteer Infantry, August 26, 1862; Major William B. Mason, August 26, 1862, promoted to colonel; Major Louis E. Sisson,‡ March 19, 1864, mustered out December 10, 1864; Major Charles H. Morris, November 14, 1865, promoted to lieutenant colonel; Major Robert E. Smithson, March 7, 1866, mustered out as captain; Surgeon James W. Warfield,† February 3, 1862, honorably discharged May 15, 1864; Surgeon Andrew Wall,‡ August 11, 1864, mustered out with regiment; Assistant Surgeon Pardon Cook, October 29, 1861, died August 31, 1863; Assistant Surgeon Andrew Wall, September 8, 1862, promoted to surgeon; Assistant Surgeon Yersley H. Jones, September 17, 1864, mustered out December 31, 1864; Chaplain William Pearce, January 4, 1862, resigned August 31, 1862; Chaplain James T. Holliday, July 13, 1864, mustered out December 31, 1864.

Captain William E. Stevens, company A November 23, 1861, promoted to major; Captain William B. Masen, E, December 2, 1861, promoted to major; Captain Louis E. Sisson, C, December 16, 1861, promoted to major; Captain Enoch W. Blas-Iell, D, December 12, 1861, resigned February 25, 1863; Captain Andrew Smith,† E, December 12, 1861, resigned February 5, 1863; Captain James H. Lutgen,‡ F, December 31, 1861, resigned March 16, 1864; Captain Andrew W. McCormick, G, December 31, 1861, brevet lieutenant colonel, mustered out March 12, 1865; Captain Richard Fouraker, H, December 31, 1861, resigned September 2, 1862; Captain William P. Robinson, I, December 31, 1861, mustered out December 27, 1864; Captain Albert Chandler, K, January 4, 1862, mustered out January 4, promoted to captain; First Lieutenant Robert H. Flemming, D, August 1, 1863, promoted to captain; First Lieutenant Nathan B. Smith, K, March 19, 1864, resigned as second lieutenant July 7, 1865, not mustered as first lieutenant; First Lieutenant John L. McIntyre, E, March 29, 1865, promoted to captain; First Lieutenant Leonard A. Marlow, C, March 29, 1865, promoted to captain; First Lieutenant Gordon B. West, G, March 29, 1865, promoted to captain; First Lieutenant Robert C. Berry, H, March 29, 1865, mustered out June 28, 1865; First Lieutenant Augustus McCarty, F, March 29, 1865, never mustered as lieutenant; First Lieutenant William W. Burris, C, March 29, 1865, mustered out with regiment; First Lieutenant Joseph M. Mitchell, A, March 29, 1865, mustered out with regiment; First Lieutenant William M. Atkinson, B, March 29, 1865, mustered out with regiment; First Lieutenant Benjamin T. Hill,* September 29, 1865, mustered out with regiment as first lieutenant and adjutant; First Lieutenant Henry H. Dye, November 14, 1865, resigned October 10, 1865, as second lieutenant; First Lieutenant William A. Day, E, November 16, 1865, mustered out with regiment as second lieutenant; First Lieutenant John Smith,† K, December 30, 1865, mustered out with regiment as second lieutenant; First Lieutenant Thomas Wiseman, C, December 30, 1865, mustered out with regiment; First Lieutenant James P. Daugherty, March 7, 1866, mustered out with regiment as second lieutenant; Second Lieutenant Joseph J. Steenrod,* A, November 23, 1861, killed April 8, 1862; Second Lieutenant David F. Jones, B, December 2, 1861, promoted to first lieutenant; Second Lieutenant Marion N. Burris, C, December 10, 1861, promoted to first lieutenant; Second Lieutenant Edward R. Moore, D, December 12, 1861, promoted to first lieutenant; Second Lieutenant Hanson Criswell,† E, December 12, 1861, promoted to first lieutenant; Second Lieutenant Oliphant S. Thomas,* G, December 10, 1861, died May 31, 1862; Second Lieutenant David A. Henery,‡ F, December 21, 1861, promoted to first lieutenant; Second Lieutenant Levi J. Fouraker, H, December 31, 1861, discharged October 21, 1863; Second Lieutenant Henry Hobbeltz,|| I, December 31, 1861, dismissed January 8, 1863; Second Lieutenant William H. Fisher,‡ K, November 5, 1861, promoted to first lieutenant; Second Lieutenant Robert B. Griggs, K, March 6, 1862, discharged August 5, 1862; Second Lieutenant Charles H. Morris, A, April 8, 1862, promoted to first lieutenant; Second Lieutenant Thomas R. Campbell, B, August 26, 1862, died September 25, 1862; Second Lieutenant Robert E. Smithson, G, May 31, 1862, promoted to first lieutenant; Second Lieutenant Charles J. Eagler, B, August 26, 1862, promoted to first lieutenant; Second Lieutenant Jesse Hildebrand, Jr., H, October 21, 1862, resigned January 23, 1864; Second Lieutenant Henry L. Pugh, F, August 26, 1862, promoted to first lieutenant; Second Lieutenant Nathan B. Smith,‡ K, October 21, 1862, promoted to first lieutenant; Second Lieutenant Gordon B. West, G, February 11, 1863, promoted to first lieutenant; Second Lieutenant John L. McIntyre,‡ G, January 1, 1863, promoted to first lieutenant; Second Lieutenant Jesse S. Province, I, May 1, 1862, mustered out December 27, 1864; Second Lieutenant Isaac B. Kinkadee, K, November 1, 1862, promoted to first lietenant; Second Lieutenant Samuel Fulton, A, February 13, 1863, promoted to first lieutenant; Second Lieutenant Robert H. Flemming, D, February 25, 1863, promoted to first lieutenant; Second Lieutenant Leonard A. Marlow, C, January 1, 1863, promoted to first lieutenant; Second Lieutenant Robert C. Berry, A, April 18, 1863, promoted to first lieutenant; Second Lieutenant William E. Smithson, B, November 1, 1863, mustered out December 11, 1864; Second Lieutenant Benjamin T. Hill, adjutant, March 29, 1865, promoted to first lieutenant; Second Lieutenant Henry H. Dye, H, March 29, 1865, resigned October 10, 1865; Second Lieutenant William A. Day, E, March 29, 1865, promoted to first lieutenant; Second Lieutenant John Smith, March 29, 1865, promoted to first lieutenant; Second Lieutenant Thomas Wiseman, C, May 31, 1865, promoted to first lieutenant; Second Lieutenant Joseph M. Mitchell, E, March 29, 1865, promoted to first lieutenant; Second Lieutenant William W. Burris, A, June 29, 1865, promoted to first lieutenant; Second Lieutenant Henry H. Clindenst, September 29, 1865, never mustered; Second Lieutenant Gamaliel J. Lund, B, November 14, 1865, mustered out with regiment as sergeant; Second Lieutenant Jeremiah Fish,† November 14, 1865, mustered out with regiment as sergeant; Second Lieutenant James P. Daugherty, November 14, 1865, promoted to first lieutenant; Second Lieutenant William H. Hose, November 14, 1862, mustered out with regiment; Second Lieutenant William H. Hanson, G, November 16, 1865, mustered out with regiment as sergeant; Second Lieutenant Christopher Black,* December 30, 1865, mustered out with regiment as sergeant; Second Lieutenant William H. Bingham,‡ March 7, 1866, mustered out with regiment as sergeant.

Early in September, 1861, the quota of Ohio being full at the time, Governor F. Perpont of Virginia, commissioned Jesse Hildebrand, of Marietta, Ohio, colonel, and Wills DeHass, of Wheeling, lieutenant-colonel, to raise a regiment along the Ohio River for the United States service. It was soon manifest that the men composing the regiment would be nearly all recruited in Ohio, and as the government would now accept them, Governor Dennison proposed to Colonel Hildebrand to enter the Ohio service, which proposition was accepted, and the organization was made the Seventy-seventh Regiment, Ohio Infantry. Recruiting officers were appointed October 10th, and the place of rendezvous was Camp Tupper, Marietta. With the exception of Company A from Monroe County, Company E from Belmont County, and Company F from Morgan County, all the companies of the regiment were almost entirely composed of Washington County men—there being some recruits from Monroe and Noble counties in several of them.

NOTE.—Officers not from Washington County are marked: * Monroe, † Belmont, ‡ Morgan, || West Virginia, § Cambridge, Ohio.

By the last of December the regiment was full and many men recruited for it were transferred to the Sixty-third Ohio Infantry. On the 9th of January, 1862, the Seventy-seventh left Marietta for Camp Dennison, where the regiment was engaged in drilling until the seventeenth of February, when it was ordered to Cincinnati, and at once embarked on transports for Paducah, Kentucky, for service on the Tennessee. Landing at Paducah on the 20th, it was assigned to Gen. W. T. Sherman's division. After drilling and doing guard duty without arms till the 9th of March, it was armed and brigaded with the Fifty-third and Fifty-seventh Ohio and Fifth cavalry regiments, and embarked on transports for Pittsburgh Landing and other points on the Tennessee. Colonel Hildebrand being in command of the brigade, and Lieutenant-Colonel DeHass absent, the regiment was under command of Maj. Benjamin D. Fearing. The regiment joined in the expedition to cut the enemy's communications by destroying the Memphis & Charleston Railroad, and landed at the mouth of Yellow Creek March 14th; but the heavy rains and the position of the enemy rendering this impracticable, the expedition returned next day and disembarked at Pittsburg Landing on the 16th. On the 17th it marched under General Sherman to near Monterey, in the direction of Corinth, where the enemy was in heavy force, and returning went into camp at Shiloh Church on the 18th. Still other reconnoissances towards Purdy and Corinth were made, and on the first of April the regiment moved with the division, by transports, to Eastport, Mississippi, driving the enemy from Eastport toward Iuka. After its return to Shiloh, the Third brigade, of which this regiment was a part, was encamped on the left of the Corinth road, the right of the brigade resting on the Church.

The Seventy-seventh camped on the left of the Corinth road, its right resting on Shiloh Church, which was used for regimental headquarters. On Friday evening, April 4th, Captain Mason's company, B, was on picket near the Lee house, in front of Shiloh Church, and plainly heard the beating of drums a short distance south. They wondered whether our troops were moving toward Corinth. When daylight came they discovered that the birds, rabbits and squirrels were coming towards them and passing through the guard line, being too much frightened to notice the pickets, thus showing that a large body was near on the south. Captain Mason at once established a few new vidette posts at favorable points of observation, and before noon a squad of gray-coated cavalry passed along the ridge, about 75 yards distant, several of them firing at the vidette. About two o'clock large bodies of cavalry were seen approaching the Union line, and filing off to the right, keeping under cover as much as possible. Soon after, column after column of infantry arrived at the same point, filing off to the right and left, taking up their position in line of battle. Several pieces of artillery also went into position on the ridge, just at the edge of the open field. Captain Mason, believing this display of the enemy worthy of reporting, sent Sergeant C. J. Eagler to inform Colonel Hildebrand just what had transpired, and then report back to the picket line. The sergeant promptly obeyed the order, and Colonel Hildebrand, brigade commander, says he at once went to division headquarters and repeated the report the captain had sent him, word for word. General Sherman ridiculed the idea of such a force being seen, and ordered the messenger arrested. In obedience to this order the colonel sent Captain Stevens, with a portion of his command, to arrest Eagler for bringing false and scary news from the front. On learning the object of his arrival, Captain Mason said to Captain Stevens: "You have not men enough to take Eagler; he has simply obeyed my orders, which he swore to do when he enlisted. Go back to headquarters and have the order changed to my arrest, for I am responsible, and have sent in the facts, as all on duty here know."

Captain Stevens returned, reporting the facts as related. Soon after, Colonel Hildebrand, with part of his staff, came out to the picket line, and, after saluting, said: "Captain Mason, what does all this mean?" He replied: "General, it means the enemy are directly in our front. Do you wish to see them? If so, ride to that little opening to the right, and about two rods in advance." He and his staff did so, accompanied by the captain, who pointed out the enemy, whom the colonel could see without the aid of a field-glass, when Colonel Hildebrand exclaimed: "My God! General Sherman has been deceived, for he told us to-day there was no enemy this side of Corinth, except some reconnoitering parties." He returned to camp, and took the precaution of doubling his picket line by detailing Companies C and G, Captains Sisson and McCormick, to relieve Company B, at dusk, Saturday evening. He also reported to General Sherman that he had been to the picket line, and it was true that the enemy were in our front in force, with the appearance of a determination to attack.

Notwithstanding these facts, orders were received near midnight, by company commanders of the Seventy-seventh, "Form your companies on the color-line at daybreak in the morning, move to the old drill-ground, and drill one hour before breakfast." Captain Mason, receiving this order with the rest, and knowing that Colonel Hildebrand knew the facts above related, went to him, and after talking a few minutes, casually asked who originated the order for regimental drill in the morning. Colonel Hildebrand picked up a paper from his desk and observed: "This is the order of General Sherman, but we know it will be a different drill on the morrow than any of us has ever seen." That order has always been a mystery to the Seventy-seventh.

Before daylight a battalion under Major Powell passed through our picket lines, reconnoitering, and at once became engaged with the enemy's advance. An orderly was sent by Captain McCormick to brigade headquarters with a report of this fact, and the officers in command of the pickets received orders to hold their ground as long as possible, and if hard pressed to fall back slowly, which orders were strictly obeyed, the pickets becoming engaged at daybreak. This was probably the first time Ohio troops were engaged with the enemy at Shiloh, it being in fact the opening of that bloody contest.

At daylight the regiment was on its way to the drill-ground, but after having gone a few hundred yards, was overtaken by an orderly and ordered back, to breakfast and fall into line immediately. It returned, but before breakfast was over the orders were: "Seventy-seventh, fall into line, quick! Company B will move to the front, deploy as skirmishers, and move forward to the Lee house." The regiment formed, and the skirmishers advanced rapidly across the bridge, about 50 yards in front, and were ordered by the captain to deploy to the right. In a few minutes they were directly under fire of the enemy, and many were shot down—among the first killed being that noble soldier, George A. Booth, of Marietta.

On the night of April 5th, Companies C and G, under Captains Sisson and McCormick, relieved Company B, Captain Mason, on the picket line. When the pickets were changed that evening, the enemy was so near that his outposts could easily be seen by our men. General Sherman had, the night before, ordered that on the morning of the 6th of April the Seventy-seventh Regiment should be posted covering the open field, to the right of the Lee house, near the advance picket line. In the morning it was found impossible to reach that position, as the enemy had forced the pickets to fall back, so that the skirmish line of the regiment met them between the Lee house and the creek which ran in front of the camp. The pickets were reinforced by the skirmishers, and the brigade formed in line of battle between the church and the creek, covering the road to Corinth. Here the battle opened soon after sunrise by a heavy fire of musketry on both sides, assisted on the Union side by Taylor's Chicago Battery. The enemy also had artillery engaged at this point. The line of the enemy, as they came down the western slope, could be distinctly marked in the woods, by the glitter of their polished muskets in the sunlight, and the fire was most deadly from the ponderous French rifled muskets with which the Seventy-seventh was armed. This position was held, with one slight change, for about two hours, and the valley was strewn thickly with the enemy's dead, while our losses were also heavy. After a bloody conflict of some hours, the left of the brigade was turned, and the Seventy-seventh changed position so that its left rested on the old church.

Writers of history give it the credit, in connection with the Fifty-seventh and a part of the Fifty-third, of holding the enemy so long in check at this point as to enable Sherman to save the fortunes of the day.

It was here that Col. E. C. Dawes, a Washington County soldier, then adjutant of the Fifty-third (in connection with Captain, afterward Colonel, W. S. Jones), distinguished himself by rallying a part of his regiment and fighting bravely. The overwhelming numbers of the enemy sweeping around the left rendered it necessary, as the day advanced, after many hours of gallant fighting, for the brigade to again change to the ridge further north, contesting the ground with the foe, step by step, and losing brave men by the score. Each chosen position was, in its turn, assaulted and carried by the enemy, till about the middle of the afternoon, when the line was formed and held till the conflict of the day closed with the dusk of evening.

On the morning of the 7th the regiment was promptly in line, waiting orders to move to the attack, but as General Buell's army had arrived and joined General Grant's forces, these fresh troops led the advance; and before noon the enemy were in full retreat without the Seventy-seventh being actively engaged that day—though being in supporting distance of the advance line the regiment was only a part of the time under fire. By the middle of the afternoon it occupied its old camp at the church.

On Tuesday morning, April 8th, General Sherman's division moved out the Corinth road in pursuit of the retreating enemy. General Breckenridge's division of Hardee's corps, with Forrest's brigade of Confederate cavalry, covered the enemy's retreat. A battalion of cavalry having reported to General Sherman that "the woods were full of Rebs," he asked Colonel Hildebrand to halt his brigade and send a regiment forward and "clean out the woods." Colonel Hildebrand selected his own regiment, whose position was in the rear of the brigade. The regiment moved promptly forward, and in a few minutes its skirmishers were engaged with the enemy. Coming forward into line and to a halt, a sharp fire was opened upon the cavalry brigade in its front, which proved to be Wirt Adams' Mississippians, Forrest's Kentucky cavalry, and the Texas rangers. In a few moments it was seen that the cavalry were about to charge, and bayonets were fixed to receive them. On they came with dashing impetuosity, discharging their double-barreled shotguns as they came, thus killing and wounding enough to thin out our short line of battle. When within a rod or two of our line they halted and emptied their revolvers on our gallant men, while still out of reach of their bayonets. Then a dash was made to make prisoners of the survivors, which was partly successful, as Captain McCormick (having his right arm broken by a gunshot), Captain Chandler, Lieutenant Criswell, and about 35 men were captured—several others of them being badly wounded. But for the timely order of Colonel Hildebrand, bringing the Fifty-third and Fifty-seventh Ohio Regiments to the rescue, the most of the regiment, and with it General Sherman, would have been made prisoners. The general had so much faith in the regiment, and appeared to doubt the report of his cavalry so much, that he felt sure of the success of the movement, and was almost abreast of the regiment when this powerful brigade of the enemy's best cavalry charged down upon its thinned ranks.

Among those killed in the battle on Sunday were non-commissioned officers George A. Booth, Lorain Burris, Jacob R. Batten, George A. Cavanaugh, John Cline, John P. Calvert, James Flemming, Benjamin M. Kimberley and John Sanford. Lieut. O. S. Thomas was mortally wounded, and died May 31, 1862; and Sergt.-Maj. G. B. West was wounded.

So great had been our loss in the first day's fight in killed and wounded, and by disease in camp, that the regiment took but about 210 men into this battle at "Fallen Timbers," as it is sometimes called, about 65 of whom it there lost. Among those killed here were Lieut. Joseph Steenrod, Andrew J. Duvall, William L. Porterfield, John H. Kepburn, James M. Baker, Percival Nott, Daniel Sipple, Lyman Wyss, and Royal A. Wright, non-commissioned officers, with 18 privates. Lieutenants Fisher, Fouraker, Garrett, White and Thomas Mitchell were wounded.

The regiment lost in the battles of Shiloh, including the fight of Tuesday, one officer and 50 men killed, seven officers and 110 men wounded, besides several reported missing in action—now almost certainly known to sleep on this bloody field in unmarked graves. Its loss was with two or three exceptions, the largest of any regiment in the army. Three officers and 53 men were captured, the privates being paroled in a few days and the officers held until October, when they were paroled and soon exchanged.

Col. Jesse Hildebrand, himself a gallant officer, in his report as brigade commander, says: "With regard to the officers and men who participated in the affair at Fallen Timbers, and at Shiloh, I am happy to bear testimony to the fidelity, bravery and devotion of all. Maj. B. D. Fearing, who was in immediate command of the Seventy-seventh Ohio Volunteer Infantry, was cool and brave, and acquitted himself with as much skill as an old officer of larger experience, and was not excelled by any other field officer who came under my observation." He also spoke of Captains Chandler and McCormick as meritorious officers—the latter being since brevetted major for "meritorious services in the battle of Shiloh." Captain Mason, also, was distinguished for the part he took in these three battles.

General Sherman, in published orders, speaks in high terms of praise regarding the firmness in which the Seventy-seventh held the position at Shiloh Church against such fearful odds, and credited with saving from capture the Chicago artillery. He has since said much more in commendation of these gallant heroes, which it is hoped he will put into form for preservation in history.

After the battle and up to the capture of Corinth, May 30th, the Seventy-seventh took a prominent part in the siege, being often under fire, and all the time engaged in building works and otherwise aiding to capture the place by regular approaches. It advanced in pursuit of the retreating enemy as far as Chewalla, and during June and until July 21st, it was on expeditions to Holly Springs, Mississippi, Moscow, Macon, Lagrange, Tennessee, and other places. July 21st, it reached Memphis, where the men did guard duty till August 27th, when the regiment was ordered to Alton, Illinois, to guard prisoners of war and recruit its thinned ranks—relieving General Sherman's old regiment, the Thirteenth United States Infantry.

Being recruited up to a minimum, the regiment was ordered to join Gen. F. Steele's expedition for the capture of Little Rock and other places in Arkansas, leaving on the 31st of July, 1863, for Helena, where it landed August 5th. It was here brigaded with the Forty-third Indiana and Thirty-sixth Iowa, as the Third Brigade of the Third Division of the Arkansas Expedition, and marched on the 11th for the State capital. The men were in fine condition, and endured the arduous march with commendable spirit. They exhibited the true spirit of tried soldiers in the various brushes with the enemy on the way. Halting a brief period at Clarendon and Duval's Bluffs, the army marched, on the first of September, across Grand Prairie without water, through a broiling hot sun in which many of the men were sunstruck, inflicting incurable if not fatal injuries, reaching Brownsville in the evening. On the 4th of September the regiment made a feint on the enemy's position at Bayou Meteor, accompanied by a few pieces of artillery, shelling them from their position and returning to Brownsville. On this march the commanding officer of the regiment, Col. William B. Mason, met with a serious accident; his horse becoming entangled in fallen telegraph wires, was unmanageable, and the colonel being thrown off with great force, received injuries which would ordinarily prove fatal, but a good constitution and the skill and care of Surgeon Wall enabled him to live through them.

On the 10th of September the army drove the enemy from Little Rock and entered the capital, where the whole army encamped till December. The forces of Generals Fagan, Marmaduke, Shelby, and others, were hovering in the vicinity and awaiting an opportunity to make an assault, and if possible retake the place. General Steele had the railroad repaired from Duval's Bluffs to Little Rock, and officers and men of the Seventy-seventh were detailed to run it, as well as to guard saw-mills in the vicinity while lumber was cut to build winter quarters. In this way, and in scouting the country, guarding supply trains to Pine Bluffs, and conducting court martial business, the officers and men were employed till December 20th, when almost all the men fit for military duty re-enlisted as veteran volunteers—a movement towards re-enlistment having begun in the regiment as early as October. On the 23rd of December the regiment started to Columbus, Ohio, where it arrived January 10th, 1864, and on the 22nd of January the men were mustered as veterans and furloughed for 30 days. Colonel Mason, Captain McCormick, Captain Morris and Lieutenant Fisher were appointed recruiting officers, and when the regiment reached Camp Dennison, the rendezvous, to start for the field, it had about two hundred recruits in its ranks.

Reaching its rendezvous February 26th, the regiment left, March 1st, for Little Rock, where it arrived on the 17th. It was ordered to march with General Steele's expedition, and left on the 23rd for Shreveport, Louisiana, to co-operate with Banks' Red River expedition. At Spoonville, April 2nd, a skirmish took place, but the regiment lost no men. At Okalona, on the 3rd, it was again under fire, having a prominent position and bearing itself creditably while aiding Colonel Goetz to drive a battery from its position. At Elkin's Ford, on the 6th, it next met and assisted in driving the foe, as it did again at Prairie de Ann on the 13th. The army was attacked at Moscow on the 13th, but there was not much fighting. Arriving at Camden on the 16th, and driving out the enemy, it was learned from telegrams captured that General Banks' Red River expedition had been defeated. Our troops had started from Little Rock with only half rations of hard bread and quarter rations of pork, and had been long out of meat, subsisting partly on the country. General Clayton had started a supply train from Pine Bluffs to meet Steele's forces at Camden, but it did not arrive on time, and there was much suffering for food. After its arrival, General Steele ordered the thoroughly effective men of the brigade, except the guards at headquarters and at two mills that were grinding corn, and the pickets of the division (which consisted of portions of the Seventy-seventh Ohio, Forty-third Indiana, and Thirty-sixth Iowa), to escort the empty wagon train back to Pine Bluffs, and on the 23rd it crossed the Washita River on pontoon bridges and left Camden. Colonel Drake, of the Thirty-sixth Iowa, commanded the brigade, and Captain McCormick was elected by Col. W. B. Mason as the senior officer present to command that portion of the Seventy-seventh that was detailed. About 200 of the First Indiana and Seventh Missouri cavalry and a section of the Second Missouri Battery accompanied the train. On the 25th of April this little force, guarding about 250 wagons, found in battle array over 6,000 mounted Rebels at Marks Mills, 45 miles from Camden and about the same distance from Pine Bluffs. The enemy had taken another route from Camden and struck on our flank at this juncture. The train was passing from Bayou Moro through Woodlands over a narrow road, so it was stretched out some five miles long. In this condition it was not difficult for the enemy to divide the regiments at the cross-roads and attack them in detail. This was done, and their heavy force surrounded and captured the two other regiments, after a sharp fight. Hearing the battle open several miles ahead, while they were guarding the rear of the train, the commander of the detailed portion of the Seventy-seventh moved his command forward on the double-quick, passing wagons and pieces of artillery mired in the swampy Moro bottoms. Moving as rapidly as possible the entire distance, and coming up almost breathless to Marks Mills, the detachment of the Seventy-seventh arrived only in time to find that their comrades had been captured, and that they must fight the battle alone. The entire force of the enemy, except a few hundreds left guarding the prisoners, now confronted the gallant Ohio boys. Quickly throwing out skirmishers to protect the flanks, Captain McCormick at once formed his command in line of battle, in a good position, and endeavored to protect the remaining half of the train. For more than an hour longer was the enemy held at bay by this little band of about 300 men, amidst a hotly contested conflict of arms. Twice was General Cabell's brigade in front of our noble boys driven back, causing the brigade commander to ask them if they were "going to let that little handful whip them." Meantime, Adjutant Flenning and Quartermaster Fisher, who had been sent out to the cross-roads to see if there was any danger of being flanked, reported that there was a heavy body of troops on the right, and another on the left and rear, threatening to surround the little Union band. These proved to be the brigades of General Dockery and General Shelby. Notwithstanding these fearful odds, the Seventy-seventh boys and their commander were unwilling to give up the conflict, but continued to pour well-directed shots into the heavy lines of the enemy, defying the leaden hail which stormed around them. After keeping up this unequal contest for about two hours the brave boys found their ammunition exhausted and themselves entirely surrounded and prisoners of war. The Union losses in this battle were 250 killed and wounded, and about 1,000 prisoners, the wagons also falling into the hands of the enemy. The enemy's losses in killed and wounded were much heavier, owing to the fact that the battle was in a piece of woodland, where they were unable to see how small a force they were fighting. Believing General Steele had reinforced the train guard, they were unwilling to make a dash to surround them at once, lest they should meet with a decided repulse; and advancing slowly in heavy lines, they formed a good target for the Ohio boys, who caused them to remark (when they found how few of our men they had been fighting), that they were "a dear lot of prisoners."

The enemy's loss was estimated at 1,000 killed and wounded. Three hundred and eighteen members of the Seventy-seventh, including 11 officers, became prisoners of war. They were marched, without stopping to eat or sleep, and almost without drink, 60 miles to the Washita River, before they were allowed an hour's rest. The commander of the guard apologized for this, and showed one of our officers the order of General Fagan, requiring him to cross the Washita before resting, lest General Steele should rescue the prisoners.

Captain McCormick was given the rank of brevet lieutenant-colonel "for gallantry in the battle of Marks Mills," and their commander says Captain McKittrick and Lieutenants Fulton, Scott, Marlow, Flenning, McIntire, David A. Henry, R. E. Smithson, Province, and N. B. Smith, also deserve well of this country for their part in the battle. They were all captured, as well as Lieutenants Atkinson, J. M. Mitchell, John Smith, Dye, Lund, Day and Black, afterward commissioned, all of whom fought bravely.

General Steele, finding that the Banks expedition had met with disastrous defeat, was compelled to abandon Camden. Leaving the place in the night, by a ponton bridge and a new road he had made, the enemy (which now far outnumbered his force) did not learn of his movements so as to overtake him till he reached the Saline River, at Jenkins' Ferry. Here, on the 30th of April, those of the Seventy-seventh who had not been at Marks Mills (having been left at Camden because they were on picket and other guard duty, or not thoroughly equipped, or not fit for duty), were, with the rest of Steele's forces, engaged in a bloody battle. Fortunately the enemy was repulsed, and with heavy loss. In this encounter the Seventy-seventh lost, in killed and wounded, about half the number engaged, and a few were made prisoners. Part of the time they fought in water knee deep, the river being out of its banks. Those captured by the enemy at Marks Mills, and at Jenkins' Ferry, were soon after marched about 200 miles south, and confined for 10 months in a military prison at Camp Ford, near Tyler, Texas, where 38 of them died from starvation, exposure, and disease, and one, John Calvert, was shot dead in a brutal manner, by a Rebel guard, for getting too close to "the dead line" when going for water.

Captain McCormick and Lieutenants Flemming, Scott, and Smithson, of the Seventy-seventh, and three men not of the regiment, escaped from the military prison one dark evening about the last of August, and started north, traveling by night with only the stars for a guide. Scott and Smithson traveled about 100 miles and were retaken near the Red River. The others marched about 60 miles toward the Union lines, but unfortunately the watch-dogs on a plantation got scent of them, and next morning two packs of bloodhounds, with squads of Rebel cavalry, were on their track. After a tiresome chase through the tangled woods they were run down by the bloodhounds, and brought to bay. As orders were posted at the prison before they left that all prisoners who might escape should be shot if overtaken, the situation was considered one of peril. However, the enemy evidently took care to count the cost of such a course, as assurances were given by the cavalry that no harm should be done them if they would surrender. Being taken to Gilmore, a squad of fierce Rebels, who probably never saw a Union army soldier, plied them with numerous insulting questions, which were answered in plain language without much care for the feelings of the doughty questioners. So they charged Captain McCormick with "treason to the State of Texas," and threatened to hang him for his pointed replies. The real soldiers of the guard seemed to relish the answers made to those who would insult an unarmed and defenseless prisoner, and they were restrained and advised to cease questioning if they could not endure the responses. The prisoners were returned to Camp Ford a few days after, where they awaited another opportunity to escape, finally made unnecessary by the arrival of the paroling officers so long and anxiously looked for in vain. On being paroled the survivors marched to Shreveport, Louisiana, about 100 miles, where they were placed on transports and conveyed to the mouth of the Red River, and there delivered into the Union lines February 25, 1865, except Lieutenants Flemming, Fulton, and Atkinson, who were held in Texas till the end of the war for attempting to escape.

After being clothed and paid, and given a 30 days' furlough, these exchanged prisoners returned to the regiment in April.

On the expiration of the term of service, of the few original members who did not become veterans, and of those enlisted in 1862, and therefore could not re-enlist, they were mustered out in 1864.

This left the command too small to maintain its organization as a regiment, and it was consolidated into a battalion of six companies, commanded by Colonel Stevens.

On the 5th of February, 1865, the battalion left Little Rock with General Steele for the Gulf Department, and was at Fort Morgan, Alabama, when the paroled prisoners were released, and were near Mobile when they joined it. It was engaged in operations around Mobile, Fort Spanish, Blakeley, McIntosh Bluffs, and other points in Alabama, in which Colonel Stevens and the boys won golden opinions, until June 1, 1865, when it took transports across the Gulf of Mexico for the Rio Grande, and remained on duty at Brazos and Clarksville, and then, from August 1, 1865, till March 8, 1866, at Brownsville, Texas, where it was mustered out and started for Columbus, Ohio, where the men were finally paid off and disbanded, March 26, 1866.

Only one of all Ohio's regiments remained longer in the service, and none served the country more faithfully, or suffered more for the cause of the Union.

BATTLE OF SHILOH

HARMAR, OHIO, April 5, 1881.

S. J. Hathaway, Esq.

DEAR SIR—I have received your kind letter asking me to write an account of the part taken by the Seventy-seventh Ohio Volunteer Regiment in the battle of Shiloh.

Cheerfully I accept, regarding it not only a pleasure but a duty to add whatever testimony I may to the honorable and important deeds of the Seventy-seventh in that terrible struggle of two days' duration in the woodlands of Tennessee.

Shiloh is rapidly taking its proper place in the minds of the people of the North and with military writers as one of the most important of the decisive battles of the Civil war.

The Rebels had made desperate and exhaustive efforts to muster an army so formidable that it would strike a destructive and decisive blow to the Union armies of the West.

They had gathered every available company in the States of Tennessee, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas and Texas.

The people of these States were by training and nature a warlike people and eager for the clash of arms.

Ten and thirty-day regiments and companies were eagerly accepted for this fight and it was generally believed in that portion of the Confederacy that a Confederate victory on the banks of the Tennessee would end the war in the West.

The army of the Rebellion in the West was then commanded by their most popular soldiers. The battlefield had become familiar ground to the Confederates long before the battle; their spies had the freedom of the Union camps; the condition, numbers and position of the United States forces was accurately known. It was well understood in their ranks that the Union army was badly posted; was without defensive works, unsuspecting an attack; and that the two wings of the army were hopelessly separated by the Tennessee, now flooded by the spring rains.

Everything was auspicious for an easy victory to the Confederate arms. Enthusiasm and confidence inspired both their leaders and men. There was nothing up to the hour of battle to dampen their ardor. A magnificent army, splendidly equipped, they moved as on a triumphal march with fresh assurances of victory at every step.

History does not give us record of an army that ever entered a great battle with brighter prospects. They settled unmolested in their camps on the evening of the 5th of April in battle line with everything well closed up, within the sound of the evening bugles and drums of their unsuspecting foe.

The Seventy-seventh moving at 6:30 on the morning of the 6th of April under orders received from General Sherman the night before, and repeated in the morning to me in his own tent (where I had reported information sent through our picket lines by Colonel Moore of the Second Missouri to this import, "That he had been sent out on a reconnaissance by General Prentiss before day that morning. Skirmishing briskly he had soon become engaged with a formidable force before which he was rapidly retiring in the direction of our camps"), received the first shock of that great battle storm, midway between their camp and the picket line where the orders were to take them. I have before me the official reports of Gen. Zachary Taylor of the battles of Palo Alto and Resaca de la Palma, also the losses of the American army in the battles of the Revolution.

A comparison of these figures with the loss of the Seventy-seventh at Shiloh will better give an idea of the bitterness of this contest, and the frightful losses sustained eloquently tell the story of the desperate, prolonged struggle.

Total loss of American army at Palo Alto (killed, wounded and missing)	55
Total American loss at Resaca de la Palma	126
Total American loss at Bennington	70
Total American loss at Saratoga	319
Total American loss at Monmouth	229
Total American loss at Trenton (this includes two soldiers frozen to death)	9
Total American loss at Cowpens	72

LOSS OF SEVENTY-SEVENTH AT SHILOH.

Killed, 1 officer, 50 men	51
Wounded, 7 officers, 110 men	117
Missing, since ascertained to be dead	7
Officers captured on 8th of April	3
Men captured on 8th of April	53

Total loss at Shiloh 231

Lieut. Robert McKittrick, the officer in command of the burial party after the battle, reported 226 dead Rebels in front of the Seventy-seventh's position while defending the key-point in Sherman's first line on the Corinth road at the church.

An officer of General Pope's army copied the following challenge from the door of a blacksmith's shop after they had captured Farmington, Mississippi:

"The remnant of the 10th Mississippi Rifles challenge the 77th Ohio Regiment to fight them in open level ground between the lines of the armies in front of Corinth." Signed by a commanding officer. Nineteenth Mississippi Rifles.

The Nineteenth was one of the regiments of the brigade that repeatedly attempted to carry the ridge at the church defended by the Seventy-seventh and were nearly annihilated.

The losses of the Louisiana Brigade, particularly the "Crescent Blues," of New Orleans (one of the 30-day regiments), at and near the church was something unheard of in war—nearly every home in that great city being in mourning for losses at Shiloh.

Although New Orleans was the largest, wealthiest and most warlike city of the Confederacy, it never sent an organized company or regiment to the war after the return of its favorite regiment from the fatal field of Shiloh.

The great loss of the Seventy-seventh can only be accounted for by the fact that, with the Fifty-seventh Ohio and Col. Ezra Taylor's Chicago Battery, it was entrusted by Sherman with the defense of the position at the Shiloh Meeting House.

It was well understood in the regiment that they were expected to hold that position, come what might against them until ordered away or shot away. They fought with a clear idea that the position must be defended at any cost. And unless wounded, no man of the Seventy-seventh left that fatal line until the order came from General Sherman to retire into the new line of battle, and then they covered Taylor's men and guns until they were safe in their new positions.

It was my great privilege from the first Bull Run fight to Bentonville at the end of the war to stand many times in brave lines of veteran soldiers and fight for positions.

Once my command of seven regiments of the Army of the Cumberland were sent in on Johnston's flank as a forlorn hope. Yet I fail to recall, in all this experience of desperate and splendid fighting, a more devoted, heroic, enduring and courageous achievement than the defense of the position at Shiloh Meeting House. It has been intimated that the first line at Shiloh was lost because the "Troops were green and untrained." I assert with no fear of denial from any soldier familiar with the position and the record of the division that defended it, that the line never could have been taken by a force from the front had an order of battle been issued by Sherman; or any preparation made before the battle to receive the enemy and maintain this line, or if the division had been united in one compact line and posted on the strong defensive position in front of the camps and been permitted to fell the timber and fortify the position. On that line were nine Ohio Regiments, two Illinois, one Iowa, four six-gun batteries, and up to the evening of the 5th, the Fifth Ohio Cavalry, which, of course would not have been transferred to a new command in the rear on the eve of a great battle if the battle had been anticipated.

There were no better regiments entered the service from these States and I doubt if any division in our armies had as many regimental officers who had seen service in the Mexican war or as many who had the advantages of military training. The division's history is a record of continuous, stubborn, successful fighting to the very end of the war, and no better record can a soldier have than that he served with Sherman's Second Division of the Fifteenth Army Corps.

A Confederate general who was in the Confederate front on the morning of the 6th of April pays the following tribute to the courage and endurance of the Union soldiers on that occasion, "Our attack found the Federals entirely unformed and completely unprepared. The only feature of the battle more remarkable than this thorough surprise was the astonishing courage and tenacity with which your Yankee fellows fought under such circumstances. I never saw anything like that before or since. It was a wonderfully fought battle on both sides, but my subsequent observation only confirmed the impression I had of the time to see such conduct on the part of troops taken at such a disadvantage."

These volunteers planted across the main Corinth road knew enough of the science of war to know that the fate of the day might depend on the time gained at this precious position. So these brave men nobly devoted their lives then and there to the cause of their Country. Like Custer's gallant men at the Little Big Horn they determined to stay there and go down together.

Two precious hours were gained, and Buell's men of the Cumberland were taking the long, eager strides that veterans take marching to the music of distant battle.

Grant was speeding to the front, calmly planning to meet the great emergency. Sherman at his headquarters in the saddle on the Corinth road was giving low, swift, impressive messages to staff-officers, orderlies and escort, that sent them off with the speed of important battle orders.

Alert, cool, courteous, speaking eagerly but quietly, giving marked attention to everything reported by all grades of officers who were constantly arriving (a few words from Sherman and they were all galloping away, low bending in their saddles as if Sherman was in the midst of an animated hornet's nest), with his hand wounded, bending before the pitiless rain of bullets to speak to an officer, eagerly watching the effect of the volleys from his men at the church and Taylor's rapidly-served guns on each fresh assault of the impetuous Rebel lines, now sending orders to the left when the Rebels were massing to assault.

He was a perfect type of a warrior at bay. The great responsibility of the supreme battle-hour had settled upon him. Defiantly, stubbornly, he seemed determined to break the exultant enthusiasm and confidence of the Rebel ranks at this point in the battle. He would fight here for the much needed time, for he well knew that Grant would soon be on the ground; he knew that the divisions of McClelland, Hurlbut, Prentiss and the two Wallaces were moving to his relief; he knew that every hour gained here would make certain the arrival of the men of the Cumberland, then marching in hot haste toward the roar of battle.

The German Commander at Vionville in the Franco-Prussian War thought the gaining of an hour worth the sacrifice of his best divisions of cavalry. History would have applauded Sherman if he had ordered those brave Ohio Volunteers to make their last fight then on the crest of the ridge at Shiloh Church, or if he had ordered Taylor to work his guns as long as there was a man of the battery left alive to serve them.

But grandly rising to the height of emergency he swiftly in the brief time so bloodily won made his combinations and a new close knit, compact, well-posted sturdy line was ready for the reception of the exultant, impetuous, cheering Rebels. He ordered the brave defenders into the new line greeting them cheerily by the way. Much as the soldiers of the Second Division condemn and wonder at Sherman's judgment and dispositions on the 3rd, 4th, and 5th of April, he won from one and all the highest admiration and new appreciation for his splendid fighting from the moment the battle opened. This grew with each battle and campaign and no unjust, ingenuous criticism can reverse this judgment formed in the clear light of battle.

The soldiers of Shiloh confidently followed him through the swamps and bayous of Mississippi into the jaws of death at Vicksburg. Confidently they stormed the bristling, rugged mountains of Georgia, thick-set as they were with bayonets and cannon. Confidently, eagerly they followed his fortunes through the hundred days of battle from the Tennessee to the Flint. Confidently without a question, they marched with him into history from the mountains to the Sea.

The heroic defense of the position at Shiloh Church; the devotion to the soldier's highest idea of duty in battle; the enduring courage and spirit born only in the smoke and carnage of battle of those volunteers will ever remain a theme that will kindle the enthusiasm of orator and poet.

It was this act of devotion to an idea of battle, a fight for time and similar deeds by the intelligent Western volunteers all through the eventful hours of that April Sabbath Day and the glorified list of heroic deeds of devotion to the flag and duty on many fields that will ever cause the memory of the volunteer soldier to be remembered with pride and admiration by their countrymen. And certainly no portion of our country has more just cause to cherish, preserve and perpetuate the deeds of her sons than Washington County.

Respectfully,

Your obedient servant,

B. D. FEARING.

(Signed)

Ninety-Second Ohio Volunteer Infantry.

COMPANY OFFICERS FROM WASHINGTON COUNTY

Colonel Nelson H. Van Vorhes, mustered August 15, 1862, resigned March 22, 1863; Colonel Benjamin D. Fearing, March 22, 1863, mustered out May 19, 1865, on account of wounds; Lieutenant Colonel Benjamin D. Fearing, August 15, 1862, promoted to colonel; Lieutenant Colonel Douglas Putnam, Jr., March 22, 1863, honorably discharged April 11, 1864; Lieutenant Colonel John C. Morrow, April 28, 1864, mustered out with the regiment; Major Dioclesian A. Smith, August 10, 1862, resigned February 1, 1863; Major Douglas Putnam, Jr., February 1, 1863, promoted to lieutenant colonel; Major Elmer Golden, March 22, 1863, resigned December 8, 1863; Major John C. Morrow, December 8, 1863, promoted to lieutenant colonel; Surgeon Josiah D. Cotton, August 10, 1862, mustered out with regiment. Assistant Surgeon N. J. Sisson, August 11, 1862, resigned August 15, 1864; Assistant Surgeon J. D. Howell, August 20, 1862, resigned August 15, 1863; Assistant Surgeon A. M. Beers, August 26, 1864, mustered out with regiment; Chaplain Washington M. Grimes, December 1, 1862, resigned September 9, 1863.

COMPANY OFFICERS FROM WASHINGTON COUNTY

Captain William Thorniley, mustered July 29, 1862, resigned April 9, 1863; Captain Francis H. Loring, July 30, 1862, mustered out with regiment; Captain Alexander Higgins, July 30, 1862, resigned May 9, 1863; Captain William Beale Whittlesey, June 1, 1863, killed at Mission Ridge November 25, 1863; Captain Hamilton Middleswart, July 20, 1863, mustered out with regiment; Captain James W. Merrill, October 2, 1863, honorably discharged May 24, 1864; Captain Joseph Stephenson, November 25, 1863, mustered out with regiment; Captain Bradley B. Stone, November 18, 1864, mustered out with regiment; First Lieutenant Hamilton Middleswart, July 23, 1862, promoted to captain; First Lieutenant Douglas Putnam, Jr., July 25, 1862, promoted to major; First Lieutenant James W. Merrill, July 28, 1862, promoted to captain; First Lieutenant Joseph Stephenson, July 28, 1862, promoted to captain; First Lieutenant David E. Putnam, February 1, 1863, honorably discharged November 24, 1863; First Lieutenant George B. Turner, June 1, 1862, died of wounds December 1, 1863; First Lieutenant Bradley B. Stone, July 20, 1863, promoted to captain; First Lieutenant Reason A. Bull, October 29, 1863, mustered out with regiment; First Lieutenant Charles A. Brown, June 14, 1864, mustered out with regiment; Second Lieutenant William Beale Whittlesey, July 23, 1862, promoted to first lieutenant; Second Lieutenant Thomas Day, July 26, 1862, resigned February 17, 1863; Second Lieutenant Bradley B. Stone, February 17, 1863, promoted to first lieutenant; Second Lieutenant George B. Turner, May 9, 1862, promoted to first lieutenant.

The Ninety-second Ohio was organized at Marietta, Ohio, during the months of August and September, 1862. It rendezvoused at Camp Marietta, then in command of Col. William R. Putnam. Nelson H. Van Vorhes, the colonel, reported and assumed command on the first of October, 1862. As an officer of volunteers he had been on active duty at the front since April, 1861, and while the regiment was organizing he was still on duty with General Mitchell in Alabama. Benjamin D. Fearing, the lieutenant-colonel, had seen service; was at Manassas as a private, had served on the staff of Generals Slemmer and Crook in Virginia, while serving as adjutant in the Thirty-sixth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and evinced soldiiership at Shiloh in command of one of the regiments of General Sherman's division. All the officers were gentlemen of experience and courage.

The men were the pick of the district— young, active, quick to learn, eager to do their best at all times, and proud of the good name and character of their regiment. The first service performed was before the colonel, lieutenant-colonel or major had reported or the regiment had been mustered. Adjutant Putnam, with Companies A, B and D, was ordered to move to Gallipolis, Ohio, and garrison that post at the time the Rebels were driving Lightburn out of the Kanawha Valley. While there they made two expeditions into Virginia. These companies soon after rejoined, when the regiment, numbering 949, rank and file, was mustered into the United States service, uniformed, and armed with Austrian rifled muskets.

On October 7, 1862, the regiment was ordered to Point Pleasant, West Virginia, and made a part of the brigade of Colonel Gilbert. It took part in the expedition up the Kanawha under General Cox, before whom the Rebels retreated and were finally, after some skirmishing, driven beyond the mountains.

At Gauley Bridge it was transferred to the brigade commanded by Gen. Hugh Ewing, and went into winter quarters, building log huts at Loupe Creek, a few miles below Kanawha Falls. They were permitted to enjoy these comforts but a short time, when they were ordered to join the brigade of Gen. George Crook and were stationed at Tompkins' farm on New River, which was at that time the outpost of the army of the Kanawha Valley.

After the dark days of December, 1862, when the country struggled under the discouragements of Fredericksburg and the seemingly indecisive battle of Murfreesborough, General Crook's brigade were hurriedly taken by transports to Nashville, Tennessee. The trip occupied over 14 days and was attended with many hardships on account of the crowded condition of the boats. Remaining at Nashville about three weeks the regiment was ordered to proceed to Carthage, Tennessee. The trip occupied a week, and in no way was it more comfortable than our journey to Nashville. Many of the men were compelled to sleep in the hold, full of foul air, and became impregnated with disease which soon developed itself.

Those two months spent at Carthage will never be forgotten. Daily, for weeks, one or more burial parties fired the last salute over the grave of a comrade as he was committed to mother earth, in a town where no one sympathized with them, and where each grave was counted as taking away one more of their enemies. In less than two months over ninety men were buried.

The colonel, N. H. Van Vorhes, was here compelled to resign on account of sickness, and Lieutenant-Colonel Fearing was promoted to colonel. Major Smith having resigned, Adjutant Putnam, by request of the officers, was made major, and after promotion of Colonel Fearing, was made lieutenant-colonel.

Health once restored, the regiment was ordered south of the Cumberland and joined with the brigade the Army of the Cumberland at Murfreesborough. The brigade, which was still under the command of General Crook, was assigned to General Reynolds' division, Fourteenth Army Corps.

The regiment moved from Murfreesborough on the 24th of June, 1863, supporting Wilder's mounted infantry—one of the brigades of Reynolds' division. At Hoover's Gap the enemy were met and driven back, as they were pressing Wilder and attempting to recover the ground he had taken.

The march over the table lands of Tennessee, through a continuous rain—rains 21 days in succession—bivouacking nightly in mud so deep and soft as to make it necessary to cut boughs to lie on. Mouldy crackers and musty coffee, wet sugar and some bacon, are pleasant themes for the survivors to dwell upon now.

On Elk River the news of Gettysburg and Vicksburg was announced in the evening of July 4th and was hailed by a salute from the combined artillery of the army. Despondent hearts took courage; and with better weather and better supplies and full of hope, the regiment camped at Big Springs, Tennessee, resting and enjoying the change as only tired soldiers can.

While here, Gen. John B. Turchin, the old Hungarian soldier, assumed command. His vigorous efforts to secure green corn, blackberries, and fresh vegetables, speedily eradicated all traces of scurvy and disease contracted at Carthage, and put the regiment in good condition, mentally and physically, for active work. They bivouacked by the springs at University Place and foraged in the valleys, moving over the mountains and through Sweeden Cove, stopping long enough to gather the green corn and ripe peaches.

On the 2nd of September, the regiment crossed the Tennessee River, at Shell Mound, in flatboats. On the 3rd it led the advance over Sand Mountain, and on the next day it moved to Trenton, Georgia. From here the brigade crossed the Lookout ranges, overcoming the seemingly impossible obstacles in so doing, and descending the Coopers Gap into McLeomore's Cove, passed up the valley into Catlett's Gap.

While here quite a sharp skirmish occurred and the regiment held the head of the gap. Skirmishing continued here for parts of two days, and the Ninety-second was busily engaged.

On September 18th a night march was made (one that will never be forgotten by those participating in it) to Chickamauga. The regiment engaged the enemy on that bloody field, under Turchin, on the 19th and 20th, and formed a part of the rear guard that saved the army. On the 19th, early in the day, Colonel Fearing was wounded and carried from the field, the command devolving upon Lieutenant-Colonel Putnam. Lieutenant Merrill was wounded severely, captured and sent to our lines under a flag of truce.

On Sunday afternoon Turchin's brigade made the charge necessary to open connection with Granger, coming to reinforce General Thomas, who gave the command in person to the Ninety-second to lead the charge, which was made left in front. This charge is described by Van Horn in his "Army of the Cumberland:"

The charge was made with great vigor, and the enemy was completely routed. Turchin's brigade drove this daring force entirely beyond Baird's left, capturing more than two hundred prisoners. This brigade *

* * * was posted by General Thomas, on the road leading through the ridge to the Dry Valley roads, to hold the ground, while the troops from the right and left passed by.

In this battle Lieut. David E. Putnam, adjutant, was wounded and discharged on account of wounds, and George B. Turner, orderly sergeant of Company F, was promoted to first lieutenant and made adjutant. Capt. John Brown was mortally wounded, and soon after the battle died; also, Lieut. G. T. Okey received a dangerous shell wound. W. B. Whittlesey, second lieutenant of Company F, was promoted to first lieutenant, and on resignation of Captain Thorniley, of the same company, was promoted to captain in June, 1863; hence was in command of his company in this battle.

The regiment returned to Chattanooga, living in dog tents, with cold, wet weather, insufficient rations, etc., yet bore all with patience and fortitude. They made several reconnaissances and were ready for duty on a moment's notice. They formed a part, with Hazen's brigade, of the forlorn hope sent to open connection with General Hooker's army corps, who were coming to the relief of the beleaguered and nearly starved army. As General Turchin described it: "Chattanooga was surrounded by two lines of fortifications, one built by brave men and one composed of dead mules, starved to death for their country's cause."

A part of the regiment floated past Lookout Mountain in scow boats, and the rest marched across Moccasin Point, and were ferried over as the boats came down. The movement was so carefully planned, and executed with so much skill, that the enemy was taken completely by surprise, and perfect success crowned the effort. The army was revictualized and reinforced.

About November 20th the preliminary movement for the capture of Missionary Ridge commenced. The Ninety-second, with Turchin's brigade, had been for some time expecting orders to assault, being in position for several days. On the afternoon of November 25th, the final assault was made. Captain Middleworth, of Company F, in connection with the skirmishers of the Thirty-sixth and Eleventh Ohio, cleared the rifle-pits at the foot of the ridge. The brigade was ordered forward at double quick, and swept every obstacle before it. This charge has often been described. Gen. John C. Breckenridge, who commanded the enemy's lines in front of this brigade, told the writer that the audacity of the attack—the sight of the steadily moving lines, silent but terrible in its advance—so demoralized his men that they became unmanageable, and, at last, gave way, not until there was almost a hand-to-hand encounter near the summit.

About half way up the hill the commanding officer, Lieutenant Putnam, fell wounded. Soon thereafter Captain Whittlesey was shot through the heart, but said to his men, "Go on, I'm killed," and breathed his last. The men went on, sweeping over the top, in company with the Thirty-sixth, while the enemy retreated down the side.

The summit once gained, no rest was found by the breathless and worn column, as a force of the enemy came hastily from the left to reinforce their fleeing comrades. Here, while rallying the men for this assault, Adjutant Turner received his death-wound, being struck in the head by a large minie ball. He lived for some days, however, but sank away.

By the death of these two young men, Washington County offered up her choicest material, and their funerals (on the same day) will ever be remembered. Both were brave and faithful officers. Lieutenant Townsend, of Athens county, was also killed, who was an excellent officer. The loss of the regiment was, in this assault, 33 per cent. of the officers and 10 per cent. of the men. They took many prisoners and two guns.

The next day the regiment, under command of Captain Wheeler, started in pursuit of the enemy and returned soon to Chattanooga. Remaining here until February, 1864, when, under command of Capt. J. C. Morrow, Major Golden having resigned, Fearing and Putnam both absent from wounds, they started south toward Dallas. They were engaged at Rocky Face Gap, losing heavily, some of the wounded being buried in the woods. From here they moved to Ringgold Gap, doing out-post duty. Here Captain Morrow was promoted to lieutenant-colonel, vice Putnam, mustered out on account of wounds. Colonel Fearing returned in March, and Lieut. B. B. Stone, of Company G, who was promoted from orderly sergeant, was made adjutant. The regiment took an active part in that campaign through Dallas. On the 27th of July, they were in line of Atlanta. During August and September the regiment was in the neighborhood of Atlanta, taking part in the charge at Jonesborough, Georgia. On the 4th of October, they broke camp and joined in pursuit of Hood, crossing the Chattahoochie.

At Kingston preparations were made for the "march to the sea" under Sherman, the sick provided for in hospitals, baggage sent to the rear or destroyed, etc. On the 16th they started. This march has been fully described, and no attempt to do so is needed here. They met the enemy at Bentonville, North Carolina, March 21st. Here Colonel Fearing, who was in command of a brigade, having been brevetted brigadier general, was severely wounded in the hand, necessitating the amputation of a portion of it. Passing through Goldsborough, Durham Station, and Raleigh, North Carolina, they moved onward through Virginia, reaching Washington on May 19th and taking part in the ever memorable grand review of May 24th. Having orders to be mustered out of service, it was transported to Columbus, Ohio, and on the 19th of June, 1865, the Ninety-second Volunteer Infantry ceased to exist.

Their first colors were literally worn and shot into shreds, the second set, now in the flag room at Columbus, are mute witnesses of their regiment's history as they bear on their folds in letters of gold these names: Hoovers Gap, Chickamauga, Mission Ridge, Rocky Face, Atlanta, The March to the Sea, Savannah, and the Carolinas.

The Silver Grays.

Among the many military organizations of Washington County for home defense, none was more self-sacrificing and patriotic than the one we have now to consider. The Silver Grays were among the very first to step forward and form in martial array at the beginning, and their moral influence in the community was great. Their appearance on parade, marching and going through the manual of arms was inspiring, and if a man had any of the martial spirit in him, the sight of these venerable men keeping step to the music of the Union was sure to arouse it.

Two of the members, William Warren and Junia Jennings, prepared the following account of the company in 1866, and we give it substantially as we find it:

Monday forenoon, April 22, 1864, was the time of the departure of the first company of volunteers from Marietta to aid in putting down the Rebellion, the Union Blues,—over one hundred men—under command of Capt. Frank Buell. It was an affecting occasion, such as was never before known in Washington County, and may never be again. Strong men's nerves gave way, and the patriotic tear and firm resolve were seen upon every face. There was a brief speech by George P. Buell, Esq., and amid cheers, the firing of cannon, and the waving of flags, the volunteers embarked upon the Muskingum packet from the common in front of the Congregational Church, thousands of people being assembled.

The citizens then repaired to the Court House and organized a meeting to take into consideration the state of public affairs. Hon. William A. Whittlesey, the mayor of Marietta, being called to the chair, secretaries and committees were appointed. Col. William West, then in his 66th year, arose and said:

"Mr. Chairman, I hold in my hand a resolution which I wish to offer for the consideration of this meeting. Such is the excitement of the occasion that I am not in the situation to either do justice to myself or the subject I wish to present; therefore, without comment, with the indulgence of the house, I will submit the resolution."

Silence reigned throughout the crowded house, and the colonel with a voice tremulous with the deep feeling that pervaded all present, read:

"Resolved, That we, the citizens of Washington County, whose ages are sixty and upwards, for the protection of our homes, our firesides, and our country's liberties, form ourselves into a military organization, to be called and known as the Silver Grays, of Washington County."

A hundred earnest voices seconded the motion for its adoption, and it was carried with a unanimous shout, and cheers for the Silver Grays.

A rush was made to be first to enroll their names. James Dutton, being a little lame, had started first and had his name first down, followed by William Warren, second; Colonel West, third; Thomas Porter, fourth; Junia Jennings, fifth; and so on. Subsequently, men of 45 years and upwards were enrolled.

It was resolved that each member of the company should supply himself with ammunition. The commissioned officers had red sashes, the rank and file, blue. A uniform was agreed upon, but circumstances did not favor its procurement. They were armed at once. George W. Barker, William Warren, and F. Wheeler were appointed a committee to ask the County Commissioners to procure a flag to be raised on the Court House.

Through the exciting days of 1862, especially when the Rebels pressed upon the border everywhere throughout the whole line, in August and September, the Silver Grays were out in full force and vigor. In the spring of 1863 their guns were taken by authority for use by a company of younger men, and that ended the Silver Grays, who, it is justice to say, did all the duties they were called upon to perform, and did them well. That they would have done excellent duty in repelling invasion, had it ever occurred, there is no doubt. Several of the members were deaf, and these were compelled to watch their comrades' motions to know what order the captain gave. Several used canes.

Their motto as set forth in the first article of their constitution was: "The Union, the Constitution, and the Flag of our Country, for the sustaining of which we pledge our lives, our fortunes, and our sacred honor."

ARTICLE 4. The company shall meet for exercise or other duty at such time and place as shall be determined on by the company on Saturday of each week at 2 p. m., provided that the captain or any other commissioned officer of our company is hereby empowered and required in cases of danger or emergency to cause a fire bell to be rung, which shall be a signal for the company to assemble at the court house at a minute's warning.

Col. William West was first elected captain, but declined; Maj. George W. Barker was then elected, but his time of service was short. For a time they met every evening at five o'clock, for drill.

May 11, 1861, three weeks after the first organization officers were elected by ballot, who continued to the end, as follows:

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS

Captain Daniel P. Bosworth, First Lieutenant Charles J. Sheppard, Second Lieutenant Rufus E. Hart.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS

First Sergeant Junia Jennings, Second Sergeant Thomas Porter, Third Sergeant Frederick Buck, Fourth Sergeant Hugh Brennan.

1864-1865

James Dunton, William Watson, J. W. Watson, Isaac C. Fuller, Daniel Protsman, E. W. T. Clark, Lemuel Grimes, Montgomery Sayre, John Skipton, Jacob Middleswart, Joel Denning, William A. Whittlesey, James Brown, John M. Slocumb, Theodore Scott, G. W. Barker, Isaac Maxon, John Goodman, Levi Bartlett, Joseph E. Hall, Robert T. Miller, J. W. L. Brown, L. J. P. Putnam, Henry Armstrong, W. C. McCarty, John Mills, Joseph Jones, J. L. Reckard, T. F. Harshberger, D. R. Sniffen, T. J. Westgate, Isaac Kidd, John Test, James McLeod, D. Stevens, F. A. Wheeler, H. H. Wheatley, John Miles, Lewis Leonhart, John Eaton, James H. Dye, George Payne, L. M. Parker, Merritt Judd, John Armstrong, J. J. Parker, Hugh Hill, Austin Edgerton, John Marshall, Hugh Clancey, Matthew Wylie, J. J. Preston, Barker Devol, James Dunn, George Greenwood, J. H. Nye, Owen Franks, Philo Doan, A. M. Shanklin, Calvin Hildreth, William Scott, R. D. Hollister, Elisha Allen, Graydon Medlicott, Robert Johnson, George Stanley, James B. Matthews, Stephen Alcock, John Richards, J. J. Hollister, A. L. Guiteau, B. F. Stone, D. Atkinson, David Wright, John R. Tucker, J. M. Eels, Lucius Brigham, S. P. Hildreth, J. B. Dyar, James Ferguson, William P. Skinner, Rosswill Tunney, Charles Sullivan, A. Woodruff, Warren Wilcox, John Stricker, John Lehnhart, Joseph H. Steward, Wyllys Hall, Shadrach Wood, Silas Slocumb, Jacob Snyder, E. Eveleigh, J. Pfeiffer, William Wylie, Colonel Augustus Stone, Nathaniel Holden, Jacob Lauder, David Cline, Austin Berkley, Amos Dye.—Total 107.

The "Pony Section."

During the war Marietta was prolific in fifiers and drummers. The first to enter the service were those who joined the Eighteenth Ohio Volunteer Militia, in the three months' service.

Ebenezer Corey and Louis Fourgeres were the musicians of Company B, the old Union Blues. After the Eighteenth entered Virginia they were distributed along the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad as guards. Ebenezer Corey was appointed drum major of the Eighteenth June 6, 1861, and soon went to Marietta to recruit a martial band.

This resulted in the enlistment of nine young men, most of whom knew nothing of the use of fife or drum, but who became quick learners. On June 17, 1861, they started for Virginia, learning the notes on the way. They were—Charles Holden, George K. Jenvey, William Jenvey, John Tenney, Henry Langley, Frank R. Brennan, Fred Regnier, James Judd, and Henry Corey, and others, among whom were Manly Warren, Louis Fourgeres, and Stephen Maas, from Washington County; they made the "Pony Section," so called from their size and age.

At Bridgeport they drilled and practiced—result a few tunes and sunburnt ears. They then went to Clarksburg, still training for the war, when they, with the whole regiment, were transferred to Oakland, and made a fruitless march over the mountains under General Hill, after General Garnett's Rebel forces. As the time of the regiment had expired, one hot July day they came back to Marietta and awaited patiently their discharge, with hardly a taste of hard service.

Their martial strains awoke many responsive chords in the hearts of the patriotic people, and the band was invited to take a trip up the Muskingum to Zanesville. Every courtesy was shown them along the route, and they awakened the valley by their ringing music. At Zanesville and Beverly they were treated with especial favor.

On their discharge, five enlisted in Buell's Battery; three with the major in the Thirty-sixth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, in a fine band, which timed the steps of many brave ones in their march to duty and victory; one went into Huntington's Battery, and one into the Second West Virginia Cavalry. All did brave duty through the war. One of them died in the service—Charles A. Holden. Such was the "Pony Section."

Colonel Henry and Lieutenant Thomas Moore's Washington Infantry.

Colonel Thomas W. Moore, mustered May 18, 1864, Washington county; Lieutenant Colonel Isaac B. Kinkead, May 18, 1864, Washington county; Major William L. Edmiston, May 18, 1864, Vinton county; Adjutant Thomas Day, May 18, 1864, Washington county; Quartermaster Allen R. Darrow, May 18, 1864, Washington county; Surgeon William Beebe, May 18, 1864, Washington county; Assistant Surgeon Benjamin F. Culver, May 18, 1864, Washington county; Drum Major Darius Towsley, May 18, 1864, Washington county.

COMPANY OFFICERS.

Captain Samuel S. Knowles, Company A, mustered May 17, 1864, Washington county; Captain John P. Sanford, B, May 17, 1864, Washington county; Captain Joseph J. McDowell, C, May 17, 1864, Vinton county; Captain William F. Dawson, D, May 17, 1864, Washington county; Captain Isaiah H. McCormick, E, May 17, 1864, Vinton county; Captain George B. Turner, F, May 18, 1864, Washington county; Captain Joseph M. McIlhinney, G, May 18, 1864, Washington county; Captain John Mitchell, H, May 17, 1864, Washington county; Captain David J. Richards, I, May 17, 1864, Washington county; First Lieutenant Wallace Wolcott, K, May 17, 1864, Washington county; First Lieutenant Charles B. Gates, A, May 17, 1864, died May 31, 1864, at Harper's Ferry, Maryland; First Lieutenant William W. West, B, May 17, 1864, Washington county; First Lieutenant Harson P. Ambrose, C, May 17, 1864, Vinton county; First Lieutenant John Randolph, D, May 17, 1864, Washington county; First Lieutenant Nathaniel Murphy, E, May 17, 1864, Vinton county; First Lieutenant Leonidas P. Pond, F, May 17, 1864, Washington county; First Lieutenant Augustus Leonard, G, May 18, 1864, Washington county; First Lieutenant Austin L. Curtis, H, May 18, 1864, Washington county; First Lieutenant W. L. Woodford, I, May 17, 1864, Washington county; First Lieutenant A. S. Bailey, K, May 17, 1864, Washington county; Second Lieutenant Smith J. Dutton, A, May 17, 1864, Washington county; Second Lieutenant William H. Jennings, B, May 17, 1864, Washington county; Second Lieutenant Robert S. Barnhill, C, May 17, 1864, Vinton county; Second Lieutenant Benjamin Arnold, D, May 17, 1864, Washington county; Second Lieutenant Samuel G. Scott, E, May 17, 1864, Vinton county, died at Bermuda Hundred; Second Lieutenant Benjamin F. Robinson, F, May 17, 1864, Washington county; Second Lieutenant John C. Wood, G, May 18, 1864, Washington county; Second Lieutenant Alexander H. Browning, H, May 17, 1864, Washington county; Second Lieutenant Robert Alexander, K, May 17, 1864, Washington county.

In response to the call of Governor Brough, the Forty-sixth Regiment, Ohio National Guard, numbering 654 men of Washington County, reported for duty at Marietta on the 2nd of May, 1864. Subsequently the Ninety-sixth Battalion, of Vinton County, was consolidated with the Forty-sixth Regiment, forming the One Hundred and Forty-eighth Regiment, Ohio Volunteer Infantry. The regiment was mustered into the service on the 17th and 18th of May. The officers were all Washington County men, except Major Edmiston and Captains McDowell and McCormick. The colonel had been a captain in the Thirty-sixth Ohio; the lieutenant-colonel had been a lieutenant in the Seventy-seventh Ohio; and the major had been a captain in the Eighteenth Ohio. Several of the line officers, also, had been in the service, and nearly the whole regiment had been tried, briefly but laboriously, during the Morgan raid of the previous year. Company A, in particular, had been called out repeatedly, and on two or three occasions had been sent to Virginia, when the border was threatened. An unusual proportion of the men in this company were students of Marietta College and merchants, and it is worthy of remark that during the 136 days' service it was the only company in the regiment that did not lose a man by sickness.

On the 23rd of May the regiment left Marietta for the field. Scarcely had the train passed out of sight of the town when an accident occurred to it, on the Union branch of the Marietta & Cincinnati Railroad, by which Jeremiah Stuckey, of Company A, was killed. John H. McKimm, of Athens County, and Alexander S. Nugent, of Franklin, Pennsylvania, students in the Preparatory Department of Marietta College, who were accompanying their friends in the regiment to Parkersburg, were killed. William Hildebrand, William Flemming, and First Lieutenant Gates were seriously injured. Lieutenant Gates went forward with the regiment, but he had received such internal injuries that, coupled with pneumonia, it resulted in his death on the 31st, six days after the regiment had arrived at Harper's Ferry. This accident, together with the subsequent death of Lieutenant Gates, cast a gloom over the regiment and throughout the community from which its members had been gathered. Although the youngest officer, and one of the youngest men in the regiment, no one was more generally known and more universally beloved than Charles Beman Gates. The various testimonials of affection and regret from the college societies with which he was connected, and from the officers of his regiment, are evidences of the high esteem in which this youthful, Christian patriot was held by his associates.

After remaining about two days at Harper's Ferry, the regiment moved to Washington, and on the 9th of June left that city for White House, on the Pamunkey. On the 11th it left White House, arrived at Bermuda Hundred on the 12th, and on the 13th went into General Butler's intrenchments at the front. On the 16th seven companies, under command of Lieutenant-Colonel Kinkead, left Bermuda Hundred for City Point. On the 9th of August, by the explosion of an ordnance boat at City Point, three men of the regiment were killed—S. E. Graham, of Company H, Joseph H. Smith, of Company D, and Joseph D. Clarke, of Company A. Young Clarke was only about 17 years old, was a member of the Preparatory Department in Marietta College, and was the oldest son of Col. Melvin Clarke, of the Thirty-sixth Ohio, who was killed while gallantly leading his regiment at the battle of Antietam, September, 1862. Sire and son, both offered upon the altar of their country, now lie side by side in the Marietta Mound Cemetery. The total loss of the regiment by death was 40. On the 29th of August the One Hundred and Forty-eighth Ohio left City Point and arrived at Marietta on the 5th of September. On the 13th a public dinner was given to the regiment by the citizens of the county, and on the 14th it was mustered out of the service.

BIOGRAPHIES OF OFFICERS OF THE WAR OF THE REBELLION.

MAJOR-GENERAL DON CARLOS BUELL, commander of one of the principal Union armies in the War of the Rebellion, son of Salmon D. and Eliza Buell, was born March 23, 1818, on a farm owned by his grandfather, Judge Salmon Buell, which has since become the site of the town of Lowell, on the Muskingum River, 12 miles above Marietta. He was named after an uncle, Don Carlos Buell, a young lawyer of Ithaca, New York, who entered the volunteer service as a captain of artillery, and died on the Canada frontier, in the War of 1812. The lines of his progenitors on both sides come together again in the sixth preceding generation in the person of Samuel Buell, born at Windsor, Connecticut, September 2, 1641. Judge Salmon Buell, on the grandfather's side, a lawyer by profession, was born in New York in 1764, served at the age of 16 in the Revolutionary War, and became a Senator and Judge of the Court of Appeals of New York. He moved to Marietta about the year 1816, and in 1824 to Hamilton County, where he died in 1828. Capt. Timothy Buell, the grandfather on the mother's side, was born in Connecticut in 1768, moved to Marietta in 1789, and died on his farm three miles above that place in 1837. He served in the War of 1812, represented Washington County in the Legislature, and was Sheriff of the county several years.

Soon after the death of his father, which occurred in August, 1823, the subject of this sketch was taken under the care of his uncle, George P. Buell, Esq., of Lawrenceburg, Indiana; and with an intermission of about five years, passed in Marietta under the roof of his stepfather, George W. Dunley, Esq., he remained with his relations at Lawrenceburg until 1837, when he was appointed to a cadetship at West Point. He was graduated and commissioned in the army in 1841, and served in the Florida War and in the West until the Mexican War. He served through that war from the beginning to the end; participating in the battles of Palo Alto, Resaca de la Palma, Monterey, the siege of Vera Cruz, and the battles of Contreras and Churubusco, and received the brevet of captain and major. He was severely wounded in the battle of Churubusco. The following record of his grades up to 1850 is taken from Gardner's "Military Dictionary," published in that year:

Don Carlos Buell, cadet in 1837; second lieutenant Third Infantry 1st of July, 1841; first lieutenant June, 1846; brevet captain for gallant and meritorious conduct in the several conflicts at Monterey, Mexico, 23rd of September, 1846; distinguished in battle of Cerro Gordo; brevet major for gallant and meritorious conduct in the battles of Contreras and Cherubusco, 20th August, 1847, and severely wounded in the latter; assistant adjutant general, January, 1848.

He was on duty in Washington in 1848, and subsequently, up to the War of the Rebellion, served as assistant adjutant general at various department headquarters, in the East, West, South, and on the Pacific, and in the War Department at Washington. In December, 1860, he was sent by Mr. Floyd, Secretary of War, to Charleston, South Carolina, with verbal instructions for Major Robert Anderson, who was in command of the Government troops in the harbor, under the critical circumstances which the movement of Secession had already created. After inspecting the forts, and making some suggestions with reference to their preparation for defense, he communicated verbally to Major Anderson the instructions he had received, and then a written memorandum of them, foreseeing the responsibility which coming events were likely to throw upon that officer. This memorandum, which is published in the Robinson record, has a historical interest, since it contains the authority upon which Major Anderson took the decisive step of abandoning Fort Moultrie, and concentrating his command in Fort Sumter.

Memorandum of verbal instructions to Major Anderson, First Artillery, commanding Fort Moultrie, South Carolina:

THE MEMORANDUM OF THE SECRETARY OF WAR.

December 31, 1860.

You are aware of the great anxiety of the Secretary of War that the interests of the people of this State shall be avoided, and of his studied determination to pursue a course with reference to the military force in this harbor which shall guard against such a collision. He has, therefore, carefully abstained from increasing the force at this point, or taking any measures which might add to the present excited state of the public mind, or which would throw any doubt on the confidence he feels that South Carolina will not attempt, by violence, to obtain possession of the public works, or interfere with their occupancy.

But as the counsel and acts of rash and impulsive persons may possibly disappoint these expectations of the government, he deems it proper that you should be prepared with instructions to meet so unhappy a contingency. He has, therefore, directed me, verbally, to give you such instructions.

You are carefully to avoid every act which would needlessly tend to provoke aggression; and for that reason you are not, without evident and imminent necessity, to take up any position which could be construed into the assumption of a hostile attitude. But you are to hold possession of the forts in this harbor, and if attacked you are to defend yourself to the last extremity.

The smallness of your force will not permit you, perhaps, to occupy more than one of the three forts, but an attack on, or attempt to take possession of, any one of them, will be regarded as an act of hostility, and you may then put your command into either of them which you may deem most proper to increase its power of resistance.

You are also authorized to take similar steps whenever you have tangible evidence of a design to proceed to a hostile act.

D. C. BUELL,

Assistant Adjutant General.

The commencement of the Civil War found General Buell a lieutenant-colonel, and a little later colonel, and the third officer in rank in the adjutant general's department of the regular army. He was under orders for duty on the Pacific Coast in April, 1861, and sailed for San Francisco a few days after the firing on Fort Sumter. He was commissioned a brigadier-general and recalled to Washington in August. In September and October he organized and disciplined a division in the Army of the Potomac, and on the 12th of November was assigned to the command of the "Department of the Ohio, composed of the States of Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, that portion of Kentucky east of the Cumberland River, and the State of Tennessee, with headquarters at Louisville, Kentucky." Next to the department of the Potomac, this was regarded the most important command in the contest which was then opening. The condition of affairs in Kentucky was thought to be extremely critical. One-third of the State was in the possession of the Rebel forces, under whose protection a provisional government was inaugurated at Russellville; while further invasion was threatened from East Tennessee by Zollicoffer through Cumberland Gap, and by Humphrey Marshall from Virginia through Pound Gap. It was affirmed that the Union element was confined in a great part to the old men, and that the mass of the young men were on the eve of joining the Rebel ranks; and many persons believed that a strong and prudent hand was required to preserve the State from a condition of practical, if not avowed, revolt. The government had in the State a new and imperfectly organized force of about 25,000 men, while General Sherman, who had recently relieved General Anderson in the command, reported to the War Department that the occasion demanded 200,000 men. Under these circumstances General Buell assumed command at Louisville on the 15th of November, relieving General Sherman, and entered upon the task before him. That task was to gather in the raw regiments that were forming in the different States of his department; organize, equip, and discipline an army; maintain the supremacy of the Union; control the secession element, and give confidence to the loyal citizens of Kentucky; expel from its borders the armed forces of the Confederacy, and carry the arms and authority of the government into the States in rebellion. Those who fail to keep in mind the general state of confusion and excitement which pervaded the country at that time, the passion and energy of the insurrection, the magnitude of the physical obstacles to be overcome, the total lack of military training and experience among the people, and the scarcity of available officers for the various staff functions, will not appreciate the difficulty of the work to be performed or do justice to the services of that early period of the war, in comparison with those of a later date, when the military arm of the government had by practice grown strong and skillful, and the power and confidence of the Confederacy had received its first fatal shock. The army which General Buell then formed and put into the field, called the Army of the Ohio, afterwards the Army of the Cumberland, was the largest of the original army organizations except the Army of the Potomac, and it assumed from the first an efficiency and esprit de corps which gave it a marked prominence in the subsequent events of the war.

While the work of organization was going on, the aggressive attitude of the enemy had to be counteracted, and, as is usual under such circumstances, the temper of the Southern people and the enthusiasm of revolution gave to their troops a sort of efficiency which had to be offset by the steadier methods of discipline in the Northern armies. The main Confederate line at Bowling Green, under Albert Sidney Johnston, menaced Louisville, and its partisan cavalry, rendered exceptionally efficient for such service by the personal qualities of the material, and operating in a hot, unfriendly population, produced results which were altogether out of proportion to its numerical strength. To repel an invasion in Northeastern Kentucky under Gen. Humphrey Marshall, a brigade was organized and placed under the command of General Garfield, then colonel of the Forty-second Ohio infantry, who defeated Marshall in several engagements, and drove him out of the State.

In December, the Confederate general, George B. Crittenden, recently assigned to the command of General Zoalcoffer's column, crossed the Cumberland River nearly opposite Somerset, fortified himself at Mill Spring, and threatened Central Kentucky. On the 31st of December, Gen. George H. Thomas was sent with his division, to attack him. The battle of Mill Spring, with a signal victory to the Union arms, was the result of this expedition. Various other expeditions and operations of minor importance, were also executed.

The subject of a general plan of campaign, to be executed as soon as the necessary force was prepared, received the early attention of the new commander, and in a letter, written 12 days after his arrival in Louisville, he submitted to the general-in-chief, General McClellan, his views on that subject. The same plan was, a little later, proposed to General Halleck, who commanded the adjoining department—Missouri. The main Confederate force in the West, under the command of General Albert Sidney Johnston, with headquarters at Bowling Green, Kentucky, occupied Bowling Green, fortified behind Barren River, Fort Donelson, on the Cumberland; Fort Henry, on the Tennessee, and Columbus, on the Mississippi. General Buell's plans proposed that Halleck, with a land and naval force, should attack the center of this line on the Cumberland and Tennessee, while we attacked or turned Bowling Green and moved directly on Nashville. This plan, substantially, was at length executed, though without the concert which, would perhaps, have given better results. General Halleck was not prepared to co-operate when invited, and finally moved without concert, having no idea of further progress than the capture of Fort Henry. But the prompt re-enforcements, amounting first and last to 24 regiments, with artillery, sent by Buell to the river expedition, and his movement upon Bowling Green and Nashville, brought about a more complete and extended success than Halleck contemplated.

The authorship of the general plan of these operations has been the subject of considerable discussion, though it is difficult to see how there should be any doubt about the matter. It has been claimed by General Grant for himself, and General Sherman claimed it for General Halleck; the letter on which Grant's claim is based was dated the 29th of January, and only proposed to capture Forts Henry and Donelson, and the official records show that the subject was not broached by Halleck before the 20th of January. The following are the letters in which the plan was proposed to Generals McClellan and Halleck, by General Buell, on the 27th of November and 3rd of January, respectively:

LOUISVILLE, KENTUCKY, November 27, 1861.

MY DEAR GENERAL: I have not written you very frequently because I could not write definitely, and because such, perhaps, exaggerated importance do I attach to secrecy in these matters, that I have hesitated to put my own thoughts to paper, and I now ask you to keep them to yourself. It is certainly possible that in the end you may have to observe how far the consummation will have fallen short of my plans.

I hope you have not supposed that the introduction of the re-enforcements through this point has had any reference to a defense of Louisville. That has not entered my mind at all. I assume that to be safe in any event. I do not place high estimate on Buckner's force at Bowling Green, and I have no such thought as that he will attempt to advance. His position is purely defensive, and he will be quite content if he can maintain that. I have, therefore, thought of no such thing as fortifying Louisville. Sherman threw up a little work at the mouth of Salt River. It may have been judicious when he did it. I have not seen the necessity of it since, though it does no harm.

If you will look carefully at the map you will see that Louisville affords the best base that can be taken for land operations from the north upon any part of Tennessee. The railroad to Lebanon curves around to the northeast behind Salt River, giving, besides the Nashville Railroad, three good pike roads, which converge to a point of easy communication for three columns about Glasgow—one by the mouth of Salt River, coming into the railroad at Elizabethtown, one by Bardstown and New Haven, and coming into the direct pike road to Gallatin and Nashville, and one by Lebanon, Shepardsville, and Greensburgh into the same road, while Lebanon junction, New Haven and Lebanon form convenient points for the departure of as many columns. Lebanon also affords a point of departure for a column on East Tennessee as short as any route; for wagon transportation as short as the route from Cincinnati by Lexington, and shorter and less attended with delay by railroad. Nothing could be more convenient. This point has the further advantage of bringing everything under my eye. I could know nothing of what would be done from a base at Cincinnati. These advantages will not fail to impress themselves upon you without going more into detail.

And now for a plan of campaign. Up to the organization of columns behind Salt River, all the plans I have in view at present concur. Beyond that they diverge, and may be stated briefly thus: First, to establish a sufficient force before Bowling Green to hold Buckner there, while a column moves into East Tennessee by Somerset, and the route we had in view; second, to hold him in check while a column moves rapidly past him on Nashville by the turnpike via Gallatin; and third, holding him in check at Bowling Green and throwing in columns on both the Somerset and Nashville routes. The choice of these must depend on circumstances, which may vary in the meantime, or which may not now be clearly perceived. In conjunction with either of these should be the movement of the florilla columns on the Tennessee and Cumberland, so as at least to land and winter near the State line, and cut off communication between Bowling Green and Columbus, and perhaps run directly into Nashville. A strong demonstration should, at the same time, be made on Columbus by the Mississippi. The details of all this, such as the destruction of railroads, so as to cut off communication, and a thousand other details, I do not go into, nor is it necessary. You can imagine them all.

All this, I hope, you will at least say looks plausible; more than that, I hope it is reasonable, and believe it is practicable, though I would not like you to forget that circumstances not fully foreseen may mar it in part. For the water movements, means are necessary which I have not the control of; that is, gunboats and transports. The troops which you promise from Missouri could be used for the purpose, and ought to move at my signal. I should take the troops from Paducah for one of them, and replace them by those which probably would not be as well disciplined and equipped.

Thus far I have studiously avoided any movements which to the enemy would have the appearance of activity or method. The points occupied are pretty much the same as when I arrived, except that a regiment has now and then been moved into position, and Thomas has gradually been closing in upon Lebanon. I shall in a couple of days, at most, complete the matter of organizing brigades and divisions as the troops come in, and begin to get them into position. We are now "lying around somewhat loose," and I shall not care much if some of our fragments have to look sharply after themselves. We are at the mouth of Salt River, Elizabethtown, Nolin, Columbia, Campbellville, at the points on the Lebanon Railroad, Somerset, London, Crab Orchard, and Dick Robinson, and on the Lower Green River. The latter force is composed mostly of Kentucky regiments, half organized. I shall probably keep them to make a demonstration on Russellville and Hopkinsville at the proper time. We have occasional stampedes at the outposts, but I do not allow myself to be much troubled about them. Such an one we have now on the lower Green River, where Breckenridge is said to be advancing with 8,000 men. He may have 2,500 or 3,000. Another at Somerset, where Zollicoffer is said to be crossing with 10,000. He may have 4,000 or 5,000, and he may cross a regiment or two.

As the troops come they go into camp five miles from the city, under Mitchell, who is attentive and subordinate, and where they replenish their worn out clothes and outfit and go to drilling. Nelson has been in camp a day, and, I am informed, has already got into a difficulty with Mitchell; and, if I am rightly informed, has behaved very absurdly. As he is a veteran, some allowance must be made for him.

There are at Indianapolis seven regiments ready for service, but demoralized by the proximity of friends and the want of discipline and instruction. I propose to form them into a reserve and camp of instruction at Bardstown, which is a convenient place in many respects. I can make no use of them in an advance. The Kentucky regiments are only partially organized, and can be but little used at present.

If I were to go into my affairs, I should have the appearance of complaining over difficulties. I am greatly in need of general and staff officers. My own staff force is entirely insufficient, but I have no means of augmenting it with advantage. As for myself I should pay a very high compliment, if I hoped to come up to the expectations which you first formed. I am afraid I shall have to ask a little patience.

Very truly yours,

D. C. FORT

(TO) MAJOR GENERAL GEORGE B. McCLELLAN.

Commanding United States Army.

LOUISVILLE, KENTUCKY, December 10, 1861.

MY DEAR GENERAL:—As I informed you by telegraph, I received your letters on the 3rd and 5th. I have by no means been unmindful of your wishes in regard to East Tennessee, and I think I can both appreciate and write in your sympathy for a people who have shown so much constancy. That constancy will still sustain them until the hour of deliverance. I have no fear of their being crushed. The allegiance of such people to hated rulers, even if it could be enforced for the moment, will only make them the more determined and ready to resist when the hour of rescue comes.

The organization of the division at Lebanon has been with special reference to the object which you have so much at heart, though, fortunately, it is one which suits any contingencies that can arise. I shall hasten its preparation with all the energy and industry I can bring to bear. The plans which I have in view embrace that fully; but the details and the final determination—while there is yet time to watch the progress of circumstances which might affect our plans vitally—I think I should lack that ordinary discretion by which I hope to retain your confidence, if I did not reserve. When the preparation of that division is complete, which I hope will be very soon, if I then see reasons why it should be merged into the general line of operations, I will give you the reasons and you shall be the judge of them; and, if you do not see force in them, I assure you I will pursue your views with as much zeal and hopefulness, and, perhaps, more energy than if I entirely concurred in them. You do not know me well yet if you think I cannot do this. And now for the other side of the field. I feel more anxiety about it than any other, because I have less control over the means that ought to bear on it, and have less knowledge of their details if I had the control. I do not know well—scarcely at all—the description and capacity of the gunboats and transports that are to be used, and I do not know anything about the quality of the troops and officers. I have not seen Smith for seven years, and am afraid to judge him. I have never rated him as highly as some men. The expedition requires nothing more, as matters now stand, than ordinary nerve and good judgment, and ability to command men. The troops ought, of course, to be the best we can command. The object is not to fight great battles and storm impregnable fortifications, but, by demonstrations and maneuvering, to prevent the enemy from concentrating his scattered forces. In doing this, it must be expected there will be some fighting; it may be pretty good fighting. I suppose that 10,000 men, with two batteries, would not be too great an estimate for each of the rivers, if the enemy should do all that he probably can do. The precise manner of conducting expeditions depends so much on local knowledge that I can hardly venture on its details; but, at least, the expeditions should go as rapidly as possible to the nearest point where the road crosses the peninsula; that is, to Dover and Fort Henry. And the first thing then to be done is to destroy the bridges and ferries; then act momentarily on the defensive, unless the weakness of the enemy or a trepidation in his force should give a good opportunity to attack. I think the first serious opposition will be found at Fort Henry, and at an island battery four or five miles below Dover; but my information is not very complete as to the strength of these works. It would be probably necessary to stop there. Fort Henry is said by civilians to be strong. I cannot learn yet the number of guns. There have been some 7,000 troops there. We will probably find that number there. It is about six miles below the railroad bridge. I should not expect to meet any considerable force at Dover, but, perhaps, 7,000 or 8,000 at Clarksville, where they are fortifying. If they succeed in getting out of Bowling Green, which, I believe they will try to do as soon as they see us advancing, unless their force and armament are increased, of course the number at Clarksville may be expected to be greater.

The demonstration on Columbus and the Mississippi should, at least, be on such a scale that it can be converted into a real attack if they detach anything; better still, if it can attack in any event.

You must be patient if you find my letter vague and unsatisfactory. I have had to satisfy a deputation acting under a joint resolution of the legislature, that it was hardly necessary or expedient at this time to appoint a certain person "provost marshal, with all proper power, and giving to him such military force as he may deem essential for a prompt and proper enforcement and execution of the laws, and a suppression of all lawless and marauding excursions into northeastern Kentucky." I believe I succeeded pretty well, and perhaps after that I ought not to have attempted a coherent letter. Your own judgment will satisfy its deficiencies. Please have Rosecrans take care of his revolted subjects along the Big Sandy. We are established at Munfordsville. Truly yours,

D. C. BUELL.

(To) MAJOR GENERAL GEORGE B. McCLELLAN,
Commanding United States Army.

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE OHIO,
LOUISVILLE, KENTUCKY, January 3, 1862.

GENERAL:—I received your dispatch, and, with more delay than I meant, proceed to the subject of it in compliance with your request, and, I may add, also at the wish of the President.

I do not underrate the difficulties in Missouri, and I think it is not extravagant to say that the great power of the rebellion in the west is arrayed on a front the planks of which are Columbus and Bowling Green, and the center about where the railroad between these points crosses the Tennessee and Cumberland rivers. Including Nashville and the fortified points below, it is, I have no doubt, within bounds to estimate their force on that line at 80,000 men; including a column about Somerset, Kentucky, in the rear of their right flank, it is more.

Of this force, 20,000 may be set down as at Bowling Green; 20,000 at Columbus, though you doubtless have more information on that point than I have; and 20,000 at the center. Considering the railroad facilities which enable the enemy to concentrate in a few hours on any single point of this front, you will at once see the importance of a combined attack on its center and flanks, or at least of demonstrations which may be converted into real attacks, and fully occupy the enemy on the whole front. It is probable that you may have given the subject, as far as Columbus and the center are concerned, more attention than I have. With reference to the former, at least, I can say no more than the general suggestion already expressed, that it should be fully occupied.

The attack upon the center should be made by two gunboat expeditions, with, I should say, twenty thousand men on the two rivers. They should, of course, be organized with reference to the depth of the water in the rivers; and whether they should be of equal or unequal strength, would depend upon that and other considerations, and can hardly be determined until the moment of departure. The mode of attack must depend upon the strength of the enemy at the several points and the features of the localities. It will be of the first importance to break the railroad communication, and, if possible, that should be done by columns moving rapidly to the bridges over the Cumberland and the Tennessee. The former, probably, would not be reached as first, being some 31 miles above the first principal battery that I know of at Dover. The other is 18 miles above Fort Henry—the first I know of on the Tennessee. If the expedition should not be strong enough to do the work alone, they should establish themselves firmly at the nearest possible point, and remain at least until they ascertain that re-enforcements from my columns or some other source would not reach them. By uniting they could establish themselves permanently under the protection of the gunboats.

I say this much rather to lay the subject before you, than to propose any definite plan for your side. Whatever is done should be done speedily, within a few days. The work will become more difficult every day. Please let me hear from you at once.

Very truly, yours,

D. C. BUELL.

Brigadier General Commanding,
(To) GENERAL H. W. HALLECK,
Commanding Department of the Missouri

The events happened in this order: The gunboats under Commodore Foote, supported by a land force under General Grant, captured Fort Henry, February 6th; Grant and the navy, with the re-enforcements which Buell had sent, appeared before Fort Donelson February 12th and 14th; Buell's force appeared before Bowling Green, commenced crossing and demonstrating towards Nashville, February 14th, Johnston, having on his approach burnt the bridges and retired to Nashville. Fort Donelson surrendered to Grant February 16th, and on the approach of Buell, Johnston burnt the bridges over the Cumberland, and retired south from Nashville, which Buell occupied February 25.

The following order, issued on this occasion, is not so interesting for the announcement of the mere fact of occupation, as for the policy which it avowed in the prosecution of the war:

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE OHIO,
NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE, February 26, 1862.
General Order No. 13a]

The General Commanding congratulates his troops that it has been their privilege to restore the national banner to the capital of Tennessee. He believes that thousands of hearts in every part of the State will swell with joy to see that honored flag reinstated in a position from which it was removed in the excitement and folly of an evil hour; that the voice of her own people will soon proclaim its welcome, and that their manhood and patriotism will protect and perpetuate it.

The general does not deem it necessary, though the occasion is a fit one, to remind his troops of the rule of conduct they have hitherto observed and are still to pursue. We are in arms, not for the purpose of invading the rights of our fellow countrymen anywhere, but to maintain the integrity of the Union, and protect the constitution under which its people have been prosperous and happy. We cannot, therefore, look with indifference on any conduct which is designed to give aid and comfort to those who are endeavoring to defeat these objects; but the action to be taken in such cases rests with certain authorized persons, and is not to be assumed by individual officers or soldiers. Peaceable citizens are not to be molested in their persons or property. Any wrongs to either are to be promptly corrected and the offenders brought to punishment. To this end all persons are desired to make complaint to the immediate commander of officers or soldiers so offending, and if justice be not done promptly, then to the next commander, and so on until the wrong is redressed. If the necessities of the public service should require the use of private property for public purposes, fair compensation is to be allowed. No such appropriation of private property is to be made except by the authority of the highest commander present, and any other officer or soldier who shall presume to exercise such privilege shall be brought to trial. Soldiers are forbidden to enter the residences or grounds of citizens on any plea without authority.

No arrests are to be made without the authority of the commanding general, except in case of actual offense against authority of the government; and in all such cases the fact and circumstances will immediately be reported in writing to headquarters through the intermediate commanders.

The general reminds his officers that the most frequent depredations are those which are committed by worthless characters who straggle from the ranks on the plea of being unable to march; and where the inability really exists, it will be found in most instances that the soldier has overloaded himself with useless and unauthorized articles. The orders already published must be enforced.

The condition and behavior of a corps are sure indications of the efficiency and fitness of its officers. If any regiment shall be found to disregard that propriety of conduct which belongs to soldiers as well as citizens, they must not expect to occupy posts of honor, but may rest assured that they will be placed in positions where they cannot bring shame on their comrades and the cause they are engaged in. The government supplies with liberality all the wants of the soldier. The occasional deprivations and hard-ships incident to rapid marches must be borne with patience and fortitude. Any officer who neglects to provide properly for his troops, or separates himself from them to seek his own comfort, will be held to a rigid accountability. By command of General Buell.

JAMES B. FRY, A. A. G., Chief of Staff.

The Confederate forces concentrated south of the Tennessee River, under the command of Albert Sidney Johnston, after the evacuation of Nashville, and Buell's command, for military operations, was, on the 12th of March, merged into that of Halleck. After sending a division under Gen. O. M. Mitchel to occupy north Alabama, organizing a division under Gen. G. W. Morgan to operate from Kentucky against Cumberland Gap, and leaving a suitable force at Nashville and other places on his lines of communication, Buell marched in the latter part of March with five divisions—about 37,000 men—to form a junction with the forces of Halleck on the Tennessee River. He arrived at Savannah, the place appointed for the junction, with his leading division the evening before the battle of Shiloh, or Pittsburgh Landing. When the battle opened the following morning, he ordered forward the division (Nelson's), already arrived, sent instructions to the rear divisions to press on by forced march, and in person went to the river on a steamer to the field of battle. The head of his column, under Nelson, arrived in time to repel an attack which the Confederates made immediately at the landing, to which the troops of Grant had been driven back at the close of the first day. Three of his divisions came up that night, a fourth the following day, and at daylight on the 7th the enemy was attacked and by four o'clock in the evening driven from the field. Gen. Lew Wallace's fresh division, and such other fragments of Grant's army as retained any organization from the disaster of the previous day, took part in the battle of the 7th. The Confederates fell back to Corinth, which they fortified, and from which they were forced to retire May 30th by the combined armies under Halleck. The Army of the Ohio, under Buell, occupied the center in this advance.

After the retreat of the Confederates from Corinth, Buell with his army was again detailed to operate against East Tennessee. He moved into North Alabama with four divisions (25,000 men), making (June 31st) his headquarters temporarily at Huntsville, while repairing the railroads to his base of supplies at Louisville, 300 miles distant. His remaining division, under General Thomas, arrived July 31st. The movement from the first was delayed by the orders of Halleck, requiring him to repair and guard the Memphis & Charleston Railroad east of Corinth.

In the meantime the Confederate forces in East Tennessee were re-enforced by General Bragg, with the bulk of the Corinth army, making an aggregate force of not less than 60,000 men, which by the 28th of July was available for prompt concentration at Chattanooga or elsewhere in East Tennessee. Its superior cavalry force operated with great effect upon the long lines of the Union Army, breaking up the railroads and cutting off its supplies.

The effort to defeat these partisan operations by combining light infantry with the totally insufficient Union cavalry, and by local guards, was unsuccessful, and on the 10th of August the Confederate cavalry under Forrest and Morgan, effectually severed the line of supplies of the Union Army by an extensive destruction of the railroad north of Nashville.

About the same time the whole Confederate force in East Tennessee assumed the offensive. General Kirby Smith, starting from Knoxville, passed the mountains to the left of Cumberland Gap, which the division under Gen. G. W. Morgan had occupied and fortified in time.

Upon hearing of Smith's movement, Buell dispatched General Nelson with a few experienced officers and two batteries of artillery to organize such troops as could be got together in Kentucky to repel Smith's invasion. Smith encountered Nelson's force, composed of raw troops, at Richmond, defeated it (August 30th), and advanced into Central Kentucky, threatening Louisville and Cincinnati.

Simultaneously with Smith's advance,

Bragg crossed the Tennessee River at and near Chattanooga with the bulk of his army, threatening Middle Tennessee and Nashville. The Union Army, which occupied various points for repairing the roads and with a view to the forward movement for which it had been preparing, was immediately put in readiness for concentration.

McCook, with his own and Crittenden's divisions, was ordered from the mouth of Battle Creek, up the Sequatchie Valley to watch and oppose the enemy's advance, and, when pressed, to fall back for concentration on the road to McMinnville. He advanced a short distance and returned, supposing that the enemy had already anticipated him on the McMinnville road. This supposition proved to be incorrect, and it threw the army out of position for efficient observation, gave an erroneous impression of the rate of the enemy's progress, and kept the army a week about McMinnville awaiting his approach, of which at the end of that time there was yet no intelligence. The army was now reduced to 10 days' supplies, and assuming Nashville to be the enemy's first objective point, it was necessary to put the army in a position which would enable it best to oppose that design and at the same time reopen its communication with Louisville. Orders were therefore given on the 30th of August for concentrating at Murfreesborough on the 5th of September. Pending this movement the head of Bragg's column crossed the mountain and appeared at Sparta on the 2nd of September, and instead of turning towards Nashville, moved toward the Cumberland River, which it crossed at Carthage and Gainsborough. This change in the anticipated route of the enemy caused the movement of the Union Army upon Nashville and the sending of a division for the protection of Bowling Green, where some supplies had been gathered; and on learning that the bulk of the Confederate army was marching in the same direction, Buell started with the Army of the Ohio in pursuit, after leaving a suitable force to hold Nashville, which he had previously commenced to fortify. The enemy halted involuntarily at Glasgow, but continued his march to Mumfordsville, where a Federal force of about 4,000 men, with artillery, strongly fortified, but heedlessly exposed to such a danger by the authority at Louisville, not then under Buell's command, surrendered to Bragg on the 17th without resistance. There was skirmishing between the two armies and preparations for battle at Mumfordsville, but on the 21st the Confederate Army, followed closely by the Union Army, moved towards Louisville until near Elizabethtown, when it turned off toward Bardstown. That deflection indicated a speedy junction of Bragg and Kirby Smith, and perhaps an attack on Louisville, where a force of raw troops was gathering. Instead, therefore, of turning off to continue the pursuit, Buell marched directly on to Louisville, where his rear division arrived on the night of the 29th.

The new regiments were immediately incorporated into the old organizations, and on the 1st of October the army moved against the enemy, who then occupied Bardstown and Frankfort. The news of this advance brought to a hurried conclusion the ceremonies of inaugurating a State governor at Frankfort, in which Bragg was at the moment engaged. Sharp skirmishing occurred in both lines, the Confederates retiring for concentration until the Bardstown column reached Perryville; where, October 8th, a severe but indecisive battle, lasting until night, was fought between portions of the two armies. The Union Army moved forward at six o'clock next morning to renew the battle, but the Confederates had withdrawn. There was further concentration on both sides and manœuvring for battle, but on the 12th Bragg commenced to retreat on Cumberland Gap. He was followed, and his rear guard engaged at various points as far as London, when seeing no prospect of further advantage, Buell, October 17th, discontinued the pursuit, and directed his army by way of Glasgow and Bowling Green upon Murfreesborough, in anticipation of Bragg's movement against Middle Tennessee and Nashville. Pending this movement, October 30th, the army being then in the vicinity of Glasgow and Bowling Green, he turned over the command to General Rosecrans, in obedience to news from Washington. Previously, September 29th, while at Louisville, he had been ordered to relinquish the command to General Thomas, but the order was countermanded at the request of Thomas and others.

He was thanked by the department for the service rendered, but there immediately arose some disagreement between him and the department as to the plan of further operations. He, however, adhered to his views, and continued the movement which he had announced and, as stated, surrendered his command pending its execution.

In November a court of inquiry was ordered to investigate his operations during the summer and fall. The court was in session more than five months, and much oral and documentary evidence was taken; but the proceedings were never published, and when called for some years afterwards by Congress, the voluminous record was found to have disappeared from the archives of the War Department. Twice after the inquiry General Buell was offered commands under his juniors, Sherman and Canby, but declined. He was then mustered out of the volunteer service May 23, 1864, and on the 1st of June resigned his commission in the regular army. In 1865 he took part in coal and iron interests in Kentucky.

In this sketch nothing has been attempted but a brief outline of the more prominent facts, omitting many important details, and all discussion of the actual or relative value of General Buell's services as a commander during the Rebellion. The fact is not to be ignored that perhaps no higher officer in the war was the subject of so much party criticism as he during the last six months of his command. Though in his own mind repelling the injustice of this criticism, he has not seen proper to make much public protest against it, and it does not come within the scope of this sketch to analyze facts for the purpose of pointing out how much of the harsh judgment was bestowed without discernment or justice, how much was due to a state of the public mind, which, it must be confessed, was often disposed to regard passionate or at least practical partisanship, as an element of patriotic duty, and how much to the machinations of hostile ambitions and personal resentment. It does not appear that the War Department shared fully in the disapprobation to which a portion of the public press gave loud expression, but it yielded to a popular clamor, or rather to the dictation of political and personal influences which first shaped the popular prejudice, and then derived strength and reward from its support. It may, however, be proper to say in the direction of impartial criticism, that in reviewing the operations of the army under General Buell in the summer and fall of 1862, and comparing them with similar operations of other dates and other commanders on the same and other fields, it is impossible not to be impressed by the contrast in the popular feeling with reference to the different periods. These contrasts indicate, perhaps, a more politic conformity of the later commanders, to the popular idea of the war, and fortunately, also to a more patient appreciation by the popular judgment of the obstacles to be overcome.

GEN. H. F. DEVOL.—Among the regiments in the late Rebellion to which Washington County contributed her "bravest and best," the gallant Thirty-sixth stands prominent. The history of this regiment is sketched at another place in this volume, but an outline of the life of its worthy colonel will be of interest, both to his military friends and the public.

H. F. Devol, the youngest son of Stephen Devol, Jr., was born in Waterford township, August 6, 1831. His boyhood was spent in the country school and on his father's farm. At the age of 16, a courageous spirit, and a desire for more extended educational advantages led him to seek independence from parental dictation. He then attended Beverly Academy for a short time, and two years later made his first trip south in the produce trade. From this time till the opening of the Rebellion, Mr. Devol devoted his summers to farming and his winters to flatboating and trade.

He married, May 15, 1856, Adelaide A. Dyer, of Muskingum township, by whom he had two children—Hattie A., and Carroll, who is a graduate of Pennsylvania Military Institute, and was, in 1879, appointed by President Hayes lieutenant in the regular army. Mrs. Devol died July 10, 1860.

In the winter of 1860 Mr. Devol witnessed the first overt acts of the important drama in which he became an actor. Being South with a cargo of produce he experienced some of the inconveniences of that disturbed period. The spirit of secession was aroused, and Northern merchants became objects of hatred. Their boats were not permitted to land at many places, while at others obstructions were thrown in the way of sales and collections. Mr. Devol, however, did not suffer serious financial loss, but his experience aroused him to action on returning home. He had been a witness of secession. It was in store for him to take a part in the bloodiest acts of the tragedy then opening, and eventually to stand in the line of triumphant soldiery with a full share of military glory.

When the first call for volunteers for the three years' service was made, Mr. Devol set to work to enlisting a company, from Waterford, Adams and Muskingum townships. It was the intention to enroll this company in the Thirty-ninth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, then being formed at Cincinnati. Mr. Devol had acted without a commission and without direction, and borne all the expenses out of his own pocket. When the company met at Lowell for organization, Col. Melvin Clarke appeared with a commission to organize a new regiment, and informed Captain Devol that Colonel Groesbeck's regiment (Thirty-ninth Ohio Volunteer Infantry) was full. Captain Devol enlisted his men in the new regiment, and when the quota was full they were properly enrolled as "Company A."

The company was reported August 1, 1861, and Mr. Devol was commissioned captain August 13th. From the time of being mustered in until peace illuminated their blood-stained bayonets, the Thirty-sixth was in active, efficient and dangerous service, and during all that period, Mr. Devol was with his men—with them both in camp and battlefield. He was promoted to the rank of major, September 7, 1862; to lieutenant-colonel September 16, 1862, and to the colonelcy, for valuable and valiant conduct on the field of Chickamauga, October 13, 1862. In this battle Colonel Devol took a conspicuous and important part. When the battle opened Colonel Jones was in command of the regiment and General Turchin of the brigade. In the afternoon the brigade was thrown in front of the enemy's center. At a critical moment the advance line was driven back and Turchin's brigade, consisting of the Thirty-sixth and Ninety-second Ohio and Fourteenth Kentucky, was brought in face of a hot fire. To retreat would be disastrous. Brave boys were falling fast, and Lieutenant-Colonel Devol, impatient for an order, grasped the situation, assumed command, and ordered a charge. A moment later positions were changed. The Rebel ranks were broken and the brave brigade, encouraged by the bold movement of their temporary commander, followed close in pursuit for a distance of more than 300 yards, when a retreat was ordered. They passed back through the gap in the enemy's line which this bold charge had brought to a halt, and given the Union troops time to reorganize on that day. Colonel Devol proved his soldierly instincts. Colonel Jones had been mortally wounded, and the brigade commander was not at his post. It was left for a lieutenant-colonel to give the command which materially affected the fortunes of that celebrated battle. General Thomas and General Reynolds heartily complimented his soldierly conduct.

At Berryville an incident occurred which exemplifies his bravery. The brigade was ordered by General Hayes, then in command, to lie down to escape a destructive fire of the enemy. But in disobedience to the protestations of their soldiers, General Hayes and Colonel Devol remained standing at their posts where they could watch changing movements.

Colonel Devol was always found with his regiment, and indeed was in one more engagement than his regiment. His rank during the greater period of the war was that of colonel, but on several occasions he was thrown in in command of a brigade. This was the case at Cedar Creek, when General Hayes' brigade was under his command. At this battle the Army of West Virginia, under command of General Crook, to which this brigade belonged, was held as a flanking column. But General Devol, in the excitement of progressing battle, lost his place and was not a little surprised to find himself urging on with characteristic energy a strange command, engaged in the thickest of the fight. This is an episode of the war which General Hayes delighted to tell. Few officers can claim the honor of having been in as many fights as their command, but Cedar Creek places the colonel of the Thirty-sixth one ahead of his regiment. Colonel Devol was brevetted brigadier-general July 20, 1865.

During the war he had the singular good fortune to escape with only two slight wounds, and his robust body suffered but little from disease. He enjoyed the friendship and cordial respect of his associates in office and his men. He was always jealous of the fame of his regiment and always ready to protect its standing.

When the time for which the Thirty-sixth enlisted had expired, General Devol was found ready to re-engage in the service of the Union, and the regiment cheerfully went with him.

At the conclusion of hostilities in 1865 the rank and file of our volunteer soldiery felt that they had accomplished that for which they had suffered the pains and dangers of war, and were anxious to return to their families and farms. High salaried officers were accused of selfishly detaining the troops; but General Devol was entirely free from any accusation in this regard. Through his management and influence the regiment with which he went into service and in which he had a warm interest was one of the first Ohio regiments mustered out of the service.

The war over, he returned to Waterford, and in 1866 he purchased the mercantile establishment of Charles Bowen, where for a number of years he devoted himself closely to business. He never had an ambition for political preferment, but was by no means indifferent to the duties of citizenship.

He was appointed by General Hayes, while Governor of Ohio, one of the trustees of Athens Asylum for the Insane. The relations between President Hayes and himself were the most cordial since their acquaintance in the Rebellion.

General Devol was a leading member of the Beverly Presbyterian Church, was superintendent of the Sunday-school and a valuable supporter of religious and moral movements in the community. He acquired a handsome competence, and used it liberally both in public improvements and in answering the prayers of multiplied charities. General Devol remarried April 3, 1867, Harriet E. Bowen, by whom he had four children, George H., Mary B., Florence W., and Ermine B.

GEN. BENJAMIN DANA FEARING, the youngest son of Henry Fearing, Esq., and Eliza Dana Fearing, was born at Harmar, Ohio, October 10, 1837. He was a grandson of Hon. Paul Fearing and Benjamin Dana, who was the son of John Winchester Dana and Hannah Pope Dana, the daughter of Gen. Israel Putnam, and through his mother a lineal descendant of the fourth generation from Gen. Israel Putnam. His early life was spent in his native place. He graduated at Marietta College in 1856, at the age of 19. During the five years following his graduation he was in business, first at Cincinnati and afterward at Philadelphia. While on a visit to Cincinnati in the spring of 1861, news came of the firing upon Fort Sumter—then the call of the President for troops. There was a meeting of the citizens at the old stone church on Walnut Hills, to organize. He was at the meeting, and among the first to offer himself in response to the call of the President. The next day he selected from the companies being formed the one which he thought would soonest be ready, and telegraphed his father, "Have joined the Zouave Guards. Leave for Columbus on 18th, at 6 A. M." The next day, the 19th of April, found him speeding away as fast as the iron horse could carry him to the forefront of the battle. It seems a singular coincidence that 'twas on the same day of the same month, 87 years before, that his ancestor, General Putnam, "left his plow in the furrow," and hurried off on flying hoof to Concord to repel the British and enter upon the war of the Revolution. Upon the organization of regiments at Harrisburgh, Pennsylvania, the Zouave Guards became Company D of the Second Ohio Volunteer Infantry. With this regiment they went to Washington, and thence into Virginia, under General Schenck. Here they remained, doing service until their term of enlistment had expired. Then they were entitled to their discharge, but as a battle seemed impending they, by a unanimous vote, resolved to remain and share in it. On the day of the battle of Manassas they were detailed as skirmishers. At 4 o'clock A. M. they had brisk work with the enemy's cavalry, driving them over Cut Run, and to the banks of Bull Run where the line of battle was developed. In the subsequent events of the day, its wild and terrific experiences of battle, carnage, panic, rout and disaster they bore their full share.

During his three months' service Fearing received his first promotion, being made fourth corporal of his company. After the battle of Manassas, the adjutancy of the Thirty-sixth Ohio was offered him by Hon. William P. Cutler, then member of Congress from his district. The offer was again pressed upon him at Columbus when being mustered out at Camp Chase, but was declined as he then expected to join the National Guard regiment at Philadelphia.

He accompanied them into West Virginia, and there served in the double capacity of acting adjutant general to General Slemmer and as adjutant to Major Andrews, then in command of the Thirty-sixth. Here he remained for three months, devoting himself assiduously to the drill of officers and men, often spending 18 hours a day in this service. The high standing, this regiment subsequently attained was no doubt largely due to the drill and discipline learned in this their early campaign in West Virginia.

General Slemmer, appreciating the value of his services, and recognizing his zeal and ability, recommended to the Governor of Ohio the appointment of Fearing to the colonelcy of the Thirty-sixth Regiment. Major Andrews started for Columbus with the recommendations, but at the headquarters of General Rosecrans he was met by Capt. George Cook of the Fourth regulars, who had already been appointed to the command of the regiment. Fearing continued acting as adjutant at Somerville with Colonel Cook until he received the appointment of major of the Seventy-seventh Ohio Volunteer Infantry. He reported at once to Colonel Heildbad at Camp Putnam, and entered upon the duties of his command.

Immediately after the organization of this regiment, although as yet without equipments of any kind, it was transferred to Camp Dennison. The regiment had been in this camp but a short time when orders came from General Grant at Fort Donelson to "move at once and report to General Sherman at Paducah, Kentucky," and at the same time the inquiry "How soon?" The superior officers being absent Major Fearing replied, "In an hour;" and so prompt were his movements that his regiment was the first of all the nine ordered from Ohio to arrive at Paducah. He went thence with the main army up the Tennessee River.

While General Sherman was conducting an expedition for the destruction of railroad bridges near Iuka, Mississippi, a heavy shower flooded Yellow Creek so as to render his return impossible. Fearing reported the danger and asked permission to build a bridge of boats. This was done with so much expedition and skill as to secure the highest commendation of his commander, and General

Sherman ever afterward "entrusted him with a large share of the bridging operations over railroads, over streams and in the construction of corduroy-roads through the great swamp lands."

At the battle of Pittsburgh Landing, Colonel Hildebrand being in command of a brigade, and the lieutenant-colonel absent, the command of the regiment devolved upon the major. The regiment was stationed at Shiloh Church, its line being across the main Corinth road. This Sherman regarded as the most important point of his position. Of this Fearing was aware and realizing the necessity of maintaining his post he held it with unyielding tenacity. The repeated charges of the enemy in their desperate efforts to capture Taylor's Battery A, of Chicago, he repulsed with great gallantry, and thus held the battery till orders came for its withdrawal. The general commanding commended the regiment for its brave and determined maintenance of the position at the church, and for its gallantry in defense of the battery.

The official report of the brigade commander says: "Maj. Benjamin D. Fearing, who commanded the Seventy-seventh Ohio Volunteer Infantry, was cool and brave, and acquitted himself with as much skill as an old officer of larger experience, and was not excelled by any other field officer, who came within my observation."

Maj. E. C. Dawes, of the Fifty-third Ohio Volunteer Infantry, himself a participant in the fight, a gallant officer of cool and accurate judgment, writes: "I think the conduct of Major Fearing at Shiloh the most creditable to him and valuable to the cause of anything in his long service. The Seventy-seventh Regiment held the key point in Sherman's first line of battle, and maintained this position long enough to enable McClernand's and Hurlburt's divisions to get into action, and Major Fearing by his reckless personal courage held the Seventy-seventh Regiment. The conduct of the major and of the Seventy-seventh Regiment in that hell of fire has never been appreciated."

The casualties of the regiment, amounting in total to 168 officers and men killed and wounded, tells the story of its fighting. In the disasters which befell the regiment on the next day, the major was in a subordinate position, Lieutenant-Colonel DeHass being then in command.

While at Fort Pickering after the capture of Corinth and the return of the regiment to Memphis, Major Fearing received the appointment of lieutenant-colonel of the Ninety-second Regiment then being organized at Camp Putnam, Ohio. The first service of this regiment was in the Kanawha Valley, where it had a "stirring period of marching and fighting."

In January, 1863, he joined the Army of the Cumberland at Nashville. In March he was made colonel of the regiment, Colonel VanVorhes being compelled by sickness to resign. At Murfreesborough he was assigned to the Fourteenth Army Corps under General George H. Thomas. On the 24th of June he went to the relief of Wilder at Hoover's Gap. On the night of the 18th of September he made the march to Chickamauga. His regiment formed a part of the famous "Turchin's brigade" and with it passed through the terrible fighting on the 19th and 20th. In this battle he was severely wounded, a minie ball passing through the front part of his right and thick part of his left thigh. On the following day the enemy captured the hospital to which the wounded had been removed, but Colonel Fearing and four of his officers were saved by the coolness of his colored servant who carried them to an ambulance and drew them through a continuous fire to a point within the protection of our lines.

As soon as the condition of his wounds would admit of partial duty he was detailed upon court-martial at Cincinnati and Louisville. During his absence his regiment, under command of Lieut.-Col. Douglas Putnam, a soldier and officer of spirit kindred to his own, made its memorable record in the storming of Missionary Ridge. He returned to his regiment at Ringgold, Georgia, in March, 1864.

In May he went south, and with Turchin's brigade "fought through that wondrous campaign, a hundred days' continuous fighting." He was in the "March to the Sea." At Savannah upon the recommendation of his corps commander, Gen. J. C. Davis, he received a commission from President Lincoln as brigadier-general by brevet, bearing date of December 2, 1864, "for gallant and meritorious services during the campaign from Chattanooga to Atlanta, and from Atlanta to Savannah." He was assigned to the command of Col. Daniel McCook's "fighting brigade," Second Division, Fourteenth Army Corps. At the battle of Bentonville, when the enemy had broken the Union left and center, General Davis ordered General Fearing to move to the left and "check the enemy's advance," if it "cost him his whole brigade." The charge was glorious. The check was made. The action was terrible. Fearing's horse was shot under him, and a minie ball tore away the thumb, the forefinger, and part of his right hand. Van Horne, in summing up the history of the battle, says: "That the battle turned upon the action of the brigades of Mitchell, Vanderveer and Fearing, there can be no doubt. The two former did not give an inch of ground to the enemy, though thrown into single lines and compelled to fight in front and rear. The action of Fearing's brigade was not less important, as it disturbed and defeated General Johnston's combination to utilize for complete success his first advantage. General Fearing was brought in complete isolation for some time, without defenses, and when his right flank was struck by the enemy with such force as to shatter it, he charged his front upon his left, rallied his shattered troops and held the ground essential to the stability of the new line. The latter dispositions and resistance by the whole command gave a symmetry and brilliancy to the conflict which have seldom found expression in such urgent improvisation."

At the close of the war, General Fearing was mustered out of service at the age of 27 years, having as a private taken part in the first, and as a commander of a brigade in the last, great battle of the war. He was then offered the rank of major in the regular army, but declined. The battles in which he participated are memorable in the history of the war:—Manassas, the battles of West Virginia, Shiloh, Catlin Mountain, Iuka, Corinth, Cartage, Hoover's Gap, Tullahoma, Catlitt's Gap, Lane's Church, Chickamauga, Chattanooga, Buzzard's Roost, Rocky Face Ridge, Resaca, Etowah, Altoona Pass, Pine Knob, Kenesaw, Nicajack, Peach Tree Creek, Chat-tahoochee, Utoy Creek, Rough and Ready, Jonesborough, Atlanta, Savannah, through the Carolinas, Averysborough and Bentonville.

For some years after the war, General Fearing was engaged in business in Cincinnati, but being compelled to withdraw from active labor, he returned to his old home in Harmar, where he resided, devoting himself to literary pursuits, to his friends, and to caring for his health, rendered precarious by the wounds of Chickamauga and Bentonville.

COL. JESSE HILDEBRAND was of German extraction, his ancestry coming to this country sometime between the years 1700 and 1730. He was born in Pennsylvania, near the New York State line, on the 22nd day of May, 1800, and was the first white child born in that portion of the State, the so-called "Corn" or "Planter" Indians then occupying the soil. His mother being an invalid, the child was placed in the care of an Indian woman, who tenderly cared for him, and became so attached to her charge that she was loth to give him up when the mother's health again permitted her to take charge of him. When he was about two years of age, his parents sold the farm and removed to near Pittsburg, but only remained there a short time when they pushed on farther west, finally arriving at Marietta, Ohio, where they found their future home. His parents both lived to an advanced age.

Our subject early in life developed a strong predilection for a military life, and would have entered the regular army had it not been for his love for, and care of, his mother. He was noted as a "drummer boy" and when about 18 became drum major of the regiment at Marietta. He was a personal friend of President Jackson, who commissioned him an officer of militia. He was for many years a brigadier-general of militia, and subsequently became major-general. General Hildebrand always had a fine staff completely uniformed and equipped during this period of his military career.

Colonel Hildebrand, although a Democrat, believed thoroughly in the supremacy of the national to State authority, and in the hour of the Nation's peril did not hesitate as to his duty. In October, 1861, he began to raise the Seventy-seventh Regiment for the active service of his country. He was appointed and commissioned its colonel, and in January, 1862, he left Marietta in command of a full regiment and was soon at the front. The brigade of which he was in command, met the first attack of the enemy at Shiloh, and in that action distinguished himself for gallantry and courage, and for his persevering efforts in rallying his men in the face of danger. General Sherman, who witnessed Colonel Hildebrand's conduct on this occasion, enthusiastically declared him to be the bravest man he ever knew. He afterwards engaged in a severe march through Tennessee and Northern Mississippi, finally arriving at Memphis. His regiment had become sadly reduced by battle and disease and in August, 1862, was detailed for service at the military prison, Alton, Illinois, Colonel Hildebrand becoming commandant of the post, where he remained until his death. The unusual hardship and exposure to which he had been subject while in the field finally resulted in pneumonia, and at 2:30 o'clock P. M., Saturday, April 18, 1863, the brave soldier passed away.

The news of his death caused universal sorrow here in Marietta where he was so well and favorably known. A committee of arrangements for his funeral was appointed consisting of Mayor Whittlesey, George M. Woodbridge, John Marshall, Henry Fearing, L. W. Reppert, I. R. Waters, J. B. Hovey, and Maj. William B. Mason, Seventy-seventh Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and appropriate resolutions to the memory of the deceased were adopted. The funeral services were held at the Putnam Street Methodist Episcopal Church and the remains were followed to Mound Cemetery, under military escort, by his family, the clergymen, members of his staff when general, members of the Seventy-seventh Regiment present and a large concourse of citizens.

When the news of Colonel Hildebrand's death reached General Sherman, he sent his widow a letter of condolence, which contained the highest testimonial to Colonel Hildebrand's worth as a soldier and a man. A portion of the letter appears herewith:

I could recall many little scenes of our camp life to illustrate the honest, fearless character of Colonel Hildebrand, the interest he took in his men, always with them doing his duty like a brave soldier, as he was, never complaining, never talking of turning back. He was not the man to dream of peace until it should be won fairly and honestly.

In civic life Colonel Hildebrand was widely known. For a number of years he was a mail contractor and owned the stage line between Marietta and Zanesville. In October, 1850, he was elected sheriff of Washington County and served two years.

Colonel Hildebrand was married in 1826 to Mrs. S. Perkins Fowler, and was the father of seven children. Eliza, the eldest, now Mrs. Henry E. Marks, resides in Washington, D. C. Her husband entered the service in the late war as lieutenant from that district. Arius Gilead, the second, died in Washington in 1876, and is buried in the Congressional Cemetery in that city; Elodiannas, the third, died in infancy; W. W., the fourth, entered the service as a private, but while on his way to the front was injured by a railroad accident and brought home to Marietta injured for life; Frances Isabel, the fifth, resides at the old home; Anna Maria, the sixth, died in childhood; Cynthia E., the youngest, now Mrs. Henry J. Bradford, lives in Marietta. Her husband was a naval officer and served all through the war. He died in the service September 16, 1873, at the age of 35.

COLONEL EBENEZER BALDWIN ANDREWS was born at Danbury, Connecticut, April 29, 1821. He was the youngest of six sons of Rev. William Andrews, for many years the pastor of the Congregational Church in Danbury. After spending a year at Williams' College, he entered the sophomore class in Marietta College, and graduated in 1842. Among his fellow students he was a leading man, noted for geniality and humor, and universally popular. After a short time spent in teaching, he pursued a course of theological study at Princeton. In 1846 he became pastor of the Congregational Church at Housatonic, Massachusetts, and afterward he was settled over a church in New Britain, Connecticut.

In 1851, coming to Marietta, to deliver the address before the alumni at commencement, he made such an impression as an orator and a man of culture, that he was elected to the chair of natural science in Marietta College. Professor Beach, one of his pupils, writes thus:

In his college work Professor Andrews early became specially interested in geological investigations, and during his stay here the study of geology was made very prominent. His teaching in this department was suggestive and stimulating. His students were sure to think geology a great and living science. During a series of years he conducted his senior classes on exploring expeditions which will not be forgotten by any who participated in them. The writer remembers with much interest the explorations made by the class of 1859, through the wildest parts of Washington County, and which occupied five days. The enthusiasm of the professor, as well as his unfeeling good humor and his rich resources of wit and anecdote made it a memorable journey to the young men who followed him.

When in 1861, we were plunged into civil war, Professor Andrews was appointed major of the Thirty-first Ohio Regiment. He secured his release from his college duties, and engaged in the service of his country. He served with his regiment in West Virginia and on the Potomac, and, after Antietam, was made its colonel. His military life is best set forth in the following extracts from communications from those who served with him, and were familiar with his career as an army officer.

Gen. B. D. Fearing, who was the first adjutant of the Thirty-sixth Ohio, says:

Few are familiar with the embarrassments that surrounded those entrusted with the recruiting and organizing of infantry during the late civil war. Briefly, they may be summed up thus. The public had to be stimulated to the point of encouraging enlistment. Constant thought and labor were required to foster the effort made to popularize enlistments. Extended correspondence had to be carried on with the military committees of the different counties in the district, with the officers recruiting for the regiment, and with many of the families of the men enlisted. As the companies arrived at the camp of instruction, all their wants, and there were not a few, had to be provided for without any delay. As the companies arrived at the camp in detachments under the recruiting officers—and not infrequently they reached the camp during the night time—it was a very exhaustive work to care for them and see that they did not suffer. This Major Andrews did, in the care of the Thirty-sixth Regiment, as those friendly to the soldiers, and the military committees of Washington County are prompt to testify. In accordance with the custom in those early war days, the recruiting officers were instructed to have the enlisted men bring nothing to camp with them except what they were willing to abandon, when furnished with the government outfit. I remember well how much perplexed and embarrassed Col. William R. Putnam, commandant of the camp of instruction at Marietta, was, when it was reported to him by officers of the companies after the first night in camp, that the men were actually suffering from the chill of the night.

Major Andrews immediately suggested that Colonel Clark himself should secure from the patriotic citizens of Marietta blankets and comforts to meet the needs of the regiment. This suffering was more particularly in those companies recruited at a distance, and whose friends could not easily reach them. It was fortunate for the regiment that Major Andrews was so situated that he could give his undivided thought and time to the care of the soldiers.

The following incident from the same communication, shows the self-sacrificing patriotic spirit of the subject of our sketch.

Information had reached Major Andrews that the regiment would soon be called into active service in West Virginia, by General Rosecrans, for the relief of the town of Spencer, which was in his rear, and for whose relief he had no troops at command. This stimulated Major Andrews to use extraordinary efforts to prepare the regiment as speedily as possible for service. It was determined by the friends of the regiment that, if possible, the services of a regular army officer should be secured to command this splendid body of volunteers. They seemed to be no one at that time that could accomplish this but Major Andrews. His extended reputation as a scientific man, and his acquaintance with the leading men of the State, gave him excellent allies in Washington. Although his services were in great demand in the camp, yet it was decided that he should go to Washington. Availing himself of his personal acquaintance with Secretary Chase to reach President Lincoln, he succeeded in presenting himself, accompanied by Lincoln and Chase, before Secretary Cameron, and, in face of the order aht had just been issued, that no more details should be made from the regular army to the volunteers, he secured the assent of Cameron to the detailing of a West Point man to the command of the regiment. If a suitable one could be found. To this zealous work of Major Andrews, at Washington, may without doubt be attributed all the valuable results that followed the appointment of Colonel Crook to the command of the Thirty-sixth Regiment.

I am now convinced that this extraordinary effort on the part of Major Andrews was not absolutely essential, since Colonel Clarke had large experience as a teacher, had held official positions in civil life, and was a man of great courage, and of undoubted qualifications for the command of a regiment. The history of the regiment proves also that many of the subordinate officers were possessed of the same qualifications. It would be hard to find two men so unselfish and truly patriotic as Colonel Clarke and Major Andrews showed themselves to be, in thus giving up their own promotion, and in seeking so zealously to discover a man to hold the honorable position, that by right belonged to them.

The following extract is from a letter from Gen. J. D. Cox, who commanded the department of West Virginia during Col. Andrews' service in that State:

When Colonel Andrews assumed the command in 1861 as leader of the Thirty-sixth Ohio, I at once saw that he was a cool, brave and conscientious officer, arrogating nothing to himself from his previous standing as an intellectual and scientific man, but determined to learn his new duties with thoroughness and with modesty. As one immediately charged with the enforcement of the ideas of discipline of Colonel Crook, the major's task at the beginning was a hard one. The regiment was, as all volunteer regiments necessarily are, slow in seeing the immense importance of the discipline and drill, which a commandant, taken from the regular army, knew to be the indispensable condition of success, and, in the end, of the well-being of the regiment itself. Much of the ordinary unpopularity of the earlier stages of this instruction and discipline fell on Major Andrews. He did not shrink from it or avoid it. He sought no shelter under apologies; did not shoulder off the burden upon his superiors, but loyally obeyed the injunctions he received, as a faithful subordinate without complaint or criticism. He had faith that in the end, the honesty of his purpose, the usefulness of the discipline, and the good will to the regiment, which dictated it, would all be recognized.

At the close of his army life, in 1863, Professor Andrews resumed his position at Marietta College. He had already become known as an eminent geologist, and especially as an authority in the geology of Eastern Ohio and West Virginia. In 1869 he resigned his chair in Marietta to accept the position of assistant geologist in the geological survey of Ohio. To this work he gave several years of assiduous and successful labor, removing from Marietta to the more central position of Lancaster, Ohio. His work upon the coal fields of Southeastern Ohio was universally recognized as admirable and thorough, and it widely extended his reputation as a geologist. After the close of the geological survey Professor Andrews continued his residence in Lancaster, giving his attention to the preparation of a text-book on geology, which has proved very acceptable. He also found large employment as a consulting geologist, whose opinions as to the nature and value of the mineral resources of southern Ohio and West Virginia were highly valued.

He died at Lancaster, Ohio, August 14, 1880.

COL. JOHN C. PAXTON was born in Gettysburg, Pennsylvania, February 22, 1824. At the aged of 10 years he began life for himself, and from that day his generous hand lent assistance to his parents, and a more dutiful and loving son never lived than he. At an early age he came to Ohio and engaged in the mercantile business at Sharon, Noble County, until 1853. In 1845 he was united in marriage to Agnes Greenlee, who was to the end of her life a faithful partner and sympathetic wife.

He removed with his family to Marietta in 1853, and engaged in business pursuits. In 1854, while in the south, he had the misfortune to contract the smallpox, and returning home, the whole family were stricken with the disease which bereft the household of the cherished wife and mother. In 1857 he married, for his second wife, Sophia L. Reed, of Lancaster, Pennsylvania.

Mr. Paxton's temperament made him restless and imperative. He traveled into every State and Territory, and he acquired a knowledge of the resources and society of the entire country. Several years of his mature life were spent in Salt Lake City, where an intimate acquaintance with the practices of Mormonism taught him to hate, with all the bitterness of his intense nature, the execrable doctrines of that peculiar people.

Writers of all periods have united in extolling the valliant deeds of military heroes. The man who enlists his body and soul in the cause of his country is deserving of the highest honor, no matter what his military rank may be. War has not inappropriately been likened to a drama, in which the officers play the leading roles, but the success of the whole depends upon the acting of each character. Another point of likeness is that each role requires its own peculiar actor. The bold and dashing colonel who carries assault to victory is no less deserving of honor than the general in command who has planned the preliminary movements.

It will be necessary to understand the character of Colonel Paxton, and to know the field in which he was ordered to operate, before proceeding to a consideration of his merits as a military man.

He was a man of strong talent, but nervous, impulsive and often erratic. He had a pointed insight into affairs, and his opinions and resolutions, though quickly formed, were usually correct. His wit was pungent and keen; incisive sarcasm gave him a peculiar power in controversy. In the social circle he was at his best, vivacious and witty, and enjoying a story or a joke exceedingly. His friendship was devoted and true, his hatred intense. A large heart made him generous to a fault, and he was always ready to contribute to the necessities of the unfortunate.

During the crisis of Secession in 1860 he was in Louisiana, and was present at the convention when the State was voted out of the Union. He was present when the vote was carried to tear down the old flag then floating over the capitol. His loyal eyes saw the raising of the first Rebel flag in Louisiana. When he had seen the banner which he always worshiped torn into shreds and trampled under foot in the streets of Louisiana, he could restrain his impetuous spirit no longer. He hastened north with the determination that nothing which he could do should be left undone in the great contest then at hand.

Colonel Paxton began his military career in the three months' service as quartermaster for the Eighteenth Ohio Volunteer Infantry. At the expiration of his term of service he returned to Marietta, and in August, 1861, recruited a regiment of cavalry. The history of the movements and services in this regiment will be found at the proper place in this volume. But it will be in place to notice the difficulties under which Colonel Paxton labored. With an ardent leader and ambitious followers, the Second Virginia Cavalry was stationed in the narrow valleys of West Virginia to rout bushwhackers and break up camps of the enemy. No section of the country within the whole range of the Rebellion imposes as great physical obstructions to military movements as West Virginia. Considering the conformation of the country, the condition of the roads, and the character of the service, Colonel Paxton is entitled to the highest praise for his persevering, brave and dashing leadership. "He was accused," says General Fearing, "of being rash, but such rashness in a cavalry officer is oftentimes a virtue. The same rashness evinced by an infantry officer would be unpardonable and lead to a court-martial. It was the custom during the early stages of the war for cavalry officers to pre-estimate results and magnify the strength of the enemy. Imagining insurmountable obstacles in the front often caused them to turn back from an assault or an expedition which might easily have been accomplished with small loss. This fact led General Hooker, as late as the battle of Chancellorsville, to make the assertion while enraged at an unsuccessful expedition of cavalry, that the man could not be found who had ever seen a dead caval-ryman."

Although Colonel Paxton may not have been a cool, calculating director of movements, he was never found wanting when an opportunity was presented for a bold charge. And when a court or commission was appointed to examine into the qualifications of officers then serving in the valley, Colonel Paxton was the first man ordered before the committee of which Colonel Hayes (later President Hayes) was chairman. Colonel Hayes put the question: "Colonel, suppose you were marching along a flat top mountain with a train, how would you dispose of your troops to protect it?" "Well," answered Colonel Paxton, "I would throw out a squad of men on each side to protect the train in case of an attack." "Well, colonel," said Colonel Hayes, "suppose an attack were made on you when in that position, what command would you give?" Colonel Paxton scratched his head a moment, then said, "I don't know, colonel, what command you would give, but I would say, 'Go for them, boys, and give them h—l.'" That ended the examination.

Colonel Paxton's bravery or patriotism was never questioned.

Gen. J. D. Cox, whose good opinion it is a distinguished honor to have, pays this tribute to him as a man and soldier:

When I think of him he always appears as I knew him in the prime of his early manhood in West Virginia, handsome, dashing, fearless, a bold rider and a daring scout. His patriotic determination to see service in the war for the Union made him enter a West Virginia regiment when Ohio's quota was full, and he gave his whole heart to his work. He was disposed to be impatient of restraint, but for a commander whom he trusted and respected he was ready at any moment to imperil his life. His impetuosity sometimes led him into collision with others, especially if he doubted their earnestness or their enterprise. These were, however, the faults of an excess zeal, and will appear merits when contrasted with their opposites. He had most of the qualities of a first class cavalry officer, and was never happier than when detailed for some dangerous adventure requiring both intelligence and daring.

Colonel Paxton in going into the war had followed the impulse of his convictions, and as long as he remained in the service was not only the brave soldier who fought for glory but also the devoted patriot who had a heart in the cause. In a letter written to his family, dated "Camp Piatt, Virginia, February 22, 1863," shows his feeling in regard to the war. This was at a time when the army in the field had reason to be discouraged by the indifference of some of their constituency at home. We quote one paragraph of the letter:

My position is one of great care and responsibility, and I can honestly say I wish it was done. I have seen enough of war in the last 20 months to satisfy both my curiosity and my ambition, but I have not seen enough of this war until I see it closed in favor of our glorious flag and the Union; and I know I but reflect the sentiments of my regiment when I say so. We are all tired and wish to be at home with our families, but not until all is quiet at the front. Then, if traitors (Tories is a better word) at home wish our services you may rest assured they shall have the benefit of them.

Colonel Paxton left the service in 1863. When the war had closed he was as heartily in favor of "burying the past" as in 1860 he had been impatient to crush out the Rebellion. He believed that the sooner the North and the South could unite in a fraternal Fourth of July shout of patriotism the better it would be for the whole country. He says in a published letter in 1874:

I never was in sympathy with the organization, the Grand Army of the Republic as organized at the close of the war, nor of its child, "Decoration Day." I believe, from the history of such affairs in other countries, that the sooner the marks of our Civil War are obliterated, the better it would be for what we fought for, "one whole country." Soldiers' reunions there is no objection to, but my understanding as to the object of Decoration Day was to afford an opportunity for civilians, women and children, aided by the clergy and politicians, to pay a formal respect to dead soldiers; living soldiers could stand and look on and feel proud of the respect paid to their dead comrades. It was an innocent proceeding, well adapted for the persons it was intended for, but never was in my opinion that would create or fire a patriotic people or fighting soldiery. Let the past be gone. I believe the boys in their "little beds" are quite as well off as their living comrades. They are free of the tax, in pains and aches, their comrades in their rear are paying, every step they take, to the present "slow music of the Union."

Colonel Paxton possessed a sound judgment, a strong mind, and remarkable versatility of talent. Had he enjoyed the advantages in early life and a judicious mental training he would undoubtedly have achieved distinction as a writer. He was not a politician in the common acceptance of the term. But he was a man of public spirit favoring every kind of public improvement intended for the development of the country. From what has been written some idea may be formed of the principles and character of our subject. He was one of those peculiar men whom it is impossible to accurately portray with pen. He died at his residence in Marietta, February 28, 1881, of paralysis, after two years of intense suffering.

LIEUT.-COL. ALEXANDER L. HASKINS.—

The subject of this sketch was born in Shushan, Washington County, New York, March 18, 1822. He received a common school education and was engaged in St. Louis, Missouri, several years before going to Marietta, as teacher, and adopted the profession of civil engineer. He was married on October 6, 1853, to Addie G. Gerken, of Marietta.

When the Marietta & Cincinnati Railroad was being constructed, Colonel Haskins was employed as assistant engineer in locating the line, and as engineer in charge of various parts of the work, especially that part laid out between Marietta and Bellaire.

At the beginning of the war he was civil engineer of the city of Marietta, and when the Sixty-third Ohio Volunteer Infantry was raised, he was commissioned major of that regiment. When the regiment went to the field the attainments of Colonel Haskins as an engineer were called into requisition, and he was constantly employed in locating military works, roads, etc.

On July 17, 1862, he was promoted to lieutenant-colonel of his regiment. The arduous duties of the camp and field proved more than his health would stand, and he was honorably discharged March 20, 1863, on account of impaired health.

Colonel Haskins followed his profession of civil engineer up to the fall of 1865, when he was elected to the 57th General Assembly as Representative from Washington County.

Colonel Haskins was civil engineer of the city of Marietta during the years 1855, 1858, 1859, 1860, and 1861. In January, 1866, while at Logansport, Indiana, on some business connected with a railroad on which he had been engaged as engineer, he was taken suddenly ill and died, January 13, 1866. His widow still resides in Marietta. One son and one daughter are living.

MAJ. GEORGE T. RICE was born December 16, 1823, in Macedon, Wayne County, New York, son of Nathan and Dorcas Rice. He married Minerva Jane Ripley, daughter of John and Betsey Ripley, of the same place, and in 1852 removed to Marietta, Ohio.

He enlisted as a private in Company B, Thirty-ninth Regiment, July 22, 1861, was appointed second sergeant and served as such until July 11, 1862, when he was commissioned second lieutenant; he served as such until May 9, 1864, when he was commissioned as first lieutenant Company E, January 11, 1865; was commissioned as captain and transferred to command of Company C, June 6, 1865; was commissioned as major of the regiment and served as such until the regiment was discharged, July 9, 1865.

Major Rice at the close of the war removed from Marietta, to Macedon, New York, and afterward located permanently at Rollin, Michigan, where he engaged in the mercantile business.

CAPT. JACOB KOENIG was born in 1816, in the town of Desloch, dukedom of Hessa, Germany. When he reached the age of 21 he joined the army, and was a faithful soldier for six years in Company I, infantry, of the dukedom of Hessa, receiving an honorable discharge April 1, 1842. After being discharged he remained at home about two weeks, when he sailed for the United States, landing in New York city in May, 1842. He was married in New York on May 7, 1843, to Julia A. Maas, born in Mannheim, Bavaria, who had landed in New York about two weeks before.

While residing in New York City he served in the New York State militia for 14 years, the first seven as a private, and the last as lieutenant. He came to Marietta in July, 1856. In July, 1861, he organized Company F, Thirty-ninth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and was elected captain of the same.

The newspapers of 1861 published in Marietta speak of Captain Koenig's company as the "German Rifles." The company was a militia company for a short time prior to enlistment for three years, and after the first vote to go into the service, it was recruited up to the maximum, 100 men, and left for Camp Colerain, near Cincinnati, all inside of a week. Captain Koenig was a brave soldier, and exceedingly kind to the men in his command. During his term of service he also served as assistant inspector general of the Fifth division, Sixteenth Army Corps. He died at Memphis, Tennessee, on the 21st day of August, 1863, leaving a wife and five children, viz.: Jacob, Julia, Caroline, Philip and William.

CAPT. JAMES C. SELBY was born in Washington County, Ohio, on the 3d day of December, 1838. His father was Jeremiah J. Selby, a native of New York. The maiden name of his mother was Rosana D. Stone. At the age of four years he lost his father. His mother was his only guardian till after he was 14 years of age. Having received a good common school education, he followed the occupation of farming, and also that of carpenter.

At the outbreak of the Rebellion, he enlisted in the Union Army on July 29, 1861, at Lowell, Washington County, Ohio. On August 24, 1861 (at Marietta, Ohio), he was mustered in as second lieutenant of Company A, Thirty-sixth Ohio Volunteer Infantry. A few days after he left with his company and regiment for the field. He was promoted to first lieutenant and assigned to Company F, Thirty-sixth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, March 5, 1862.

At the battle of Antietam, Maryland, while making a charge, a piece of shell went through his haversack, tearing it to pieces and scattering his hardtack over the ground.

He was promoted to captain and assigned to Company K, Thirty-sixth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, October 30, 1863. (Commissioned October 13, 1863.)

At the battle of Missionary Ridge, Tennessee, November 25, 1863, he lost his right arm and was sent to the hospital, where he remained till January, when he went home. In about six weeks he joined his regiment again, and took command of his company even before he was able for duty. He had his sword changed to carry on his right side, and learned to write with his left hand in a few days.

At the battle of Berryville, Virginia, September 3, 1864, he received a gun-shot in his right thigh, severing the vein and shattering the bone. He remained in the field hospital at Berryville two or three days, and was then removed to the general hospital at Annapolis, Maryland, where he died in 10 days after he was wounded. When informed that he must die, he received it with perfect calmness, sent for the chaplain and made the necessary disposition of his property, and asked his nurse to write his lieutenant to make out his monthly returns for him.

In the regiment he was respected as a soldier and gentleman—brave to desperation, generous to a fault, possessed of an iron will, a good moral character, and a kind heart. He was loved and desired to be loved by all his comrades.

CAPT. WILLIAM BEALE WHITTLESEY, son of Hon. William A. and Jane H. Whittlesey, of Marietta, Ohio, was born at Marietta, October 2, 1841. Even in boyhood he showed a taste and ambition for military life, and when a young man under age he was made an aide de camp of General Hildebrand in the State militia.

In September, 1857, at the age of 17, he entered the freshman class and was graduated in the summer of 1861.

In the fall of 1862 he aided in raising a company, and was commissioned second lieutenant of Company F, Ninety-second Ohio Volunteer Infantry. The regiment remained in the Kanawha Valley until the spring of 1863, when it was ordered to Nashville, and attached to the Army of the Cumberland. It afterward joined the Fourteenth Army Corps, under that noblest of noble generals, George H. Thomas, and formed one of the many regiments which met Bragg at Chickamauga, September 17 and 18, 1863. As it became evident that a battle was imminent, Whittlesey talked freely of it—wondering how he would stand fire—how he would act, and asked the writer if he felt doing his duty to so state it to his father. He went into that battle and, in his earnestness, unnecessarily exposed himself—taking position in front of his company and directing their fire. He escaped without injury—was commended in the official report of the battle, and afterward, a vacancy occurring, was made captain.

The regiment remained in Chattanooga during that fall, and formed part of the forlorn hope under command of Gen. Baldy Smith, by which communication was opened with General Hooker, coming to our relief from Bridgeport. A part went by small flatboats in the night, passed the enemy's pickets at Lookout Mountain, while the commander marched across the neck and joined them at Brown's Ferry, where a crossing was made, the boats being used to form a pontoon bridge. The army provisioned and reinforced, preparations soon began for the assault of General Bragg, securely posted on Missionary Ridge and Lookout Mountain. From the summit of the latter shells were frequently thrown into our camp from a battery stationed there. It was not many days before the ominous order was issued to prepare three days' cooked rations, and 100 rounds of ammunition. All soldiers knew its meaning, and were also well aware that no boy's play was before them. Whittlesey made the requisite preparations and then awaited the command to move—making first his will, in which he remembered the Psi Gamma society, of which he was an enthusiastic member when at college. He expressed a wish that if struck by a ball, it might be through the heart. He led his company up that hill—so steep that it was no easy task to climb it when no enemy was on the top; and when near the top, a minie ball went crashing through his heart. Telling his men to go on, that he was killed, he breathed his last amid the smoke and carnage of that long to be remembered evening.

The cord that bound son to father seemed to possess the qualities of the electric shock; the shock that took the life of the son signaled the father, a thousand miles away. On the next Thanksgiving Day, 1863, taking his usual morning walk, Mr. Whittlesey said to a friend: "I feel that there has been a great battle, and Beale is killed." He was advised to dismiss it as a fond father's fancy, and went home. Soon after, seeing another friend coming towards his house, he said: "There comes Mr. P. to tell me of Beale's death"—which was too true—the telegram from Dr. Cotton, the regimental surgeon, sent that morning from Chattanooga, conveyed the sad news—news that made that Thanksgiving Day one memorable in more than one family, and among the friends and acquaintances of Whittlesey and Turner. The funerals of both were held the same day some weeks afterwards. The bodies lay in state in the Psi Gamma hall for a season. Mr. Whittlesey never seemed to recover from the shock of Beale's death, and soon followed him.

CAPT. MADISON HOON, Sixty-third Ohio Volunteer Infantry, was reared on a farm in Waterford township; volunteered with J. W. Fouts and was mustered into service at the organization of the company at Camp Putnam, in Marietta, Ohio, October 9, 1861, and was appointed corporal; was promoted to sergeant of his company, then to sergeant major of the regiment, then to first lieutenant, and lastly to captain. Captain Hoon served through the war; was mustered out with the regiment at Louisville, Kentucky, July 8, 1865; went to his home, and died of disease the same fall. Captain Hoon gained his promotions by true merit, both in business and as a commander. Sagacious in battle, considerate in camp, he won the confidence of his men and the respect of all who knew him.

CAPT. AUGUSTUS T. WARD was born October 11, 1840, in Fearing township, Washington County, Ohio. He was the second son and fourth child of Robert and Lucy M. Ward; the former an English emigrant, the latter a native of the township.

He was brought up on the farm, attending the district school in summer terms until the age of nine, and winter schools until he was 16, after which he taught common schools during the winter until 1861.

When the Rebellion broke out in 1861, he was filled with indignation at the insults the flag received from the traitors of the south, but did not enter the army on the first call of President Lincoln, because of his parents' strong desire that he should remain at home. After the expiration of the term of the three months troops, and when the second call was made for 300,000 men, he felt that his country needed his services, and that he owed her his first duty. Capt. Jewett Palmer, Jr. (afterward major) was at that time enlisting a company for the Thirty-sixth Ohio Infantry, at Lower Salem, of this county, and Ward hastened to enroll his name with the young patriots there assembled. This was on the 12th day of August, 1861. Captain Palmer marched his company to Camp Putnam, at Marietta, the same evening and reported to Lieut.-Col. M. Clarke, commanding regiment.

Ward was appointed drummer of his company next day, a position of which he was extremely proud.

He served in that capacity until the 1st of February, 1862, when he was placed in the ranks of his company by his colonel.

He was immediately appointed second sergeant of his company (G) by Captain Palmer, and served as such until the 6th of April following, when a vacancy occurring in the first sergeancy, he was appointed to fill that position. The two last appointments were made while the regiment was in barracks at Summer-ville, West Virginia.

Having served faithfully as first sergeant through Pope's and McClellan's campaigns in the east in August and September, 1862, and for gallantry in the battles of South Mountain and Antietam, he was promoted to second lieutenant (commission dating from the latter engagement), and assigned to duty in Company A of the Thirty-sixth Regiment, of which J. Gage Barker, of Muskingum, was then captain, and John L. Palmer, of Salem, first lieutenant. He served as second lieutenant through the campaign of Rosecrans to Chattanooga, and under Thomas during the winter of 1863 and 1864, in camp at that place. Remained with the regiment on its re-enlistment as veterans, in February, 1864, visiting home then for the first time since his entry into service.

On the expiration of the veteran furlough the regiment was ordered to Charleston, West Virginia, where he received a commission as first lieutenant, dated April 21, 1864, and assigned to duty in the same company, in which he remained until the 13th of January, 1865, when he received his appointment to a captaincy, commission dated December 31, 1864.

While first lieutenant he passed through the raids to the Virginia & Tennessee Railroad and to Lynchburg, under General Hunter, and the memorable campaign of General Sheridan in the Shenandoah Valley, fighting his last battle at Cedar Creek, on the 19th day of October, 1864.

As captain he was assigned to the command of Company F of his regiment, of which company he retained command until the muster out and discharge of the regiment, which took place at Columbus, Ohio, July 27, 1865.

Having served nearly four years honestly and faithfully, and seen the honor of the American flag completely established and the Rebellion crushed, he received his discharge with a degree of satisfaction that only an old soldier can feel, and retired from the army with the entire good will of his company.

The following is a list of engagements in which he bore a gallant and honorable part:

Lewisburg, West Virginia, May 23, 1862; South Mountain, Maryland, September 14, 1862; Antietam, Maryland, September 17, 1862; Hoover's Gap, Tennessee, June 24, 1863; Chickamauga, Georgia, September 19 and 20, 1863; Missionary Ridge, Tennessee, November 25, 1863; Cloyd Mountain, Virginia, May 9, 1864; New River Bridge, Virginia, May 10, 1864; Kernstown, Virginia, July 23, 1864; Berryville, Virginia, September 3, 1864; Opequan, September 19, 1864; Fisher's Hill, September 22, 1864; Cedar Creek, October 19, 1864. Besides these he was engaged in eight or ten skirmishes, more or less dangerous and bloody.

After his discharge he returned at once to his farm in his native township.

[In the summer of 1865 the Military committee of Washington county caused a letter to be written to each of the officers in the army from this county, requesting them to give a short account of their life in the service, and the foregoing was written by Captain Ward in response to such letter.]

In the year following the close of the war Mr. Bartmess, the county recorder, having died, Captain Ward was appointed to fill the vacancy. He afterward engaged in business in Marietta, in which he was very successful.

In 1869 he was married to Kate L. Wakefield, daughter of B. A. Wakefield, of Lawrence County. The following are their children: Charles Augustus, born July 27, 1870; Willia Wakefield, born March 25, 1872.

Captain Ward was compelled to give up business on account of failing health. The disease, doubtless the result of exposure in the service, now made rapid strides, and Captain Ward seeking relief by change of air and medical treatment, went to Green Springs, Ohio, where he died on the 13th of August, 1874.

CAPT. ARTHUR D. EELLS was born at Unadella, Otsego County, New York, February 6, 1838. He was the son of John Eells, formerly of New Canaan, Connecticut, and a grandson of Gen. John Mead, who served his country through the Revolutionary War. Captain Eells came to Marietta in February, 1859. Soon after the rebellion broke out he commenced recruiting men for the Union army and in August, 1861, took a squad of twenty odd men to Parkersburg, West Virginia, and continued to recruit men for the Union Army until about the 26th of October, 1861, when the Second Virginia Cavalry Regiment was organized and he was commissioned captain of Company F, the regiment being mostly composed of Ohio men. Soon after the regiment was organized, it was sent to Guyandotte, on the Ohio River, and remained there through the winter of 1861-

62. In May, 1862, the regiment in part joined General Crook's brigade, at Lewisburg, West Virginia, and went on the raid through the mountains to White Sulpher Springs, Covington, and Jackson Depot, tearing up the railroad track and doing much damage to the enemy. The march was so rapid that the enemy was entirely taken by surprise and could not gather force sufficient to attack them. General Crook with his little army returned to Lewisburg. The day previous to the battle of Lewisburg, Captain Eells with a small detail of men was sent out by General Crook on a reconnoitering expedition. On this expedition he came very near being captured, having gone very nearly within the lines of the enemy's pickets. He and his men escaped by strategy, as he personally learned from prisoners captured in the Lewisburg fight the next day. While at a farmer's house, he learned facts that were of sufficient moment to put him on the alert, and in a very careless way gave orders to his men to fall back to the main force, indicating that there was quite a force close at hand. One of the men at the farm house was a Rebel soldier in citizen's dress, who at once reported these facts to the enemy, as one of the prisoners told Captain Eells the next day that they thought by letting him go that they would likely capture the main body of men, not supposing that he would venture to come so near their lines with such a small squad of men. Captain Eells and his men after having gone a reasonable distance from the enemy made good time in getting back to headquarters with his men, and reached camp at about nine o'clock in the evening of the 22nd of May and made his report to General Crook, giving him valuable information. In the early morning of May 23d General Crook was attacked; the enemy drove in his pickets and the fight commenced. The enemy numbered from 2,500 to 3,000 men, and were defeated, losing six men killed, 175 prisoners and many wounded, four pieces of artillery and a large number of small arms. This was a grand victory for General Crook and his brave little army. In one of Captain Eells' scouting expeditions, he came suddenly on a Rebel picket armed with a double-barreled shotgun. The picket fired one barrel of his gun at Eells, who returned the fire with his revolver. The picket dropped his gun and ran into the woods, evidently wounded. Captain Eells captured the gun and brought it home with him. The hardships of army life and the mountain campaigns were more than his health could bear. Some time in June, 1862, he resigned his commission and came back to Marietta. With quiet and rest came better health and renewed strength. In the following August, the government called for a regiment of cavalry for border service, to be known as the "River Regiment." Captain Eells at once commenced recruiting men for this regiment. In a very few days he reported to the military committee of Washington county that he had a company of 100 men ready for the service. He went to Columbus and was commissioned as captain of Company H, Seventh Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, August 25, 1862. He was very soon ordered to report with his company at Ripley on the Ohio River above Cincinnati, notwithstanding the regiment was raised for border service. Early in December of the same year the regiment was ordered to the front. They crossed the Ohio River below Maysville into Kentucky, reaching Lexington about the first of January, 1863. While in camp at Lexington, Captain Eells was taken sick with typhoid fever and was unable to do any military duty until some time in April following. He joined his regiment at Stanford, Kentucky, and was on duty until the 23rd of June, 1863. While stationed at Somerset, Kentucky, it became evident to him that he could not stand the hardships of an active army life. It was often remarked by his brother officers that there was not another man in the regiment who would think he was able to do military duty even when he was in his best health. He was full of hope, always cheerful and ready for duty, a good soldier, and every man in the regiment his friend. He greatly desired to live to see the war ended. He never for a moment doubted the final result. On the 28th of June, 1863, he sent in his resignation and severed his connection with his company and regiment as a comrade and an officer. He came back to Marietta with the hope that rest and good care would again bring him better health and more strength. But not so; the exposure and hardships of an army life had done the work for him—the destroyer's hand was on him—his health gradually failed him. His ambition and cheerful disposition kept him up even to the last, and when death came he was ready for the call and died with the courage of a Christian soldier the thirteenth of September, 1864, and was buried in Mound Cemetery at Marietta, Ohio.

CAPT. THEODORE EDGERTON GREENWOOD, only son of George Greenwood, Esq., and Elizabeth Edgerton Greenwood, was born at Newport, Washington County, Ohio, February 7, 1838. He entered the Preparatory Department of the Marietta College at the age of 16, and entered the freshman class in September, 1855. During his college course he united with the Congregational Church at Marietta, and always remained a consistent member. He graduated in the summer of 1859, and at the head of his class. At the death of Tutor Washburne, he was made tutor and filled that position acceptably for the remainder of the year. He spent part of the following year in the study of the law, but subsequently decided to undertake a business career. But the breaking out of the Rebellion spoiled his plans, as it spoiled those of so many ardent young men in 1861. As early as the autumn of 1860, he began to study Scott's "Tactics," and in a confidential talk with a college friend, said: "Any observant man can see that we are on the eve of a terrible war between the North and the South, and the man of military knowledge will be the man of power, who can help his country in her hour of need." At the beginning of hostilities, young Greenwood did not see his way clear for leaving his parents for the field. He however accepted the position of post quartermaster at Marietta, and in the autumn of the same year was called to a more important position of the same kind at Wheeling, West Virginia.

But he was not satisfied with this kind of service; he believed that he was needed in the field. Accordingly, having at length satisfied the claims of filial duty which had before detained him, he resigned his position, and, in June, 1862, having enlisted in the military service, was appointed on the staff of General Rosecrans, who had become acquainted with him in West Virginia, but was now in command of a portion of the Army of the Tennessee. Greenwood started immediately for the field, full of ardor, gratified to be at length where he would have an opportunity to do his part in the great struggle. His letters of that date are full of the spirit of his station. But his service was short; a single summer in the climate of Mississippi cut him down. Weakened by disease, he concealed his condition as much as possible from his general, and in the battle of Iuka, September 19th, he was placed in a position of much danger and responsibility. The line was broken, and Greenwood, by his courage and skill, succeeded in stopping a detachment that was flying before the enemy, and restored order to that part of the line. General Rosecrans testifies that "Captain Greenwood's conduct was admirable." But the exertion and excitement were too great for his strength. On the second day after the battle he was completely prostrated, and was taken in an ambulance to Jacinto, Mississippi, where he rapidly sank, and a week later, on the 27th of September, 1862, passed away.

CAPT. JOHN J. JUMPER was born in Manchester township, Morgan County, Ohio, September 6, 1830, son of George and Elizabeth Jumper, who afterward removed to Washington County. John was married, September 13, 1851, at Reinersville, Morgan County, Ohio.

In August, 1861, Captain Jumper raised a company for the three years' service, and after remaining at Camp Putnam, Marietta, until his company was full, he joined the Eighteenth Ohio Volunteer Infantry at Camp Wool, Athens, Ohio, and his company became "F," of that regiment.

While in the army he did good service, and would have continued until the close but for a severe attack of chronic diarrhoea, compelling him to resign, and of which disease he died September 13, 1864, at Beverly, Ohio.

LIEUT. LEVI J. FOURAKER was born in Morgan Co., Ohio, September 8, 1838, where he lived until August, 1852, when he came to Washington County with his parents, and remained with them until April, 1861. He enlisted a few days after the breaking out of the war, in Captain John Henderson's company, K, Eighteenth Ohio three-months' regiment, and at the expiration of his term of service volunteered in Company H, Seventy-seventh Ohio, Colonel Hildebrand commanding. Upon organizing the company he was elected second lieutenant, and Richard Fouraker, his father, captain of the company. After the regiment landed at Pittsburgh Landing, Tennessee, Lieutenant Fouraker served faithfully on scouting and other duty, until the Seventy-seventh was ordered into camp at Shiloh Church, when Lieutenant Fouraker was placed in command of the first picket guard sent out from that point, which guard was stationed near the place afterwards known as the battlefield of Fallen Timbers.

Lieutenant Fouraker fought with his command through the battle of Shiloh, April 6th and 7th, and was taken prisoner with many others, on the 8th, at the battle of Fallen Timbers, and when a prisoner of war was basely shot by the Rebel cavalry and subsequently brought into camp, nearly dead. He stayed in the field hospital a few days, when he was sent to the Cincinnati hospital, and from there to his father's house, where he died of his wounds March 5, 1875, aged 36 years.

Lieutenant Fouraker was always jovial, agreeable, and a good companion. He was brave to a fault, and had no enemies. His comrades had learned to love and respect him as a true soldier, when he fell at his post of duty.

ADJUTANT GEORGE BUTLER TURNER was a son of Samuel R. Turner, Esq., and Hannah B. Turner, of Marietta, Ohio, and was born at New London, Connecticut, November 13, 1840.

From the age of eight years his home was at Marietta. He graduated at the high school, then finished his preparation for college under a private tutor, entered the freshman class in the fall of 1858, and passed through his course with the highest credit, graduating with the class of 1862. His parents were at the time in the East, and he informed them by letter that he felt it his duty to engage in the great struggle to save the Union, and soon thereafter was enrolled in Company F, Ninety-second Ohio Volunteer Infantry, in which W. Beale Whittlesey was a lieutenant. He was made orderly sergeant of the company, and filled the position very satisfactorily.

Although of seemingly frail constitution and one likely to succumb to the hardships and trials of a soldier's life, yet he seemed to stand it well, so far as I can now remember, being usually in good health, and always bright and cheerful. An earnest Christian, he was at all times consistent, yet by no means obtrusive in asserting his faith. His everyday life commended his belief to all those associating with him. In battle he was cool and self-possessed. At Chickamauga, at a critical time, Colonel Fearing and his adjutant were both wounded, and word was brought to the writer, on the right wing, to assume command; Turner, then acting as sergeant major, notified me of it, kindly urging me to keep cool, and all would be well. At this battle the adjutant, D. E. Putnam, was so badly wounded as to render his discharge a necessity, and Turner, who had been promoted, was made adjutant of the regiment as soon as it could be done; in which capacity he acted after the date of that battle, September 18, 1863.

On the afternoon of November 25, 1863, the Ninety-second regiment, with less than 400 fighting men, formed a part of the column that assaulted and captured Missionary Ridge. Turner lived to reach the summit unharmed. The commanding officer of the regiment had been wounded, Whittlesey and other officers killed, and others wounded in the assault, which was a very difficult one, the hill being steep and rough. The summit once reached and the enemy driven over, he assumed command of the shattered line, now three times decimated, in about half an hour, and with drawn sword rallied the men about him and led them to aid in repelling a brigade of the enemy who were coming to the assistance of their comrades in our front. He here received his mortal wound, a large minie ball striking him just behind the ear; no doubt he was facing the men, urging them forward at the time.

Everything was done that could be, but his wound was mortal. He was evidently expecting death, and while he talked but little, seemed to draw comfort from his pocket Testament, opened at the 14th and 15th chapters of St. John. General Turchin, who commanded the brigade, called, and in speaking of Turner's bravery and ability, offered him a position on his staff, asking him if he would like it. The reply came at once—"I am willing to go and do that in which I can be the most useful." He gradually sank, became delirious, and when it was thought best to remove him to the officers' hospital, gave the writer his hand, saying, "Good bye, colonel, good bye; we will both go home together." He went home that night, living but a few hours afterwards. He died December 1, 1863. Just before going into this last battle he wrote a letter home, to be mailed in case he should be killed, which closed with these words—"If I return not with the victors, think not the sacrifice too great for the interests at stake."

LIEUT. TIMOTHY L. CONDIT.—Killed in battle of Murfreesborough, December 31, 1862.

Timothy L. Condit was born at Cleveland, Ohio, in December, 1837. In 1852 he entered the office of the Marietta Intelligencer as an apprentice. He devoted three years to the mastery of his trade as a printer. During this time spare moments were occupied in diligent preparation for college. He so far succeeded in fitting himself, that, after one year more spent partly in the preparatory department, and partly in working at his trade, he entered college the most thoroughly prepared of any member of his class. This leadership he maintained throughout the course, graduating in 1860, as the valedictorian of that year. Principally by his own labor as a printer, he secured the money to pay his way through college. The perseverance and force to achieve such marked success against such obstacles, of themselves stamp Condit as a young man of devoted purpose, great industry, and no ordinary ability.

In 1856 he united with the Congregational Church at Marietta, and felt called to prepare for the ministry, but before the fall term of the theological seminary began he felt a stronger call to enter the service of his country, and decided to volunteer. In pursuance of this decision, he entered Company L, of the First Ohio Cavalry, as a private soldier, for three years' service. An educated gentleman, with influential friends, in places of authority, he could have had a commission for the asking. Deeming himself unprepared for the responsibility of command, he refused to ask one. Through the camps and campaigns of his regiment, a gallant body of soldiers, Condit faithfully performed his arduous duties, adorning his humble position by maintaining amid all trials, temptations, and sufferings, his Christian profession and gentlemanly bearing. On the 29th of May, 1862, he was promoted to be second lieutenant in his company.

On the 31st of December, 1862, on the battlefield of Murfreesborough, in the thickest of the fight, and at the head of his squadron, Condit was shot dead.

Two companies of his regiment, on duty guarding a wagon train, were suddenly overwhelmed in the fierce onset of the attack by the Confederate Army. Said a private soldier who rode with Condit on that day, "When the lieutenant was killed, they were all around us; we could not see any way out. The lieutenant said the only way was to charge and then retreat. He rode forward to lead and was killed." To make way for his men to get out Condit died. Arnold von Winkelried, when he gathered to his breast the spears of the Austrian phalanx, died not a more heroic death.

His body was recovered from the battlefield, and now lies buried in the Mound Cemetery at Marietta. As a token of appreciation of the character and service of this noble Christian patriot and martyr, the society of the alumni, and his fellow-soldiers of the First Ohio Cavalry, placed a monument over his resting-place.

LIEUT. CHARLES BEMAN GATES.*—Looking back to the dark years when so many homes were made desolate that the whole country seemed to sit in one common bereavement, there yet stand in the memory spots where the shadows rested with unwonted heaviness; where the time and manner in which death came, and the relations of the dead to the living, gave elements of peculiar and overwhelming sadness to the sorrowful stroke.

Lieutenant Gates was the only son of Beman Gates, Esq., and Betsy Shipman Gates, of Marietta. He was born October 30, 1844, and entered Marietta College in 1861.

Already in these early days of the war, his heart and soul were enlisted in his country's cause, and he entered college rather than the army, only because of his extreme youth. In the recruiting camp which was established at Marietta, the officers were drilled regularly by an army officer, and at his request his father obtained permission for him to join in the drill. He joined the force which was organized in Marietta for defense and guard duty, and was present at Buffington when John Morgan attempted to cross the Ohio at that point. In this kind of duty he became proficient in the manual of arms, and satisfied in part his desire to help his country in her need, while at the same time he continued his studies.

Meantime the war raged on. Victories and defeats alike added to the nation's dead, and the voice of the mourning filled the land. Regiments which went away with full ranks, had come back piecemeal, on crutches, on cots, and in coffins. The day when man enlisted under the inspiration of life and drum had passed away. The dark days of the spring of 1864 had come, and the government was laboring desperately to recruit the armies which were melted away in the terrible battles of recent campaigns.

Young Gates felt that the time had come when he must give himself wholly to his country's service. Friends tried to dissuade him, feeling that to break away in the midst of his education was a sacrifice that was not called for. But he remained firm in his conviction that it was his duty to go, and his parents yielded their consent, feeling that to withhold it would be to crush all manliness in him. He enlisted in the One Hundred and Forty-eighth Regiment, which was formed in response to the call of Governor Brough, was chosen first lieutenant of his company, and was duly commissioned.

On the 23rd of May, at 2 o'clock P. M., he left with his regiment for the front by rail, via Parkersburg, to Harper's Ferry. When about five miles below Marietta the train was thrown from the track down an embankment; two of his fellow-students were killed, and he received severe internal injuries. Unwilling to turn back, he proceeded with his regiment; but his injuries, aggravated by exposure to rain, marching and camping without tents, resulted in his death at Harper's Ferry, May 31, 1864.

Thus he was cut down at the very threshold of the service which he had longed for. He had followed Greenwood and Condit and Whittlesey and Turner to their last resting place, and he entered this service with a full realization of the dangers involved, expressing his readiness to give up his life for his country. The sacrifice was required of him, while the experiences which are dear to the soldier were denied him.

In his college course he developed business rather than professional qualities. He was especially devoted to the more practical branches of study. He was greatly attached to his literary society, and took an active part in the frequent debates upon the questions which were then absorbing the public mind. He read more for information than amusement, and his essays which were often upon some political subject showed quick perception, penetration and sound judgment. With his fellow students he was universally popular. He was thoroughly unselfish, generous, often to his own detriment, as he frequently permitted his own record to suffer through a desire to serve others. Through all his intercourse with his fellows, there ran a thoughtful regard for the feelings of others, and a fine delicate sense of honor which won for him the warm affection and esteem of a large circle of friends, both in his own and the other college classes.

*By Prof. D. E. Beach.

There were few residents of Marietta, old or young, to whom his bright intelligent face was not familiar: and his pleasant, respectful ways and frank, hearty friendliness had endeared him to all. He was devoid of all affectation, and slow to manifest the deeper feelings of his heart, yet no one who was intimate with him could fail to see that a deep reverence and affection for his parents were the strongest sentiment of his nature; so strong that it held him firmly from the temptations to which his sociable, funloving disposition rendered him peculiarly liable, and became a constant incentive to honorable effort.

He was maturing rapidly and gave every promise that he was passing to a successful and honorable manhood.

His death came with a weight of swift sorrow which words cannot measure or express. A telegram brought to his parents the tidings of his critical condition, and they hastened to Harper's Ferry by the first train, but reached there only to find that he was already dead, and they returned, bringing with them the lifeless form of him who had left them a short week before in the strength and beauty of his early manhood.

In all the sad experiences of the war, perhaps nothing shows more strongly the fearful cost at which the country was saved than cases like this, when an only and tenderly loved son was taken, leaving a sharp sense of bereavement and irreparable loss which the passing years do not lessen, and which even religion can only soften, but can not take away.

LIEUT. RICHARD D. MASON, the subject of this sketch, was born in Adams township, Washington County, son of Adolphus and Betsey B. Mason. He received a common-school education.

He was elected second lieutenant of Company B, Ninth Ohio Cavalry, which rendezvoused at Camp Marietta, and was mustered in at Zanesville, January 17, 1863. From Zanesville the company moved to Camp Dennison, where they were armed and equipped. They then proceeded to Kentucky. Lieutenant Mason was with his company during its term of service up to the time of his death, acquitting himself with credit. After the siege of Knoxville, Lieutenant Mason was promoted to first lieutenant, and soon after obtained leave of absence to return home. While at home he was married to Elizabeth Shepard. Returning to his company at Pulaski, Tennessee, he was taken with chronic diarrhoea and died on June 24, 1864. "Thus perished as gallant a young patriot as ever drew sword in defense of his country."

LIEUT. RICHARD B. CHEATHAM, Sixty-third Ohio Volunteer Infantry, volunteered with J. W. Fouts, and was mustered in at the organization of the company, October 9, 1861, as first sergeant of the company, served in that capacity with his company up to the 26th of May, 1862, when he was promoted to first lieutenant of his company (D), served in that capacity up to the time of his death. He died in camp at Memphis, July 18, 1863, after a two days' illness. Lieutenant Cheatham was a good soldier and an efficient officer, always ready for duty and seldom absent from his company, who deeply regretted his loss.

LIEUT. EDGAR P. PEARCE was born in London, England, November 27, 1840. Two years later his father removed with his family to this country, taking up his residence at Cleveland, Ohio: afterwards, in 1848, at Marietta. Here the subject of this sketch grew to manhood, passing through the public schools of the city. Having learned the printer's trade, he worked several years in the office of the Marietta Intelligencer. He then filled a clerical office at the bank of Marietta for some years. In his 21st year he enlisted as a private in the Seventy-seventh Regiment, and soon after was appointed quartermaster sergeant of the regiment.

After the battle of Shiloh he was promoted to first lieutenant and assistant quartermaster. He was next detached from the regiment and made brigade quartermaster; and when General Steele was organizing his expedition to join General Banks, Lieutenant Pearce was appointed chief quartermaster of the expedition, which position he filled with distinguished ability. He was always a favorite with his commanding officers, owing to his genial disposition and peculiar talents and ability in the quartermasters' department. When the Seventy-seventh Regiment was reduced to a battalion, on account of its thinned ranks, a reduction of regimental officers took place, and Lieutenant Pearce was honorably discharged, together with others.

LUTHER HATHAWAY.

He was married on January 26, 1865, to Mary D. Ewart, eldest daughter of Hon. Thomas W. Ewart, of Marietta. As a partner in the firm of Pearce & Triem, he pursued the business of druggist for some years, in Marietta. He was the popular cashier of the Caldwell National bank, at Caldwell, Ohio, for several years. In the fall of 1872 he returned to Marietta in failing health, and died of consumption July 7, 1873, aged 32 years and seven months, much loved and lamented by a large circle of friends.

PARDON COOKE, JR., was born January 10, 1823, at Parkersburg (West) Virginia, son of Rev. Pardon and Mary Cook. The family removed to Ohio in September, 1832. In March, 1852, he graduated at the Starling Medical College, Columbus, Ohio.

He was married in November, 1852, to Mary Ellen Hunter, eldest daughter of Hon. William Forrest Hunter, of Woodsfield, Ohio, soon after which he settled in Marietta and began the practice of his profession.

He was commissioned as assistant surgeon of Ohio volunteers October 29, 1861, and assigned to duty in General Cox's division, in the Kanawha Valley. In February, 1862, he was assigned to duty as assistant surgeon of the Seventy-seventh Regiment, and remained at his post until the time of his death, which occurred October 31, 1863, on a steamer, on the White River, near Duvall's Bluff, Arkansas.

LUTHER HATHAWAY.—In looking over the chapter of a life, especially after it is closed, we can readily see the leading characteristics, ambitions and desires that prompted the course of that life; and in the study of biography the chief benefit is derived from these salient points. We can gather from the field of every life, many flowers, many examples that may stimulate others to noble endeavor. Let us gather only these. Thus far will the general reader be interested and no farther. More than that is for local consumption of friends and relatives. The life before us presents many such points, of which we mention but a few.

First—Devotion to the cause of the country. For a year before the war Mr. Hathaway was in Kentucky, where every business interest would have prompted him either to oppose the Union or remain indifferent, but his letters of that period show that he stood by the Union as it was without equivocation; and upon his return in 1861 he at once enlisted as a private in the United States service. He placed his life in the scale. No higher duty can be discharged, or greater sacrifice made by a citizen than that.

Second—We would mention a pure life. Having been converted in early life he united with the Baptist Church, and ever after remained a consistent member thereof.

Third—A high appreciation of education as a means of development and as the right road to advancement. In one of his last letters to his wife, he tells her that no sacrifice they might make in educating their children would be too great for the end to be attained. His constant effort and solicitude was to bring up and educate his children properly.

Luther Hathaway was born at Savoy, Berkshire County, Massachusetts, December 31, 1817. He was the youngest son of Nathaniel Gilbert and Vashti (Seymour) Hathaway, and counted among his ancestors, on the paternal side, Governor William Bradford and Sir Humphrey Gilbert, the navigator and discoverer.

His father and mother were both born at Taunton, Bristol county, Massachusetts, from which town they removed to Savoy.

From Berkshire his father removed to Macedon, Wayne county, New York, where Luther and his brothers and sisters received such education as was customary in New England families of those days. He was married August 29, 1842, to Clarissa Louise Ripley, daughter of John and Betsey (Elliot) Ripley, at Macedon, New York. The children of this marriage were Seymour Judson, and John Gilbert Hathaway.

Mr. Hathaway with his family removed to Marietta in the spring of 1853, where he resided until the breaking out of the war, when, upon his return from Danville, Kentucky, he enlisted in Company B, Thirty-ninth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, July 22, 1861. Upon arriving at Camp Colerain, near Cincinnati, he was appointed hospital steward of the regiment. Soon afterward the Thirty-ninth left for Missouri, and he accompanied the regiment on all its hard and extended line of march over that State during the winter of 1861-62; having for a messmate and friend the Rev. B. W. Chidlaw, chaplain of the regiment.

After the fall of Island No. 10, a general hospital was organized at New Madrid, Missouri, and Mr. Hathaway was designated to take charge of the same, being detached from the regiment. He so remained detached up to the time of his death.

During the winter of 1862-63 preparations were made for an advance on Vicksburg, the next Rebel stronghold below Island No. 10, and he assisted and superintended the fitting up, at Columbus, Kentucky, of the large Mississippi steamer "Nashville" for a floating hospital. When completed he was placed in charge. General Grant soon began to concentrate his forces for an advance on Vicksburg, and when the army and flotilla arrived in front of that city, the "Nashville" was anchored in the river ready to receive the sick and wounded soldiers.

Before leaving Columbus, Kentucky, Mr. Hathaway's health was in such condition as would have warranted a release from duty, but he stood to his post. While at New Madrid he had been detailed as physician and surgeon to accompany various cavalry expeditions into the enemy's country. This was a position he had an ambition to fill, and he was fast becoming competent to fill it successfully by the study of medicine during his spare hours, and by his varied experience in camp and field. In these expeditions the active life on horseback preserved his usual health and vigor, but when he started south on the "Nashville," the confinement and care of the hospital, and the heat and malaria of the southern rivers began to tell upon his health. Upon arriving at Vicksburg he was in reality unfit for duty, but he still remained at his post. He died April 1st. His remains were embalmed and sent to Marietta. He was buried with Masonic honors in Mound Cemetery, April 14, 1863, being a member of American Union Lodge, No. 1, F. & A. M.

The family then removed to Macedon, New York, where Clarissa L. Hathaway, his wife, died December 27, 1863.

His son, S. J. Hathaway, having begun preparation for college at Marietta in the winter of 1863, remained and graduated at Marietta College in 1869.

His son, J. G. Hathaway, after attending the Macedon Centre Academy, in Macedon, New York, for several years, returned to Marietta in the spring of 1869, and engaged on the engineer corps then surveying the Cleveland & Marietta Railroad until its completion, when he learned the photographer's business with J. D. Cadwallader, Esq., at Marietta. He was married in 1875, to Miss Annetta Morse, and removed to Portsmouth, Ohio, the same year.

Rev. B. W. Chidlaw writes in regard to Mr. Hathaway:

Of Luther Hathaway I have many pleasant memories, and shall ever hold him in high esteem. * * * He was a true friend, a sincere Christian, and a man of noble purposes. His death at the post of duty all his officers and comrades greatly deplored and sincerely mourned.

WILLIAM L. PORTERFIELD was born in Butler County, Pennsylvania, February 8, 1839. At the age of 15 his family came to Marietta, Ohio. Here he attended school and was graduated from the high school in 1859. He engaged in teaching until the breaking out of the Rebellion. In November, 1861, he enlisted in Company B, Seventy-seventh Ohio Volunteer Infantry, then encamped in Marietta, and was appointed second sergeant of his company. In January, 1862, the regiment was ordered to Cincinnati, and soon after was sent up the Tennessee to Pittsburgh Landing, there to take part in the great battle of Shiloh. Porterfield survived the first two days' heavy fighting, taking a gallant part therein, to be slain on the third day, April 8th, in the memorable charge of the Texan cavalry. He was almost instantly killed by a shot in the neck. His remains were brought to Marietta and interred in Mound Cemetery. Thus perished, in his first battle, this young soldier, at the age of 23.

JOHN ALEXANDER PALMER, fourth child of Jewett and Rachel (Campbell) Palmer, was born in Washington County, Ohio, October 19, 1829.

He married Margaret McAfee April 6, 1856, by whom he had two children. His life was passed upon his farm, and his winters usually spent in teaching, until the breaking out of the war of the Rebellion. In August, 1861, he enlisted in the company then being recruited in Salem by his brother, Jewett, for the Thirty-sixth Ohio Infantry. On the organization of the company he was appointed first sergeant. He entered the field with his regiment, and bore his full share of its hard campaigning and battles. He was promoted to second lieutenant March 20, 1862, and to first lieutenant on the first of September following. Owing to the failure of his health, he resigned his commission on January 18, 1863, and returned home. He died on the 23rd of the following March, from the effects of exposure in the service. His high character as a Christian and patriot is well known. As a citizen and neighbor he was full of kindly impulses and quiet, good deeds. The organization and prosperous growth of the First Universalist Church of Salem, this county, and of Palmer Lodge, of Odd Fellows, of the same place, are very largely due to his influence and earnest, energetic labors.

His life was gentle; and the elements
So mix'd in him, that nature might stand up,
And say to all the world—'This is a man!'

CHAPTER XXVIII

THE CIVIL WAR—Continued.

ROLL OF HONOR—THE SOLDIERS' MONUMENT.

The following is a list of volunteers in the service of the United States during the War of the Rebellion, compiled from papers of the military committee, Washington County, newspaper lists, assessor's lists, 1863-64, lists of deceased soldiers, adjutant general's report, West Virginia, 1864 and 1865, company rolls, so far as they could be obtained, and from personal inquiry. Three persons spent over six weeks in preparing and correcting the same.*

The roll is as full and accurate as it can be made without great expense and trouble.

It will prove a source of just pride to the people of the county, generally, as well as to the descendants and friends of those whose names are here recorded, and will be a standing challenge to the patriotism of the future to emulate the example of the volunteers of 1861-65.

Allison, James, age 37, volunteer, 1865, Thirty-sixth regiment, company C.

Allison, Stephen, age 25, volunteer, July 20, 1861, three years, Twenty-seventh regiment, company D, corporal, attained rank of captain, served four years, mustered out July 20, 1865; re-enlisted as a veteran.

Allison, C. M., age 28, volunteer, three years, Ninth cavalry, company B, corporal, died in May, 1865, at Decatur, Alabama, of diarrhoea.

Allison, Lucien, age 33, 1865, Thirty-sixth regiment, company C.

Allison, Levi, Second regiment, company B.

Allison, Robert, age 24, volunteer, October 17, 1862, three years, Ninth cavalry, company B, private, served two and a half years, mustered out July 20, 1865.

Armstrong, Isaac, age 20, volunteer, July 20, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, served five months, died in service December 9, 1861, at Somerville, Virginia.

Armstrong, William, age 18, volunteer, October 17, 1862, three years, Ninth cavalry, company B, private, served two years and nine months, mustered out July 20, 1865.

Asbeenshoen, Daniel, age 20, volunteer, October 14, 1862, three years, Ninth cavalry, company B, private, two years and nine months, mustered out July 20, 1865.

Atherton, William H., age 40, substitute, Seventy-eighth regiment, company D, mustered out July 11, 1865.

Augustine, John, age 23, Seventy-eighth regiment, company D, regular.

Augustine, Matt, volunteer, 1865, One Hundred and Seventy-eighth regiment, company D.

Badgeley, Isaac, age 27, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D.

Balch, John, volunteer, October 22, 1863, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private.

Bowman, Ed, age 41, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company K, private, served three years, honorably discharged, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Bowman, William, age 19, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company K, served three years, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Brooker, Deemore, Seventy-seventh regiment, company H.

Brooker, Darius, age 16, volunteer, February 1, 1864, three years, Ninth cavalry, company B, private, served eighteen months, mustered out July 20, 1865.

Brooker, Brainard, age 23, volunteer, October 24, 1862, three years, Ninth cavalry, company B, private, served three years, mustered out July 20, 1865, marched with Sherman to the sea, permanently detailed with division and ambulance train.

Brown, George W., age 21, volunteer, Seventy-seventh regiment, company K, died December 25, 1864, re-enlisted as a veteran, died at Little Rock, Arkansas.

Brown, Charles, age 32, Thirty-ninth regiment, company D.

Brown, William, age 26, August 8, 1864, Seventy-seventh regiment, company K, served one year and seven months, mustered out March 8, 1866.

Brown, Gartrill, age 52, volunteer, three years,

*Miss Addie Irish, Mrs. Mary M. Hathaway and S. J. Hathaway.

Seventy-seventh regiment, company K, re-enlisted as a veteran.

H. Burtis, John, Seventy-seventh regiment, company H.

H. Butts, George, Seventy-seventh regiment, company H.

Compton, Peter, Seventy-seventh regiment, company H.

Compton, William, age 23, volunteer, February 1, 1864, three years, Ninth cavalry, company B, private, mustered out July 20, 1865.

Compton, John, age 20, volunteer, February 1, 1864, three years, Ninth cavalry, company B, private served one year and five months, mustered out July 20, 1865.

Cuthbert, William, age 30, volunteer, October 17, 1862, three years, Ninth cavalry, company B, attained rank of quartermaster sergeant, discharged for disability May, 1864, reduced to ranks after eighteen months of service.

Chandler, Albert, age 30, volunteer, September, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company K, captain, served three years, mustered out January 4, 1865, taken prisoner April 8, 1862.

Chapman, Rector, age 23, volunteer, October 17, 1862, three years, Ninth cavalry, company B, teamster, served two years and nine months, mustered out July 20, 1865.

Cheesman, William E., volunteer, Seventy-seventh regiment, companies K and A, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Clay, Timothy, age 40, volunteer, October 15, 1862, three years, Ninth cavalry, company B, private, served two years and nine months, mustered out July 20, 1865, teamster.

Clay, Orange, age 44, volunteer, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company K, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Coffee, Adoniram, age 18, volunteer, October 21, 1862, three years, Ninth cavalry, company B, private.

Coffeen, H. T. C., age 24, Sixty-sixth regiment, discharged July 15, 1865.

Cobb, Joseph, age 20, 1863, Sixty-third regiment, company F, mustered out July 8, 1865.

Cobb, Isaiah, age 31, 1865, Sixty-third regiment, company F, private.

Coles, Isaac, age 21, volunteer, Sixty-third regiment, company F.

Cowee, F. P., age 27, volunteer, February 15, 1864, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, served one year and four months, honorably discharged June 5, 1865, on account of disability.

Cowen, Reuben.

Crane, William G., age 21, volunteer, October 28, 1862, three years, Ninth cavalry, company B, sergeant, served two years and nine months, mustered out July 20, 1865.

Crane, Charles C., age 44, United States navy, mustered out, gunboat.

Davis, Paul W., Seventy-seventh regiment, company K, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Davis, William S., age 23, volunteer, July 20, 1861, three years, Twenty-seventh regiment, company D, private, attained rank of corporal, served four years, mustered out July 20, 1865, transferred to gunboat service September, 1864, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Davis, George S., age 20, volunteer, October 25, 1865, three years, Ninth cavalry, company B, private, honorably discharged, 1865, for physical disability.

Davis, Frederick, age 22, volunteer, October 17, 1862, three years, Sixty-ninth regiment, company B, private, served three years, mustered out July 20, 1865, discharged for physical disability, recovered and re-entered service.

Davis, Edmond, age 25, volunteer, July 29, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, deserted, sentenced to lose wages, imprisoned, but subsequent bravery reinstated him in honorable standing.

Davis, Hugh A., age 32, volunteer, Seventy-seventh regiment, company K, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Davis, Squire D., Seventy-seventh regiment, company K, deserter.

Davis, Dudley, age 35, volunteer, three years, Ninth cavalry, company B, corporal, attained rank of sergeant, discharged at close of war, transferred to navy.

Davis, Andrew J., age 21, volunteer, October 18, 1862, three years, Ninth cavalry, company B, private, served two years and nine months, mustered out July 20, 1865.

Davis, Brown, A., age 37, volunteer, Seventy-seventh regiment, company K, died April 8, 1862, killed at Fallen Timber.

Davis, Daniel W., age 41, volunteer, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company K.

Devol, Luther, age 17, volunteer, January, 1863, three years, Ninth cavalry, company B, private, served one year and six months, mustered out July 20, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Devol, J. Hervé, age 33, volunteer, February 1, 1862, three years, One Hundred and Ninety-third regiment, company E, corporal, served three years, mustered out August 4, 1865.

Dobbins, John, age 36, volunteer, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company K, died April 13, 1862, mortally wounded at Fallen Timber, near Shiloh, Tennessee, April 8, 1862.

Dobbins, William, age 22, volunteer, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company K, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Dobbins, Isaac, age 45, volunteer, October, 1862, for three years, Ninth regiment, cavalry, company B, farrier, served two years and nine months, mustered out July 20, 1865, company blacksmith.

Dobbins, Henry, fall of 1864, One Hundred and Eighty-fourth regiment, company D, private, mustered out September 20, 1865.

Driscoll, Stukely, age 42, volunteer, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company K, private, served three years, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Driscoll, George B., volunteer, 1865, One Hundred and Seventy-fourth regiment, company D, mustered out June 28, 1865.

Driscoll, Merritt, volunteer, 1865, One Hundred and Seventy-fourth regiment, company D, mustered out June 28, 1865.

Drum, Lewis, 1861, served three months.

Drum, Jacob, age 47, volunteer, November 22, 1861, for three years; First artillery, company K, private, served three years, mustered out January 16, 1865.

Flagg, William, Seventy-seventh regiment, company K.

Farmer, Thomas, age 46, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company K, served three years, honorably discharged.

Farmer, John, Seventy-seventh regiment, company K, served two years, honorably discharged for disability.

Grant, Daniel L., age 34, volunteer, Seventy-seventh regiment, company K, died July, 1862, of fever.

Grant, Jefferson, age 24, volunteer, 1865, Thirty-sixth regiment, company H.

Grimes, Peter, age 22, Ninth regiment, cavalry, company B.

Griggs, Wallace, age 24, volunteer, August, 1863, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company F, corporal, died at Carthage, Tennessee, April 29, 1864, of typhoid fever.

Griggs, Robert, age 20, volunteer, three months, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, October 17, 1862, three years, Ninth regiment, cavalry, company B, private.

Griggs, Charles A., age 17, volunteer, July 29, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Hall, Josiah W., age 44, discharged, then entered invalid corps, finally missing.

Hall, George W., age 19, Seventy-seventh regiment, company H.

Hall, John Ninety-second regiment, company F.

Hall, Eliah, age 17, Seventy-seventh regiment, company H.

Hall, Dudley, age 53, Seventy-seventh regiment, company H, honorably discharged for physical disability.

Hanson, Finley, age 43, drafted, Ninth regiment, cavalry, company B, discharged before leaving camp, homesick.

Haynes, John, age 38, volunteer, 1865, One Hundred and Eighty-sixth regiment, company E.

Henager, Herman, volunteer, Sixty-third regiment, company G, mustered out July 8, 1865.

Henager, William H., volunteer, October 28, 1862, three years, Ninth cavalry, company B, private, honorably discharged.

Henager, Charles, volunteer, 1865, One Hundred and Seventy-fourth regiment, company H, discharged in 1865 as no longer wanted, detailed as dispatch carrier, died of wounds received in battle September 1, 1873.

Hiltziddle, William, Sixty-third regiment, company F.

Hoover, W. H., volunteer, 1865, Seventy-seventh regiment, company H.

Hoover, D. T., substitute volunteer, 1865, Eighteenth regiment, company C.

Hoover, Andrew, Seventy-seventh regiment, company K, died October 4, 1863.

Hoover, Aaron, age 51, Seventy-seventh regiment, company H, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Hughey, James L., age 24, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G.

Hughey, Andrew, volunteer, three years, Thirtieth regiment, blacksmith, served three years, mustered out, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Humiston, Jason, age 24, drafted, Seventy-seventh regiment, died in service at Alton.

Hutcheson, John, age 21, volunteer, January 17, 1862, three years, Ninth cavalry, company B, corporal.

Hutcheson, Edward, age 23, volunteer, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company K, died in hospital in Alton, Illinois.

Iuzzi, D. J.

Jenne, Stephen, age 18, volunteer, August 12, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company H, corporal.

Judd, Chauncey, age 21, volunteer, Ninety-second regiment, company F, mustered out June 10, 1865.

Judd, Lewis, Thirty-sixth regiment, company H, mustered out July 27, 1865.

Keith, Peter B., age 26, volunteer, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company K, died November, 1862, captured at Fallen Timber, paroled, died in hospital at Washington, D. C., of hardships while a prisoner.

Kirkpatrick, Ralph, age 39, volunteer, One Hundred and Eighty-second regiment, company C, private, died July 13, 1865, Camp Chase, Ohio.

Kimberly, Benjamin, age 46, volunteer, Seventy-seventh regiment, company H, died April 6, 1862, killed at Shiloh.

Kile, Samuel C., age 19, October 17, 1862, three years, Ninth cavalry, company B, private, corporal, served three years, mustered out July 20, 1865.

Kile, Oliver W., age 21, volunteer, October 17, 1862, three years, Ninth cavalry, company B, corporal, attained the rank of fourth sergeant, served two years and nine months, mustered out July 20, 1865.

Landstille, Jacob, Thirty-ninth regiment, company F, musician.

Langly, Marion A., Seventeenth regiment, company H.

Lewis, Otis, age 20, Sixty-third regiment, died.

Lewis, Stephen B., age 43, volunteer, December 8, 1861, three years, First light artillery, company K, artificer, served three years, mustered out January 16, 1865.

Living, John, age 19, volunteer, July 29, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, served three years, died January 18, 1864, killed at battle of Cedar Creek.

Long, George, age 21, volunteer, July 29, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, captured at Winchester in 1864, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Long, James, age 18, volunteer, Seventy-seventh regiment, company K.

Lucas, George W., age 27, volunteer, October 18, 1862, three years, Ninth cavalry, company B, corporal, served two years and nine months, mustered out July 20, 1865, teamster.

Lucas, Isaac, age 25, Sixty-third regiment, company G, died April, 1862, mortally wounded.

Longley, Marion A., age 17, volunteer, February 10, 1864, Seventeenth regiment, company H, captain, Macon, William B., age 37, volunteer, June 15, 1861, three years, Seventy-first regiment, company D, captain, served four months, resigned October 12, 1861.

Mason, William W., age 20, volunteer, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company D, died May 30, 1862, died at Corinth, Mississippi.

Mason, R. D., age 27, volunteer, October 9, 1862, three years, Sixty-ninth regiment, company B, second lieutenant, attained the rank of first lieutenant, served one year and nine months, died June 24, 1864, at Pulaski, Tennessee.

Mason, Horatio, volunteer, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A.

Mason, Elijah J., aged 18, volunteer, First artillery, company C, mustered.

Mason, Jacob, aged 34, Sixty-third regiment, company F, mustered out July 8, 1865, discharged for physical disability, entered again February 11, 1865.

Mason, Oscar, age 24, volunteer, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company D, served one year, honorably discharged on account of physical disability.

Mason, Rebhen S., age 27, volunteer, three years, Sixty-third regiment, companies D and F, lieutenant, transferred to Fifty-fifth colored infantry.

McAtee, Samuel M., age 17, volunteer, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company F, mustered out July 8, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran.

McAtee, Francis, volunteer, July 29, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, served four years, mustered out July 27, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran.

McCarty, Christopher, volunteer, 1865, One Hundred and Seventy-fourth regiment, company B.

McCarty, Lucien, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company E, private, mustered out June 10, 1865.

McCurdy, Joshua, age 43, volunteer, Ninety-second regiment, company E, private, died April 23, 1863, at Carthage, Tennessee.

McHugh, John, age 26, 1865, One Hundred and Eighty-fourth regiment, company D.

McKenny, James, Jr., age 35, volunteer, Seventy-seventh regiment, company H.

Merriam, William S., age 18, volunteer, October 22, 1862, three years, Ninth cavalry, company B, corporal, attained captain, served two years and nine months, mustered out July 20, 1865, in general hospital at Springfield, Illinois, part of time for sore eyes.

Miller, Charles, Thirty-ninth regiment.

Miller, Thomas, Seventy-seventh regiment, company K.

Moore, Aaron, age 53, Seventy-seventh regiment, company K.

Moore, Zedick J., age 24, volunteer, One Hundred and Seventy-eighth regiment, company F, private, died March 7, 1865, at Arlington Heights.

Moore, P. R., age 35, volunteer, Thirty-sixth regiment, company C.

Morris, William, age 27, volunteer, Seventy-seventh regiment, company H, died 1863, of smallpox.

Morris, John, age 17, Ninth cavalry, company B, transferred to the Tenth in January, 1862.

Morris, Allen, age 18, volunteer, July 29, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Nott, Percival, age 48, volunteer, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company H, private, died April 8, 1862, mortally wounded at Pittsburg Landing, April 8, 1862.

Nott, William, age 16, Seventy-eighth regiment, company H.

three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, served three years, mustered out in 1864.

Olney, Orin, Seventy-seventh regiment, company K.

Oris, Harrison G., age 26, volunteer, re-enlisted June, 1864, Twelfth and Twenty-third regiments, company H, lieutenant, attained captain, mustered out July 26, 1865, wounded in Winchester, July, 1864.

Owen, Alexander D., age 18, volunteer, First cavalry, company M.

Owen, Daniel, age 36, volunteer, September 28, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, served three years, mustered out in 1864, lost his speech by severe cold in his third year of service.

Owen, James D., age 22, volunteer, First light artillery, company K, served ten months, honorably discharged on account of physical disability.

Owen, Oscar F., age 19, volunteer, July 29, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, served three years, mustered out in 1864.

Owen, Vincent B., age 20, volunteer, July 20, 1861, three years, Twenty-seventh regiment, company B, private, served three years, mustered out July, 1864, wounded seventeen days before time expired.

Owen, Sylvester D., volunteer, First regiment, company C.

Owen, W. D., age 28, volunteer, Ninth cavalry, private, died April, 1864, at Pulaski, Tennessee, of diarrhea.

Palmer, Henry, age 17, volunteer, Thirty-sixth regiment, company C.

Palmer, William, age 17, volunteer, October 15, 1862, three years, Ninth cavalry, company B, private, served two years and eight months, mustered out July 20, 1865, sick during first year, afterwards performed duty.

Penwell, Martin, Thirty-sixth regiment, company H.

Perkins, Albert, volunteer, Sixty-third regiment, company F, honorably discharged on account of disability, arm broken below elbow.

Perkins, John, age 33, Sixty-third regiment.

Plummer, Robert L., age 38, volunteer, November 15, 1861, three years, First artillery, company K, sergeant, served three years and two months, mustered out July 20, 1865.

Porter, Hardy, age 30, volunteer, winter of 1864-65, Thirty-sixth regiment, company H.

Prati, Davis, age 17, volunteer, January 9, 1863, three years, Ninth cavalry, company B, private, served two years and a half, mustered out July 20, 1865.

Ripley, Hiram, age 18, volunteer, July 29, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, served two years and four months, died November 28, 1862, wounded at Mission Ridge, died four days later.

Roach, W. S., age 18, volunteer, October 14, 1861, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company F, sergeant, attained second lieutenant, served three years and four months, mustered out July 8, 1865, slight wound at Coal Run.

Roach, William W., age 20, One Hundred and Eighty-sixth regiment, company E.

Roach, Lyman, age 18, First artillery, company K, captured near Savannah, October 12, 1864, confined at Florence, South Carolina, starved till nearly insane, paroled in three months, and mustered out in June, 1865.

Rollin, Edward, age 39, 1865, Thirty-sixth regiment, company C.

Rose, James, Eighteenth regiment, company D.

Rose, Thompson, age 19, Sixty-third regiment, company F, died July 22, 1864, re-enlisted as a veteran, killed at Decatur, answered first call.

Rose, Isaiah, age 20, volunteer, Sixty-third regiment, company F.

Ross, Nathaniel, age 20, volunteer, April 28, 1861, three years, First artillery, company K, private, attained corporal, served three years, mustered out in 1864, captured the first time at Decatur, Georgia, July 22, 1864, and twice afterward wounded while returning to Union line, answered first call.

Ross, William, age 19, volunteer, July 29, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, served three years, mustered out July 27, 1864, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Ross, Russell D., age 17, volunteer, September 28, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, served three months, died December, 1861, at Somerville, West Virginia, of typhoid fever, a good soldier.

Ross, Daniel N., age 21, Second Virginia cavalry, company E.

Ross, Sampson, Sixty-third.

Rummer, Perley, age 19, volunteer, Sixty-third regiment, company F, mustered out July 8, 1865.

Rummer, W. J., age 36, volunteer, 1865, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, mustered out July 27, 1865.

Sayles, Burgess A., Seventy-seventh regiment, company K, died October 2, 1862, of fever, buried at National cemetery, Little Rock, Arkansas.

Severance, Church B., age 22, volunteer, July 29, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, served nine months, honorably discharged July 25, 1862, on account of physical disability.

Severance, Arthur, age 34, volunteer, 1865, Thirty-sixth regiment, company C.

Shattuch, Benjamin, volunteer, 1865, Thirty-sixth regiment, company E.

Shinn, Alexander.

Shaw, Charles, age 19, died.

Shinn, Alfred C., age 17, volunteer, Seventy-seventh regiment, company K, died January 5, 1862, typhoid fever, Corinth, Mississippi.

Shinn, Samuel D., age 18, volunteer, Seventy-seventh regiment, company K, died June 1, 1862, wounded and taken at Fallen Timber, died at Huntsville, Alabama, prisoner for two months.

Shivers, George, age 23, volunteer, three years and three months, Seventy-seventh regiment, company H, re-enlisted as a veteran, injured by a shell and afterward made insane by heavy cannonading.

Shockley, Henry, age 19, volunteer, July 29, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Shockley, N. D., age 48, volunteer, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company K, private, died August 9, 1862, captured at Fallen Timber, April 8, 1862, died a prisoner.

Shockley, William, age 17, three years, Ninety-second and regiment, company F, private, died February 4, 1863, taken sick in service, was brought home and died.

Simons, Orrin, age 40, volunteer, 1865, Thirty-sixth regiment, company C.

Simons, O. H., age 18, First artillery, company C. Skinnard, Ed., age 35, Thirty-sixth regiment, company C.

Smith, Charles, age 42, volunteer, July 29, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, detailed for an Indiana battery, wounded once.

Spear, Gideon, age 20, volunteer, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company D, mustered out July 27, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Spears, Ivan, Thirty-sixth regiment, company D, killed at Chickamauga.

Spooner, Daniel, age 22, Ninth cavalry, company B, sergeant, mustered out at expiration of service, July 20, 1865.

Spooner, Isaac, age 24, volunteer, three years, Ninety-second regiment, hospital steward, served three years, discharged.

Sprague, Daniel F., age 21, volunteer, First artillery, company H, mustered out.

Sprague, H. O., age 20, August 8, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company H, sergeant, served one year, died April 16, 1863, at Carthage, Tennessee, in service, of great service in disciplining troops.

Stackhouse, Franklin, volunteer, Ninety-second regiment, company D, wounded at Buzzard's Roost, in hospital one year, died at Chattanooga from chills and fever.

Stackhouse, John, age 48, volunteer, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company H, private, served two years, died.

Stackhouse, W. W., volunteer, fall 1864, One Hundred and Eighty-fourth regiment, company D, private, mustered out September 20, 1865.

Steed, Abraham, age 20, volunteer, January, 1864, three years, Ninth cavalry, company B, private, served eighteen months, mustered out July 20, 1865.

Steed, John, age 22, volunteer, July 29, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Stewart, John V., volunteer, 1865, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, answered first call for seventy-five thousand, and was captured at Harper's Ferry.

Striker, John, age 19, volunteer, Ninth cavalry, company B, mustered out July 20, 1865, served full term, well throughout service.

Thayer, James E., volunteer, 1864, Seventy-seventh regiment, company H.

Thayer, Ephraim, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B.

Votial, James, age 30, volunteer, 1865, One Hundred and Eighty-sixth regiment, company L.

Waller, Thomas, volunteer, Seventy-seventh regiment, company K, died April 8, 1862, mortally wounded at Fallen Timber.

Ward, Isaac, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, deserted before leaving Camp Tupper, influenced by disloyal friends.

Ward, Morris, age 17, Seventy-seventh regiment, company K.

Ward, W. G., age 35, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B.

Weatherby, William, age 26, January 1, 1862, three years. First artillery, company K, private, served three years, mustered out 1865.

Williamson, John, age 35, volunteer, November 6, 1862, three years. Ninth cavalry, company B, captain, attained rank of major served one year and nine months, resigned July 28, 1864, on account of physical disability, at Chattanooga.

Williams, Jesse, age 28, volunteer, 1864, One Hundred and Seventy-sixth regiment, company I.

Williams, J. W., volunteer, Twelfth cavalry, company D, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Wilson, Benjamin, age 19, Seventy-seventh regiment, company K.

Wilson, William, age 37, volunteer, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company K, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Wilson, George W., age 34, volunteer, January 16, 1864, three years. First artillery, company K, private, served one year and six months, mustered out July 31, 1865.

Wilson, John, age 16, Seventy-seventh regiment, company K.

Wilford, Charles, Seventh cavalry.

Wright, Josiah, age 23, volunteer, September 12, 1862, three years, Seventeenth cavalry, company H, served three years, mustered out July 4, 1865.

Wright, Amos, age 23, volunteer, November 19, 1861, three years, Second Virginia cavalry, company F, corporal, served three years and seven months, mustered out June 30, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Zollars, Zephaniah, volunteer, Eighteenth regiment, honorably discharged on account of disability.

Zollars, James, age 23, volunteer, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Rose, Sanfron, Sixty-third regiment.

and One Hundred and Ninety-third, United States navy, not designated, eight, in all..... 20

Total number soldiers..... 227

Died..... 31

ARMED S. DOWN.

Allen, Alexander, age 21, October 4, 1862, Ninth cavalry, company B, private, attained rank of first lieutenant, served two years and nine months, mustered out July 20, 1865.

Allen, James, age 20, volunteer, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, served three years, mustered out, captured at Chickamauga, and in Rebel prison seventeen months.

Alban, William, age 18, volunteer, February 10, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G, private, served two months, died April, 1864, of chronic diarrhoea.

Atkinson, William Monroe, age 20, volunteer, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, corporal, attained rank of sergeant, served two years and six months, mustered out; second enlistment, age 22, volunteer, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, sergeant, attained rank of first lieutenant, served two years, mustered out March 8, 1866, captured at Marks' Mills, and in Rebel prison fourteen months.

Archer, Cornelius, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B.

Barker, William K., age 17, volunteer, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company B, private; veteran enlistment, age 19, volunteer, 1864, Thirty-sixth regiment, company E, private, mustered out July, 1865.

Barker, Levi Tuttle, age 16, volunteer, February, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, private, captured at Marks' Mills, and ten months in Rebel prison.

Barnes, William E., age 37, volunteer, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company H, bugler, served three years, mustered out June 10, 1865.

Barnes, Owen, volunteer, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, veteran enlistment, volunteer, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B.

Barnes, William L., volunteer, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B.

Barnes, William Wilson, volunteer, 1864, one year, One Hundred and Seventy-sixth regiment.

Betz, Charles, First cavalry, company L.

Brown, William James, age 22, volunteer, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, companies E and D, private, served three years, mustered out 1864.

Carmical, James, age 32, volunteer, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company H, private, attained rank of sergeant; second enlistment, volunteer, three years, One Hundred and Ninth United States colored infantry, second lieutenant.

Barton, William, age 30, volunteer, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, companies A and H, private, attained rank of fifer, served three years, mustered out in 1864.

Copeand, John, age 35, volunteer, three years,

RECAPITULATION

De Beck's battery .....	8
First artillery .....	2
Huntington's battery .....	1
Ninth Ohio cavalry .....	38
Seventh Ohio cavalry .....	2
Second Virginia cavalry .....	2
One each in First and Twelfth Ohio cavalry.....	2
Seventy-seventh Ohio .....	59
Thirty-sixth Ohio .....	39
Sixty-third Ohio .....	20
Ninety-second Ohio .....	12
One Hundred and Seventy-fourth Ohio .....	5
Eighteenth Ohio (three years) .....	3
Eighteenth Ohio (three months) .....	2
Twenty-seventh Ohio .....	3
Thirty-ninth Ohio .....	3
One Hundred and Eighty-fourth Ohio .....	3
One Hundred and Eighty-sixth Ohio .....	3
Seventeenth and Seventy-eighth Ohio, two each...	4
One each in First, Twelfth, Twenty-third, Second, Thirtieth, Seventy-first, Sixty-sixth, One Hundred and Seventy-sixth, One Hundred and Seventy-eighth, One Hundred and eighty-second, Ninety-second regiment, company D, sergeant, died in 1863, from wounds received at Chickamauga.

Davidson, John, age 19, volunteer, December, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G, private; veteran enlistment, volunteer, February, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, companies G and E, private.

Davidson, William, age 20, volunteer, August, 1864, Seventy-seventh regiment, companies G and E, private, served eight months, died March 23, 1865.

Davis, Brown, age 20, Seventy-seventh regiment, company H.

Dearth, Nehemiah H., age 21, volunteer, 1862, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, private, served two years; veteran enlistment, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, private, served one year six months, died July 19, 1865, of chronic diarrhoea, at Clarksville.

Delong, Jones, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B.

Dilley, James L., age 20, volunteer, October 17, 1861, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company G, drummer, served two years, mustered out July 15, 1865; veteran enlistment, age 22, volunteer, drummer, served two years and six months, lost right leg above the knee at battle of Rice's Station, April 6, 1865.

Dilley, Clinton, age 22, volunteer, December, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, private, died 1862, from the effects of a wound in the head and shoulders.

Dilley, Richard H., age 17, volunteer, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company G, drummer, served two years; veteran enlistment, age 19, volunteer, December, 1863, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company G, drummer, served two years six months, mustered out in 1865, was drum major during part of this service.

Dilley, Joseph, one year, One Hundred and Seventy-fourth regiment, company D.

Gerrez, Didier, age 17, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private.

Gerrez, Lafayette, age 19, volunteer, December, 1862, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private.

Gilmore, John T., six months, One Hundred and Twenty-ninth regiment, Company F.

Grant, John H., age 21, volunteer, Forty-second regiment, company D, private, died September, 1863, of typhoid fever.

Grass, Adam, Thirty-sixth regiment, Company G.

Groelas, Jacob, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F.

Grubb, James D., age 20, volunteer, July, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, attained rank of corporal.

Hall, Justus W., age 18, substitute, May 15, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company F, private, served three and one-half months, died August 29, 1864, of chronic diarrhoea, interred at home.

Hanson, William, age 21, volunteer, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G, sergeant; veteran enlistment, February, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G, sergeant.

Harper, William, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B.

Hess, Christian, Seventy-seventh regiment, company K.

Hess, Jacob, Thirty-ninth regiment, company F.

Hess, Justin, Fourth cavalry, company K.

Harvey, William, age 37, volunteer, 1862, three years, mustered out June 10, 1865.

Hilton, James W., age 18, volunteer, December, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, private, died in 1864, in prison at Tyler, Texas.

Holland, John Thomas, age 17, volunteer, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company H, private, served three years, mustered out June 10, 1865.

Holland, William Nelson, age 18, volunteer, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company H, private, served three years, mustered out June 10, 1865.

Jackson, Thomas Putnam, age 40, volunteer, July, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, served two years and six months, honorably discharged January 10, 1864.

Jackson, Andrew, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G.

Jackson, James N., Seventh cavalry, company H. James, John W., One Hundred and Sixteenth regiment, company H.

Johnson, William A., Twenty-fifth regiment.

Linten, George, age 40, volunteer, February, 1864, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G.

Longfellow, Samuel, age 33, volunteer, February, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, companies H and E, private, served one year, died February, 1865.

Lund, Gamiel J., age 16, volunteer, November 15, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, private, attained rank of lieutenant, served four years and four months, mustered out March 29, 1866, wounded in shoulder at Marks' Mills.

Masters, Zephaniah, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, private, died February 1, 1863, of chronic diarrhoea.

Littlefield, William, Tenth regiment, company B, died.

Mathews, Samuel B., age 20, volunteer, October 1, 1862, three years, One Hundred and Sixteenth regiment, company H, private, attained rank of sergeant, served three years, mustered out in 1865, captured at Winchester and in prison one month, then in hospital five months, transferred to Sixty-second Ohio volunteer infantry.

Mathews, Henry C., age 18, volunteer, August 22, 1862, three years, One Hundred and Sixteenth regiment, company H, private, served three years, mustered out in 1865, lost one foot in a charge at Petersburg, April 2, 1865.

Mathews, James Garnet, age 16, volunteer, August, 1863, six months, Fourth cavalry, company C, private, served seven months, mustered out in 1864; second enlistment, age 17, August, 1864, one year, One Hundred and Seventy-fourth regiment, company D, corporal, mustered out in 1865.

McKee, Samuel, Thirty-sixth regiment, company D. McMahan, G. W., Seventy-seventh regiment, company G, honorably discharged.

Meredith, John, age 30, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G, private.

Meredith, New, volunteer, Ninety-second regiment, company H, private, died April 4, 1865, of scurvy at Nashville, Tennessee.

Miller, John, age 27, volunteer, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, private, died October 26, 1864, in Tyler prison, Texas.

Miller, Henry, volunteer, 1864, one year, One Hundred and Sixty-fourth regiment, company D.

Monroe, George Alburn, age 20, volunteer, 1863, six months, Fourth cavalry, company C, private, served seven months, mustered out in 1864; second enlistment, age 31, substitute, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company F, private, served five months, mustered out 1864.

Morris, James, age 19, volunteer, February, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, private, died July 2, 1864, at Tyler, Texas.

Nesselrode, Perley J., volunteer, July 29, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, served two years and four months, died November 25, 1863, at Mission Ridge.

Nesselrode, R. H., July 29, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, served two years and four months, honorably discharged December 10, 1863, for disability.

Parker, Isaac, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B.

Ogle, Willard, Ninety-second regiment, company K.

Peaker, Joseph, Seventh cavalry, company H.

Peaker, Peter, Seventh cavalry, company H.

Peaker, John, Seventh cavalry, company H.

Peaker, Charles, Sixty-third regiment, company G.

Pierce, J., Sixty-third regiment, company G, killed September 20, 1863.

Ferkins, Charles, age 19, July, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, served three years, mustered out 1864, believed to have been captured.

Perkins, William Burris, age 17, volunteer, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, private, killed April 8, 1862.

Reed, Erastus, age 35, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company H, served three years, mustered out June 1, 1865.

Roads, William, volunteer, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G.

Rodgers, I. H., Seventy-seventh regiment, company B.

Shafer, John, age 28, volunteer, July 29, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, served one year and six months, honorably discharged January 4, 1863, shot through both legs above knees at Lewisburgh, Virginia.

Shafer, James R., age 20, volunteer, 1862, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, served two years; veteran enlistment, age 22, volunteer, 1864, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, served one year and six months, mustered out July 27, 1865.

Smith, George W., Ninety-second regiment, company H.

Shafer, Albert D., age 18, July 29, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, served two and a half years; veteran enlistment, age 20, 1864, three years, private, served one and a half years, mustered out July 27, 1865.

Smith, James W., age 19, volunteer, January 21, 1864, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company H, private.

Smithson Robert Emmet, age 30, volunteer, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G, private; veteran enlistment, age 32, volunteer, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, companies G and E, private, attained rank of captain, mustered out March 7, 1866.

Smithson, H. N., Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, died 1863.

Smithson, William, age 24, volunteer, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B.

Smithson, Richard C., age 21, volunteer, August 2, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company H, sergeant, served three years, mustered out June 10, 1865.

Smith Horatio Nelson, age 17, volunteer, November 14, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, private, served one year, died October 7, 1863.

Still, Chester T., age 24, volunteer, June 10, 1861, three years, Twenty-fifth regiment, company I, private, attained rank of blacksmith, served three years, mustered out 1864.

Still, John F., age 23, three years, Thirtieth regiment, company K, private, served nine months; second enlistment, volunteer, August 1, 1861, three years, Thirtieth regiment, company K, blacksmith, served two years, mustered out in 1865.

Smith, Jonathan, Ninety-second regiment, company A.

Still, Martin Luther, age 20, volunteer, 1862, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, attained rank of sergeant, served three years, mustered out in January, 1865.

Stone, David, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G.

Taylor, William, volunteer, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company H.

Turnerlake, Thomas, Twenty-fifth regiment, company I.

Tilton, Benjamin, One Hundred and Sixteenth regiment.

Unger, Andrew, age 23, volunteer, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company H, private, mustered out June 16, 1865.

Unger, Jeremiah, age 21, volunteer, July 29, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, served two and one-half years; veteran enlistment, age 23, volunteer, 1864, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, corporal, attained rank of sergeant, served one and a half years, mustered out July 27, 1865, never sick in service.

Vertican, F. W., First cavalry.

Vanfleet, Garrett, Seventy-seventh regiment, company F.

Vaughn, Ira, age 21, substitute, May 2, 1865, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company F, private, served three months, died August 4, 1864, and buried under another man's name.

Waller, Thomas J., volunteer, 1863, six months,

One Hundred and Twenty-ninth regiment, company F, private.

Walter, Isaac, Ninety-second regiment, company H. Walter, Warren Norton, age 39, volunteer, 1861, for three years. Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, served three years, mustered out in 1864.

Walter, Jay Clark, age 30, volunteer, August 11, 1861, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company H, blacksmith, served three years, mustered out June 10, 1865.

Walter, Seth Eugene, age 23, volunteer, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company H, private, served two years, died November 13, 1864.

Ward, Thomas, Fourth cavalry, company C.

Ward, James, age 24, volunteer, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company H, private, died April 1, 1863.

Ward, Isaac, age 21, volunteer, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company H, private, attained rank of corporal, served three years, mustered June 10, 1865.

Ward, Stephen, age 21, volunteer, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, private, deserted before regiment left Marietta.

Weekly, Thomas, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G.

West, William Milton, age 16, volunteer, August 4, 1863, six months, One Hundred and Twenty-ninth regiment, company F, private, mustered out in 1864; second enlistment, age 17, volunteer, September 14, 1864, one year, One Hundred and Seventy-sixth regiment, company G, private, served nine months, mustered out June 19, 1865.

Waters, Zephaniah, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B.

Walford, John, age 24, volunteer, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, private, died April 6, 1862, killed at battle of Shiloh.

Wolford, Isaac, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B.

Woster, Jacob, volunteer, July, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private; veteran enlistment, volunteer, 1864, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private.

West, William N., One Hundred and Twenty-ninth regiment, company F.

Yoho, Job, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B.

Zollars, Nathan.

Zollars, Frederick, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company A.

RECAPITULATION

Seventh Ohio cavalry .....	4
Fourth Ohio cavalry .....	3
First Ohio cavalry .....	2
And one each in Fourth Ohio independent battalion cavalry and Ninth Ohio cavalry.....	2
Seventy-seventh Ohio .....	37
Thirty-sixth Ohio .....	30
Ninety-second Ohio .....	20
One Hundred and Forty-eighth Ohio .....	4
One Hundred and Twenty-ninth Ohio .....	4
One Hundred and Sixteenth Ohio .....	4
Twenty-fifth Ohio .....	3

Sixty-third Ohio .....	3
One Hundred and Seventy-fourth Ohio .....	2
One Hundred and Seventy-sixth Ohio.....	2
And one each in Tenth Ohio, Thirtieth Ohio, Thirty-ninth Ohio, Forty-second Ohio, One Hundred and Ninth colored United States infantry, One Hundred and Sixty-fourth Ohio.....	6

Total of soldiers .....	126
Died .....	20

BARLOW TOWNSHIP.

Alexander, Henry, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company F, private, four months, mustered out September 14, 1864.

Austin, Lemuel, age 20, volunteer, April, 1864, Twenty-seventh colored regiment, company I.

Austin, Salathiel, age 17, volunteer, Twenty-seventh colored regiment, company I.

Butler, Charles W., volunteer, Fifth colored regiment; company I, killed.

Butler, Henry, volunteer, Fifth colored regiment, company I.

Breckenridge, Hugh, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company F, private, served four months, mustered out September 14, 1864.

Breckenridge, Andrew, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company F, private, served four months, mustered out September 14, 1864.

Bartlett, James, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company F, private, served four months, mustered out September 14, 1864.

Bartlett, John, age 17, volunteer, November 4, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private, served four years, mustered out July 27, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran, wounded at Shiloh.

Beach, Alfred P., age 19, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, attained the rank of corporal, served four years, mustered out July 2, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran, and was wounded at Shenandoah.

Beach, Cydnor T., age 20, volunteer, February 25, 1864, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, served one year and five months, mustered out July 27, 1865.

Ball, James W., age 27, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company F, private, served four months, mustered out September 14, 1864.

Calvert, John P., minister, age 28, volunteer, November 1, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company K, first sergeant, served five months, died April 7, 1862, mortally wounded at Shiloh April 6th.

Clark, John, volunteer, Ninety-second regiment, company G, private.

Chapman, Ezra A., age 32, volunteer, August 8, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, served three years, mustered out September 3, 1864, detailed for messenger service.

Chapman, Hiel, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company

F, corporal, served four months, mustered out September 14, 1864.

Clay, Nichols, volunteer, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, served two and one-half years, honorably discharged for disability.

Carlin, James P., age 18, volunteer, November 17, 1862, three years, One Hundred and Twenty-fifth regiment, company E, private, served two years, honorably discharged November 17, 1864, wounded at Mission Ridge November 25, 1863, finally discharged for disability.

Conly, Hugh, age 20, volunteer, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, served three years, mustered out September 3, 1864, wounded at Lewisburgh, Virginia.

Coop, Benjamin F., age 28, volunteer, November 4, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private, served two years, died September 8, 1863, from wound received at Shiloh.

Cooksey, Townsend, company C, corporal.

Cunningham, Francis M., age 17, volunteer, September, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, served five months, died February 24, 1862.

Daniels, Charles W., age 18, volunteer, August 1, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, served three years, mustered out September, 1864.

Deming, Henry, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company F, private, served four months, mustered out September 14, 1864.

Dunbar, Warren K., age 20, volunteer, November 30, 1861, three years, Fifty-third regiment, company H, private, served one year, died October 11, 1862, at Memphis.

Dustin, John, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company F, sergeant, served four months, mustered out September 14, 1864.

Dunsmoor, Harvey, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company F, private, served four months, mustered out September 14, 1864.

Dunsmore, Perley, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company F, corporal, served four months, mustered out September 14, 1864.

Danley, Joel M., age 24, volunteer, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company G, private, died May 20, 1863, of pneumonia, at Carthage, Tennessee.

Evans, Simeon, age 48, volunteer, August 26, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, served one year and four months, honorably discharged December 24, 1862, for disability in early service in West Virginia.

Evans, David E., age 25, volunteer, September 27, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, served two years, honorably discharged September, 1863, for disability, died three weeks after reaching home.

Evans, Charles E., volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company F, private, served four months, mustered out September 14, 1864.

Ferguson, H. C., Eighteenth regiment, company K, Fleming, Robert H., age 18, volunteer, November, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private, attained rank of captain, served four years and four months, mustered out March 8, 1866, wounded at Shiloh, captured at Marks' Mills, and in prison for thirteen months, detailed as clerk for colonel of regiment.

Fleming, James, age 21, volunteer, November, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private, attained rank of orderly sergeant, served five months, died April 6, 1862, killed at Shiloh.

Gates, David, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company F, private, served four months, mustered out September 14, 1864.

Gooding, Harvey, age 16, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company F, fifer, discharged, wounded at Harper's Ferry.

Gooding, Harvey, age 16, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company F, private, served four months, mustered out September 14, 1864.

Gooding, Franklin, age 19, volunteer, July 3, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, served one year, honorably discharged in 1862 for disability.

Green, Dan P., May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company I, private, served four months, mustered out September 14, 1864.

Green, Henry, age 20, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, attained rank of corporal, served four years, mustered out July 27, 1865, reenlisted as a veteran.

Greenlees, Andrew, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company F, private, served four months, mustered out September 14, 1864.

Graham, Robert, Ninety-second regiment, company G, private.

Gould, James, age 20, volunteer, November 5, 1861, for three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private, attained sergeant, reenlisted with the regiment.

Haddow, James, age 34, volunteer, August 1, 1861, for three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, first sergeant, attained captain, served four years, mustered out July 27, 1865, in all active service of the regiment, wounded at Kerntown July 24, and reenlisted as a veteran.

Harvey, David, aged 22, volunteer, October 28, 1861, for three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, first sergeant, served one year and two months, died January 28, 1863, discharged for disability, died at Barlow April 24, 1863.

Harvey, Robert, aged 19, volunteer, August 1, 1861, for three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, attained first sergeant, served three years, died May 20, 1864, killed at Cloyd's Mountain, Virginia, and buried near the field by his comrades.

Harvey, Andrew, volunteer, May, 1864, for one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company F, private, mustered out September 14, 1864.

Harvey Samuel W., aged 21, volunteer, August, 1861, for three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, attained rank of first lieutenant, served four years, mustered out July 27, 1865, reenlisted as a veteran, wounded at Lewisburg in 1862, and at Opequan in 1864.

Harvey, William, aged 16, volunteer, September, 1861, for three years, honorably discharged October 5, 1864; sick three months, wounded and taken at Chickamauga September 12, 1863, paroled after twelve days, exchanged May 23, 1864, in hospital nine months.

Harvey, S. Fletcher, volunteer, May, 1864, for one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company F, private, discharged September 25, 1864, reenlisted as a veteran, detailed for picket and post duty.

Henry, Julius, May, 1864, for one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company F.

Hill, George W., aged 23, volunteer, October, 1862, for nine months, Sixty-second regiment, company I, private, honorably discharged November, 1862; slightly wounded when charging a bayonet.

Hoffman, Samuel H., aged 18, volunteer, September 27, 1861, for three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, served three years, mustered out October 26, 1864, served as mounted orderly with General Turchin for nine months.

Hoffman, John W., aged 10, volunteer, April 22, 1861, for three months, Eighteenth regiment, company K, private, attained first sergeant, served two years, died April 27, 1863; reenlisted, was sick but joined before recovering, died at Nashville, Tennessee, of typhoid fever.

Hoffman, David S., aged 22, volunteer, August 6, 1861, for three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, served three, mustered out September 7, 1864. He was detailed often as regimental carpenter, recruiting service, as commissary sergeant and as clerk of commissary of subsistence.

Hoffman, Richard A., aged 17, volunteer, August 1, 1861, for three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, clerk, attained quartermaster sergeant, served three years and nine months, discharged May 8, 1865, while out on duty taken by enemy June, 1864, while being taken to Andersonville jumped from train, and reached our lines July 20th, afterward served as citizen's clerk in quartermaster department in Sherman's army.

Hoffman, William W., volunteer, May, 1864, for one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company F, sergeant, died August 16, 1864.

Hoffman, Francis A., volunteer, May, 1864, for one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company F, private, mustered out September 14, 1864, served on detail duty as orderly, on mail boat from Fort Monroe to Bermuda, Kansas.

Holsington, George, aged 30, volunteer, August 1, 1861, for three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, served three years, discharged August 28, 1864, was in all chief engagements of his regiment, wounded at Mission Ridge in ankle, six months in hospital.

Jones, John, Jr., aged 30, volunteer, October 14, 1861, for three years, First light artillery, company H, served one year and five months, died May 29, 1863; was struck by three balls at Chancellorsville May 2, 1863, taken by rebels and exchanged, and died of amputation of leg.

Jones, Jacob, volunteer, May, 1864, for one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company F, private.

Kinkhead, George W., aged 18, volunteer, October 14, 1862, for three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company K, private, three years, captured at Mark's Mills April 25, 1864, was held with regiment for ten months, after furlough of thirty days rejoined regiment.

Kinkhead, Isaac B., aged 25, volunteer, October 8, 1861, for three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company K, orderly sergeant, attained lieutenant colonel, mustered out May 14, 1863, at Shiloh was appointed captain in place of Captain Chandler, supposed to be dead, on his return was mustered out and put on detached service till June 17, 1863.

Kinkhead, David N., aged 24, volunteer, February, 1864, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private, served nine months, died November, 1864, taken prisoner at Mark's Mills but escaped, reported killed on a foraging expedition in Arkansas.

Kinkhead, John P., aged 21, volunteer, July 7, 1863, Second heavy artillery, company K, artificer.

Lamb, William A., aged 47, volunteer, September, 1864, for one year, Sixth Virginia infantry, company D, private, served nine months; honorably discharged June 10, 1865; served on post duty among the guerillas in West Virginia.

Lamb, Leonidas G., aged 22, volunteered February 13, 1865, One Hundred and Eighty-sixth regiment, company G, served seven months, discharged September 25, 1865, on post duty at Bermuda Hundred, Virginia.

Lamb, William F., May, 1864, for one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company F, died July 31, 1864.

Lawton, Ezra J., aged 21, volunteer, August 1, 1861, for three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, attained first sergeant, served nine months, died April 19, 1862, was promised a commission as lieutenant but attacked by pneumonia and died at Summersville.

Lawton, Richard G., volunteer, May, 1864, for one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company F, wardmaster, served four months, mustered out September 14, 1864.

Lawton, Arthur, aged 35, volunteer, August, 1861, for three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, hospital nurse, served three years, honorably discharged September, 1864; discharged for disability incurred by camp disease.

Lawton, Isaiah B., aged 24, volunteer, August, 1862, for three years, Ninety-second regiment, company G, private, attained surgeon's clerk, served two years and six months, honorably discharged February 27, 1864; discharged at Chattanooga for disability.

Love, Charles W., aged 20, volunteer, August 1, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, served three years, discharged September, 1864.

Lewis, William H., age 28, volunteer, August 8, 1864, Twenty-seventh regiment, United States colored infantry, company K, private, served one year, discharged September 7, 1865.

Lockwood, James, volunteer, October 14, 1861, three years, First light artillery, company H, died of camp fever.

Low, Charles, age 27, volunteer, August 1, 1864, Twenty-seventh regiment, United States colored infantry, company D, private, served one year and four months, died December 13, 1865.

Lukins, Eli B., age 34, volunteer, January, 1861, Eighteenth regiment, colored infantry, company B, private, served four years and six months, discharged July 1, 1865.

Male, Aaron, age 25, volunteer, August 11, 1864, Fifth regiment, company F, private, died in 1865, at Columbus, Ohio.

McMain, James I., age 18, volunteer, February 27, 1864, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, discharged March 1, 1865, in hospital most of the time, never in active service, discharged for disability.

McGachy, William H., volunteer, One Hundred and Twenty-fifth regiment, company E, private, wounded at Chattanooga.

Morris, Benajah, age 25, volunteer, August 13, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company G, private, served two years and nine months, discharged May 12, 1865.

Miller, Stephen O., age 13, volunteer, three months, Thirtieth regiment, private, captured at Harper's Ferry and parolled.

Morrow, Joseph William, age 27, volunteer, February 4, 1862, Sixty-third regiment, company H, private, discharged October 4, 1863, as disabled.

Miller, William K., age 21, volunteer, July 21, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, attained the rank of corporal, served four years, discharged July 6, 1865.

Miller, Josiah, age 26, volunteer, March, 1864, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, served one year, discharged July 28, 1865.

Miller, Hiram H., age 15, volunteer, November, 1861, three years, First artillery, company H, private, attained the rank of file major, reenlisted in 1862.

Miller, Isaac, age 49, volunteer, November, 1861, three years, First artillery, company H, private, served nine months, died September 1, 1863.

Morris, George M., volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company F, private, honorably discharged, was sick at Bermuda with brain fever and paralysis and brought home.

Morris, Joseph P., May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company F, private.

Morris, John W., age 18, volunteer, October 23, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private, served one year and five months, honorably discharged March 12, 1863, for disability, was wounded at Shiloh, April 6, 1862, died July 1, 1864, at Camden, Arkansas.

Moore, Frank A., volunteer, February 15, 1865, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, served five months, mustered out July 27, 1865.

Morris, William H., age 23, volunteer, August 1, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, attained the rank of first sergeant, served four years, mustered out July 27, 1865, in active service throughout the period, reenlisted as a veteran.

McClure, Thomas J., age 24, volunteer, 1861, three months, Second regiment, private, served three months, on guard duty.

McCarthy, Thomas, age 29, volunteer, August, 1862, three years Ninety-second regiment, company G, private, served nine months, died June 1, 1863.

Merrill, James W., age 30, volunteer, July 28, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company G, first lieutenant, attained the rank of captain, served one year and ten months, honorably discharged May 24, 1864, on account of wounds received in the service, wounded and taken prisoner at Chattanooga, September 20, 1863, parolled and exchanged September 29th, and made captain.

Murchy, John, Ninety-second regiment, company G, died January, 1862, of pneumonia, at Nashville.

McKibben, William A., volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company B, orderly, discharged.

Norris, Adam, age 23, volunteer, August 20, 1864, one year, One Hundredth regiment, United States colored infantry, private, served one year, discharged September 15, 1865, first served on commissary and hospital duty, afterwards on the field.

Ormiston, Alexander, volunteer, October 12, 1861, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company G, corporal, served four years, discharged July, 1865.

Ormiston, Isaac A., volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company F, private, served four months, mustered out September 14, 1864.

Parsons, William, age 33, volunteer, August 1, 1864, three years, Twenty-seventh regiment, United States colored infantry, company B, corporal, served one year, discharged September 7, 1865.

Fayne, Darius, age 18, volunteer, April 23, 1861, three months, Eighteenth regiment, company K, sergeant, attained the rank of first sergeant, served four years, discharged October 18, 1865, reenlisted in September, 1862, in company C, One Hundred and Twenty-fifth regiment, Ohio volunteer infantry, as sergeant, was wounded twice.

Preston, Daniel L., age 21, volunteer, August 1, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, served three years, discharged September 5, 1864, wounded twice.

Palmer, I. F., volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company F, private, served four months, discharged September 14, 1864.

Phillips, Thomas G., age 29, volunteer, August 15, 1861, three years, Eighteenth regiment, company F, private, honorably discharged July 18, 1862, for physical disability, reenlisted August 19, 1864, one year, One Hundred and Eighty-second regiment, company C, corporal, attained the rank of sergeant, discharged July 7, 1865.

Pond, L. P., volunteer, May, 1864, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company F, first lieutenant, served four months, mustered out September 14, 1864, sick, sent to Port Dennison, then transferred to veteran corps.

Proctor, Joseph H., age 23, volunteer, August 15, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company G, private, served three years, discharged July, 1865.

Rigg, John C., Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private.

Pugh, J. L., volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company F, served four months, discharged September 14, 1864.

Rogers, S. H., Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private.

Richards, Henry S., age 20, volunteer, November 5, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private, attained the rank of sergeant, reenlisted as a veteran.

Robinson, Joseph, Sixty-third regiment, company F, private, died July 20, 1863, chronic diarrhoea.

Richards, Luman D., age 19, volunteer, February 15, 1864, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private.

Robinson, Benjamin, volunteer, October, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, honorably discharged May 23, 1863, wounded and captured at Chickamauga, parolled and exchanged in May, 1864, wounded and captured at Winchester, July 24th, parolled and exchanged, discharged.

Saylor, Solomon, age 18, volunteer, September 13, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, served three years, discharged October 25, 1864.

Saylor, Edward, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, mustered out July 27, 1865, never wounded, but in all the engagements with his regiment.

Saylor, Jacob, age 16, volunteer, November 30, 1861, three years, Fifty-third regiment, company H, private, served four years, mustered out August 16, 1865.

Smith, David, volunteer, 1861, three years, Seventh cavalry, company H, private, served three years, died July 8, 1864, captured at Chickamauga, September 20, 1863, and taken to Andersonville prison, where he died.

Scott, Henry, volunteer, Fifth cavalry, company I, corporal, died April 7, 1865, died in hospital in North Carolina.

Tiffany, Alfonzo, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, second lieutenant, attained the rank of first lieutenant, served two years, resigned 1863.

Turner, George B., volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company F, captain, served four months, discharged September 14, 1864, discharged at close of term, reenlisted in company F, Thirty-sixth Ohio volunteer infantry, and served till mustered out with regiment.

Turner, Duncan, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company F, private, served four months, mustered out September 14, 1864.

Turner, David, volunteer, 1863, nine months, First Virginia cavalry, private, served nine months, discharged 1864.

Tompkins, A. W., volunteer, May, 1861, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company F, private, served four months, mustered out September 14, 1864.

Vincent, Cyrus E., age 18, volunteer, June 15, 1863, One Hundred and Twenty-ninth regiment, company A, private, died October 29, 1863, died of lung fever at Cumberland Gap, Maryland.

Tuttle, James, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company F, private, served four months, mustered out September 14, 1864.

Vanvaley, John W., age 18, volunteer, March 18, 1865, Eighteenth regiment, company I, private, detailed on post duty.

Vincent, Anselem, age 30, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, discharged January 14, 1863, discharged on account of disability, enlisted again in 1864 and served till discharged with regiment.

Vincent, John C., age 20, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company F, first sergeant, served four months, discharged September 14, 1864.

Vanvaley, Joseph S., volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company F, corporal, served four months, discharged September 14, 1864.

Vincent, O. B., volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company F, private, served four months, discharged September 14, 1864, detailed for telegraph service.

Young, John R., age 25, volunteer, October 11, 1862, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company H, sergeant, served three years, discharged October 14, 1865, wounded and captured at Mark's Mills, April 25, 1864, parolled, exchanged, and after six months' disablement resumed duty.

Young, George, volunteer, Seventy-seventh regiment, company H.

Wilson, Alexander, Sixty-third regiment, company G.

Wilson, Martin, Sixty-third regiment, company G.

RECAPITULATION.

Huntington's battery .....	5
Battery K, Second Huntington artillery.....	1
One each in Fourth Virginia cavalry, Seventh Ohio and Thirteenth Ohio .....	3
One Hundred and Forty-eighth Ohio National Guard .....	38
Thirty-sixth Ohio .....	33
Seventy-seventh Ohio .....	15
Ninety-second Ohio .....	9
Sixty-third Ohio .....	5
Fifth colored infantry.....	5
Eighteenth Ohio (three years) .....	3
Eighteenth Ohio (three months) .....	3
Twenty-seventh United States colored infantry....	2
Thirty-ninth Ohio .....	2
One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Ohio.....	2
Fifty-third Ohio .....	2
One each in Second Ohio infantry, Twelfth Ohio, Sixth Virginia infantry, Sixty-second Ohio, One Hundredth United States colored infantry, One Hundred and Twenty-ninth Ohio, One Hundred and Eighty-second Ohio, One Hundred and Eighty-sixth Ohio, in all.....	8
Total number soldiers .....	137
Died .....	21

BELPRE TOWNSHIP

Allen, Davis C., volunteer 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company I, screened in battles of Chattanooga, Mission Ridge, and Lookout Mountain.

Allen, Harvey G., volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company H, private, served four months, discharged, September 14, 1864.

Allen, Loring P.

Barkley, Samuel W., age 18, volunteer, January, 1862, Seventy-third regiment, company F, corporal, served two years, died May 22, 1864, fought at Chancellorsville, Gettysburg, Lookout Valley, and Resaca, where he was mortally wounded May 15th.

Barrows, James K., volunteer, discharged.

Armstrong, Alexander H., age 22, volunteer, September 26, 1864, One Hundred and Eighty-third regiment, company D, second lieutenant, died May 8, 1865, from exposure while in camp.

Batten, Lewis M., volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company H, private, served four months, discharged September 14, 1864.

Barcus, James M., volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company H, private, served four months, discharged September 14, 1864.

Berry, William, First light artillery, company H. Bellows, Benjamin T., volunteer, private, honorably discharged May 31, 1865.

Bellows, Orrin M., age 22, volunteer, August, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company G, private, served six months, died February 26, 1863, of brain fever.

Bellows, Abram M., age 16, volunteer, February 22, 1865, Ninety-first regiment, company B, private.

Bodkin, William Wallace, age 17, volunteer, October 30, 1861, Seventy-third regiment, company F, private, discharged May 30, 1864, wounded at Gettysburg very seriously, and reenlisted as a veteran in 1865.

Bodkins, Charles, age 43, volunteer, August 15, 1862, Seventh cavalry regiment, company I, private, served one year and eight months, died April 7, 1864, captured at Rogersville, Tennessee, taken to Belle Isle, removed sick to hospital at Richmond where he died.

Breckenridge, D. M., volunteer, May 18, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company H, private, attained rank of adjutant's clerk, served four months, discharged September 14, 1864.

Breckenridge, Charles D., volunteer, May 18, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company H, private, served four months, discharged September 14, 1864, disabled and not on duty, but reenlisted with One Hundred and Seventy-ninth regiment, company H, September 28, 1864, and was discharged with regiment.

Blow, John H., volunteer, Ninety-second regiment, private, attained rank of corporal, discharged January 28, 1864.

Blough, Rufus, volunteer, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company H, private, died July 7, 1864, of camp disease and measles.

Berry, James B., age 38, volunteer, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company H, private, discharged September 14, 1864.

Bellows, Avery S., age 24, volunteer, August 9, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company G, private, served one year and four months, discharged December 19, 1863, sick for ten months, discharged for disability.

Brown, John A., age 20, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company H, orderly sergeant, served four months, discharged September 14, 1864.

Cox, Jefferson, Seventh cavalry, company I.

Campbell, Charles H., age 40, volunteer, May 16, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company H, corporal, served four months, discharged September 14, 1864.

Campbell, Theodore W., age 20, volunteer, May 18, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company H, private, four months, discharged September 14, 1864.

Clark, John, age 23, volunteer, three years, Seventy-third regiment, company F, private, died August, 1862, from a gunshot wound received at the battle of Bull Run.

Campbell, Curran, volunteer, August 4, 1862, private, injured by accident June 9, 1863, remained in hospital till August 14th.

Chick, John C., One Hundred and Sixteenth regiment, company I.

Clark, John J., age 31, volunteer, August, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company G, private, three years, discharged June 29, 1865, in March, 1864, was transferred to company H, veteran reserve corps, wounded at Fort Stephens, District Columbia, July 12, 1864.

Clark, Jacob, Seventy-third regiment, company F, killed in action at Cross Keys.

Cole, William R., age 19, volunteer, July 27, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company K, private, served one year, discharged October 14, 1862, for disability.

Coleman, Alfred, Thirty-ninth regiment, company K.

Curtis, Henry C., volunteer, May 18, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company H, private.

Curtis, Columbus B., age 30, volunteer, May 18, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company H, sergeant, four months, discharged September 14, 1864.

Curtis, A. S., age 34, volunteer, May 18, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company H, first lieutenant, four months, discharged September 18, 1864.

Dalzell, James, age 24, August 4, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company G, private, served three years, captured at Carthage, Tennessee, March 8, 1863, taken to Libby prison, paroled and exchanged in June, and discharged with regiment June, 1865.

Davis, J. T., age 18, volunteer, May 18, 1864, for one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company H, private, served four months, discharged September 14, 1864, sick most of the time and out, returned and was discharged with his company.

Dawson, Eli, age 34, volunteer, May 18, 1864, served one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company H, corporal, died 1865, taken sick at City Point, remained in hospital till two weeks after the regiment's discharge, and returned home.

Deeble, Charles H., age 17, volunteer, March 4, 1864, Seventy-third regiment, company F, musician, attained the rank of orderly, served one year and four months, discharged July 20, 1865, was in all the battles of his regiment after his enlistment, and discharged with it.

Deeble, Joseph, age 42, volunteer, May 18, 1862, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company H, wagon-master, served four months, discharged September 14, 1864, died October 8, 1864.

Dexter, John L., age 27, volunteer, August 2, 1861, Thirty-ninth regiment, company K, private, served three years and two months, discharged July, 1865, neither sick, wounded or captured during service.

Dexter, Francis, age 25, volunteer, May 18, 1862, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company H, private, discharged August, 1864, sick but not wounded or captured during service.

Dustin, Charles E., age 49, volunteer, 1862, Seventy-third regiment, company D, private, served three weeks, died 1862, killed at Bull Run three weeks after enlistment, had previously served in the Florida war.

Eskey, Samuel S., age 31, volunteer, May 18, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company H, private, served four months, died September, 1864.

Fletcher, Amasa S., age 19, volunteer, August, 1862, Ninety-second regiment, company G, private, served two years and nine months, discharged May 19, 1865, wounded at Atlanta, Georgia, and disabled for several months.

Flowers, Counce O., age 24, volunteer, August 25, 1862, three years, Seventh cavalry, company I, attained the rank of orderly, served three years, mustered out July 4, 1865.

Fish, David, Seventy-third regiment, company F, died 1862.

Flowers, George, age 25, volunteer, March 7, 1865, One Hundred and Ninety-sixth regiment, company F, private, discharged March 13, 1865, sick and discharged from hospital.

Fletcher, John V., age 19, volunteer, August, 1861, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, honorably discharged, discharged at close of term and reenlisted in the Thirty-ninth Ohio volunteer infantry.

Forbes, Leander, Seventh cavalry, company H, died March 5, 1863.

Fletcher, Henry H., age 15, volunteer, September, 1861, Ninth Virginia regiment, company D, adjutant, attained the rank of orderly, honorably discharged, discharged at close of term and reenlisted in the Fourth Ohio volunteer infantry.

Frost, Charles, Ninth Virginia regiment, company K.

Foster, William, age 24, volunteer, 1862, three years, Seventy-fifth regiment, company D, private, discharged December, 1864.

Frazier, Amos, Seventy-fifth regiment, company D,

Gilchrist, Daniel N., age 19, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company H, private, served four months, discharged September, 1864.

Gilchrist, James H., age 20, volunteer, August 2, 1862, One Hundred and Sixteenth regiment, company I, private.

Galbraith, John, age 18, volunteer, November 7, 1862, Seventy-third regiment, company D, private, served two years and eight months, discharged July 26, 1865.

Galbraith, Archibald, age 21, volunteer, November, 1861, Eleventh Virginia regiment company D, private, served seven months, discharged June, 1862, after his discharge reenlisted in company K, Second Ohio heavy artillery.

Galbraith, James, age 20, volunteer, August, 1862, Ninety-second regiment, company G, private, served three years, discharged 1865, captured at Chickamauga September 20, 1863, imprisoned in Belle Isle, Libby, Andersonville, Danville, Charleston and Florence prisons, exchanged March 4, 1865, sick for seven weeks, then sent home and discharged.

Green, James M., age 23, volunteer, August, 1861, Thirty-ninth regiment, company K, corporal, attained the rank of sergeant, discharged, sick first with typhoid fever and camp disease, and then in active service, discharged and reenlisted as a veteran September 28, 1864, in company H, One Hundred and Seventy-ninth regiment, and discharged with company June 17, 1865.

Green, Andrew J.

Hall, John D., age 29, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company H, private, died 1864, taken with measles and died a few weeks after enlistment.

Hall, James, age 20, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company H, private, died 1864, died in hospital at Bermuda Hundred.

Hall, Jeremiah, age 22, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company H, private, died 1864, died of measles in hospital at Point of Rocks.

Haze, Truman, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company H, private, died 1864, taken sick at City Point and died in hospital at Washington after discharge of regiment.

Hitchcock, Myson K., volunteer, 1862, One Hundred and Sixteenth regiment, company B, corporal, attained the rank of chief of orderly, died May 22, 1865, mortally wounded at Petersburg.

Hutchinson, John, Ninety-second regiment, company G.

Hunter, George, age 41, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company H, private, died July 1, 1864, taken sick and left in hospital partially recovering, rejoined his regiment, again taken sick and died.

Horton, D. B., Third Iowa cavalry, company I.

Henderson, Warren, age 50, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company H, private, died August 27, 1864, taken sick at City Point and died in hospital at Fortress Monroe.

Johnston, Valentine E., age 46, volunteer, November 7, 1862, three years Seventy-third regiment, company F, private, discharged May 18, 1865, became disabled by rheumatism and blindness in October, 1864, discharged for disability.

Johnston, Joseph W., age 20, volunteer, November 11, 1861, Seventy-third regiment, company F, private, attained the rank of color corporal, mustered out July 20, 1865, wounded twice.

Johnston, James P., age 23, volunteer, August 8, 1862, three years, Seventy-third regiment, company F, private, served three years, mustered out January 20, 1865.

Kirkpatrick, Henry, age 19, volunteer, three years, Seventy-third regiment, company F, private, attained the rank of corporal, died August 27, 1863.

Kirkpatrick, T. M., age 20, volunteer, three years, Seventy-third regiment, company F, private, died September 5, 1862, of wounds at Alexandria, Virginia.

Kirkpatrick, C. B., volunteer, three years, Seventy-third regiment, company F, sergeant, discharged in 1862 for disability.

Lockwood, Hugh, age 22, volunteer, February, 1865, Fifth Kentucky cavalry, private, honorably discharged May, 1865, for disability.

Loring, Franklin, volunteer, July, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company G, captain, served three years, mustered out July 10, 1865.

Loring, Corwin, age 21, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company H, private, served four months, mustered out September 14, 1864.

Loring, Corwin H., Forty-seventh Iowa regiment, private, died in 1863, at Helena, Arkansas.

Lyle, George, volunteer, Seventy-third regiment, company F, private.

McCullough, H., Thirty-ninth regiment, company K.

McFarland, S. R. W., age 22, volunteer, August 29, 1862, three years, Seventh cavalry, company H, private, attained the rank of corporal served three years, mustered out July, 1865, wounded near Pulaski, Tennessee.

Menzie, Rufus C., age 43, volunteer, August, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company G, private, served two years and ten months, mustered out June 10, 1865.

Mitstead, Isaac, Second Virginia regiment, company K.

Mitchell, John, Seventy-third regiment, company F.

Mosel, James, Ninety-second regiment, company G.

Moore, Amstead, Seventy-fifth regiment, company I.

Newport, J. Ross, volunteer, September 1, 1862, three years, Seventh cavalry, company H, sergeant, served one year and three months, died December 11, 1863, mortally wounded at Morristown, December 10th.

Noland, George W., age 29, volunteer, May, 1864, One Hundred and Twenty-second regiment, company B, private, served ten months, mustered out July 30, 1865.

O'Neil, Ezra H., age 21, volunteer, November 18, 1861, three years, Seventy-third regiment, company F, private, attained the rank of orderly sergeant, served two years and three months, honorably discharged February, 1864, severely wounded at Gettysburg.

Powell, Jesse, age 20, volunteer, August, 1864, had been a slave, enlisted in a colored regiment in Columbus.

Plumley, William, age 33, drafted, died in 1863 before he got in a regiment.

Plumley, J.

Reid, James, volunteer, January, 1864, Seventy-third regiment, company F, private, served one year and five months, honorably discharged June, 1865, for disability.

Rutherford, Jacob, age 28, volunteer, navy, ensign, resigned June 20, 1865.

Rutherford, Josiah S., age 23, volunteer, September 25, 1862, three years, Seventh cavalry, company H, private, served two years and ten months, mustered out July 1865.

Ruth, Alpheus, company F, Fortieth Ohio infantry, company F, Fifty-first Ohio infantry, wounded in battle.

Robinson, William, age 20, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company H, private, served four months, mustered out September 14, 1864, reenlistment, February, 1865, Thirty-sixth regiment, company H, private, served six months, mustered out July 27, 1865.

Shipe, Isaac N., volunteer, December 31, 1861, three years, mustered out in 1864, reenlistment, volunteer, 1864, three years, Seventy-third regiment, company F, private, served seven months, mustered out July 20, 1865, wounded at Cross Keys, December 9, 1864, captured and in prison for three months at Florence, South Carolina, paroled March, 1865.

Shipe, John A., volunteer, three years, Seventy-third regiment, company F, private, wounded at Bull Run, fell back, and never since been seen or heard from.

Stone, George G., age 20, volunteer, three years, Seventy-third regiment, company F, died July 25, 1863, of softening of the brain.

Stone, Edward D., age 22, volunteer, August 10, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company K, private, attained rank of orderly sergeant, served four years, mustered out July 9, 1865.

Stone, Charles W., age 22, volunteer, three years, Seventy-third regiment, company F, attained rank of second lieutenant, resigned July 5, 1864.

Stone, John M., age 22, volunteer, June, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company K, corporal, attained rank of quartermaster clerk, served three years,

Stone, Bradley P., age 21, volunteer, August, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company G, sergeant, attained rank of captain, served three years, mustered out June 10, 1865.

Stone, Bolivar S., age 38, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company H, private, died July 17, 1864.

Stone, Augustus D., age 28, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company H, private, mustered out September 14, 1864.

Stone, Franklin, age 26, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days. One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company H, private.

Stoneman, Philip, age 19, volunteer, August 2, 1861, three years. Thirty-ninth regiment, company K, private, served three years, died July 22, 1864, killed at Atlanta.

Stoneman, William.

Shram, Henry, age 21, volunteer, 1861, three years, artillery, died July 4, 1863.

Stage, Andrew, Seventh cavalry, company H.

Starling, Marion, age 16, volunteer, March, 1864, One Hundred and Sixteenth regiment, company I, private.

Shaw, Jacob H., age 20, volunteer, August, 1862, three years. Ninety-second regiment, company G, corporal, attained rank of orderly sergeant, served three years, mustered out June 10, 1865, and wounded at Mission Ridge November 25, 1864.

Swezy, Francis M., age 17, volunteer, November 7, 1862, three years. Seventy-third regiment, company H, private, attained rank of corporal, served two and two-third years, mustered out July, 1865, captured at Gettysburg, August 21, 1863, taken to Belle Isle, and paroled.

Swezy, John L., age 17, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days. One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company H, private, four months, mustered out September 14, 1864, second enlistment, February 9, 1865, Sixth Virginia regiment, private, mustered out June 10, 1865.

Shire, William, Seventy-first regiment, company I.

Swan, Samuel B., age 19, volunteer, August 4, 1862.

Ninety-second regiment, company G, private, attained corporal, served three years discharged June 19, 1865.

Swan, David R., age 19, volunteer, February, 1865, One Hundred and Ninety-first regiment, company B, private.

Sloter, Michael F., age 30, volunteer, August 11, 1862, three years. Ninety-second regiment, company G, private, served three years discharged June 10, 1865, was sick and detailed as nurse in hospital, never in action.

Schoonover, Augustus D., volunteer, September 12, 1862, three years. Seventh cavalry, company I, private, served three years, mustered out July 4, 1865.

Schoonover, Walter H., age 23, volunteer, September 12, 1862, three years. Seventh cavalry, company I, corporal, served three years, mustered out July 4, 1865.

Schoonover, Jacob F., age 20, volunteer, February 22, 1865, One Hundred and Ninety-first regiment, company B, private, attained sergeant.

Shotwell, Isaac, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days. One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company H, private, served four months, discharged September, 1864, sick in hospital at return of regiment.

Shotwell, Ezra M., age 19, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days. One Hundred and Forty-first regiment, company A, private, served four months, discharged September, 1864.

Smith, Arnold, volunteer, Eleventh Virginia regiment, company A, drum major, attained color-bearer.

Smith, S. C. H., Seventh cavalry, company H.

Starr, George W., age 22, volunteer, September 14,

1862, three years. Third Virginia cavalry, company E, private, attained first lieutenant, served three years, mustered out June 30, 1865, detached on various duties.

Stoneman, William, age 16, volunteer, August 2, 1861, three years. Thirty-ninth regiment, company K, private, killed at Stricker's Gap.

Teeters, George W., Ninety-second regiment, company G.

Travis, Ezra, age 18, volunteer, August 15, 1861, three years. Seventy-third regiment, company F, private, captured at Atlanta, imprisoned in Andersonville, and at Jackson, Florida, and released April, 1865.

Travis, Lewis, age 19, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days. One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company H, private, served four months, discharged September, 1864.

Travis, Jacob, age 23, volunteer, August 11, 1862, three years. Ninety-second regiment, company F, private, served three years, discharged January 19, 1865, captured at Chickamauga, but escaped.

Travis, William, age 29, volunteer, August 11, 1862, three years. Ninety-second regiment, company F, private, discharged June 19, 1865.

Templar, Austin, volunteer, August 7, 1862, three years. Ninety-second regiment, company G, private, served three years, discharged June 19, 1865, wounded at Chickamauga and at Savannah.

Templar, Amos, volunteer.

Thorpe, Martin R., age 18, volunteer, December, 1861, Seventy-fifth regiment, private, attained adjutant, wounded at Chancellorsville, reenlisted as a veteran.

Van Gilden, George H., age 19, volunteer, February, 1864, Thirty-ninth regiment, company K, private, discharged July, 1865.

Watson, John K., age 24, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days. One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company H, private, served four months, discharged September 14, 1864.

Watson, Daily, age 20, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days. One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company H, private, served four months, discharged September, 1864, was in hospital at Point of Rocks with measles and camp disease.

Watson, Jacob, age 18, volunteer, August 11, 1862, three years. Ninety-second regiment, company F, private, served three years, discharged June 20, 1865, never off duty during enlistment.

Weaver, Hanson, volunteer, January 23, 1862, three years. Sixty-third regiment, company F, private.

Winans, Francis, age 21, volunteer, January 23, 1862, three years. Sixty-third regiment, company F, private, died September, 1862, of diphtheria.

Weaver, William, Twenty-seventh Illinois, company D.

Winans, Benjamin, age 23, volunteer, January 23, 1862, three years. Sixty-third regiment, company F, captured near Atlanta, Georgia, in 1864, and imprisoned, exchanged and reached home in July, 1865, in reduced condition.

Walker, Henry M., volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days. One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company H, private, served four months, discharged September, 1864.

White, Leander I., Seventy-fifth regiment, company D.

White, Henry L., age 23, volunteer, June 20, 1861, Thirty-ninth regiment, company K, private, served four years, discharged July, 1865, reenlisted in 1863, and was detailed for clerk duty.

White, Arastus H., age 19, volunteer, August 14, 1862, three years, One Hundred and Sixteenth regiment, company B, private, served three years, discharged June 24, 1865, wounded at Hatcher's Run.

White, Sydney P., age 19, volunteer, March 4, 1864, One Hundred and Sixteenth regiment, Company B, private, attained orderly, was in thirteen different actions, and was transferred to company B, Sixty-second regiment.

White, William W., age 21, volunteer, November 13, 1861, Seventy-fifth regiment, company D, private, died in hospital May 17, 1864, of intermittent fever, captured at Gettysburg and exchanged.

Williams, David, age 22, volunteer, May, 1864, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company H, private, served four months, discharged September 14, 1864.

Williams, George W., volunteer, May, 1864, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company H, private, served four months, discharged September 14, 1864.

Will'am, George W., age 37, drafted September, 1864, one year, Seventeenth regiment, company K, private, discharged 1865.

RECAPITULATION.

Huntington's battery .....	11
Seventh Ohio cavalry.....	3
One each in Third Virginia cavalry, Fifth Kentucky cavalry, and Third Iowa cavalry.....	3
One Hundred and Forty-eighth Ohio National Guard.....	38
Ninety-second Ohio .....	22
Seventy-third Ohio .....	22
Thirty-ninth Ohio .....	12
Seventy-fifth Ohio .....	7
One Hundred and Sixteenth Ohio.....	6
Sixty-third Ohio .....	3
Ninth Virginia infantry.....	2
One Hundred and Ninety-first Ohio and Eleventh Virginia infantry, two each.....	4
One each in Second Virginia infantry, Twenty-seventh Illinois, Forty-seventh Iowa, Seventy-first Ohio, Thirty-sixth Ohio, Ninety-first Ohio, One Hundred and Forty-first Ohio, One Hundred and Twenty-second Ohio, One Hundred and Ninety-sixth Ohio, One Hundred and Eighty-third Ohio, and ten not designated....	23
Total number of soldiers.....	152
Died .....	24

DEATHS DURING THE WAR.

Agleo, John S., age 16, volunteer, November 13, 1863, One Hundred and Twenty-fifth regiment, company K, private.

44

Batchelor, Daniel, substitute, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-first regiment, company A, private.

Ballard, Philip A., age 18, volunteer, September 15, 1863, six months, Fourth Virginia cavalry, private, served six months, discharged March, 1864, wounded once, captured in 1863 at Winchester and imprisoned at Belle Isle twenty-three days, died December 26, 1864, chronic diarrhoea, reenlistment, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company D, private, served four months, discharged September, 1864.

Barrows, Bradley P., age 42, volunteer, August 22, 1862, three years, One Hundred and Sixteenth regiment, company I, private, served three years, discharged June 14, 1865.

Broadhead, Francis M., age 27, volunteer, November, 1861, three years, First Virginia cavalry, company E, private, attained rank of quartermaster sergeant, served two years and seven months, died July 1, 1863, killed while scouting just after the battle of Gettysburg.

Basini, John, Eleventh Indiana light artillery, died October 4, 1864, of pneumonia.

Burk, Henry, age 36, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company D, private, served four months, discharged September, 1864.

Burk, James, age 19, volunteer, August 2, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company K, served four years, discharged June, 1865, injured while tearing up railroad track at Goldsborough, North Carolina, and discharged for disability.

Burk, Samuel, age 22, volunteer, December 30, 1861, three years, Seventy-third regiment, company F, private, served three years and seven months, discharged July 24, 1865.

Burg, George W., age 30, volunteer, 1862, three years, Seventy-third regiment, company F, private, served three years, discharged July 16, 1865, captured at McDowell, Virginia, sent to Staunton, Libby, Salisbury and Belle Isle, paroled and exchanged September, 1862, and rejoined his regiment October 3, 1862, wounded, first at Gettysburg, second, Lookout Mountain, captured at Goldsborough, March, 1865, taken to southern prisons and paroled May 25th, discharged with regiment.

Brandeberry, William C., age 26, volunteer, December 30, 1861, three years, Seventy-third regiment, company F, private, served three years and seven months, discharged July 24, 1865.

Brandeberry, John H., age 17, volunteer, November 15, 1863, One Hundred and Twenty-fifth regiment, company K, private, served one year and seven months, discharged June 7, 1865, wounded at Reaca, discharged for disability.

Brooker, Marcellus, age 16, volunteer, December 30, 1861, three years, Seventy-third regiment, company F, private, served three years discharged January 1, 1864, reenlisted, volunteer, January 1, 1864, Seventy-third regiment, company F, private, served six months, discharged July 24, 1865, captured twice.

Brooks, James, age 46, volunteer, August 11, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company G, private, served one year, discharged 1863, taken with camp disease and fever, and brought home by his wife.

Beebe, Theodore, age 27, volunteer, August 15, 1862, three years, Seventy-third regiment, company F, corporal, served three years, discharged July 26, 1865, never sick, wounded or prisoner.

Beebe, Guy, age 22, volunteer, October 11, 1861, three years, Seventy-third regiment, company F, private, attained rank of sergeant, served four years, discharged July 26, 1865, never lost a day's duty.

Beebe, James, age 15, volunteer, June 21, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company K, private, served four years discharged July 19, 1865, wounded at Atlanta, and home sick three months.

Beebe, Fostus, age 16, volunteer, February 16, 1864, Seventy-third regiment, company F, private, served one year and five months, discharged July 26, 1865.

Beebe, Charles, age 18, volunteer, June 12, 1861, thirty years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company K, private, served four years, discharged July 19, 1865, wounded at Corinth, May 28, 1862.

Blair, Alexander, age 22, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, served three years, honorably discharged in September, 1864.

Blair, Thomas, age 21, volunteer, October, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, served three months died January 29, 1862.

Blair, Alvin, age 17, volunteer, August 2, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company K, private, died in 1862 of measles, at Mowisa.

Bennett, Isaac, age 35, volunteer, August 9, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company G, private, discharged June 21, 1865.

Bennett, William, age 22, volunteer, October 19, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, died in February, 1862, at Summerville, West Virginia, of measles.

Bennett, Gordon, volunteer, August 1, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, served three years, honorably discharged in 1864, slightly wounded at Lewisburgh, Virginia.

Carlin, D. B., Eighteenth regiment, company C, lieutenant.

Chambers, William, age 39, volunteer, February 27, 1865, One Hundred and Eighty-ninth regiment, company F, private.

Chambers, James, age 18, volunteer, July 20, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company K, private, honorably discharged in 1863; reenlisted December 23, 1863, private, attained rank of hospital steward, served four years, discharged July 9, 1865.

Chambers, Martin V., age 21, volunteer, June 18, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company K, private, died July 5, 1864, mortally wounded at Kennewas Mountain, July 4, 1864.

Campbell, James, age 22, volunteer, August 2, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company K, private, reenlisted in 1864, hospital nurse, served four years, discharged in June 1865.

Campbell, Luther T., age 17, volunteer, September 12, 1861, three years, Fifty-third regiment, company B, private, served three years, discharged August 11, 1865.

Campbell, Elijah, age 17, volunteer, June 29, 1863, Second heavy artillery, company K, private.

Campbell, William, age 15, volunteer, March, 1864, Fifty-third regiment, company B, private.

Croy, Robert, Ninety-second regiment, company G, sick several times.

Conant, Sanford, age 29, volunteer, August 12, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company G, private, served three years, discharged June, 1865, transferred to veteran reserve corps.

Cutlip, Henry, age 41, volunteer, three years, One Hundred and Seventy-sixth regiment, company I, private, died June 12, 1865, at Chickamauga, Tennessee.

Deasy, Luke, age 21, volunteer, October, 1861, three years, Seventy-third regiment, company F, private, served three years, discharged December 31, 1864, wounded at Lookout Mountain.

Ellis, Alexander M., age 21, volunteer, November 16, 1861, three years, Seventy-third regiment, company F, private, served eleven months, discharged October 3, 1862, for disability.

Ellis, Albert, age 24, volunteer, September 7, 1861, three years, First cavalry, company N, private, discharged 1865, transferred to veteran reserve corps.

Ellis, Reuben H., volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-first regiment, company G, private, served four months, discharged September, 1864.

Ellis, Ethan G., age 29, volunteer, June 27, 1863, Second heavy artillery, company H, private.

Ellis, John W., age 25, volunteer, August, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company G, private, died March 8, 1863, at Camp Gallatin, cause unknown.

Ellis, James I., volunteer, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company I, private, died July, 1863, at Camp Gallatin, after three months' sickness.

Ellis, Charles C., age 15, volunteer, December 18, 1863, three years, Eighteenth regiment, company A, corporal, wounded at Nashville.

Evans, David, volunteer, Fourth colored infantry, company D, private, died 1864, at Fortress Monroe.

Fairbanks, Cornelius, substitute, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company H, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

France, John W., age 19, volunteer, 1861, three years, Seventy-third regiment, company F, private, served three years, died May 25, 1864, mortally wounded at Dallas, Georgia, May 25, 1864.

France, George W., age 32, volunteer, August 5, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company G, private, served one year and five months, honorably discharged January 6, 1864.

France, William H., age 25, volunteer, December 18, 1863, One Hundred and Twenty-fifth regiment, company K, private, served one year and four months, discharged April 17, 1865, for disability, wounded near Dallas, Georgia, June 2, 1864.

Frye, James C., age 26, volunteer, September 29, 1864, Seventy-first regiment, company B, private, served nine months, discharged June 12, 1865, sick with camp disease in Tennessee.

Frye, George N., age 21, August, 1861, three years, Eighteenth regiment, company C, private, served six months, died February 3, 1862, in hospital at Louisville.

Fish, S. H., volunteer, December 30, 1861, three years, Seventy-third regiment, company F, private, two years and seven months, discharged July 24, 1865.

Gaughan, Anthony, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company K, private, served three years discharged, reenlisted, while waiting discharge as a veteran went into Louisville on a pass and supposed to have died by foul means.

Grimes, Owen, volunteer, December 30, 1861, three years, Seventy-third regiment, company H, private, honorably discharged 1864 for disability.

Giddings, Charles, age 37, volunteer, February 23, 1865, one hundred days, One Hundred and Eighty-ninth regiment, company F, private, discharged May 15, 1865, for disability.

Haynes, Andrew A., age 18, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company D, private, served four months, mustered out September 14, 1864.

Henderson, Isaac, Fourth regiment, company B.

Howell, Josephus, volunteer, August, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company G, private, three years, discharged June 19, 1865, transferred to veteran reserve corps.

Hicks, Thomas F., aged 23, volunteer, December 30, 1861, three years, Seventy-third regiment, company F, private, served four years discharged July, 1865; re-enlisted as a veteran.

Johnson, William A., age 17, volunteer, August 1, 1863, six months, Fourth Virginia cavalry, company E, private, served six months, discharged February 6, 1864, from cavalry service; re-enlisted May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company D, private, served four months, discharged September, 1864.

Johnson, Worthy A., age 16, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company A, private, served four months, discharged September 14, 1864.

Johnson, Samuel, drafted, One Hundred and Seventy-sixth regiment, company I, and Sixty-fifth regiment, company G, private, died in 1865, captured and supposed to have died in the hands of the rebels.

Johnson, Marion N., volunteer, October 16, 1863, six months, Fourth Virginia cavalry, company E, private, served five months, mustered out March 6, 1864; re-enlisted May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company D, private, served four months, discharged September, 1864; re-enlisted the third time in company B, One Hundred and Ninety-second regiment.

Johnson, Corwin, volunteer, October 16, 1863, six months, Fourth Virginia cavalry, company E, private, served five months, mustered out May 6, 1864; re-enlisted May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company D, private, served four months, discharged September, 1864.

Johnson, William H., age 21, volunteer, 1861, three years, Seventy-third regiment, company F, private, served three years and three months, honorably discharged August 31, 1864, wounded at Lookout Mountain in 1863; re-enlisted as a veteran.

Jarvis, George P., age 17, volunteer, August 7, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company B, private, served three years discharged June 19, 1865, sick in Georgia, captured near close of war in Georgia, and taken to Andersonville, was paroled a month after and soon discharged.

King, Wilton, age 19, volunteer, August 26, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company K, private, attained rank of orderly sergeant served four years, discharged August 1, 1865, wounded July 4, 1864, re-enlisted as a veteran.

King, John, age 24, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, honorably discharged August, 1864, at expiration of his time.

King, Abel D., volunteer, Fourth Virginia cavalry, company E, sergeant, discharged March 6, 1864; re-enlisted February 23, 1865, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, served five months, discharged July 27, 1865.

King, William, age 17, volunteer, February 27, 1865, one hundred days, One Hundred and Ninety-fourth regiment, company I, private.

King, Nathan P., age 17, volunteer, June 10, 1864, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company K, private, died June 19, 1864, from wound received at battle of Kennesaw Mountain, June 18, 1864.

Kelly, Samuel, age 21, volunteer, June 22, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company K, private, served three years honorably discharged August, 1864.

Lee, Jonathan R., substitute, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-ninth regiment, company A, private.

Lucas, J. C., Eighteenth Virginia cavalry, company C.

Loraine, Louis J., volunteer, October 16, 1863, six months, Fourth regiment, company E, private, served five months, mustered out March 6, 1864; re-enlisted in One Hundred and ninety-first regiment Ohio National guards, also in One Hundred and Ninety-second regiment, company G, Ohio volunteer infantry.

Lucas, Oliver, Eighteenth regiment, company C.

Meek, Jacob, age 31, volunteer, October, 1861, three years, Eighteenth regiment, company A, private, died in 1863 at Chickamauga.

Meek, Samuel, age 19, volunteer, October, 1861, three years, Eighteenth regiment, private, company A, served three years honorably discharged, November, 1864, sick with yellow fever and rheumatism, wounded and captured at Stone River, in Atlanta, Montgomery, and Libby prison, wounded at Chickamauga.

Myers, William, volunteer, One Hundred and Twenty-eighth regiment, served ten months, transferred to One Hundred and Twenty-ninth artillery.

Montgomery, A. H., age 20, volunteer, February 26, 1864, Eighteenth regiment, company A, private.

Marshall, William, age 23, volunteer, October 21, 1861, three years, Seventy-third regiment, company F, private, served four years discharged July 20, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Mellow, Samuel, age 20, volunteer, September 19, 1862, three years, Seventy-third regiment, company B, private, served three years discharged July 24, 1865, detailed as teamster, wounded.

Moore, William M., age 26, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company D, private, served four months, discharged September 14, 1864.

Miller, Manuel, age 38, drafted, October, 1864, Seventy-first regiment, company B, private, served eight months, mustered out June, 1865.

Moran, Anthony, age 35, volunteer, December 30, 1861, three years, Seventy-third regiment, company F, private, served four years, mustered out July 20, 1865, wounded at second Bull Run, re-enlisted as a veteran.

McDaniel, Frederick P., age 25, volunteer, December 13, 1861, three years, First Virginia cavalry, company E, private, served seven months, died July 18, 1862, of fever.

McGirr, William P., age 31, volunteer, August 26, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, served three years, honorably discharged September 3, 1864.

Mead, Charles K., volunteer, August 2, 1851, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company K, private, served five months, died January 6, 1862, of camp disease.

Newel, Erastus R., age 36, volunteer, 1862, three years, Fifty-third regiment, company E, private, died June 7, 1863.

Nolan, Zachary, age 17, volunteer, October 19, 1864, Seventy-eighth regiment, company F, private, served nine months, discharged July 11, 1865.

Nolan, Allen, age 19, volunteer, 1862, one year, Eighteenth regiment, company C, private, served one year, honorably discharged in 1862.

Nolan, Enoch, age 25, volunteer, February 14, 1865, One Hundred and Seventy-sixth or One Hundred and Eighty-sixth regiments, company I, private, died April, 1865, of measles.

Nolan, Ryley, age 18, volunteer, October, 1863, six months, Fourth Virginia cavalry, private, served nine months, honorably discharged July, 1864, re-enlisted in One Hundred and Eighty-sixth regiment, company I.

Newman, John, December 30, 1861, three years, Seventy-third regiment, company F, served three years, honorably discharged in 1864.

Norman, Azariah, volunteer, Fifth colored infantry, company G, died.

Norman, Amos, volunteer, Fifth colored infantry, company G, honorably discharged.

O'Neal, William J., age 18, volunteer, August 2, 1851, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company K, corporal, served four years, discharged July, 1865; re-enlisted as a veteran.

Parsons, W., age 23, volunteer, 1862, three years, Seventy-third regiment, company F, private, served three years, discharged July 4, 1865.

Parsons, Josiah W., age 18, volunteer, 1862, Seventy-third regiment, company F, private, died near Dallas, Georgia.

Parsons Robert K.

Plan, Truman E., age 18, volunteer, 1861, Eighteenth regiment, company C, private, served one year, discharged 1862, drafted 1864, Eighteenth regiment, company F, private, discharged July, 1865, both times for disability.

Ridenour, Joseph S., age 25, volunteer, February 16, 1864, Seventy-third regiment, company D, private, one year, wounded at Atlanta, and died of fever, April 23, 1865.

Ridenour, J. R., age 26, volunteer, Seventy-second regiment, company F, private, died May 1, 1865, of chronic disease.

Romine, Peter, age 27, volunteer, November 4, 1862, three years, Fifty-third regiment, company E, private, wounded at Kennesaw Mountain.

Rowland, John W., age 28, volunteer, November 3, 1861, three years, Fifty-third regiment, company E, private, mustered out.

Rowland, James E., age 20, volunteer, February 3, 1864, Seventy-third regiment, company F, private, served one year and five months discharged July 24, 1865.

Ross, James, Seventy-third regiment, company F, Russell, Emanuel, age 24, volunteer, August 22, 1862, One Hundred and Sixteenth regiment, company I, private, wounded and captured at Staunton, Virginia, imprisoned at Andersonville, discharged June 14, 1865.

Russel, Washington, age 16, volunteer, August 6, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company A, private, attained rank of first sergeant, served three years, discharged June 10, 1865.

Snider, Thomas H., age 22, volunteer, August 31, 1862, three years, Seventy-third regiment, company D, private, two years and eight months discharged for disability April 18, 1865.

Snider, John W., aged 19, volunteer, August 31, 1862, three years, Seventy-third regiment, company F, private, transferred to Infantry corps.

Sampson, Thomas E., volunteer, August 22, 1864, Fifth regiment colored infantry, company F, private, wounded at Deep Bottom, near Richmond.

Shrader, William, age 27, volunteer, November 1, 1862, three years, Seventy-third regiment, company F, private, captured near Monterey, Virginia, held four months in Libby, Salisbury and Belle Isle prisons, paroled, honorably discharged.

Smith, William C., age 39, volunteer, February 22, 1864, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company K, private, served one year and five months, wounded before Atlanta, discharged July 9, 1865.

Smith, Alexander F., age 34, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company D, private, served four months, discharged September 14, 1864.

Smith, James F., age 29, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company D, private, killed in an explosion at City Point.

Smith, Joseph A., age 24, volunteer, February 22, 1864, Thirty-ninth regiment, company K, private, served one year and four months, discharged July 9, 1865.

Starling, George, Ninety-second regiment, company G, died.

Storts, Joseph H., age 18, volunteer, February 9, 1864, Seventy-third regiment, company F, private, one year and five months, discharged July 26, 1865.

Storts, H. Andrew, age 20, substitute, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company H, private, mustered out September, 1864.

Storts, Philander, age 31, volunteer, March 22, 1864, Eighteenth regiment, company F, private, served one year, discharged July 15, 1865.

Tate, John, volunteer, died in hospital June 15, 1865.

Taylor, John W., volunteer, Eighteenth regiment, company B.

Taylor, Benjamin G., age 27, volunteer, August, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company G, private, three years, mustered out June, 1865.

Taylor, William M., volunteer, Eighteenth regiment, company B.

Turrel, William P., age 25, volunteer, August 4, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company F, private, served ten months, discharged June 12, 1863, for disability.

Weakly, Thomas, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company D, private, served four months, discharged September, 1861, re-enlisted May, 1865, Thirty-sixth regiment, private, died in 1865.

RECAPITULATION.

One each in Eleventh Ohio, Independent battery, batteries H and K, Ohio heavy artillery, in all	3
Fourth Virginia cavalry	7
First Virginia cavalry	2
First Ohio cavalry	1
Seventy-third Ohio	28
Thirty-ninth Ohio	15
Ninety-second Ohio	13
One Hundred and Forty-eighth Ohio	14
Eighteenth Ohio (three years)	13
Thirty-sixth Ohio	8
Fifty-third Ohio	5
One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Ohio	3
One Hundred and forty-first Ohio	3
One Hundred and Sixteenth Ohio	2
Seventy-first Ohio	2
One Hundred and Eighty-sixth Ohio	2
Fifth colored regiment	3
One Hundred and Eighty-ninth Ohio	2
One Hundred and Seventy-sixth Ohio	3
One Each in Fourth Ohio, Fourth colored regiment, Seventy-second Ohio, Sixty-fifth Ohio, Seventy-eighth Ohio, One Hundred and Twenty-eighth Ohio, One Hundred and Ninety-fourth Ohio, one not designated, in all	7
Total number of soldiers	136
Died	26

DUNHAM TOWNSHIP.

Andrew, Thomas A., First Virginia light artillery, company H.

Berry, William E., age 31, volunteer, October 29, 1861, three years, battery H, private, served three years, discharged October 28, 1864, captured and imprisoned at Lynchburg and Belle Isle.

Beach, Hiram, age 22, volunteer, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment company F, private, died July, 1862, of typhoid fever.

Basim, David, age 28, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company G, private, discharged September, 1864.

Baker, Manuel, age 30, volunteer, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, died March, 1864, in Andersonville prison pen, of starvation.

Calder, Phillip C., age 31, volunteer, September 10, 1862, three years, Eighty-eighth regiment, company B, private, three years, discharged July 3, 1865.

Cammel, M. M., volunteer, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company F, private, attained the rank of sergeant, died July 16th, of typhoid fever.

Drain, John, age 22, volunteer, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company H, private, served four months, discharged September, 1864.

Ellenwood, Dudley H., age 21, volunteer, October 23, 1861, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private, discharged June 18, 1862, for disability.

Farley, George, Seventy-third regiment, company F.

Fish, David, age 18, volunteer, December 30, 1861, Seventy-third regiment, company F, private, served nine months, died October, 1862, of measles.

Farley, George, Jr., Seventy-third regiment, company F.

Frazer, Evan, age 35, volunteer, August, 1862, three years, Ninety second regiment, company G, private, discharged June 10, 1865.

Gorham, Samuel Earl, age 39, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company H, corporal, killed by explosion at City point August 9, 1864.

Gorham, Daniel H., age 32, volunteer, December 1, 1861, three years, battery H, corporal, served three years and six months, discharged June 13, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Green, James, Thirty-ninth regiment, company K.

Hollister, A. D., age 20, volunteer, June 18, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company K, private, served four years, discharged July 9, 1865, wounded at Atlanta; re-enlisted as a veteran.

Hall, John, age 24, volunteer, three years, Seventy-third regiment, company F, private, died August 9, 1864, at Fortress Monroe, of measles.

Hall, James, age 18, volunteer, three years, Seventy-third regiment, company F, private, died June, 1864, at Point of Rocks, of measles.

Hollister, Austin A., age 17, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company G, private, served four months, discharged September, 1864.

Irwin, William, volunteer, First Virginia light artillery, company H.

Mankin, Rufus M., age 29, volunteer, August 15, 1862, three years, Eighty-eighth regiment, company B, private, served three years, discharged July 3, 1865.

Mankin, Daniel E., age 22, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company K, sergeant, served four months, discharged September, 1864.

Mankin, Francis F., age 42, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company H, private, served four months, honorably discharged September, 1864.

Mankin, Ezra, age 23, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company K, private, served four months, discharged September, 1864.

McClure, Dyer G., age 18, volunteer, 1861, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, died June 19, 1862, mortally wounded at Lewisburgh, Virginia.

McClure, Alonzo, age 18, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company K, private, served four months discharged September, 1864.

McClure, Henry O., age 23, volunteer, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, attained the rank of sergeant, discharged in 1864, at expiration of term.

McGill, John M., age 26, volunteer, 1861, battery H, private, killed at Port Republic, June 9, 1862.

McGill, Hugh, age 25, volunteer, February, 1864, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, attained the rank of corporal, served one year and four months, discharged June 27, 1865.

McGill, William B., age 20, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company H, private, discharged September, 1864, sick and returned home by general order of war department.

McKinney, Robert D., age 19, volunteer, August 17, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Seventy-fourth regiment, company E, private, discharged from hospital.

McTaggart, Alexander, age 20, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company H, private, attained the rank of lieutenant, wounded at Atlanta, resigned just before the regiment was discharged, re-enlisted in 1864, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment.

McTaggart, Neil, age 18, volunteer, January 2, 1862, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private, re-enlisted for three years in the same regiment and company, captured at battle of Mark's Mills, imprisoned ten months at Camp Ford.

Mitchell, George B., age 21, volunteer, August 15, 1862, three years, Eighty-eighth regiment, company B, private, discharged July 3, 1865.

Mitchell, Thomas, age 1, volunteer, 1865, private, served four months, mustered out.

Mitchell, David, volunteer, First artillery, company H, private, mustered out.

Mitchell, John, Seventy-third regiment, also captain company H, One Hundred and Forty-eighth Ohio infantry.

Noland, Sylvester, age 25, volunteer, August 8, 1862, three years, Seventy-third regiment, company F, private, discharged May, 1865, for disability, wounded at battle of Gettysburg.

Noland, James A., age 18, volunteer, October 23, 1863, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company K, private, served thirteen months, discharged on account of some flaw in his enlistment papers, re-enlisted February 9, 1864, Thirty-second regiment, company B, mustered out July, 1865.

Noland, John, age 18, volunteer, February 15, 1865, Thirty-sixth regiment, company H, private, died July 20, 1865.

Noland, Augustus, age 32, volunteer, February, 1865, One Hundred and Ninety-sixth regiment, company F, private, discharged November, 1862, from hospital, re-enlistment February 15, 1865, Thirty-sixth regiment, company H, mustered out in 1865.

Noland, Joseph M., age 18, volunteer, October 31, 1861, three years, First artillery, company H, private, discharged June 15, 1865, captured at Chancellorsville, and prisoner thirty days.

Norton, Charles R., age 19, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, private, served four months, mustered out September.

Pauley, Benjamin T., age 15, volunteer, December 5, 1862, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company D, private, discharged July 17, 1865.

Rodgers, Sanderson H., age 19, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, discharged October 24, 1864, wounded at Chickamauga, and afterwards on detached duty in provost marshal's office.

Rodgers, Charles J., age 18, volunteer, February 14, 1865, one year, One Hundred and Eighty-sixth regiment, company I, private, died April 9, 1865, at Cleveland, Tennessee.

Rardin, Alonzo, age 27, volunteer, August 1, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, served two and one-fourth years, died November 25, 1863, killed in battle of Mission Ridge.

Rodgers, Edward P., age 16, volunteer, February 15, 1865, one year, One Hundred and Eighty-sixth regiment, company I, private, discharged on surgeon's certificate.

Reynolds, Emanuel, age 28, volunteer, February, 1864, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G, private, was discharged June 30, 1865.

Sayres, James M., age 24, volunteer, June, 1862, three months, Eighty-fifth regiment, company F, discharged by surgeon's certificate; re-enlistment, volunteer, September 24, 1862, three years, Eighty-eighth regiment, company B, private, died August 5, 1865, of hemorrhage of lung.

Sayres, Isaac T., age 20, volunteer, September 24, 1862, three years, Eighty-eighth regiment, company B, private, discharged October 26, 1863, by surgeon's certificate.

Sayres, William, age 24, volunteer, June, 1862, three months, Eighty-fifth regiment, teamster; re-enlistment, volunteer, Eleventh Virginia regiment, company A, private, discharged July 3, 1865.

Sayres, Richard C., age 20, volunteer, June, 1862, three months, Eighty-fifth regiment; re-enlistment, volunteer, September, 1863, Eleventh Virginia regiment, company A, private, mustered out in 1865.

Sayres, I. T., age 18, volunteer, September, 1863, three years, Eleventh Virginia regiment, company A, private.

Sayres, George, age 17, volunteer, September, 1863, three years, Eleventh Virginia regiment, company A, private, discharged July 24, 1865, wounded in front of Richmond.

Shaw, James, age 18, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company H, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Shipton, William, age 27, volunteer, August 9, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company F, private, served two and five-twelfths years, discharged March 31, 1865, from hospital, wounded in front of Atlanta.

Stanton, Smith, volunteer, 1864, Seventy-third regiment, company F, private, mustered out July 20, 1865.

Tilton, Douglas, age 19, volunteer, August 1, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, served two months, died October 20, 1861, at Summer-ville, Virginia.

Todd, Alfred, age 54, volunteer, September 29, 1861, three years, Second Virginia cavalry, company B, private, served three years, mustered out November 29, 1864.

Todd, George (adopted), age 18, volunteer, November 8, 1861, three years, Second Virginia cavalry, company B, private, served three years and five months, mustered out June 30, 1865.

Wilson, Benjamin F., age 28, volunteer, August, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company F, private, mustered out June 10, 1865.

Wayson, Henry, Seventy-third regiment, company F, died.

Wayson, Alexander, Seventy-third regiment, company F.

RECAPITULATION.

Huntington's battery .....	5
Battery H, First Virginia light artillery .....	2
Second Virginia cavalry .....	2
One Hundred and Forty-eighth Ohio National guard .....	11
Seventy-third Ohio .....	11
Thirty-sixth Ohio .....	10
Eighty-eighth Ohio .....	5
Ninety-second Ohio .....	4
Thirty-ninth Ohio .....	4
Eleventh Virginia .....	4
Eighty-fifth Ohio .....	3
Seventy-seventh Ohio .....	3
One Hundred and Eighty-sixth Ohio .....	2
And one each in Thirty-second Ohio, Sixty-third Ohio, One Hundred and Seventy-fourth Ohio, One Hundred and Ninety-sixth Ohio, not designated, one .....	5
Total number of soldiers .....	66
Died .....	9

FAIRFIELD TOWNSHIP.

Addis, Benjamin F., aged 23, volunteer, October, 1861, for three years, Fifty-third regiment, company I, private, attained corporal, served three years, discharged November 1, 1864.

Addis, Thomas M., aged 24, volunteer, for three months, Eighteenth regiment, guard served three months, captured at Shiloh, April 8 1862, in prison for a year, on being released, sick and in hospital, re-enlisted as a veteran, volunteer, 1861, for three years, Seventh regiment, company K, sergeant, served four years, discharged June 18, 1865, again captured at Mark's Mills, held for ten months, discharged for disability.

Barr, Elias, aged 44, volunteer, May, 1864, for one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company F, private, served one hundred days, discharged August, 1864.

Bracken, Reed P., aged 20, volunteer, August 12, 1862, for three years, Ninety-second regiment, company G, private, attained corporal, served three years, discharged June 20, 1865.

Blair, Alexander, Thirty-sixth regiment, Company F.

Bracken, Craig, volunteer, for three months, Eighty-seventh regiment, private, served three months, discharged, reenlisted, volunteer, January 7, 1864, First cavalry, company H, private, served one year and four months, died June 25, 1865, captured during first enlistment at Harper's Ferry, but paroled, died of consumption at Atlanta.

Bowman, Christian, aged 23, volunteer, 1861, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private, discharged September, 1862, wounded while sick and in hospital, discharged for disability.

Buck, J. A., Thirty-ninth regiment, company K. Barnes, William, volunteer, 1861, Seventy-third regiment, company F, private, discharged for disability.

Burritt, J. C., Eighteenth regiment, company C.

Campbell, Charles W., aged 19, volunteer, August 19, 1861, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private, served one year and three months, discharged November 12, 1862, discharged for disability.

Campbell, Thomas H., aged 22, volunteer, October 20, 1861, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private, attained corporal.

Callahan, George E., Ninety-second regiment, company G, died March 6, 1863, at Carthage, Tennessee.

Cary, Cornelius, aged 24, volunteer, October 17, 1861, three years, First artillery, company H, private, served three years, discharged 1864, as a veteran.

Cottle, Lewis, aged 28, volunteer, November, 1861, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private.

Cottle, Thornton F., aged 19, volunteer, November, 1861, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private, died April 6, 1862, killed at Shiloh.

Croy, Robert, aged 30, veteran, August 5, 1862, for three years, Ninety-second regiment, company G, private, served three years mustered out June, 1865, took part in all the regiment actions.

Croy, Greer, aged 23, volunteer, October 12, 1861, for three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, attained color corporal, served three years and four months, discharged February, 1865, wounded first at Antietam, second at Chickamauga, third Cedar Creek, discharged as a disabled veteran.

Croy, Duncan, aged 16, volunteer, August 4, 1862, for three years, Ninety-second regiment, company G, private, served three years, mustered out June, 1865, sick during first year.

Croy, Calvin, aged 16, volunteer, May, 1864, for one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company F, private, served one hundred days, mustered out, August, 1864, re-enlisted, volunteer, February 17, 1865, Ninety-second regiment, company G, private, served four months, mustered out June, 1865.

Croy, William, age 26, volunteer, August 9, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company G, private, served three years, mustered out 1865, detailed as wagonmaster for one year.

Croy, David, age 21, volunteer, August 6, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company G, private, served three years, mustered out June 10, 1865.

Croy, Nathan, age 21, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company G, private, served one hundred days, mustered out August, 1864.

Dawson William F., volunteer, One Hundred and First Pennsylvania infantry, first lieutenant, attained captain, discharged May 1, 1863, on account of disability.

Dewees, Caleb, volunteer, 1861, three years, Seventy-third regiment, company F, private, attained corporal, served two years, killed at Gettysburg.

Double, Edward, age 27, volunteer, August 12, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, attained orderly sergeant, served four years and seven months, discharged March 27, 1865, captured at Cumberland Gap, but escaped.

Dunbar, David, age 27, volunteer, August 15, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company G, private, served three years, discharged June 29, 1865, wounded at Chickamauga and transferred to veteran reserved corps.

Dunsmore, Lucius J., age 18, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company D, private, served one hundred days, mustered out September, 1864, died July 21, 1865, of injuries received at City Point.

Ellis, David F., age 22, October 14, 1862, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company G, private, served two years and two months, mustered out December 26, 1864.

Ellis, Lewis H., age 20, volunteer, May, 1862, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company D, private, served one hundred days, mustered out in September, 1864.

Faires, Cyrenus B., age 17, volunteer, September 5, 1861, three years, Second Virginia cavalry, company H, private, served one year and seven months died in April, 1863, of typhoid fever.

Faires, Edward G., age 15, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company G, private, served one hundred days, mustered out in September, 1864.

Fitzgerald, Garret, age 33, volunteer, 1861, three years, Seventy-third regiment, company B, private, served two years, discharged in 1863 on account of disability.

Goddard, Peter F., age 17, volunteer, October 9, 1861, Second regiment Virginia cavalry, company H, private, died October 1, 1862, died of typhoid fever.

Goddard, Harvey H., age 20, volunteer, August 6, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment company G, private, died March 6, 1863, in hospital.

Goddard, George R., age 17, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company G, private, mustered out September, 1864.

Gallagher, Patrick, Seventy-seventh regiment, company H.

Gallagher, James, age 15, volunteer, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private, re-enlisted in 1863, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, captured at Mark's Mills, in Tyler prison ten months.

Hart, Lucien, age 20, volunteer, October 10, 1864, Ninth regiment cavalry, private, served nine months, mustered out July, 1865.

Hart, William R., age 22, volunteer, September 26, 1861, Seventeenth regiment, company F, private, attained the rank of orderly sergeant.

Hart, Wilson S., age 20, volunteer, June, 1862, three months, Eighty-seventh regiment, company A, private, served three months mustered out September, 1862, captured at Harper's Ferry and paroled.

Haynes, John T., age 26, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company D, corporal, served three months, mustered out September, 1864.

Haynes, Isaac P., age 24, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company D, Private, served three months, mustered out September, 1864.

Hill, Isaac, age 26, volunteer, 1861, First regiment artillery company H, private, served four years, mustered out July 31, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Hull, Daniel, age 34, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company G, private, served one hundred days, died October 26, 1864, of measles.

Hull, Samuel, age 28, volunteer, August, 1862, Ninety-second regiment, company G, private, attained the rank of sergeant, died March 12, 1863, of measles at Nashville.

Hull, Reuben E., age 21, volunteer, October, 1861, three years, Second regiment Virginia cavalry, company H, private, attained the rank of first sergeant, served three years, mustered out October, 1864, re-enlisted October, 1864, Second regiment Virginia cavalry, company H, first sergeant, mustered out February, 1865.

Hunter, Charles, age 21, volunteer, 1861, Seventy-third regiment, company F, private, died May 19, 1865, of consumption.

Johnson, John D., Thirty-sixth regiment, company F.

Jones, William D., volunteer, January, 1864, three years, First regiment cavalry, company L, private.

Johnson, Zeno C., Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, died.

Kidwell, Alexander D., age 19, volunteer, December 31, 1861, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private.

Johnson, E. M., Seventy-seventh regiment, company D.

Lucas, Thomas, volunteer, 1861, three years, Seventy-third regiment, company F, captain, mustered out 1864, discharged by surgeon's certificate.

Meek, William J., Ninety-second regiment, company G.

Marple, James W., age 21, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days. One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company D, private, served one hundred days, mustered out September, 1864.

Moore, George, age 21, volunteer, February 15, 1864, Thirty-ninth regiment, company K, private, mustered out July 9, 1865.

Meer, Patrick C., volunteer, 1861, Seventy-third regiment, company F, private, discharged, cause unknown.

Mocer, David, Thirteenth regiment, company H. Müller, Elbridge, age 19, volunteer, September 6, 1861, three years, Second Virginia cavalry, company F, private, served three years, mustered out November, 1864, captured at Somerville, West Virginia, May 12, 1863, in Libby prison eleven months, paroled and exchanged in 1864.

Morrow, William, Sixty-fifth regiment, company H. Morrow, Andrew D., age 24, volunteer, February 25, 1861, two years, Sixty-third regiment, company H, private, served two years, re-enlisted, volunteered January 1, Sixty-third regiment, company H, saddler, served two years and six months, mustered out July, 1865.

M'Namery, William, age 20, volunteer, February, 1864, Seventy-third regiment, company F, private, mustered out May, 1865, wounded at Goldsborough, North Carolina.

Marple, Wesley, Sixty-third regiment, company G, private, died June 20, 1862, at Corinth, Mississippi, of typhoid fever.

Murphy, William, volunteer, 1861, Sixth Kentucky cavalry, private, died, 1863, shot through the head.

Nichol, Thomas, age 22, volunteer, October, 1861, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private, attained rank of corporal, served on detached service, and re-enlisted as a veteran.

O'Donnel, John, volunteer, November, 1861, three years, Seventy-third regiment, company F, private, three years, mustered out 1864, wounded at second Bull Run fight, captured and paroled on the 10th.

Pennock, Jacob, age 20, volunteer, March 9, 1865, One Hundred and Ninety-sixth regiment, company F, private, died April 27, 1865, of typhoid fever.

Reid, Hugh, age 21, volunteer, December 31, 1861, two years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private, served two years, captured at Mark's Mills, and imprisoned at Camp Ford, Texas, for ten months, re-enlisted, volunteered, December 10, 1863, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private.

Saylor, Edward J., age 21, volunteer, August 1, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company K, private, served three years, re-enlisted as a veteran, was wounded at Winchester, September, 1863.

Stephens, Thomas, age 16, volunteer, October 2, 1862, Ninth cavalry, company B, private.

Thompson, William, age 36, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company F, corporal, served one hundred days, mustered out in September, 1864.

Tait, Michael, age 46, volunteer, 1861, Seventy-third regiment, company F, private, died in 1863 in hospital.

Tait, Edward, age 14, volunteer, 1861, Seventy-third regiment, company F, private.

Walker, James, age 44, volunteer February, 1862, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private died April 21, 1862, in consequence of wound received at Shiloh.

Walborn, Elias, age 18, volunteer, February 17, 1864, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, served two months, mustered out April 27, 1865.

Wible, Levi, age 28, volunteer, October 26, 1861, Sixty-third regiment, company G, private, attained rank of sergeant; re-enlisted as a veteran, severely wounded and captured at Atlanta, in prison at Andersonville eight months, paroled, and was on board the Sultana when she exploded on the Mississippi, died.

Wible, Joseph, age 22, volunteer, August 28, 1861, two years, One Hundredth Pennsylvania infantry, company D, private, served two years, re-enlisted, captured at James Island, South Carolina, June 3, 1862, in prison at Columbia four months and paroled, captured second time at Petersburg, March 25, 1865, in Libby prison five days and paroled, discharged with his company.

RECAPITULATION.

Huntington battery .....	3
Second Virginia cavalry .....	4
First Ohio cavalry .....	2
Ninth Ohio cavalry .....	2
Sixth Kentucky cavalry .....	1
Seventy-seventh Ohio .....	13
One Hundred and Forty-eighth Ohio National guard .....	12
Ninety-second Ohio .....	11
Seventy-third Ohio .....	10
Thirty-sixth Ohio .....	7
Sixty-third Ohio .....	5
Thirty-ninth Ohio .....	3
Eighty-seventh Ohio (three months) .....	2
One each in Fifty-third Ohio, Eighteenth Ohio (three months), Eighteenth Ohio (three years), One Hundredth Pennsylvania, One Hundred and First Pennsylvania, Sixty-fifth Ohio, Seventieth Ohio, One Hundred and Ninety-sixth Ohio, in all .....	8
Total number of soldiers .....	78
Died .....	16

LEAVING TOWNSHIP

Abbott, William James, age 21, volunteer, August 6, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, drummer, attained to the rank of principal musician, served two years and six months, honorably discharged, re-enlistment, age 23, volunteer, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, quartermaster, attained rank of orderly, served one year and six months, mustered out.

Athey, Hezekiah, age 42, drafted, 1862, nine months, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, private, served nine months, mustered out.

Athey, Charles Wesley, age 18, volunteer, October, 1861, three years.

Athey, James L., age 17, volunteer, February 26, 1863, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, private.

Athey, John Wesley, age 17, volunteer, October 18, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, private, re-enlistment.

Bartmess, George J., volunteer, August 12, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, honorably discharged September 12, 1862, for disability.

Bartlett, Frederick, volunteer, August 19, 1862, three years, Seventh cavalry, company H.

Bell, John Thomas, age 18, volunteer August 30, 1862, three years, Seventh cavalry, company H, private, served two years and ten months, mustered out June 29, 1865.

Brown, Leroy S., volunteer, August 3, 1862, three years, Seventh cavalry, company H, private, discharged from service on account of disability.

Boye, Charles, age 16, volunteer, 1862, three years, First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, mustered out July 1, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Britton, Thomas, age 34, volunteer, August 12, 1862, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company D, private, served three years mustered out July 9, 1865.

Brown, John Howell, volunteer, May 28, 1862, three months, Eighty-seventh regiment, company A, sergeant, one battle, served four months, mustered out October 1, 1862.

Brown, William, age 23, volunteer, September, 1861, three years, First cavalry, company L, private.

Brown, Daniel.

Brown, James Pedre, age 18, volunteer, May 28, 1862, three months, Eighty-seventh regiment, company A, private, one battle, served four months, mustered out September, 1862.

Carver, T. S., Second Virginia regiment, company H.

Carver, Sampson James, age 16, volunteer, First cavalry, company G.

Chapman, Seldon, age 22, volunteer, 1863, three years, Second heavy artillery, company K, private, attained to rank of corporal.

Chapman, Levi O., volunteer, Seventh cavalry, company H.

Chapman, Hiram H., age 21, volunteer, August 13, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company H, private, served two years and ten months, mustered out June 10, 1865.

Doan, Richard, age 27, volunteer, July 25, 1863, three years, Second heavy artillery, company K, private, mustered out August 23, 1865.

Dowling, James R., age 25, volunteer, August 12, 1862, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company D, private, served three years, mustered out July 4, 1864, wounded at Chickamauga and transferred to veteran reserve corps.

Dowling, John W., age 24, volunteer, October, 1862, three years, Seventh cavalry, company H, private, served two years and nine months mustered out June 29, 1865.

Dowling, Lewis W., age 21, volunteer, May 28, 1862, three months, Eighty-seventh regiment, company H, private, one battle, served four months, mustered out October 1, 1862.

Drum, Jacob, volunteer, August 3, 1862, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company C, private.

Flanders, John, age 24, drafted 1862, nine months, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, private, served ten months.

Flanders, Augustus, age 23, volunteer, September 3, 1862, three years, Seventh cavalry, company H, private, served three years.

Flanders, Henry, age 22, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company I, private, served seven months, died March 17, 1862, at Summersville, Virginia, of typhus fever.

Flanders, Jasper C., age 21, substitute, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, private.

Flanders, Joseph, age 19, March 14, 1864, three years Sixty-second regiment, company I, private, served one year and five months, mustered out August, 1865.

Flanders, Enos, age 23, substitute, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company A, private.

Guiteau, Benjamin Fulton, age 21, volunteer, 1861, three years, First cavalry, company L, private, killed January 2, 1863, at battle at Stone River.

Hall, James, age 20, volunteer, August 13, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, served three years mustered out.

Hallet, Charles, Second Huntington artillery, company K.

Henning, John Henry, age 29, volunteer, April 17, 1861, three months, Eighteenth regiment, company B, private, served four months mustered out August 28, 1861, re-enlistment, age 29, volunteer, September, 1861, three years, First Virginia cavalry, company C, private, mustered out veteran enlistment, age 31, volunteer, March 31, 1864, three years, First Virginia light artillery, company C, private.

Henning, Charles Henry, age 22, volunteer, April 17, 1861, three months, Eighteenth regiment, company B, private, served four months, mustered out August 28, 1861, re-enlistment, age 22, volunteer, 1861, three years, First Virginia light artillery company C, private, served two years, died October 31, 1863.

Hill, Ira, age 27, volunteer, September 2, 1862, three years, Seventh cavalry, company H, private, served three years, mustered out 1865.

Hill, Isaac, age 18, volunteer, August, 1862, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company I, private, served three years, mustered out July 3, 1865.

Himebaugh, John H., age 21, volunteer, February 1, 1864, three years, Seventh cavalry, company H, private, served one year and six months, mustered out June 29, 1865.

Hobby, William Alexander, age 32, volunteer, July 22, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, served three years, mustered out 1864, sick, and transferred to Fifteenth regiment, company D, invalid corps.

Howland, Jesse, second heavy artillery, company K. Horne, George Winfield, age 16, volunteer, August 1, 1863, three years, Second heavy artillery, company K, private, served two years mustered out August 23, 1865.

Ifer, Jacob, First Virginia light artillery, company C.

Kaneff, George Washington, volunteer, August

27, 1862, three years, Seventh cavalry, company L, private, attained rank of sergeant, served three years, mustered out.

Kaneff, Charles Wesley, age 21, volunteer, February 3, 1864, three years, Seventh cavalry, company L, private.

Kidd, Nathaniel Evans, age 30, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company B, private.

Kidd, Jesse M., age 25, volunteer, September 8, 1862, three years, Seventh cavalry, company H, private.

Kidd, Joseph, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B.

Kimmick, George, age 17, volunteer, October 5, 1864, one year, Seventh Virginia regiment, company C, private, served nine months, mustered out June 20, 1865.

Kimmick, William, volunteer, December 12, 1863, Thirty-third regiment, company B.

Kimmick, William Henry, age 16, volunteer, December, 1863, one year, United States gunboat, cabin boy, attained rank of steward, mustered out.

Kurbs, Leonard.

Lane, Thomas, age 36, substitute, May 2, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company A, private, served five months mustered out September 30, 1864.

Lankford, H. H., age 20, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, attained rank of corporal, served three years, mustered out 1864, re-enlistment, age 23, substitute, April 3, 1865, one year, Eighteenth regiment, company I.

McCall, James, age 35, volunteer, December 21, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company H, private, served one year, died January 1, 1862, at Alton, Illinois, of small pox.

Morris, Thomas, age 28, volunteer, September 8, 1862, three years, Seventh cavalry, company H, private, served seven months, honorably discharged April 3, 1863, pulmonary tuberculosis.

Newberg, William, age 17, volunteer, January 16, 1864, three years, First cavalry, company L, private.

Nicol, Robert Elder, age 35, substitute, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company B, private, mustered out September 14, 1864, died October 3, 1864.

Noe, Lewis, volunteer, July 14, 1862, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G.

Page, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment.

Page, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment.

Palmer, Miles L., age 22, volunteer, August 29, 1862, three years, Seventh cavalry, company H, private.

Pfaff, Lewis, age 26, substitute, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company A, private.

Pfaff, Daniel, age 21, volunteer, July 22, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, served three years and one month, mustered out August, 1864.

Pfaff, Conrad, age 18, volunteer, December 27, 1861, three years, First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, served two years and six months, honorably discharged 1864, veteran enlistment, age 20, volunteer, March 31, 1864, three years, First Virginia light artillery, company C, served one year and three months, mustered out June 28, 1865.

Prewett, Brazil, age 21, volunteer, Seventh cavalry, company L, private.

Price, John W., volunteer, 1861, three years, First cavalry, company L, private, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Price, Logan, age 19, volunteer, September 1, 1861, three years, First Virginia light artillery, company A, private, served two years and six months, honorably discharged, veteran enlistment, age 21, volunteer, March 31, 1861, three years, First Virginia light artillery, company C, mustered out June 28, 1865.

Robinson, W. Lynch, volunteer, July, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company F, private, served three years, mustered out June 10, 1865.

Robinson, Joseph, age 48, volunteer, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company H, private, died July 20, 1863, at Covington, Kentucky, of chronic diarrhoea.

Robinson, Charles H., age 35, volunteer, August 9, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company F, private, served three years, mustered out June 10, 1865, last two years in invalid corps in Frederick City.

Rodgers, Mason C., volunteer, March 30, 1862, three years, First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, died March 17, 1863.

Rodgers, Frederick, volunteer, March 30, 1862, three years, First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, died December 24, 1862, mortally wounded at the battle of Cross Keys.

Schultice, Adam, age 21, volunteer, August 13, 1862, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company G, private, veteran re-enlistment, age 22, volunteer, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company G.

Sheldon, Charles, One Hundred and Sixteenth regiment, company G.

Seevers, Benjamin, volunteer, August 20, 1862, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company D, private.

Simmons, John, age 29, volunteer, one year, One Hundred and Seventy-ninth regiment, company F, private.

Sinclair, William, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, died August 10, 1862, of fever, at Corinth, Mississippi.

Stanley, William, January 25, 1861, three years, Twelfth regiment, company D, private, served one year, honorably discharged December 25, 1862.

Stanley, W. T., volunteer, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company K, second lieutenant, attained rank of captain, honorably discharged November 25, 1864.

Stanley, George, volunteer, First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, attained rank of corporal, mustered out 1865.

Taylor, Reuben, age 17, volunteer, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, private, died June 25, 1864, in rebel prison at Tyler, Texas.

Theis, Jacob, age 20, October 13, 1864, one year, Seventy-eighth regiment, company D, private, served nine months, mustered out July 11, 1865.

Thornton, William, age 18, volunteer, August 12,

1861, three years. Thirty-sixth regiment company G, private, attained rank of orderly, served two and one-half years, honorably discharged, veteran enlistment, age 20, volunteer, February 24, 1864, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment company G, private, attained rank of orderly, served six months, mustered out July 27, 1865.

Troudner, George Adam, age 18, volunteer, March, 1862, three years, First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, served two years honorably discharged, veteran enlistment, age 20, volunteer, October 31, 1864, three years, First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, mustered out June 28, 1865.

Tucker, John R., age 56, volunteer, April, 1861, three months, Nineteenth regiment, company G, private, served three months, mustered out August, 1861.

Tucker, Abner, age 22, volunteer, April 17, 1861, three months, Eighteenth regiment, company B, private mustered out August 28, 1861, re-enlisted, volunteer, Thirty-sixth regiment, private, re-enlisted, volunteer, First light artillery, company C, private, re-enlisted, age 26, volunteer, Eighteenth regiment, company C, private honorably discharged.

Ward Augustus, volunteer, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, drummer, served two and one-half years, re-enlistment, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, lieutenant, attained rank of captain, served one and one-half years, mustered out July 9, 1865.

Ward, Everett R., age 18, volunteer, August 8, 1864, one year, First Virginia light artillery, company H, private served ten months, honorably discharged May 24, 1865.

Warren, Robert L., volunteer, October, 1861, three years, First Virginia cavalry, company E, private, honorably discharged re-enlisted as a veteran.

Warren, Charles, Seventh Virginia regiment, company E.

Waxler, Archibald V., age 23, volunteer, August 10, 1862, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, attained rank of corporal, died November 18, 1864, killed.

West.

Whitney, Simon H., age 27, volunteer, October 5, 1862, three years, Seventh cavalry, company H, private, served seven months, died May 10, 1863, of typhoid fever.

Young, John R., age 23, volunteer, August 12, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, attained rank of corporal served two years and six months, honorably discharged, veteran enlistment, age 25, volunteer, February 1, 1864, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, corporal, attained rank of sergeant, served one year and six months, mustered out July, 1865.

Young, Thomas Andrews, age 17, volunteer, March, 1865, one year, One Hundred and Eighty-ninth regiment, company H, private.

Young, Douglass H., age 22, volunteer, September, 1861, three years, First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, served one month, honorably discharged, second enlistment, age 23, volunteer, August 12, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company

D, private, served three years, mustered out June 22, 1865.

Young, Lewis, volunteer, October 1, 1861, Fifty-eighth regiment, company K.

Zimmer, Lewis, age 20, volunteer, September 26, 1861, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company G, private, served one year, died October 3, 1862, shot in battle at Corinth.

RECAPITULATION.

Buell's Pierpont battery .....	12
Battery K, Second heavy artillery .....	4
Battery H, First Virginia light artillery .....	1
Seventh Ohio cavalry .....	15
First Ohio Cavalry .....	6
First Virginia cavalry .....	1
Sixty-third Ohio .....	4
Thirty-sixth Ohio .....	18
Seventy-seventh Ohio .....	8
One Hundred and Forty-eighth Ohio National Guard .....	8
Three each in Thirty-ninth Ohio, Ninety-third Ohio, Eighty-seventh Ohio (three months), Eighteenth (three months), in all .....	12
Seventh Virginia infantry .....	2
Eighteenth Ohio (three years) .....	2
And one each in Second Virginia, Sixty-second Ohio, Fifty-eighth Ohio, Twelfth Ohio, Nineteenth Ohio, Seventy-eighth Ohio, One Hundred and Sixteenth Ohio, One Hundred and Seventy-ninth Ohio, One Hundred and Eighty-ninth Ohio, and two not designated, in all.....	11
Total number of soldiers .....	109
Died .....	11

GRANDVIEW TOWNSHIP.

Adams, Thomas Dunn, age 23, volunteer, August, 1861, Seventh Virginia infantry, company C, private, served three years, mustered out in November, 1864.

Adams, William A. S., age 17, volunteer, September 12, 1864, one year, Sixth Virginia infantry, company C, private, served nine months, mustered out June 10, 1865.

Armstrong, Robert, One Hundred and Sixteenth regiment, company D, killed in service.

Austin, George Greenwood, age 21, volunteer, 1861, three years, Second Virginia cavalry, company C, bugler, veteran re-enlistment, 1864, three years.

Arthur, William D., age 18, volunteer, October 5, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private, served one year, honorably discharged October 12, 1862.

Arthur, J. Armstrong, age 16, volunteer, October 5, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private, veteran enlistment February, 1864, three years.

Aten, George, age 32, drafted September 27, 1864, one year, Fifty-first regiment, company D, private, served nine months, mustered out June 20, 1865.

Ballentine, John, age 24, volunteer, November, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private served one year, honorably discharged.

Ballentine, Robert, age 16, volunteer, October 5, 1861, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private, veteran enlistment February, 1864, three years, private, attained the rank of corporal.

Ballentine, Hugh, age 14, volunteer, February, 1864, three years, Twenty-fifth regiment, company C, private.

Barber, J. Daubigne, age 24, volunteer, October 8, 1861, three years, Second Virginia cavalry, company C, first sergeant attained rank of first lieutenant, served two years, killed in action near Winchester, July 27, 1864.

Barentz, Dwight, age 24, volunteer, January 25, 1865, one year, One Hundred and Eighty-fourth regiment, company A, private served seven months, mustered out in September, 1865.

Barentz, Martin, age 18, volunteer, March, 1865, one year, One Hundred and Eighty-seventh regiment, company G, private.

Barnes, Vachel Hall, age 22, volunteer, August, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company H, corporal died.

Barnes, Francis Adams, age 18, volunteer, September, 1861, three years, Second Virginia cavalry, company C, private, served one year, honorably discharged in 1862; second enlistment, age 20, volunteer, August, 1863, six months, Fourth Virginia cavalry, company G, first lieutenant; third enlistment, age 21, volunteer, September, 1864, one year, One Hundred and Eightieth regiment, company F, first lieutenant, served ten months, mustered out July, 1865.

Barnhart, Leonard, age 29, volunteer, October 5, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment company C, private, served three and one-half years, mustered out in March, 1865.

Barnhart, William, age 22, volunteer, February, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private.

Barnhart, George M., age 39, volunteer, February 15, 1865, one year, One Hundred and Eighty-seventh regiment, company G, private.

Barnhart, Chester, age 33, volunteer, March 8, 1864, Seventh Virginia, private, killed June 3, 1864, in action at Cold Harbor, Virginia.

Barnhart, James William, volunteer, Seventh Virginia, killed.

Barrett, John C., age 18, volunteer, February 20, 1865, one year, One Hundred and Eighty-seventh regiment, company G, private.

Beaver, Perry, age 23, volunteer, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private, served three years, mustered out December 12, 1864.

Beaver, James, age 19, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private served seven months died in May, 1862, at Covington, Kentucky.

Beaver, George W., age 31, drafted and volunteer, 1862, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private.

Beaver, Calvin, age 19, volunteer, November, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private.

Beaver, Michael, age 23, volunteer, November, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private, served two months, discharged.

Beegle, Daniel M., age 17, substitute and volunteer, 1862, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, Company C, private.

Biddle, Perry, age 43, volunteer, December 16, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company I, private, served two years, died December 14, 1863.

Biddle, Loyd Adelbert, age 17, volunteer, October 22, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company I, private; veteran enlistment, February, 1864, company C.

Biddle, John Quincy, age 15, volunteer, October 22, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private, served five months, honorably discharged March 15, 1862; re-enlistment, age 18, volunteer, February, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private.

Bradfield, Charles, age 18, volunteer February, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private.

Broadright, Henry, age 22, volunteer, October, 1861, three years, Second Virginia cavalry, company I, private, attained corporal, died.

Brooks, John, age 35, drafted, September 27, 1864, one year, Fifty-first regiment, company D, private, served nine months, mustered out June 23, 1865.

Bruce, Samuel, age 42, volunteer, August 6, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private, nine months, died April 23, 1862.

Burnet, John L. Jones, age 16, volunteer, May 18, 1863, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private.

Burris, Marion, age 23, volunteer, October 5, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private, attained the rank of second lieutenant, re-signed; re-enlistment, age 7, substitute, February, 1865, one year, Twentieth regiment, company B, private.

Burris, William W., age 18, volunteer, December 12, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private; veteran enlistment, age 20, volunteer, February, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private, attained the rank of first lieutenant.

Burris, John Martin, age 18, volunteer, February 8, 1864, three years, Sixty-second Pennsylvania regiment, company I, private served seventeen months, mustered out July 3, 1865.

Burris, William, age 22, volunteer, 1861, three years, Second Virginia cavalry, company C, private, three years, mustered out in 1864.

Burris, Stimson, age 16, volunteer, February, 1865, one year, One Hundred and Eighty-seventh regiment, company G, private.

Byers, Jacob, age 35, volunteer, August 15, 1862, three years, One Hundred and Sixteenth regiment, company E, private, served three years, mustered out June 1, 1865.

Callagan, John, age 47, volunteer, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private, killed January 8, 1862.

Calvert, Alexander, age 25, volunteer, August 29, 1862, three years, Fourteenth Virginia, regiment, company E corporal.

Calvert, Washington, age 25, volunteer, October 8, 1861, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company F, private, attained the rank of corporal, served ten months, honorably discharged August 23, 1862.

Calvert, Ezekiel, First artillery, company K.

Campbell, Joseph, age 23, volunteer, August 23, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private, served nine months, honorably discharged May 26, 1862.

Cameron, John B., volunteer, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G.

Cameron, John R., Seventy-seventh regiment, company G.

Cameron, Andrew.

Carroll, George, age 38, volunteer, October 28, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private one year, died October 4, 1862.

Carroll, Thomas, Seventy-seventh regiment, company I.

Cline, Martin Van, age 34, volunteer, August 1, 1861, three years, Seventh Virginia regiment, company D, private, served one year, honorably discharged October 6, 1862, for disability.

Cline, Theodore, volunteer, One Hundred and Eighty-seventh regiment, company G.

Cluter, M. V., volunteer, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C.

Cooper, James, Ninety-second regiment, company H.

Cooper, John, volunteer, Ninety-second regiment, company H, private, killed in service.

Cooper, Robert, Sixty-third regiment, company F, re-enlistment, volunteer, 1865, one year, One Hundred and Eighty-seventh regiment, company G, private.

Cunningham, William Henry, One Hundred and Eighty-seventh regiment, company G.

Cunningham, James, age 24, drafted, September 27, 1864, one year, Fifty-first regiment, companies I. and D, private, served eight months, honorably discharged June 1, 1865.

Cunningham Robert H., age 19, volunteer, February 14, 1865, one year, Fifty-first regiment, company G, private.

Custer, David, age 48, volunteer, January 5, 1862, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private, served two years, honorably discharged February, 1864.

Dailey, Hamilton, age 18, volunteer, February 28, 1864, three years, Fifteenth regiment, company C, private.

Dailey, William, One Hundred and Twenty-fifth regiment, company H.

Davis, John, age 36, volunteer, August, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company H, private, served three years, mustered out June 10, 1865.

Davis, Peter, Second cavalry, Company C, died.

Dayly, Wesley, age 18, volunteer, October 19, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private, served five months, died March 30, 1862, at Paducah, Kentucky.

Dickey, Samuel M., age 41, volunteer, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private, honorably discharged; re-enlistment, age 45, substitute, October, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private, mustered out in 1865.

Dodds, Joseph, age 19, volunteer, September 13, 1861, three years, Second Virginia cavalry, company C, private, attained corporal, served two years and a half; re-enlistment, volunteer, 1864, three years, Second Virginia cavalry, company C, corporal, served one year and four months, mustered out in 1865.

Dorff, Charles, age 17, volunteer, October 20, 1861, three years, Second Virginia cavalry, company C, private; re-enlistment, age 19, volunteer, 1864, three years, Second Virginia cavalry, company C, private, mustered out in 1865.

Dorff, Reuben, age 16, volunteer, 1864, three years, Second Virginia cavalry, private, mustered out in 1865.

Dorff, William, age 18, volunteer, September, 1861, three years, First light artillery, company K, corporal, attained sergeant; re-enlistment age 21, volunteer, 1864, three years, First light artillery, company K, sergeant, mustered out in 1865.

Decgan, William C., age 20, volunteer, October, 1861, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company F, corporal, attained sergeant.

Dye, James, One Hundred and Ninety-fourth regiment, company I, private, died.

Eaton, William, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C.

Easthorn, James P., age 30, volunteer, September 12, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private; re-enlisted as a veteran, volunteer, February, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private, attained corporal.

Easthorn, John J., age 19, volunteer, May, 1861, three years, Twenty-fifth regiment, company B, private, served one year, died, mortally wounded at the battle of Cross Keys, Virginia.

Easton, Daniel, Twenty-fifth regiment.

Eddy, Going, age 40, volunteer, August 27, 1861, three years, Seventh Virginia infantry, company D, private, served ten months, honorably discharged in June, 1862.

Eddy, David, age 24, volunteer, October 18, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company I, private; re-enlisted as a veteran, age 26, volunteer, February, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company I, private.

Eddy, Alpheus, age 18, volunteer, August, 1861, three years First light artillery, company K, private, served two years and a half, enlisted as a veteran, age 20, volunteer, 1864, three years, First light artillery, company K, private, died in 1864.

Eddy, Going, Jr., age 17, volunteer, July 25, 1863, six months, Fourth Virginia cavalry, company G, private, served seven months, mustered out in March, 1864, re-enlistment, age 18, volunteer, 1864, three years, First light artillery, company K, private, mustered out in 1865.

Eddy, William, age 15, volunteer, July, 1863, six months, mustered out in 1864; re-enlistment, age 16, volunteer, 1864, three years, First light artillery, company K, private, mustered out in 1865.

Edgill, John, age 15, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private, enlisted as a veteran age 18, volunteer, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private.

Edmonds, Robert, age 19, volunteer, October 28, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private, enlisted as a veteran, age 21, volunteer, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private.

Edmonds, William, age 17, volunteer, July, 1861, three years, Fourth Virginia, company C, private, honorably discharged in March 1865.

Edmonds, John, age 16, volunteer, February, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private.

Elrod, James, age 25, volunteer, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private.

Eoffle, Hiram, age 17, volunteer, June 4, 1861, three years, Fourth Virginia, company C, served two years, honorably discharged in September 1863, enlisted as a veteran, age 20, volunteer, February, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private.

Eoffle, Sardine, age 17, volunteer, October 10, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private, enlisted as a veteran, age 19, volunteer, February, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private.

Eoffle, Lander, age 19, volunteer, 1864, three years, One Hundred and Sixteenth regiment, company C, private, died in September, 1864, shot in hospital at Cumberland, Maryland.

Eoffle, Marion, volunteer, February 14, 1865, one year, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private.

Evans, John F., volunteer, Seventh Virginia, company C, second lieutenant, attained first lieutenant, mustered out August 19, 1863, on account of wound received at Chancellorsville.

Ferguson, James S., volunteer, October, 20, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private, served six months, died April 20, 1862.

Ferguson, Thomas, age 32, volunteer, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private, died in 1862.

Ferguson, John, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private.

Filley, Buell, age 18, volunteer, September 3, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment company D, private, served two and a half years, re-enlisted as a veteran, February, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private, served one year, died April 23, 1865, diarrhea, at Natchez, Mississippi.

Fisher, Henry, drafted, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B.

Forance, George, Seventeenth regiment, company B.

Foranet, George B., age 16, volunteer, August 1, 1861, three years, Seventh Virginia, company D, private, mustered out July 1, 1865.

Fouracre, Charles W., Fifteenth regiment, company D.

Frey, William Henry, age 22, volunteer August, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company C, private, served three years, mustered out June 10, 1865.

Fry, William Everett, age 36, volunteer, August 13, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company H, private, served three years, mustered out June 10, 1865.

Gibson, Robert, age 25, volunteer, September 23, 1864, one year, One Hundred and Eightieth regiment, company F, private, mustered out June 10, 1865.

Gatten, Robert, Second Virginia cavalry, company A.

Gooseman, Israel, age 18, volunteer, October 10, 1861, three years, Second Virginia cavalry, company C, private, served three years, mustered out October 1, 1864, wounded in action near Raleigh.

Gray, Walter, age 19, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company E, private, re-enlisted as a veteran, 1864, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company E, private, mustered out July, 1865.

Gray, Philip, age 16, volunteer, February 25, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private.

Gray, William, age 15, volunteer, February 25, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private, served three months, died June 6, 1864, at Little Rock, Arkansas.

Griggs, John C., age 15, volunteer, October 1, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company I, private; re-enlisted as a veteran February, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company I, private.

Guirt, William, First light artillery, company K, private.

Gully, Cyrus, Ninth cavalry, company B.

Hackethorn, William, age 31, volunteer, September, 1861, three years, First light artillery, company K, private, served three years, mustered out 1864.

Harvey, Lucien Levant, age 28, volunteer, December, 1861, three years, First light artillery, company H, private, served three years, mustered out, 1864.

Harvey, Franklin C., volunteer, 1863, six months, Fourth Virginia cavalry, company G, private, served seven months, mustered out March, 1864, re-enlisted as a substitute in 1864, one year, Fifth regiment, company D, private, served nine months, mustered out June 20, 1865.

Harvey, Theodore I., age 17, volunteer, February, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private.

Hays, John, age 30, volunteer, August 25, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment company C, private, attained the rank of corporal, served two and a half years; re-enlisted as a veteran February, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private, served one year and three months, honorably discharged June, 1865.

Hoddeston, Finley, age 38, volunteer, March 23, 1864, three years, First light artillery, company K, private.

Hessam, Samuel T., substitute, September, 1864, one year, Fifth regiment, company D, private, served nine months.

Hill, Daniel, Seventy-eighth regiment, company G, died.

Hill, Porter, age 27, volunteer, August 1, 1861, three years, Seventh Virginia, company D, private, served three years, mustered out August 27, 1864.

Holland, Alexander, age 19, volunteer, May, 1861, three years, Twenty-fifth regiment, company C, private, served three years, mustered out 1864; re-enlisted March, 1865, one year. One Hundred and Ninety-fourth regiment, company C, attained the rank of captain.

Holland, William, age 18, volunteer, February 15, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private.

Holland, Harvey, age 16, volunteer, February 15, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private.

Hood, D., Fifty-first regiment, company D.

Howell, John H., age 19, volunteer, November 16, 1861, three years, Sixty-second regiment, company K, private, re-enlisted as a veteran, 1864, three years, Sixty-second regiment, company K, private, attained the rank of corporal, honorably discharged September, 1865.

Howell, George, age 18, substitute, March, 1865, one year, Thirty-ninth regiment, company C, private, served four months, mustered out July, 1865.

Howell, James, drafted, discharged.

Howell, Andrew, First light artillery, company K.

Hines, John, Jr., volunteer, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C.

Honnel, David, Volunteer, Twenty-third regiment, company G.

Hines, John Jr., volunteer, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C.

Jarvis, John E., age 21, volunteer, 1863, three years, Fifty-ninth regiment, company A, private, killed.

Jarvis, Ashbury, age 19, volunteer, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company I, served three years, mustered out in 1864.

Jewell, James, volunteer, February 24, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private.

Justice, John W., age 22, volunteer, January 18, First light artillery, company K, corporal, mustered out.

Jewell, Samuel, volunteer, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private.

Justice, Josiah, First light artillery, company K.

Johnson, James, age 35, volunteer, March 25, 1865, one year, One Hundred and Ninety-fourth regiment, company I, private, served three months, honorably discharged May, 1865.

Johnson, John D., Twenty-seventh regiment, company I.

Jones, Calvin D., age 20, volunteer, 1861, three years, First light artillery, company K, veteran re-enlistment, age 22, volunteer, 1864, three years, First light artillery, company K, mustered out 1865.

Jones, Jochiel, age 16, volunteer, December 25, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private, served two years, veteran re-enlistment, age 18, volunteer, February, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private, served four months, shot himself, and died June 20, 1864.

Keigley, Jacob, age 22, volunteer, November 10, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private, served one year, died December 14, 1862, at Alton, Illinois.

Kendle, Elias, Sixty-seventh regiment, company K, private.

Kette, Ferdinand, age 16, volunteer, 1863, six months, Fourth Virginia cavalry, company G, private, reenlistment, age 17, volunteer, March 1, 1865, one year, Nineteenth regiment, company I, corporal, served eight months, mustered out in 1865.

Kilmer, John, drafted September, 1864, one year, Thirty-second regiment, company C, private.

Kirkbride, Martin, age 18, volunteer, March 24, 1864, three years, First light artillery, company K, private, served sixteen months, mustered out July, 1865.

Knapp, Wilson L., age 30, drafted September 27, 1864, one year, Fifty-first regiment, company D, private, served nine months, mustered out June 20, 1865.

Landy, Alvy William, age 22, volunteer, July 22, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, served two years and six months, reenlistment, age 24, volunteer, January 1, 1864, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, served one year and five months, died June 17, 1865.

Larcombe, Charles, age 22, volunteer, November 8, 1861, three years, Second Virginia cavalry, company C, private, attained rank of quartermaster sergeant, served three years and seven months, mustered out July, 1865.

Ledger, Frederick, age 20, drafted 1864, one year, Thirty-second regiment, company C, mustered out 1865.

Ledger, Daniel, age 23, volunteer, September 4, 1861, three years, First light artillery, company K, corporal, served two years and six months, veteran enlistment, age 25, volunteer, 1864, three years, First light artillery, company K, corporal, attained rank of sergeant, served one year and six months, mustered out July 18, 1865.

Leonard, Albert W., age 19, volunteer, November 8, 1861, three years, Second Virginia cavalry, company C, private, served two months, killed at Jennie's Creek, Kentucky, January 7, 1862.

Linn, Hiram, age 22, volunteer, August, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company K, private.

Linn, William, age 20, volunteer, August, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company K, private, served one month, honorably discharged, second enlistment, volunteer, 1863, six months, Fourth Virginia cavalry, company G, teamster, served seven months, mustered out March, 1864.

Lipincott, Samuel, age 26, volunteer, August 27, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, private, served two years and six months, veteran enlistment, volunteer, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, private.

Lisk, James, age 22, volunteer, September 27, 1861, three years, First light artillery, company K, private, served five months, died of measles at Camp Dennison, March 4, 1862.

Lisk, Nicholas, age 18, volunteer, February, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private, served one year and two months, honorably discharged June, 1865.

Little, Leander, age 18, volunteer, March 24, 1864, three years, First light artillery, company K, private, served one year and three months, mustered out July 18, 1865.

Little, Thomas, age 19, substitute, February 27, 1865, one year, Forty-third regiment, company H, private, served four months, honorably discharged July 14, 1865.

Little, John, volunteer, one year, One Hundred and Eighty-seventh regiment, company G, private, served one year, died in service.

Little, Daniel, age 17, volunteer, 1863, six months, Fourth Virginia cavalry, company G, private, served seven months.

Lowry, Daniel, age 22, volunteer, November 23, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private, served four months, killed at Chattanooga, April 8, 1862.

Lowman, William Henry, age 18, volunteer, November 30, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private, served five months, died May 1, 1862.

Lowther, William W., Twenty-fifth regiment, company C.

Marks, D. R., volunteer, January 1, 1862, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, served one year, honorably discharged January 16, 1863.

Marlow, Leonard A., age 22, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, sergeant, attained rank of second lieutenant.

Masters, Thomas A., age 23, volunteer, April 29, 1861, three years, Twenty-fifth regiment, company B, private, served three years, mustered out July 20, 1864.

Mathers, Francis M., age 18, substitute, April, 1865, one year, Eighteenth regiment, company E, private, served six months, honorably discharged October 9, 1864.

Meeks, Gideon, age 24, volunteer, August, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company H, private, one year, died November, 1863.

McBee, Jesse, age 21, volunteer, September 10, 1861, three years, First light artillery, company K, private, served three and a half years, mustered out January 16, 1865.

McCall, James, age 18, volunteer, October 18, 1861, three years Sixty-second regiment, company K, private, reenlisted as a veteran, age 20, volunteer, 1864, three years, Sixty-second regiment, company K, private, attained rank of corporal.

McCall, Benjamin, age 16, volunteer, November 1, 1862, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private.

McCullough, John, age 19, volunteer, September, 1861, three years, First light artillery, company K, private, served two and a half years, reenlisted as a veteran, age 22, volunteer, 1864, three years, First light artillery, company K, corporal, served one and a half years, mustered out July 18, 1865.

McCullom, Isaac, age 18, volunteer, August 1, 1861, three years, Seventh Virginia, company D, private, mustered out July 1, 1865.

McCullom, John, Seventy-seventh regiment, company I.

McKnight, William Seman, age 32, drafted, September, 1864, one year, Seventy-first regiment, company I, private.

McMahan, William, volunteer, One Hundred and Sixteenth regiment, company D.

Miller, John, March 3, 1864, three years, Seventh Virginia, company D, honorably discharged for disability.

Miller, James, One Hundred and Eighty-seventh company G.

Miller, Frederick, age 27, drafted, October, 1864, one year, Thirty-second regiment, company C, private, served eleven months, mustered out August 27, 1865.

Minder, Jacob, age 16, volunteer, August 22, 1864, one year, One Hundred and Eightieth regiment, company F, private, served eleven months, mustered out July 12, 1865.

Mitchell, Joseph M., age 20, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, companies C and A, sergeant, attained rank of orderly sergeant, reenlisted as a veteran, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, orderly sergeant, attained rank of first lieutenant.

Mitchell, Israel, age 17, volunteer, February 20, 1865, one year, Eighteenth regiment, company F, private, served seven months, mustered out July 22, 1865.

Moore, John, age 33, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Seventh Virginia, company D, private, served nine months, honorably discharged for disability May 6, 1862.

Moore, Shadrick, age 17, volunteer, February 24, 1862, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private, served one and a half years, honorably discharged July 22, 1865, reenlisted, age 18, July 22, 1865, five years, First United States light artillery, company D, private.

Moore, William, age 27, volunteer, 1861, three years, Seventh Virginia, company D, private, attained to rank of corporal, enlisted as a veteran 1864, three years, wounded at the battle of the Wilderness, July 1, 1865, mustered out.

Moore, Sheldon M., age 22, volunteer, 1861, three years, Seventh Virginia, company D, private, one year, honorably discharged October, 1863.

Myers, William Larwell, age 19, volunteer, March 31, 1864, three years, Seventh Virginia, company D, private, attained rank of corporal, served one year and three months, mustered out July 1, 1865, enlisted as a veteran.

Myers, John, age 24, volunteer, October 20, 1861, three years, Second Virginia cavalry, company C, private, served two years, honorably discharged November 19, 1865, enlisted as a veteran November 20, 1863, three years, served one and a half years, mustered out June 30, 1865.

Myers, Henry, one year, Fifty-first regiment, company D, private.

McWilliams, Lewis H., age 20, volunteer, One Hundred and Eightieth regiment, company C, private, died of fever at Columbus, Ohio, October 1, 1864.

Nenn, Jonas, age 44, volunteer, 1865, one year, One Hundred and Ninety-fourth regiment, company I, private, served seven months, mustered out October, 1865.

Nenn, George, age 17, volunteer, 1863, served six months, Fourth Virginia cavalry, company G, private, served seven months, mustered out March, 1864, reenlisted September, 1864, one year, Eighteenth regiment, company F, served nine months, mustered out July, 1865.

Nenn, John, age 16, substitute, 1865, one year, Twentieth regiment, company D, private, served three months, mustered out July 15, 1865.

Newman, Henry, age 17, volunteer, February 21, 1865, one year, One Hundred and Eighty-ninth regiment, company F, private, seven months, mustered out September 28, 1865.

Oliver, Hillery, age 33, volunteer, September 26, 1864, one year, One Hundred and Eightieth regiment, company F, private, served nine months, mustered out July, 1865.

Oliver, John Weston, age 26, volunteer, February, 1865, one year, One Hundred and Eighty-seventh regiment, company G, private.

Parker, Isaac, age 39, volunteer, 1861, three years, First light artillery, company H, private, served three years, mustered out 1864.

Pan, James H., Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, Petty, Daniel, Twenty-seventh regiment, company D.

Pitcher, William, volunteer, 1865, one year, One Hundred and Ninety-fourth regiment, company I.

Poole, James Jackson, age 27, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Seventh Virginia, company D, private, served one year, killed at Antietam, 1862.

Poole, Charles, age 33, volunteer, March 3, 1865, one year, One Hundred and Ninety-fourth regiment, company I, private, three months, honorably discharged June, 1865.

Poole, Richard, age 36, volunteer, August 22, 1864, one year, Eighteenth regiment, company F, private, served eleven months, mustered out July 12, 1865.

Porter, Daniel, Eighteenth regiment, company B.

Potts, Richard, age 34, volunteer, October 18, 1861, three years, Sixty-second regiment, company K, private, served seven months, honorably discharged May 9, 1862.

Powell, George W., volunteer, Seventh Virginia, company D, private, attained rank of second lieutenant, mustered out July 1, 1865.

Racv, William, volunteer, Third Virginia cavalry, company C.

Ramsay, Joseph, Forty-fifth regiment, company C, died in prison.

Riggs, Daniel B., age 18, volunteer, August 1, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company C, private, hung himself October 15, 1861.

Rieniet, Gearhard C., age 33, volunteer, March 7, 1865, one year, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, served five months, mustered out July 27, 1865.

Rindle, Charles, Sixty-first regiment, company C, private.

Ritter, Henry, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C.

Robinson, David, One Hundred and Eighty-seventh regiment, company G.

Sanford, John, age 40, volunteer, August 26, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, died.

Scott, Isaac, One Hundred and Eightieth regiment, company F.

Scott, John, age 16, volunteer, November, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private, second enlistment, substitute, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company G, private, served four months, mustered out 1864, third enlistment, volunteer, October 1, 1864, one year, Fifteenth light artillery, private, served eight months, mustered out June 8, 1865.

Robinson, David, One Hundred and Eighty-seventh regiment, company G.

Sanford, Clark.

Springer, John, volunteer, 1861, three years, First regiment, company H, private, served eight months, honorably discharged.

Shaner, William, Twenty-fifth regiment, company B.

Springer, Henry J., age 21, volunteer, February, 1865, one year, One Hundred and Eighty-seventh regiment, company G, private.

Salisbury, Henry, Twenty-seventh regiment, company B.

Springer, George, age 19, volunteer, February, 1865, one year, One Hundred and Eighty-seventh regiment, company G, private, mustered out.

Sandford, Nathan, Twenty-fifth regiment, company K.

Springer, John, age 17, volunteer, March, 1865, one year, One Hundred and Ninety-fourth regiment, company I, private, mustered out.

Springer, Samuel, Seventy-seventh regiment, company I.

Stephen, Stacy H., age 22, volunteer, September, 1864, one year, One Hundred and Eightieth regiment, company F, private, served ten months, mustered out July 25, 1865.

Snodgrass, John S., Sixty-third regiment, company F.

Stephenson, Joseph, volunteer, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company H, captain.

Sandford, M., Twenty-fifth regiment, company K.

Stephenson, Joseph Albert, age 16, volunteer, September, 1864, one year, One Hundred and Eightieth regiment, company F, private, served ten months, mustered out July 25, 1865.

Shaner, Leander, Eighty-sixth regiment, company A.

Stewart, Hiram C., age 15, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Seventh Virginia, company D, private, honorably discharged, veteran enlistment, age 17, volunteer, three years, Seventh Virginia, company D, private, died.

Still, Leonard, volunteer, September, 1864, one year, Seventh Virginia, company D, private, mustered out July 1, 1865.

Shaner, George L., One Hundred and Twenty-ninth regiment, company F.

Still, Thomas, age 18, volunteer, September, 1864, one year, Seventh Virginia, company D, private, served six months, died February 23, 1865.

Swatswood, Levi K., First light artillery.

Swatswood, William, Seventy-seventh regiment, company I.

Talbot, William Bruce, age 18, volunteer, April, 1861, three months, Eighteenth regiment, company E, private, served four months, mustered out August, 1861, second enlistment, age 18, volunteer, 1861, three years, Second Virginia cavalry, companies K and E, private, attained rank of sergeant, served two years, veteran enlistment, age 20, volunteer, 1863, three years, Second Virginia cavalry, company E, sergeant, served one year and six months, mustered out July 1, 1865.

Thorp, Isaiah, age 24, volunteer, August 20, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company H, private, served one year, killed at Chattanooga, September 19, 1863.

Thorp, Isaac, age 28, volunteer, August 20, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private, attained rank of corporal, veteran enlistment, age 20, volunteer, February, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private.

Thorp, William, age 19, volunteer, 1863, six months, Fourth Virginia cavalry, company G, private, served seven months, mustered out March, 1864, re-enlistment, age 20, volunteer, 1864, one year, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private, died September 23, 1865, in prison, Brownsville, Texas.

Thorp, John Henry, age 16, volunteer, February, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private.

Thompson, Orrville, age 18, volunteer, November 8, 1861, three years, Second Virginia cavalry, company C, private, served two years, discharged November 25, 1863, for disability, died.

Thompson, James, age 42, volunteer, October, 1861, three years, Sixty-second regiment, company K, private, served seven months, honorably discharged June, 1862.

Thompson, Sampson, age 16, volunteer, October 18, 1861, three years, Sixty-second regiment, company K, private, served seven months, honorably discharged June, 1862, re-enlistment, age 17, volunteer, October 23, 1862, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private.

Thompson, William S., age 28, substitute and volunteer, 1862, three years, Ninth cavalry, company B, sergeant, honorably discharged June 8, 1865.

Thompson, Edgar, age 26, volunteer, August 9, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company H, private, served four months, honorably discharged December, 1862.

Thompson, Benjamin, Sixty-second regiment, company K.

Tice, John J., age 43, volunteer, October 27, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G, sergeant, veteran enlistment, age 45, volunteer, February, 1864, Seventy-seventh regiment, company E, teamster.

Tice, Harvey, age 15, volunteer, October 27, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G, private, veteran enlistment, age 17, volunteer, February, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company E, private.

Tice, Henry William, volunteer, Seventy-seventh regiment, company I, private.

Trimble, Francis, age 40, volunteer, October, 1861, three years, First light artillery, company K, private, veteran enlistment, age 42, volunteer, February, 1864, three years, First light artillery, company K, private, died May 23, 1864.

Ullom, Sylvanus, age 19, volunteer, May, 1861, three years, Twenty-fifth regiment, company B, private, veteran enlistment, age 21, volunteer, three years, Twenty-fifth regiment, company C, private, died.

Unger, Jonas, age 36, volunteer, September 27, 1864, one year, One Hundred and Eightieth regiment, company F, private, served ten months, mustered out July 25, 1865.

Vickers, Albert, age 19, volunteer, November 11, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private.

Waters, John, One Hundred and Sixteenth regiment, company A.

Watson, Jacob, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D.

Watson, William, age 32, volunteer, August 1, 1861, three years, Seventh Virginia regiment, company D, corporal, died April 1, 1862, at home.

Wells, Clinton, age 18, substitute, 1865, one year, Sixty-third regiment, private, served six weeks mustered out May, 1865.

Williams, Lewis, One Hundred and Eightieth regiment, company F.

West, Michael, Eighteenth regiment, company F.

Williamson, Nelson, age 24, volunteer, November, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G, private, served five months, died March 20, 1862, at Pittsburg Landing.

Willis, James, age 48, substitute, October 8, 1864, one year, Forty-third regiment, company D, private, served nine months, mustered out July 12, 1865.

Wilson, Andrew V., age 19, volunteer, August 29, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private, attained rank of sergeant, served three years, mustered out 1864.

Wilson, John, age 21, volunteer, September, 1864, one year, One Hundred and Eightieth regiment, company F, private, honorably discharged 1865.

Winton, Clark, age 28, volunteer, September 7, 1861, three years, Second Virginia cavalry, company C, private, served three and one-fourth years, mustered out December 3, 1864, re-enlistment, age 31, volunteer, March 1, 1865, one year, One Hundred and Ninety-fourth regiment, company I, sergeant, served eight months, mustered out October 28, 1865.

Woodburn, John Thomas, age 31, drafted, September, 1864, one year, Fifty-first regiment, company D, private, served eight months, mustered out June 10, 1865.

Wilson, James, volunteer, Thirty-third regiment, company D.

RECAPITULATION

D. Beck's battery	10
Huntington's battery	3
And one each in First Ohio light artillery, First United States light artillery	2
Second Virginia cavalry	16
Fourth Virginia cavalry	9
Ninth Ohio cavalry	2
And one each in Second Ohio cavalry, Third Virginia cavalry	2
Seventy-seventh Ohio	85
Seventh Virginia infantry	20
Ninety-second Ohio	12
One Hundred and Eightieth Ohio	11
One Hundred and Ninety-fourth Ohio	8
First West Ohio	8
One Hundred and Eighty-seventh Ohio	14
Eighteenth Ohio (three years)	6
Eighteenth Ohio (three months)	1
Twenty-fifth Ohio	10
Sixty-second Ohio	6
Sixty-third Ohio	5
One Hundred and Sixteenth Ohio	5

Thirty-sixth Ohio .....	4
Fifteenth Ohio .....	3
Twenty-seventh Ohio .....	3
Thirty-second Ohio .....	3
Thirty-ninth Ohio .....	2
Twentieth Ohio .....	2
Fourth Virginia infantry .....	2
Fifth Ohio .....	2
Forty-third Ohio .....	2

And one each in Sixth Virginia infantry, Thirty-third Ohio, Nineteenth Ohio, Seventeenth Ohio, Twenty-third Ohio, Fourteenth Virginia, Forty-fifth Ohio, Fifty-ninth Ohio, Sixty-second Pennsylvania, Sixty-first Ohio, Sixty-seventh Ohio, Seventy-first Ohio, Seventy-eighth Ohio, Eighty-sixth Ohio, One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Ohio, One Hundred and Twenty-ninth Ohio, One Hundred and Forty-eighth Ohio National Guards, One Hundred and Eighty-fourth Ohio, One Hundred and Eighty-ninth Ohio, not designated, 2; in all.. 21

Total number soldiers .....	272
Died .....	45

INDEPENDENCE TOWNSHIP

Baldwin, Perry, age 43, volunteer, October, 1861, three years, First regiment, company F, private.

Barr, Lewis, volunteer, 1862, three years, One Hundred and Sixteenth regiment, company F, private, served three years, mustered out June 14, 1865.

Blewer, James, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G.

Barnhart, James W., three years, Ninety-second regiment, company D.

Blewer, Hiram, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G.

Beabout, James, age 18, March 4, 1865, one year, Forty-third regiment, company G, private, served four months, mustered out July 13, 1865.

Boyle, Thomas M., Seventy-seventh regiment, company C.

Beaver, Francis M., age 21, volunteer, August 20, 1861, six months, Fourth Virginia cavalry, company G, private, mustered out.

Beaver, Abraham, age 17, volunteer, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private, second enlistment, age 21, drafted March 23, 1865, one year, Thirty-ninth regiment, company C, private.

Beck, Preston, age 17, volunteer, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company F, private.

Bealor, James.

Beagal, Milton, age 22, volunteer, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private.

Begal, Jeremiah, age 18, volunteer, 1861, three years, First cavalry, company L, private, served three years, mustered out in 1864.

Belville, George, Fourteenth regiment, company F. Bennett, Simeon, age 25, drafted March 23, 1865, one year, Thirty-ninth regiment, company G, private, served three months mustered out July, 1865.

Belville, James, Fifth regiment, company H.

Bowie, Eli, age 18, volunteer, February 27, 1864, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, served seventeen months, mustered out July, 1865.

Bowie, Harvey, age 18, volunteer, August, 1864, one year, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private.

Blower, D., Seventy-seventh regiment, company G. Broom, James, age 37, volunteer, February, 1865, one year, One Hundred and Ninety-sixth regiment, company F, private.

Brown, George, age 40, drafted March 23, 1865, one year, Sixty-third regiment, company I, private, served seven weeks, mustered out May 15, 1865.

Brown, James, One Hundred and Ninety-sixth regiment, company H, private.

Carson, James, age 27, volunteer, August, 1862, three years, One Hundred and Sixteenth regiment, company F, private, served two years, died October 28, 1864, in Andersonville prison.

Carson, Thomas, age 22, volunteer, October 28, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G, private, served one year, died October 4, 1862, of measles.

Carson, Andrew, age 20, volunteer, October 22, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G, private, served four months, died February 8, 1865, of measles at Camp Dennison.

Chapman, George, age 21, volunteer, July 22, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, served fourteen months, honorably discharged September 8, 1863, second enlistment, age 24, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company G, private, served four months, mustered out in 1864.

Chapman, Vivian, age 20, volunteer, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company F, private, served three years, mustered out June, 1865.

Chapman, James, volunteer, 1861, three years, Seventy-fifth regiment, company B.

Chapman, William, age 36, volunteer, June 19, 1863, six months, One Hundred and Twenty-ninth regiment, company F, private, served nine months, mustered out March 5, 1864.

Chapman, John, Ninety-second regiment, company H.

Chapman, Joseph, age 38, volunteer, February, 1865, one year, One Hundred and Ninety-sixth regiment, company F, private, mustered out 1865.

Climan, John, age 17, substitute, March, 1865, one year, Sixty-third regiment, served seven weeks, mustered out May, 1865.

Cline, Jacob.

Cline, Isaiah, age 32, volunteer, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private, died September 15, 1862.

Cline, Joel, age 33, drafted September, 1864, one year, Fifty-first regiment, company G, private, mustered out in 1865.

Cline, Marion, age 21, drafted March, 1865, one year.

Cline, Luther, age 18, volunteer, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G, private.

Cowen, Robert, age 46, drafted September 26, 1864, one year, Forty-third regiment, company A, private, mustered out in 1865.

Davis, Bradford, age 17, volunteer, October 28, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company

C, private, served fourteen months; December, 1862, veteran enlistment, age 20, volunteer, December 20, 1863, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private, served one year and eight months, honorably discharged August 12, 1865.

David, James B., age 40, drafted September 28, 1864, one year, Fifty-first regiment, company G, private, mustered out May 22, 1865.

Davis, Joel P., age 20, volunteer, April 2, 1865, one year, One Hundred and Ninety-seventh regiment, company I, private, served four months, mustered out August, 1865.

Decker, Samuel.

Dilley, Jonathan, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company G, private, served three months, mustered out September, 1864.

Donley, Francis M., age 18, volunteer, December, 1863, three years, Fifth cavalry, company K.

Eddy, Alfred, age 36, drafted March 23, 1865, one year, honorably discharged June 6, 1865.

Edwards, John, age 19, volunteer, August 27, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private, served one year, died September 28, 1864.

Edwards, Richard, age 19, volunteer, 1863, six months, Fourth Virginia cavalry, company G, private, served eight months, mustered out 1864, re-enlisted, age 20, volunteer, August 24, 1864, one year, One Hundred and Seventy-fifth regiment, company K, private, mustered out June 20, 1865.

Ellifritz, James P., age 28, volunteer, August 8, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company F, private, served one year and four months, died November 25, 1863.

Ellifritz, George W., age 21, volunteer, August 8, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company F, private, served three years, mustered out June 10, 1865.

Ellis, John J., Sixth regiment, company G, private.

Farnsworth, John C., age 18, volunteer, July, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment company B, private, served two years and six months, re-enlisted as veteran, age 20, volunteered three years, Thirty-ninth, company B, private, served one year and six months, mustered out July 9, 1865.

Farnsworth, Samuel S., age 25, volunteer, September 10, 1864, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company C, private, honorably discharged.

Farnsworth, Henry, age 23, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, First Virginia cavalry, company F, private, mustered out.

Farnsworth, Thomas D., age 18, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, First Virginia cavalry, company F, private, re-enlisted as veteran, age 20, volunteer, 1864, three years, First Virginia cavalry, company F, private.

Farnsworth, Joseph, age 34, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company G, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Fleming, Leander, age 20, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company G, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Fryman, Alexander, age 18, substitute, February 28, 1865, one year, Forty-third regiment, company G, private, served four and one-half months, mustered out July 13, 1865.

Francis, B., Fourth Virginia cavalry, company G.

Goddard, Joseph, age 19, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Seventh Virginia cavalry, company B, private.

Gilbert Isaac, Seventy-seventh regiment, company E.

Goodman, John Henry, age 21, drafted March 23, 1865, one year, Thirty-ninth regiment, company C, private, served three months, mustered out July 9, 1865.

Goodrich, John, age 27, volunteer, 1861, three years, First light artillery, company K, private, mustered out 1865.

Gouer, John, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G.

Grandon, George W., age 22, volunteer, March 7, 1865, one year, One Hundred and Ninety-sixth regiment, company F, private, served six months, mustered out September 11, 1865.

Green, Isaac N., Ninety-second regiment, company H.

Greenback, William, age 27, drafted September 27, 1864, one year, Fifty-first regiment, company D, private, served nine months, mustered out June 20, 1865.

Hanght, Bennett, age 29, substitute, October, 1864, one year, Fifty-first regiment, company G, private, served nine months, mustered out June 20, 1865.

Haynes, Crawford, age 16, volunteer, March, 1864, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, companies F and K, private.

Heinselm, Christian, age 23, volunteer, October 23, 1861, three years, Seventy-fifth regiment, company B, private, attained corporal, served three years, mustered out December 22, 1864.

Heinselm, Martin, age 21, volunteer, October 23, 1861, three years, Seventy-fifth regiment, company B, private, served three years, mustered out 1864.

Heinselm, Jacob, age 23, drafted March 23, 1865, one year, Thirty-ninth regiment, company D, private, served three months, mustered out July, 1865.

Hicks, Ambrose.

Hicks, John, volunteer, 1861, three years, Second Virginia cavalry, company G, private, served seven months, honorably discharged; re-enlistment, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company G, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864; third enlistment, drafted September, 1864, one year, Eighty-eighth regiment, company G, served six months, died April, 1865.

Hill, Thomas G., age 30, volunteer, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G, private, died April 8, 1862, killed at Pittsburg Landing.

Hoffman, Conrad G., age 36, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company G, mustered out September, 1864.

Homan, John L., Seventy-seventh regiment, company B.

Hornet, David.

Hutchinson, James, age 23, volunteer, July, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, served six months, died January 23, 1862.

Jobes, George, Ninety-second regiment, company F, died.

Jones, John R., age 23, volunteer, November 20, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G, private, served two years, 1863, veteran enlistment, age 25, volunteer, February, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G, private, attained rank of corporal.

Justice, Phineas J., age 36, volunteer, September 10, 1861, three years, First light artillery, company K, private, served three years, mustered out November 5, 1864.

Justice, John William, age 22, volunteer, November 15, 1861, three years, First light artillery, company K, private, veteran enlistment, age 24, volunteer, 1864, three years, First light artillery, company K, private, served three years and eight months, mustered out July 31, 1865.

Justice, Reuben J., age 20, volunteer, February, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private.

Kemp, Nathan, age 51, volunteer, October 23, 1861, three years, Seventy-fifth regiment, company B, private, served ten months, honorably discharged September 4, 1862.

Kemp, William J., age 17, volunteer, July 22, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, died July, 1862.

Kerns Andrew J., age 33, volunteer, drafted March 23, 1865, one year, Thirty-ninth regiment, company C. Kidder, Rufus, age 29, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company G, private.

Kidder, Erastus, age 21, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company G, private, re-enlistment, age 22, volunteer, February, 1865, one year, One Hundred and Ninety-fifth regiment, company I, private.

Kidder, Carolus, age 20, volunteer, February, 1865, one year, One Hundred and Ninety-fifth regiment, company I, private.

Kiggins, Joseph, age 18, October, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private, re-enlistment, age 20, volunteer, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C.

Kiggins, Samuel, age 17, volunteer, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private.

Kiggins, Elijah W., age 19, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company G, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864, re-enlistment, age 20, volunteer, March 9, 1865, one year, One Hundred and Ninety-sixth regiment, company F, private, served six months, mustered out September 11, 1865.

Landy, Calvin, age 19, substitute, March, 1865, one year, eighteenth regiment, company E, private, served five months, died August 26, 1865.

Lee, Peter, age 20, volunteer, August 22, 1862, three years, One Hundred and Sixteenth regiment, company F, private, served three years, mustered out August 8, 1865.

Lee, William, age 33, drafted March 23, 1865, one year, Thirty-ninth regiment, company C, private.

Lever, James, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G.

Luddington, Henry, age 40, drafted September 27, 1864, one year, Fifty-first regiment, company G, private, served ten months, mustered out June 20, 1865.

Martin, John, age 19, Ninety-second regiment, company F, died April 15, 1863, of typhoid fever, in Tennessee.

McFarland, Amos M., age 30, drafted September 27, 1864, one year, Fifty-first regiment, company G, private, served ten months, mustered out June 20, 1865.

McKean, Samuel, age 18, volunteer March, 1865, one year, One Hundred and Ninety-fifth regiment, company K, private.

McFarland, William F., age 21, substitute, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Thirty-second regiment, company B, private, served three months, died August 17, 1864.

McFarland, Amos M., age 19, substitute, October, 1864, one year, Sixty-second regiment, company I, private, served seven months, died May 17, 1865.

Merical, John, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G.

Miles, William, age 41, volunteer, August 1, 1861, three years, Seventh Virginia, company D, private, served three years, mustered out August 27, 1864.

Mellen, Franklin S., Seventy-seventh regiment, company G.

Miller, John, age 25, drafted March 23, 1865, one year.

Murphy, William, age 21, volunteer, September 3, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private, served three years, mustered out 1864.

Moore, Grandville, age 18, volunteer, November, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G, private.

Noffsinger, Matthias, age 18, volunteer, November, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G, private, served five months, died April 8, 1862, killed.

Osten, James.

Parr, James, age 26, drafted September 27, 1864, one year, Fifty-first regiment, company G, private, served ten months, mustered out June 20, 1865.

Powell, Reuben, volunteer, 1863, six months, Fourth Virginia cavalry, company G, private, served six months, mustered out with regiment.

Parr, Lorenzo D., age 19, volunteer, February, 1865, one year, Nineteenth regiment, company I.

Powell, James, Fifty-third regiment, company B.

Patterson, Henry, age 51, volunteer, February, 1864, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, served ten months, discharged January 5, 1865.

Paynter, Daniel, age 26, volunteer, October 28, 1861, three years, First Virginia regiment, company F, private, served three years, mustered out November 26, 1864.

Pickle, Matthias, One Hundred and Ninety-fifth regiment, company I.

Peterson, Thomas, age 35, volunteer, August 22, 1862, three years, One Hundred and Sixteenth regiment, company F, private, served three years, mustered out 1865.

Powell, Jesse, Thirty-sixth regiment, company K. Pittman, Jacob, age 19, substitute, March 28, 1865, one year, Eighteenth regiment, company E, private, served four months, mustered out August 9, 1865.

Powell, George, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G.

Pool, Alexander, age 25, volunteer, 1861, three years, Seventy-fifth regiment, company B, private, served two years, died November, 1863.

Rea, Thompson N., age 23, volunteer, August, 1863, six months, Fourth Virginia cavalry, company G, private, served five months, died January, 1864.

Rea, Samuel Kemper, age 20, volunteer, September, 1862, three years, Seventh cavalry, company H, private, served one year, died August, 1863.

Ray, John, Seventy-seventh regiment, company K. Rea, James Richard, age 20, volunteer, August 11, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company F, corporal, served three years, mustered out June 10, 1865.

Rea, Philip Greene, age 18, volunteer, 1863, six months, Fourth Virginia cavalry, company G, private, mustered out; re-enlistment, age 19, volunteer, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company G, private, mustered out.

Rea, William Henry, age 20, volunteer, 1863, six months, Fourth Virginia cavalry, company G, private, attained rank of quartermaster sergeant, mustered out; re-enlistment, age 21, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company G, private, mustered out September 15, 1865.

Riggs, David, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company G, corporal, mustered out.

Riggs, Asbury, age 20, volunteer, August 20, 1863, six months, Fourth Virginia cavalry, company G, private, served seven months, mustered out March 8, 1864; re-enlistment, age 21, volunteer, March 31, 1864, three years, First light artillery, company K, private, served one year and three months, mustered out July 19, 1865.

Roth, Nicholas, age 22, volunteer, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G, private, died April, 1862, killed at Pittsburg Landing.

Roth, Jacob, age 18, volunteer, September 20, 1864, one year, Seventy-seventh regiment, company E, private, served ten months, mustered out July 31, 1865.

Scott, William, Seventy-seventh regiment, company K, private, died October 3, 1863, at Little Rock, Arkansas.

Sheppard, James, age 21, volunteer, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company G, private, mustered out June, 1865, died.

Shockley, Squire, age 20, volunteer, December 10, 1861, three years, Seventy-fifth regiment, company B, private, served three months, died March 23, 1862.

Sipple, Daniel, age 21, volunteer, November, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G, private, served five months, died April 8, 1862.

Sipple, William, age 22, volunteer, February 14, 1865, one year, One Hundred and Eighty-sixth regiment, company I, private, served seven months, mustered out September 25, 1865.

Skinner, James, age 19, volunteer, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G, private, died January 24, 1862, of measles at Camp Dennison.

Skinner, George, age 25, drafted March 23, 1865, one year, Thirty-ninth regiment, company G, private, served three months.

Stump, John, Seventh Virginia, company B, died.

Thomas, John L., age 22, volunteer, December, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company E, sergeant, served three years and three months, mustered out March, 1865.

Tice, Solomon, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G, private.

Tice, William P., age 21, volunteer, November, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G, private, served one year, died April 29, 1862, mortally wounded at Louisville.

Tice, Jacob, drafted March 13, 1865, one year, Thirty-ninth regiment, company C, private.

Tice, William Harrison, drafted September 27, 1864, one year, Twentieth regiment, company E, private, honorably discharged.

Tice, George W., age 38, drafted March 25, 1865, one year, Thirty-ninth regiment, company C, private, served three months, mustered out July 9, 1865.

Tice, Lewis, age 33, drafted September, 1864, one year, Twentieth regiment, company E, private, served eight months, mustered out May 30, 1865.

Tool, Alexander, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, died.

Tice, Noah, age 17, volunteer, November 4, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G, private, honorably discharged in 1863; re-enlisted September 17, 1864, one year, One Hundred and Eighty-second regiment, company C, private, served ten months, mustered out July 17, 1865.

Tice, Henry, age 14, volunteer, November, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G, private.

Todd, James, age 35, volunteer, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company G, private, died April 22, 1865, at Nashville, Tennessee.

Voshel, John, age 26, volunteer, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G, private, died November 5, 1863, at Alton, Illinois.

Ward, John, Ninety-second regiment, company F. Ward, Jacob, age 18, volunteer, August, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company C, private, served nine months, died May 14, 1863.

Wells, Christopher, drafted March 25, 1865, one year, Thirty-ninth regiment, company C, private, served three months, mustered out July 9, 1865.

Wells, Samuel, drafted March, 1865, one year, Thirty-ninth regiment, company C, private, served three months, mustered out July 9, 1865.

Wells, Sheffield B., age 19, volunteer, July, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, served nine months, died in April, 1862.

Wells, Nelson F., age 17, volunteer, October 31, 1861, three years, Eighteenth Kentucky regiment, company F, private, served two years, veteran enlistment, age 19, volunteer, 1864, three years, Eighteenth Kentucky regiment, company F, private, served one and a half years mustered out July 18, 1865.

Wells, Lewis Henry, age 16, volunteer, 1863, six months, One Hundred and Twenty-ninth regiment, company F, private, served seven months, mustered out in March, 1864, second enlistment, substitute, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company G, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864; third enlistment, age 17, substitute, 1865, one year, Eighteenth regiment, company C, private.

Widger, Ananias, age 23, substitute, April, 1865, one year, Thirty-ninth regiment, company C, private, served three months.

Williams, John, age 19, August 29, 1863, three years, Fourth Virginia cavalry, company G, private, died.

Williamson, Stephen, Seventy-fifth regiment, company B.

Wilson, Richard, age 45, volunteer, 1862, three years, One Hundred and Sixteenth regiment, company F, private, served one year, honorably discharged.

Wiseman, Thomas, age 23, volunteer, October, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, corporal, attained rank of sergeant, veteran enlistment, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, sergeant, attained rank of lieutenant.

Yonally, Jesse, age 40, drafted September, 1864, one year, Fifty-first regiment, company G, private, served nine months, mustered out June, 1865.

Yonally, Asa, age 33, volunteer, February, 1865, one year, Thirty-sixth regiment, company C, private, served five months, mustered out July, 1865.

Yonally, Solomon, age 27, volunteer, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G, private, served seven months, honorably discharged June, 1862.

RECAPITULATION.

De Beck's battery	4
Fourth Virginia cavalry	9
First Virginia cavalry	2
And one each in Second and Seventh Virginia cavalry, First, Fifth, and Seventh Ohio cavalry, in all	5
Seventy-seventh Ohio	41
Ninety-second Ohio	14
Thirty-ninth Ohio	16
Seventy-fifth Ohio	8
Fifty-first Ohio	8
Thirty-sixth Ohio	7
One Hundred and Forty-eighth Ohio National Guard	13
One Hundred and Sixteenth Ohio	5
One Hundred and Ninety-sixth Ohio	5
One Hundred and Ninety-fifth Ohio	4
Eighteenth Ohio (three years)	3
Seventh Virginia	2
One Hundred and Twenty-ninth Ohio	2
Forty-third Ohio	3
Sixty-third Ohio	2
Twentieth Ohio	2
One each in the First, Fourteenth, Fifth, Sixth, Nineteenth, Fifty-third, Sixty-second, Eighty-eighth, One Hundred and Ninety-seventh, One Hundred and Seventy-fifth, One Hundred and Eighty-second, One Hundred and Eighty-sixth, One Hundred and Thirty-second, First Virginia, Eighteenth Kentucky, not designated, 7, in all	22
Total number of soldiers	168
Died	31

LAWRENCE TOWNSHIP.

Alexander, Samuel, age 38, volunteer, September 1, 1864, one year, One Hundred and Seventy-ninth regiment, company F, private, served ten months, mustered out June, 1865.

Alexander, A., age 28, volunteer, September 1, 1864, one year, One Hundred and Seventy-ninth regiment, company F, private, served ten months, mustered out June, 1865.

Atkinson, James, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, Atkinson, William Templeton, age 22, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company G, private, died July 23, 1864.

Atkinson, Charles, age 20, volunteer, August 23, 1864, one year, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, served eleven months, mustered out July, 1865.

Atkinson, George Templeton, age 18, volunteer, February 23, 1864, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, served one year and six months, mustered out July, 1865.

Bartmess, Washington, age 25, volunteer, 1862, three years, One Hundred and Sixteenth regiment, company F, private.

Bartmess, Jacob S., age 21, volunteer, March 28, 1863, three years, Thirty-eighth regiment, company D, private, served two years and three months, mustered out July, 1865.

Bartmess, Samuel, age 20, volunteer, October 16, 1863, six months, Fourth regiment, Virginia cavalry, company M, private, served six months, mustered out with regiment.

Bender, Frederick, age 36, drafted March 23, 1865, one year, Eighteenth regiment, company F, private.

Baumes, Jacob, Seventy-seventh regiment, died.

Bony, Simon, age 36, drafted September 27, 1864, one year, Sixty-sixth regiment, company B, private, served two months and two weeks, died December 14, 1864, at Nashville, Tennessee, of consumption.

Boswell, James R., age 20, volunteer, August 8, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company F, private, served one year, honorably discharged August 23, 1863, re-enlisted, age 32, drafted September 28, 1864, one year, Sixty-sixth regiment, company E, private, served eight months, mustered out June 2, 1865.

Bowie, James R., Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, died at Alton, Illinois.

Boye, Eli, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, Britton, Luther Dale, age 33, drafted September 28, 1864, one year, Seventy-first regiment, company F, private, served five months, died February, 1865, at Louisville, of smallpox.

Britton, William Henry, age 19, volunteer, August 30, 1863, six months, Fourth regiment Virginia cavalry, company G, private, mustered out; re-enlisted, age 20, volunteer, August 12, 1864, one year, One Hundred and Seventy-fifth regiment, company K, private, served ten months, mustered out June 27, 1865.

Brooks, David, age 23, volunteer, March 21, 1864, three years, First regiment light artillery, company K, private, served one year and three months, mustered out July, 1865.

Bull, Reason H., age 36, volunteer, August, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company F, sergeant, attained rank of second lieutenant, served two years and ten months mustered out 1865.

Bull, William R., Ninety-second regiment, company F.

Calvert, Alfred, age 47, substitute, September, 1864, one year, Seventy-first regiment, company C, private.

Cantwell, Joseph M., age 25, volunteer, 1861, three years. Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private, died July, 1862.

Carpenter, Samuel, age 40, volunteer, December, 1861, three years. Seventy-seventh regiment, company H, private, served five months, died May 19, 1862.

Carpenter, Alexander, age 23, volunteer, December, 1861, three years. Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private, served two years, honorably discharged February, 1864, re-enlisted as a veteran, age 27, volunteer, February, 1864, three years. Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private.

Casady, Amzi, age 21, volunteer, 1862, three years. Ninety-second regiment, company F, private, served three months, died of smallpox January 23, 1865.

Clasey, Wine Rood, age 42, drafted March 23, 1865, one year. Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, mustered out July 27, 1865.

Cline, Peter, age 23, volunteer, 1861, three years. First regiment cavalry, company D, private.

Covey, Morgan, One Hundred and Seventy-fifth regiment, died May 22, 1865, at Columbia, Tennessee.

Cline, John, drafted September, 1864, one year. Fifty-fifth regiment, company D, private, mustered out.

Cameron, Andrew, volunteer, 1864, one year. One Hundred and Seventy-fifth regiment, company K, private, served one year, mustered out with regiment.

Close, Daniel, August 14, 1862, three years. First regiment Virginia light artillery, company A, private.

Clute, John, Thirty-sixth regiment, company E.

Cockings, James, age 26, drafted March, 1865, one year. Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, served three months, mustered out July 9, 1865.

Conner, John, Eighteenth regiment, company C.

Covey, Marion, Ninety-second regiment, company F.

Covey, William Mason, age 18, volunteer, February 20, 1864, three years. Thirty-sixth regiment, companies F and K, private, served seventeen months, mustered out July, 1865.

Cunningham, Wilson, age 34, volunteer, 1861, three years. Seventy-seventh regiment, company H, private, honorably discharged May, 1862.

Callahan, Oliver, volunteer, 1864, one year. One Hundred and Seventy-fifth regiment, company K, private, served one year, mustered out with regiment.

Cuthbert, Ralph, volunteer, August 9, 1862, three years. Ninety-second regiment, company F, private, served two years and six months, mustered out June 6, 1865.

Cuthbert, Ralph W., age 18, volunteer, September, 1863, six months. Fourth Virginia cavalry, company G, private, served eight months, mustered out May, 1864; re-enlistment, age 19, volunteer, August 6, 1864, one year, One Hundred and Seventy-fifth regiment, company K, private, attained rank of corporal, served nine months, died May 11, 1865, effects of exposure at the battle of Nashville.

Cuthbert, Ralph D., age 25, volunteer, September, 1863, six months. Fourth Virginia cavalry, company G, private, served eight months, mustered out May, 1864. Dye, Morgan, Ninety-second regiment, company F.

Davis, Frank, age 20, Ninety-second regiment, company H, died May, 1864, at Atlanta, Georgia, gunshot.

Dye, Amos, Seventy-seventh regiment, company H.

Dickes, Charles, age 34, drafted September 28, 1864, one year. Thirty-third regiment, company I, private, served nine months, mustered out July 5, 1865.

Dye, John Ely, Ninety-second regiment, company F.

Draher, John, age 23, drafted March 23, 1865, one year. Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private.

Dye, Daniel W., volunteer, September, 1861, three years. First cavalry, company L, corporal, attained rank of first lieutenant, served four years, mustered out September 28, 1865.

Draper, Adam, age 16, substitute, 1862, three years. Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, private.

Dye, Ross N., First cavalry, company H.

Dunlap, William, age 20, volunteer, 1862, three years. Ninety-second regiment, company F, private, died in March, 1864, at Nashville, Tennessee.

Drew, Jesse P., Thirty-sixth regiment, company H.

Dye, Thomas, First cavalry, company L.

Dye, Minor M., volunteer, 1864, one year. One Hundred and Seventy-fifth regiment, company K, corporal, served one year, mustered out with regiment.

Dye, S. P., Ninety-second regiment, company F.

Dye, Dudley, Seventy-seventh regiment, company

II

Davis, Isaiah, volunteer, 1863, six months. Fourth Virginia cavalry, company G, private, served six months, mustered out with regiment.

Early, William, age 24, substitute, 1862. Seventy-seventh regiment, company G, private, died 1863, Alton, Illinois, of lung fever.

Early, James, volunteer, 1862, three years. One Hundred and Sixteenth regiment, company F, private.

Early, Thomas, volunteer, 1861, three years. Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private, re-enlistment, volunteer, 1864, three years. Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private.

Early, George Washington, volunteer, 1861, three years. Seventy-seventh regiment, company G, private, veteran enlistment, volunteer, 1864, three years. Seventy-seventh regiment, company G, private.

Early, John Morris, volunteer, 1861, three years. Seventy-seventh regiment, company G, private, veteran enlistment, volunteer, 1864, three years. Seventy-seventh regiment, company G, private.

Early, John Alexander, drafted March 23, 1865, one year. Thirty-ninth regiment, private, served five months, mustered out August 26, 1865.

Early, William Thomas, drafted March 23, 1865, one year. Thirty-ninth regiment, company G, private, served three and one-half months, mustered out July 18, 1864.

Efaw, Lugenius, volunteer, August 17, 1862, three years. One Hundred and Sixteenth regiment, company F, private.

Eifler, Charles.

Eifler, Jacob.

Evilsiser Samuel Hunt, age 20, volunteer, August 5, 1862, three years. Ninety-second regiment, company F, private, served three years, mustered out June 10, 1865.

Evilsiser, Jonathan, age 20, volunteer, July, 1862, three years. Ninety-second regiment, company F, private, died September, 1863, mortally wounded at Chickamauga.

Evlisier, Josiah, age 19, volunteer, February, 1864, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company K, private, served one and one-half years, mustered out July, 1865.

Foster, George, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, Forest, Andrew, age 20, volunteer, July 31, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, served three years, mustered out 1864.

Foster, John, Thirty-sixth regiment.

Foster, Archibald, age 28, volunteer, September, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, served three months, died December 25, 1861, of typhoid fever, at Summersville.

Foster, James, age 26, volunteer, February, 1864, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, served one year, honorably discharged 1865.

Foster, Josephus, age 22, volunteer, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private.

Foster, Albert, age 20, volunteer, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, served three years, mustered out 1864.

Frazier, Adam, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B.

Gilsher, Jacob, age 20, volunteer, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, veteran enlistment.

Gist, William, age 45, volunteer, September 5, 1864, one year, One Hundred and Seventy-ninth regiment, company F, private.

Gitchell, John Wesley, age 27, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company G, corporal, attained rank of sergeant, re-enlistment, age 28, drafted March, 1865, one year, Sixty-third regiment, private.

Gitchell, Joseph Harmen, age 21, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company G, private.

Greathouse, McDonald, age 23, drafted March, 1865, one year, Thirty-ninth regiment, company G, private, served three and a half months, mustered out July 18, 1865.

Greathouse, Peter, age 26, volunteer, August 6, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company F, private, served one and two-thirds years, honorably discharged in 1864.

Green, Isaac Newton, age 24, volunteer, August 12, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company H, private, served two and ten-twelfths years, mustered out June, 1865.

Groves, James, volunteer, 1864, one year, One Hundred and Seventy-fifth regiment, company K, private, attained the rank of corporal, served one year, mustered out with regiment.

Guist, James, age 19, volunteer, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company F, private, died May 10, 1864, of typhoid fever, at Carthage, Tennessee.

Guyton, Jacob, age 32, drafted September 28, 1864, one year, Twenty-third regiment, company A, private, honorably discharged May 8, 1865.

Harris, Isaac, age 19, Ninety-second regiment, company F, died at Camden, Tennessee.

Harris, William, age 20, volunteer, 1863, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company F, private, served five months, died March 31, 1864.

Harshy, William Wesley, age 26, volunteer, August, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company F, private, served two years and six months, mustered out June 10, 1865.

Haught, Levi, age 37, volunteer, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company F, private.

Haught, Joshua, age 19, volunteer, August 24, 1864, one year, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, served ten months, mustered out June 27, 1865.

Henning, William, age 33, volunteer, August 7, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company F, private, served two and ten-twelfths years, mustered out June 10, 1865.

Hill, McIntosh, volunteer, August 12, 1862, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company I, private.

Hoff, Washington George, age 31, volunteer, August 4, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company F, private, served ten months, died June 12, 1865, of chronic diarrhoea.

Hoff, Kingsbury, age 24, volunteer, August 8, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company F, private, served two and ten-twelfths years, mustered out June, 1865.

Hoff, Ford Plum, age 16, volunteer, October 3, 1864, one year, First Virginia cavalry, company L, private, served eight months, honorably discharged June, 1865.

Inmel, George, age 18, volunteer, August 11, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company F, private, served two and ten-twelfths years, mustered out June 10, 1865.

Jameson, James, age 23, volunteer, August 11, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company F, private, served two and ten-twelfths years, mustered out June 10, 1865.

John, Anthony, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, died.

Johnson, William, age 31, volunteer, August 3, 1861, three years, Eighteenth United States regiment, company C, private, three years, mustered out August 3, 1864, detailed and served as teamster.

Kelly, Benjamin, Twenty-seventh regiment, company D.

Kemp, Nathan, age 22, volunteer, November 5, 1861, three years, First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, served two and one-third years, honorably discharged March, 1863, veteran enlistment, age 24, volunteer, March 31, 1864, three years, First Virginia light artillery, company C, served one and one-fourth years, mustered out.

Kemp, Abram, age 21, volunteer, August 6, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, served three years, mustered out in 1864.

Kemp, Charles Wesley, age 18, volunteer, February 20, 1864, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, served one and a half years, mustered out July, 1865.

Kemp, John D., age 17, volunteer, February 20, 1864, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, served one and a half years, mustered out July, 1865.

Kennedy, Jacob, Ninety-second regiment, company F.

La Grange, Lafayette, age 33, substitute, 1862, three years, Ninth cavalry, company B, private, mustered out in 1865.

Martin, Wilson, 1862, three years, One Hundred and Sixteenth regiment, private.

Masters, Joseph.

Matchett, George.

Mathers, William, age 21, volunteer, September, 1861, three years, Twenty-seventh regiment, company D, private.

Macbeth, John, First cavalry, company L.

Mathers, Henry, age 20, volunteer, 1863, six months; re-enlistment, volunteer, September, 1864, one year, First cavalry, company L, private.

Maxon, George, age 30, volunteer, discharged.

Maxon, Henry, age 18, volunteer, August 12, 1863, six months, Fourth Virginia cavalry, company G, private, served seven months, mustered out March 11, 1864; re-enlistment, age 19, volunteer, August, 1864, one year, First cavalry, company F, private, served nine months, mustered out May 20, 1865.

Mayer, George, One Hundred and Sixteenth regiment, company F, died.

Maxon, Edwin, age 17, substitute, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company F, private; re-enlistment, age 17, volunteer, September, 1864, one year, First cavalry, company L, private.

McAfee, John, age 44, drafted September 28, 1864, one year, Seventy-first regiment, company C, private, served eight and a half months, mustered out June 12, 1865.

McAllister, James A., age 24, volunteer, September 6, 1861, three years.

McAllister, Charles Alden, age 19, volunteer, September 16, 1861, three years, Eighteenth regiment, company F, private, served three and a half years.

McAllister, John M., age 18, volunteer, August 8, 1862, three years, Seventh cavalry, company H, private, died.

McAllister, William, age 17, volunteer, August, 1862, three years, Seventh cavalry, company H, private; re-enlistment, age 18, volunteer, August, 1863, six months, Fourth Virginia cavalry, company M, attained the rank of corporal, served eleven months, mustered out June 23, 1864; third enlistment, age 19, volunteer, September, 1864, one year, Fifteenth regiment, company F, attained rank of corporal, served nine months, mustered out June 8, 1865.

McBeath, John, First cavalry, company G.

McCowen, Isaac S., age 19, volunteer, August 17, 1863, six months, Fourth Virginia cavalry, company G, corporal, served seven months, mustered out March 4, 1864; re-enlistment, age 20, volunteer, October 8, 1864, one year, One Hundred and Seventy-fifth regiment, company K, first lieutenant, served nine months, mustered out June 27, 1865.

McCullough, D.

McElfresh, Nathan M., age 18, substitute, September 30, 1864, one year, Seventy-eighth regiment, company H, private, served eight months, mustered out May 30, 1865.

McElfresh, Samuel Wilson, age 25, volunteer, October, 1863, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company F, private, served one year and eight months, mustered out 1865.

McElfresh, John W., age 19, volunteer, October, 1863, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company F, private, served one month, died November, 1863, of smallpox.

McGee, William, age 19, volunteer, April, 1861, three months, Eighteenth regiment, reenlisted, age 19, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, veteran enlistment, age 21, volunteer, 1864, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G.

McGee, George, age 17, volunteer, August 12, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, veteran enlistment, age 19, volunteer, 1864, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G.

McGee, John Wesley, age 16, volunteer, October 25, 1862, three years, One Hundred and Sixteenth regiment, company F.

Mendenhall, William A., age 37, volunteer, October 7, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company F, private, served one year, honorably discharged 1863.

Merical, Amos, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, died February 17, 1863.

Miller, John, age 34, drafted, March 23, 1865, one year, Sixty-third regiment, private.

Myer, John, age 22, drafted, September 28, 1864, one year, Seventy-first regiment, company H, private, served eight and a half months, mustered out June 12, 1865.

Martin, Robert, One Hundred and Sixteenth regiment, company F, died.

Myer, Henry, age 20, drafted, September 28, 1864, one year, Seventy-first regiment, company H, private, served eight and a half months, mustered out June 12, 1865.

Porter, William H., age 22, volunteer, December, 1861, one year, Seventy-seventh regiment, company H, private, served six months, died June 12, 1862, mortally wounded.

Pierce, Henry, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G.

Porter, Thomas J., age 15, volunteer, December 12, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private, served ten months, honorably discharged October, 1862, re-enlistment, age 29, drafted March 23, 1865, one year, Thirty-ninth regiment, company D, private, served three months.

Powell, Daniel, age 35, drafted March 25, 1865, one year, Thirty-ninth regiment, company G, private, served three and a half months, mustered out July 18, 1865.

Powell, Jesse, age 35, volunteer, February, 1864, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private.

Pratt, Phillip, age 45, drafted, March 23, 1865, one year, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, served four months, mustered out July 22, 1865.

Pratt, James, age 22, drafted, March 23, 1865, one year, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, served four months, mustered out July 22, 1865.

Quimby, Allen, age 53, volunteer, July 15, 1863, six months, One Hundred and Twenty-ninth regiment, company F, private, served eight months, mustered out March 5, 1864.

Quimby, Fulton G., age 18, volunteer, August 12,

1861, three years. Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, served two and a half years, honorably discharged, veteran enlistment, age 20, volunteer, February 22, 1864, three years. Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, honorably discharged.

Quimby, George Wesley, age 17, volunteer, 1862, three years. Ninety-second regiment, company G, private, died October 17, 1863.

Quimby, Charles Wesley, age 16, volunteer, July, 1864, six months. One Hundred and Twenty-ninth regiment, company F, private, served eight months, mustered out March, 1864, reenlisted, substitute, 1865, one year. Eighteenth regiment, company E, private.

Ray, James D., age 17, volunteer, August 7, 1862, three years. Ninety-second regiment, company F, private, two years and ten months, mustered out June 10, 1865.

Reynolds, John R., age 19, volunteer, September, 1861, three years. First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, honorably discharged.

Roke, William J.

Rice, Thomas, age 20, volunteer, October, 1863, six months. Fourth Virginia cavalry, company M, private, served six months, mustered out, reenlisted 1864, one year. One Hundred and Seventy-fifth regiment, company K, private, attained rank of sergeant, served one year, mustered out June, 1865.

Russell, John, volunteer, 1863, six months. Fourth Virginia cavalry, company M, private, served six months, mustered out with regiment.

Robinson, C. E., Thirty-sixth regiment, company G. Schminke, John, age 22, volunteer, August, 1862, three years. Seventh cavalry, company H, private.

Schrader, John, age 19, volunteer, 1861, three years. Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private, veteran enlistment, 1864, three years.

Scott, James, One Hundred and Twenty-fifth regiment, company E.

Smith, Joseph, volunteer, February, 1864, three years. Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private.

Smith, G. W., One Hundred and Sixteenth regiment, company F.

Snodgrass, B. F., volunteer, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, died May 28, 1862, of chronic diarrhoea at Farmington, Mississippi.

Snodgrass, William A., age 20, volunteer, July 22, 1861, three years. Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, attained rank of sergeant, veteran enlistment February, 1864, three years, sergeant, attained rank of first lieutenant, mustered out July 9, 1865.

Snodgrass, George W., age 31, volunteer, August 5, 1862, three years. Ninety-second regiment, company F, private.

Snodgrass, Hiram, age 19, volunteer, August, 1863, six months. Fourth Virginia cavalry, company G, private, served seven and a half months, mustered out March 8, 1864, reenlisted September, 1864, one year. One Hundred and Seventy-fifth regiment, company K, private, attained the rank of corporal, mustered out June 25, 1865.

Stackhouse, William, age 21, volunteer, August 12, 1861, three years. Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, served three years, mustered out September 3, 1864.

Statts, Alfred, age 19, volunteer, August, 1861, three years. First cavalry, company L, private, served two and a half years, honorably discharged, veteran enlistment 1864, three years, served one and a half years, mustered out September 26, 1865.

Steen, James, age 21, volunteer, August, 1862, three years. One Hundred and Sixteenth regiment, company F, private, served seven months, honorably discharged April 1, 1863.

Steen, Joseph, age 19, volunteer, 1863, six months. One Hundred and Twenty-ninth regiment, private, mustered out 1864, reenlisted August 5, 1864, one year. Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private.

Steen, Hamilton, age 19, volunteer, August 5, 1864, one year. Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private.

Stephens, A. W., Seventy-seventh regiment, company D.

Strickley, A., Ninety-second regiment, company F. Sultan, Samuel, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F. Taylor, Richard P., age 40, volunteer, September 15, 1864, one year. One Hundred and Seventy-fifth regiment, company K, private, served eight months, died May 20, 1865.

Templeton, George W., age 18, volunteer, February 22, 1864, three years. Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private, served six months, died August 21, 1864.

Fletcher, Daniel, age 34, volunteer, 1861, three years. Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private, veteran enlistment 1864, three years.

Tipkens, Edward, age 25, volunteer, November, 1861, three years. Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private, honorably discharged.

Tipkens, Napoleon, age 20, drafted, September, 1864, one year. Forty-third regiment, company K, private, mustered out June 22, 1865.

Waggoner, Peter, Seventy-seventh regiment, company H.

Walker, Martin, age 30, August, 1861, three years. Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, served six months, honorably discharged, reenlistment, May 28, 1862, three months. Eighty-fifth regiment, Ohio State guards, private.

Walker, Aaron, age 25, volunteer, May 28, 1862, three months. Eighty-seventh regiment, company A, private.

Van Dyne, George, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F.

Walker, Ezra A., age 17, volunteer, October 3, 1861, three years. Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, honorably discharged, veteran enlistment, February, 1864, three years, private, served three and a half years, mustered out July 9, 1865.

Wright, John, age 25, volunteer, August 26, 1861, three years. Eighteenth regiment, companies H. and C, private, veteran enlistment, three years. Eighteenth regiment, companies H and C, private.

Wright, Nathan, age 20, volunteer, August, 1862, three years. Ninety-second regiment, company F, private, honorably discharged.

Walker, Amnias, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G.

Yaho, Peter, One Hundred and Sixteenth regiment, company F.

Zimmerman, Lorenzo, age 21, volunteer, September 16, 1861, three years. First cavalry, company G, private, served one and a half years, honorably discharged November 6, 1862.

LIBERTY TOWNSHIP.

Buell's Pierpont battery	2
One in battery A, First Pennsylvania light artillery	2
Fourth Virginia artillery	11
First Ohio cavalry	10
First Virginia cavalry	2
Seventh Ohio cavalry	3
Ninth Ohio cavalry	1
Thirty-sixth Ohio	34
Ninety-second Ohio	34
Seventy-seventh Ohio	25
Thirty-ninth Ohio	14
Seventy-first Ohio	6
One Hundred and Forty-eighth Ohio	4
Sixty-third Ohio	2
Eighteenth Ohio (three years)	5
Eighteenth Ohio (three months)	1
One Hundred and Twenty-ninth Ohio	3
One Hundred and Seventy-fifth Ohio	11
One Hundred and Seventy-ninth Ohio	3
Twenty-seventh Ohio	2
One Hundred and Sixteenth Ohio	10
Sixty-sixth Ohio	2
One each in Fourth Virginia infantry, Twenty-fifth Ohio, Forty-third Ohio, Eighty-fifth and Eighty-seventh Ohio (three months) Fifteenth Ohio, Seventy-eighth Ohio, Twenty-third Ohio, Eighty-ninth United States, Thirty-third Ohio, Thirty-eighth Ohio, Fifty-second Ohio, and Fifty-fifth Ohio in all	13
Not designated	7
Total number of soldiers	193
Died	20

LIBERTY TOWNSHIP.

Abbott, William, age 19, volunteer, December 25, 1861, three years, Fifty-eighth regiment, company A, private, served fourteen months, honorably discharged May 1, 1863, lost left arm in the attack upon Vicksburg December 29, 1863.

Abbott, William Thomson, age 20, volunteer, October 20, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private, served six months, killed at Shiloh, April 8, 1862.

Allison, Samuel, age 19, volunteer, September, 1864, three years, One Hundred and Seventy-fifth regiment, company K, private, served five months, died March 15, 1864, of measles, at Columbia.

Alexander, A. C., volunteer, One Hundred and Seventy-ninth regiment, company F, private.

Amos, James, age 35, drafted, March, 1865, one year, Sixty-third regiment, private, served five months, mustered out August 15, 1865.

Amos, Mordecai, age 25, volunteer.

Bahrenburg, John P., age 34, volunteer, September, 1864, one year, One Hundred and Seventy-ninth regiment, company F, sergeant, served ten months, mustered out June 27, 1865.

Barnes, A. L., volunteer, One Hundred and Seventy-fifth regiment, company K.

Barnet, Albertis, age 22, volunteer, August, 1864, one year, One Hundred and Seventy-fifth regiment, company K, private, served six months, died February, 1865, of measles, at Columbia.

Barnhart, Joseph W., age 25, substitute, 1862, Ninth cavalry, company D, private.

Beardmore, William, age 32, volunteer, September 5, 1864, one year, One Hundred and Seventy-ninth regiment, company F, private, served ten months, mustered out June 27, 1865.

Boston, Michael, age 19, volunteer, February, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G, private.

Boston, Leander, age 21, volunteer, May, 1861, three years, Twenty-fifth regiment, private, died 1862, in Virginia.

Boston, Jacob, age 40, drafted, September, 1864, one year, Fifty-first regiment, company G, private, died 1865, Nashville, Tennessee, of lung disease.

Bowers, Valentine, age 28, volunteer, September 5, 1864, one year, One Hundred and Seventy-fifth regiment, company K, private, served ten months, mustered out June 27, 1865.

Bowers, John Wesley, age 21, volunteer, November, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private, veteran enlistment, volunteer, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private.

Bowers, Jacob Asbury, age 18, volunteer, August 11, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company F, private, served two years and nine months, honorably discharged May 21, 1865, wounded in left thigh at Mission Ridge.

Brown, Alexander, age 34, volunteer, September 5, 1864, one year, One Hundred and Seventy-ninth regiment, company F, private, served nine and one-half months, mustered out June 17, 1865.

Brown, James, volunteer, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, served three years, mustered out 1864, transferred to invalid corps.

Brown, Samuel Smith, age 15, volunteer, September 29, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company E, private, veteran enlistment, age 17, volunteer, 1864, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company E, private, blacksmith.

Burford, John, Alexander, age 17, volunteer, March, 1864, three years, Twentieth regiment, company I, private, served eight months, died November 18, 1864, of measles, at Gallipolis.

Burnet, Simeon.

Bush, Josephus, age 36, volunteer, February, 1864, three years, One Hundred and Sixteenth regiment, company E, private, served six months, died September 17, 1864.

Bush, Abraham, age 31, volunteer, September 20, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, veteran enlistment, volunteer, February, 1864, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private.

Bush, William, age 29, volunteer, August, 1862, three years, One Hundred and Sixteenth regiment, company C, private, served ten months, mustered out June, 1865.

Campbell, John M., Ninety-second regiment, company F, private.

Cline, John, age 36, volunteer, 1861, three years. Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, sergeant, killed at Shiloh, April 7, 1862.

Cline, Joshua, age 22, volunteer, 1862, three years. Ninety-second regiment, company F, private, served nine months, died April 9, 1862.

Congleton, Burris, age 33, drafted, March 23, 1865, one year. Thirty-ninth regiment, company D, private, served four months, mustered out July 27, 1865.

Congleton, Joseph, age 22, volunteer, August 15, 1862, three years. Ninety-second regiment, company H, private, attained the rank of corporal, served two years and ten months, mustered out in June, 1865.

Congleton, James, age 21, volunteer, February 20, 1864, three years. Thirty-sixth regiment, company K, private, served one year and five months, mustered out July 9, 1865.

Congleton, Thomas, age 33, volunteer, September 1, 1864, one year. One Hundred and Seventy-ninth regiment, company F, private, served ten months, mustered out July 27, 1865.

Congleton, William, age 34, volunteer, September, 1864, one year. One Hundred and Seventy-fifth regiment, company K, private, died in December, 1864.

Congleton, Lewis, age 26, substitute, May, 1864, one hundred days. One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company D, private, served four months, mustered out September 14, 1864.

Congleton, James, age 21, volunteer, 1862, three years. Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, died in February, 1862, of fever at Summerville, West Virginia.

Congleton, John, age 19, volunteer, December, 1861, three years. Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private, honorably discharged.

Congleton, Thomas, age 19, volunteer, February, 1864, three years. Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private.

Coon, Peter, age 21, volunteer, November, 1861, three years. Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private, served nine months, died July 11, 1862.

Coon, Sampson, age 38, volunteer, November, 1861, three years. Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private, served six months, died April 9, 1862.

Coon, Simpson, age 37, volunteer, September 16, 1864, one year. One Hundred and Seventy-sixth regiment, company I, private, served eight months, died May 9, 1865.

Coon, Wilson, age 33, volunteer, January 1, 1862, three years. Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private, served four months, honorably discharged May 5, 1862.

Coon, Samuel, age 27, volunteer, 1864, one year. Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, died April 27, 1865.

Coon, William, age 29, volunteer, September, 1864, one year. One Hundred and Seventy-ninth regiment, company F, private, served nine months and two weeks mustered out in June, 1865.

Coon, Orlena, age 40, volunteer, September 12, 1864, One Hundred and Seventy-sixth regiment, company I, private, served nine months, mustered out in June, 1865.

Coon, Michael, age 22, volunteer, November 9, 1862, three years. Seventy-seventh regiment, company

D, private, served two years and eleven months, died October 6, 1861, of fever, at Little Rock, Arkansas.

Coon, Orlena, age 18, substitute, August 8, 1864, one year. Seventieth regiment, company C, private, served ten months, mustered out in May, 1865.

Covey, Morgan, age 23, volunteer, September 2, 1864, one year. One Hundred and Seventy-fifth regiment, company K, private, served eight months and two weeks, died May 21, 1865, at Columbia, Tennessee.

Cranston, William, age 28, volunteer, September 5, 1864, one year. One Hundred and Seventy-fifth regiment, company K, served ten months, mustered out in June, 1865.

Dolman, John W., age 18, volunteer, September 26, 1861, three years. Thirty-sixth regiment, company E, private, served two years and six months, honorably discharged in 1864, reenlisted as a veteran, volunteer, 1864, three years. Thirty-sixth regiment, company E, private, served one year and four months, mustered out July 9, 1865.

Dolman, Charles Morgan, age 17, volunteer, February, 1864, three years. Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private.

Donaldson, John B., age 33, volunteer, September, 1864, one year. One Hundred and Seventy-ninth regiment, company F, private, served nine months, mustered out in June, 1865.

Donthitt, William, drafted.

Dunlap, William, age 18, volunteer, 1862, three years. Ninety-second regiment, company F, private, served four months, died December 9, 1862.

Dunlap, Robert, age 17, volunteer, February, 1864, three years. Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private.

Dunlap, Moses S., age 16, volunteer, March, 1865, one year. Thirty-sixth regiment, company C, private, served two months, honorably discharged in May, 1865.

Einsach, Philip, age 34, volunteer, December 4, 1861, three years. First light artillery, company H, private, served six months, died in June, 1862.

Ekey, Lewis Milton, age 17, volunteer, February, 1864, three years. Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private, served one year and two months, died April 6, 1865.

Erb, John, age 17, volunteer, September 26, 1864, one year. First cavalry, company L, private, served one year, mustered out September 13, 1865.

Epler, William, age 43, three years. Seventy-seventh regiment, died March 7, 1863, of pleurisy, at Alton, Illinois.

Farley, Isaac, age 31, volunteer, December 8, 1861, three years. Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private, served one month, died January 5, 1862.

Feltor, Isaac, age 22, volunteer, August 7, 1862, three years. Ninety-second regiment, company F, private, served two years and ten months, mustered out June 10, 1865.

Fulton, David, age 44, volunteer, three years. Seventh cavalry, company H, private, died April 14, 1863, of rheumatism, at Covington, Kentucky.

French, Ezra, age 45, drafted March 23, 1865, one year. Sixty-third regiment, private, served two months, mustered out May 20, 1865.

Gatchett, John Barnes, age 37, volunteer, September 5, 1864, one year. One Hundred and Seventy-ninth regiment, company F, private, served ten months, mustered out in June, 1865.

Gearheart, George Thomas, age 19, volunteer, September 21, 1863, six months, Fourth Virginia cavalry, company G, private, served six months, mustered out March 8, 1864; re-enlistment, volunteer, August 30, 1864, one year, One Hundred and Seventy-fifth regiment, company K, private, served ten months, mustered out in June, 1865.

Gearheart, Joseph, age 16, volunteer, February, 1864, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private.

Gill, Henry Patterson, age 18, substitute, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company B, private, served four months, mustered out September 14, 1864.

Gleason, George Milton, age 31, volunteer, December 25, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private; veteran enlistment, volunteer, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private.

Glover, Samuel, age 39, volunteer, September, 1864, one year, One Hundred and Seventy-ninth regiment, company F, corporal, served ten months, mustered out in June, 1865.

Glover, Sylvester, age 20, volunteer, August, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company F, private, served two years and ten months, mustered out June 10, 1865.

Granville, H., Second Virginia cavalry, company C. Gregory, John, age 29, volunteer, September 3, 1864, one year, One Hundred and Seventy-ninth regiment, company F, private, served ten months, mustered out June 10, 1865.

Gregory, George William, age 22, volunteer, September 3, 1864, one year, One Hundred and Seventy-ninth regiment, company F, private, served ten months, mustered out June 10, 1865.

Grey, Jesse, volunteer, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private, honorably discharged in April, 1862.

Grey, Joshua, volunteer.

Grudier, G., volunteer, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, died in 1861, of typhoid fever at Summerville.

Groves, Henry, age 24, volunteer, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, served ten months, died June 3, 1862.

Grudier, John, age 21, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, died in 1861, of typhoid fever, at Summerville, West Virginia.

Groves, William Augustus, age 21, volunteer, 1861, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company D, private, served two years and six months, died in June, 1864, mortally wounded.

Grudier, John, age 21, volunteer, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private.

Groves, Charles Stewart, age 20, volunteer, August, 1864, one year, One Hundred and Seventy-fifth regiment, company K, private, served ten months, mustered out in June, 1865.

Hall, John, age 20, volunteer, February 17, 1865, one year, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, served five and one-half months, mustered out July 9, 1865.

Hern, Jacob Winget, age 26, volunteer, three years,

Seventy-seventh regiment, company G, private, died April 23, 1864, at battle of Mark's Mills, Arkansas.

Hall, James, age 29, volunteer, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company A, private; veteran enlistment, age 31, volunteer, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company A, private.

Hall, William, age 27, drafted May 19, 1864, three years, One Hundred and Twenty-second regiment, company H, private, served one year, mustered out in June, 1865.

Harris, Stephen, age 18, volunteer, August 13, 1863, three years, Second heavy artillery, company H, private, served one year and seven months, died March 28, 1865.

Hartwig, Peter, age 22, substitute, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company A, private, served four months, mustered out September 14, 1864.

Hartwig, John, age 18, volunteer, August 15, 1862, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company I, private, served two years and ten months mustered out July 9, 1865.

Heslop, George, age 37, volunteer, September, 1864, one year, One Hundred and Seventy-fifth regiment, company K, private, served ten months, mustered out June, 1865.

Hill, Elverton Newell, age 34, August 29, 1862, three years, Seventh cavalry, company H, private, served six months, honorably discharged February 20, 1863.

Hill, James Amos, age 16, volunteer, September 14, 1864, one year, One Hundred and Seventy-sixth regiment, company I, private, served four months, died January 14, 1865.

Hughes, Benjamin F., age 21, volunteer, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private, died April 8, 1862, at battle of Fallen Timber, Tennessee.

Hoit, John A., volunteer, Ninety-second regiment, company H, private.

Hughes, David S., age 19, volunteer, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D.

Howell, David, age 36, volunteer, December 12, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company A, private, died 1863, at Little Rock, Arkansas.

Hughey, William, age 29, volunteer, November, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G, private, served one year and five months, died April, 1863.

Johnson, Andrew C., age 26, volunteer, September 5, 1864, one year, One Hundred and Seventy-ninth regiment, company F, private, served nine months, mustered out June, 1865.

Jordan, John, age 42, volunteer, 1861, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company G, private, served two months, honorably discharged.

Jordan, William, age 17, volunteer, October 1, 1861, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company G, sergeant, served three years, mustered out 1864; veteran enlistment, age 20, substitute, February 28, 1865, one year, Forty-third regiment, company A, private, served four and a half months, mustered out July 13, 1865.

Kelly, William, age 19, volunteer, May 2, 1861, three years, Twenty-fifth regiment, company F, private, served eight months, died December 29, 1861, of fever, at Cheat Mountain, West Virginia.

Kelly, Isaac Newton, age 17, volunteer, October, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private, served six months, died May 2, 1862, of fever, at Camp Dennison, Ohio.

King, Jesse, age 26, volunteer, September, 1864, one year, One Hundred and Seventy-fifth regiment, company K, private, served nine and one-half months, honorably discharged June, 1865.

King, John Merical, age 20, volunteer, September 20, 1861, three years, Second Virginia cavalry, company F, private, honorably discharged; veteran enlistment, age 22, volunteer, 1864, three years, Second Virginia cavalry, company F, private.

King, Nicholas, age 19, volunteer, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company I, private, served three years, mustered out 1864.

King, William, age 20, volunteer, September, 1864, one year, One Hundred and Seventy-fifth regiment, company K, private, served ten months mustered out June 27, 1865.

Kirk, Mark, age 34, drafted March, 1865, one year, Thirty-ninth regiment, company D, private.

Kirkman, Samuel, age 26, volunteer, One Hundred and Twenty-second regiment, company H, died 1864, of diarrhoea, at Annapolis, Maryland.

Lamington, Josiah B., age 34, volunteer, February 12, 1864, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company K, private, served sixteen months, mustered out June, 1865.

Love, Thomas, age 38, volunteer, August, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company F, private, served seven months, died March 6 1863.

Love, Hugh, age 32, volunteer, August 30, 1864, one year, One Hundred and Seventy-fifth regiment, company K, private, served ten months, mustered out 1865.

Love, Robert, age 23, volunteer, August 15, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company K, private, served two years and ten months, mustered out June 10, 1865.

Love, William, age 18, volunteer, August 9, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company F, private, served one year and six months, died February 25, 1864.

Love, Solomon, age 16, volunteer, December 31, 1861, three years, Second Virginia cavalry, company F, private, honorably discharged 1864; veteran enlistment, age 18, volunteered 1864, three years, Second Virginia cavalry, company F, private, mustered out 1864.

Masters, Benjamin, age 48, volunteer, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private, died April 6, 1862.

Masters, Joshua, age 17, volunteer, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private, honorably discharged August 5, 1862; re-enlisted, age 19, volunteer, February, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private, died August 22, 1865, at Brownsville, Texas, of chronic diarrhoea.

Masters, Thomas H., age 23, volunteer, March 1, 1865, one year, One Hundred and Seventy-ninth regiment, company D, private, mustered out June, 1865.

McAffee, Thomas, age 42, volunteer, March 1, 1865, one year, One Hundred and Seventy-ninth regiment, company F, private, served five months, mustered out July 26, 1865.

McAffee, Joseph Francis, age 16, volunteer, September, 1864, one year, One Hundred and Seventy-ninth regiment, company F, private, served ten months, mustered out June 27, 1865.

McLead, Elias, age 38, volunteer, September 1, 1864, one year, One Hundred and Seventy-ninth regiment, company F, private, served nine months, honorably discharged June 8, 1865.

McLead, John, age 18, volunteer, March 13, 1865, one year, One Hundred and Seventy-ninth regiment, company F, private, served two months, honorably discharged May 25, 1865.

McPeck, Lemuel, age 26, drafted March 3, 1865, one year, Thirty-ninth regiment, company D, private, served two months, died May 24, 1865, at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, of fever.

Mirach, Garrison, age 28, volunteer, August, 1862, three years, One Hundred and Sixteenth regiment, company F, private, served one year and ten months, died June 25, 1864.

Mirach, William, age 24, volunteer, August 1, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, served three years mustered out September 13, 1864.

Miracle, Jesse, age 22, volunteer, August 1, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, served two and a half years, honorably discharged; veteran enlistment age 24, volunteer, February, 1864, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, served one year and five months, murdered at Cumberland, Maryland, January, 1865.

Miracle, John, age 19, volunteer, October, 1861, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company D, private, served two years, honorably discharged December, 1863; veteran enlistment, age 21, volunteer, December, 1863, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company D, private, served one year and a half, mustered out.

Miracle, Isaac, age 16, volunteer, August 10, 1864, one year, Ninety-second regiment, company F, private, served ten months, mustered out June 10, 1865.

Miracle, John Long, age 22, volunteer, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, served three years, mustered out September 3, 1864.

Miller, Robert, age 25, drafted in 1862, nine months, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private, served seven months, died April 11, 1863.

Moore, William, age 23, volunteer, October 15, 1861, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company D, private, died July 22, 1862, of smallpox, at Memphis, Tennessee.

Mosbury, William A., age 16, volunteer, August 11, 1864, one year, One Hundred and Seventy-ninth regiment, company F, private, served ten months, mustered out June 17, 1865.

Mosbury, William, drafted March, 1865, one year, Twenty-seventh regiment, private.

Mull, George William, age 20, substitute, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company K, private.

Mullenix, Thomas, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G.

Mullenix, Owen, age 17, volunteer, November 21, 1861, three years, Seventy-eighth regiment, company G, private; veteran re-enlistment, age 20, volunteer.

Murdock, James, age 27, volunteer, September 5, 1864, one year, One Hundred and Seventy-ninth regiment, company F, private, served ten months, mustered in June 27, 1865.

Myres, Jonathan, volunteer, 1862, three years, Seventh cavalry, company H, private, served ten months and a half, died March 15, 1864.

Myres, James, age 21, volunteer, January, 1864, three years, First cavalry, company L, private, one year and eight months, mustered out September 26, 1865.

Myres, David, age 20, volunteer, August 15, 1864, one year, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, served eight months and a half, honorably discharged May, 1865.

Myres, William, age 17, volunteer, June 20, 1863, six months, Fourth cavalry, company I, private, served nine months, mustered out March 12, 1864; re-enlistment, age 18, volunteer, August 15, 1864, one year, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, honorably discharged from service May, 1865.

Oliver, James, age 21, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, attained the rank of corporal, died May, 1864.

Palmer, Harris James, age 23, volunteer, August 18, 1862, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company I, private, served eighteen months, killed September 19, 1863, at Chickamauga.

Parker, John, Thirty-sixth regiment.

Phelps, Jacob Eden, age 24, volunteer, August, 1862, three years, One Hundred and Sixteenth regiment, company F, private, attained the rank of corporal.

Phelps, Benjamin, age 17, volunteer, July 19, 1863, six months, One Hundred and Twenty-ninth regiment, company F, private, served eight months, mustered out March 11, 1864; re-enlistment, age 18, substitute, February 23, 1865, one year, Forty-third regiment, company E, private, mustered out.

Porter, Thomas, age 40, volunteer, February 24, 1865, one year, One Hundred and Seventy-ninth regiment, company F, private, served six and a half months, mustered out September 6, 1865.

Rice, Joseph Alban, age 22, volunteer, November 8, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, corporal, honorably discharged in 1862.

Ray, Ezra Deming, age 21, volunteer, August 29, 1864, one year, One Hundred and Seventy-fifth regiment, company K, private, served ten months, mustered out June 25, 1865.

Rees, Jonathan, age 29, volunteer, December 5, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company A, private, died June, 1865, at Galveston, Texas, of camp disease.

Roberts, William, age 20, volunteer, October 6, 1862, three years, Seventh cavalry, company H, served two years and eight months, honorably discharged June 19, 1865.

Schneider, Lewis, age 24, volunteer, December, 1861, three years, Sixty-fifth regiment, company E, died September, 1863.

Schneider, Frederick, age 21, volunteer, November 9, 1861, three years, Fifty-eighth regiment, company A, private, served three years and two months, mustered out January 14, 1865.

Schneider, William, age 19, volunteer, November 9, 1861, three years, Fifty-eighth regiment, company A, private, served three years and two months, mustered out January 14, 1865.

Schram, Jacob, age 29, drafted March 23, 1865, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company D, private, served three and a half months, mustered out July 6, 1865.

Selken, Henry, volunteer, September 6, 1864, one year, One Hundred and Seventy-ninth regiment, company F, private, served five and a half months, died January 26, 1865.

Stegner, Jacob, age 22, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company K, private, died October, 1863, at Gailatin, Tennessee.

Selken, John, volunteer, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private.

Selken, James, age 18, volunteer, February 29, 1864, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, served one year and five months, mustered out July, 1865.

Shaw, John M., age 21, volunteer, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company F, private; re-enlistment, age 22, volunteer, February, 1865, one year, Thirty-sixth regiment, company C, private.

Slobohn, Henry, age 20, volunteer, August 11, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company F, served two years and ten months, mustered out June 10, 1865.

Slobohn, John H., age 18, volunteer, August 11, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company F, served two years and ten months, honorably discharged 1865.

Smith, Elias D., age 26, volunteer, September 3, 1864, one year, One Hundred and Seventy-ninth regiment, company F, sergeant, served nine months and fifteen days, mustered out June 17, 1865.

Smith, George Alexander, age 22, volunteer, September, 1862, three years, Seventh cavalry, company H, honorably discharged June 8, 1865.

Smith, William P., age 18, substitute, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company G, private, mustered out September 14, 1864.

Stewart, John, age 34, volunteer, August 26, 1864, one year, One Hundred and Seventy-ninth regiment, company F, private, served nine months and fifteen days, mustered out June 17, 1865.

Stidd, John.

Scott, Abijah, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, Seranton, William, One Hundred and Seventy-fifth regiment, company K.

Stollar, John, age 27, volunteer, three years, One Hundred and Seventy-ninth regiment, company F, died at Nashville, Tennessee, February 18, 1865.

Swaney, William, age 26, drafted in 1862, One Hundred and Fourteenth regiment, company C.

Telles, William, age 22, volunteer, Thirty-sixth

Taylor, John, age 45, volunteer, 1862, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company E, private, died December 25, 1864.

Taylor, Ezra, age 30, volunteer, August 29, 1862, three years, Seventh cavalry, company H, private, served three years, mustered out July 4, 1865.

Taylor, David, age 22, volunteer, September 3, 1864, one year, One Hundred and Seventy-ninth regiment, company F, private, served ten months, honorably discharged July 3, 1865.

Taylor, Theodore, age 20, volunteer, August, 1864, one year, One Hundred and Seventy-fifth regiment, company K, private, served ten months, discharged for disability and died at home.

Taylor, Isaac, age 18, volunteer, September 6, 1864, one year, Seventy-eighth regiment, company I, private, mustered out 1865.

Vanway, Burris, age 29, volunteer, 1863, six months, One Hundred and Twenty-ninth regiment, company F, private, mustered out 1864; re-enlistment, age 30, substitute, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company F, private, mustered out September, 1864.

Vanway, William Johnson, age 17, volunteer, 1863, six months, Fourth Virginia cavalry, company G, private, mustered out June.

Vanway, Joseph Oshorn, age 44, drafted March, 1865, one year, Thirty-ninth regiment, company D, private, served four months, mustered out July, 1865.

Vanway, Robert L., age 28, volunteer, December 8, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private, veteran enlistment, age 30, volunteer, February, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private.

Vanway, Isaac, age 22, volunteer, February, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private, died of diarrhea at Fort Morgan, Alabama, May 31, 1865.

Walters, James P., age 17, volunteer, August 8, 1864, one year, One Hundred and Seventy-ninth regiment, company F, private, served ten months, mustered out May, 1865.

Walters, William T., age 18, volunteer, July 7, 1863, three years, Second heavy artillery, company K, private, served one year and ten months, honorably discharged May, 1865.

West, George Washington, volunteer, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private, veteran enlistment, volunteer, February, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private.

West, Jonathan, age 23, volunteer, August, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company H, private, served eight months died March 24, 1863.

West, Levi, age 22, volunteer, 1862, three years, One Hundred and Sixteenth regiment, company A, private.

West, Joshua, age 19, volunteer, August, 1864, one year, One Hundred and Seventy-sixth regiment, company G, private, served ten months, mustered out June 27, 1865.

Westbrook, William Thomas, age 23, volunteer, August 11, 1863, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company H, private.

Wiley, Daniel, age 24, volunteer, September, 1864, one year, One Hundred and Seventy-sixth regiment, company I, private, served nine months mustered out June, 1865.

Williams, Henry, volunteer, December 11, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private, served seven months, died August 23, 1862.

Wilson, Owen D., age 34, volunteer, September 5, 1864, one year, One Hundred and Seventy-ninth regiment, company F, private, served ten months, mustered out June, 1865.

Wright, Hiram, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G.

RECAPITULATION.

One each in batteries H and K, Second Ohio heavy artillery and Huntington's battery .....	3
Seventh Ohio cavalry .....	6
Fourth Virginia cavalry .....	2
First Ohio cavalry .....	2
Second Virginia cavalry .....	3
One each in Fourth Ohio cavalry and Ninth Ohio cavalry .....	2
Seventy-seventh Ohio .....	34
Thirty-sixth Ohio .....	30
One Hundred and Seventy-ninth Ohio .....	28
One Hundred and Seventy-fifth Ohio .....	14
One Hundred and Forty-eighth Ohio .....	6
Sixty-third Ohio .....	7
Thirty-ninth Ohio .....	5
Ninety-second Ohio .....	20
Seventy-seventh Ohio .....	2
One Hundred and Twenty-ninth Ohio .....	2
One Hundred and Sixteenth Ohio .....	5
One Hundred and Seventy-sixth Ohio .....	5
Fifty-eighth Ohio .....	3
Twenty-fifth Ohio .....	2
One Hundred and Twenty-second Ohio .....	2
Forty-third Ohio .....	2
One each in Twentieth Ohio, Twenty-seventh Ohio, Sixty-fifth Ohio, Seventieth Ohio, Fifty-first Ohio, One Hundred and Fourteenth Ohio....	6

Total number of soldiers .....	193
Died .....	47

LEWIS TOWNSHIP

Adams, George Washington, age 28, volunteer, September 20, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company B, private, discharged; re-enlisted.

Adams, James M., age 26, volunteer, February 28, 1865, one year, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, served five months, mustered out July 27, 1865.

Adams, James, age 22, drafted September 27, 1864, one year, Sixty-second regiment, company A, private, served eleven months, mustered out August 8, 1865.

Adams, Lewis, age 18, volunteer, September, 1864, one year, One Hundred and Seventy-ninth regiment, company F, private, mustered out in June, 1865.

Adamson, Barnet, age 17, substitute, October 12, 1864, one year, Seventy-eighth regiment, company F, private, served nine months, mustered out July 11, 1865.

Baker, Henry, age 25, drafted September, 1864, one year, Fifty-first regiment, company G, private, died February, 1865.

Baker, James William, age 20, volunteer, December 5, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G, served four months, mortally wounded, and died April 8, 1862.

Baker, Samuel, age 16, volunteer, December 5, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G, private, served five months, died May 25, 1862.

Boston, Jacob, age 42, Fifty-second regiment, died in 1865, at North Lee, Pennsylvania, of lung disease.

Battin, John, age 35, drafted September, 1864, one year, Fifty-first regiment, company G, private, served eight months, died May 27, 1865.

Battin, Samuel, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G, died.

Bell, William B., One Hundred and Sixteenth regiment, company F.

Bellville, Cornelius, age 20, volunteer, March 10, 1865, one year, One Hundred and Ninety-sixth regiment, company F, private, served six months, mustered out September 12, 1865.

Bellville, Isaiah, age 17, substitute, May, 1865, one year, One Hundred and Ninety-sixth regiment, company H, private, served four months, mustered out in 1865.

Boston, John L., Seventy-seventh regiment, company G.

Bowersock, Adam L., age 23, volunteer, October 25, 1861, three years, First light artillery, company K, private, served one year, honorably discharged October 15, 1862.

Cline, ———, volunteer, 1863, six months, Fourth Virginia cavalry, private, served six months, mustered out with regiment.

Cline, Jonathan, Thirty-sixth regiment, company E.

Cooper, Robert, Sixty-third regiment, company F. Courim, John T., age 25, volunteer, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company H, private, mustered out.

Craig, Sylvester, age 21, volunteer, July 31, 1864, one year, Ninety-second regiment, company K, private.

Craig, John T., age 17, substitute, July 29, 1864, one year, Seventieth regiment, company H, private.

Cross, Jackson, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G.

Day, William Alfred, age 16, volunteer, November 23, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G, corporal, attained rank of sergeant; veteran enlistment, age 18, volunteer, February, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company E, attained rank of lieutenant.

Denbon, Elisha, age 28, volunteer, August 31, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company A, corporal; veteran enlistment, age 30, volunteer, February, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company A.

Denbon, Thomas, age 27, volunteer, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company I.

Dixon, Albert, age 23, volunteer, October 21, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, served seven months, died May 29, 1862.

Dixon, Jacob.

Duvall, Andrew J., age 34, volunteer, October, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G, sergeant, served six months, killed at Shiloh April 8, 1862.

Dowell, Jesse, Seventy-seventh regiment, company I.

Earley, John, age 35, drafted September 26, 1864, one year, Fifty-first regiment, company G, private, served nine months, mustered out in June, 1865.

Edwards, Samuel, Thirty-sixth regiment, company E.

Edwards, Benjamin R., age 27, volunteer, September, 1862, three years, One Hundred and Sixteenth regiment, company F, private, served eight months, honorably discharged May 20, 1863.

Enochs, John, age 23, drafted September 27, 1864, one year, Sixty-sixth regiment, company I, private, mustered out in July, 1865.

Felton, Conrad, age 21, volunteer, 1861, three years, First light artillery, company K.

Flanagan, James H., age 35, volunteer, February 1, 1865, one year, Thirty-sixth regiment, company C, private, mustered out.

Flanagan, Thomas J., age 27, volunteer, September 20, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, served three years, mustered out in 1864.

Fleming, Porter, age 38, volunteer, March 8, 1865, one year, One Hundred and Ninety-sixth regiment, company F, private, served six months, mustered out September 11, 1865.

Flint, David D., age 22, volunteer, November 11, 1861, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private, served one year, died November 23, 1862.

Flint, James, age 22, substitute, Thirty-sixth regiment, company C, private.

Fox, James, age 44, substitute, October 12, 1864, one year, Fifty-first regiment, company D, private.

Fryman Isaac, age 27, volunteer, 1862, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G, private.

Fulmer, Jacob, age 40, volunteer, 1862, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G, private, died April 27, 1864.

Ganet, Andrew C., Second Virginia cavalry, company C.

Gault, Andrew, age 44, volunteer, September 7, 1861, three years, Second Virginia cavalry, company C, private, served three years, mustered out November 8, 1864.

Gault, Peter, age 18, substitute, November, 1864, one year, Sixty-sixth regiment, company K, private, mustered out in 1865.

Giffen, Robert, age 36, volunteer, February 24, 1865, one year, Thirty-sixth regiment, company E, private, served five months, mustered out July 27, 1865.

Girt, Henry, age 33, volunteer, September, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private.

Griffin, Charles Allen, age 22, volunteer, March, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private.

Groves, Porter Flint, age 19, volunteer, December 10, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G, private, served four months, died in April, 1862, mortally wounded.

Hall, John, Thirty-sixth regiment, company C.

Hall, Thomas, age 33, drafted March 23, 1865, one year, Thirty-ninth regiment, company E, private, served three months.

Handlon, Rufus, Seventy-seventh regiment, company I, private, died October 19, 1864, in Tyler, Texas, prisoner of war.

Haught, Elijah, age 42, volunteer, 1862, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, companies G and E, private.

Haught, William, age 23, volunteer, December 7, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G, private, served three years, mustered out December 23, 1864.

Haught, Leonard, age 21, volunteer, December 7, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G, private, served three years, mustered out December 23, 1864.

Haught, Levi, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G.

Hearn, Granville, age 37, volunteer, October 22, 1861, three years, Second Virginia cavalry, private, veteran enlistment, age 39, volunteer, 1864, three years, Second Virginia cavalry, mustered out in 1865, served as teamster greater part of time.

Hearn, Jacob W., age 27, volunteer, February, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G, private, one battle, served two months, died April 25, 1864, killed.

Hearn, Daniel D., age 21, volunteer, October 25, 1861, three years, First light artillery, company K, private, veteran enlistment, age 23, volunteer, 1864, three years, First light artillery, company K, private, mustered out.

Hearn, Harris, age 17, volunteer, September 13, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, missing September, 1863, captured or killed, or both, at Chickamauga.

Hearn, Josiah, age 15, volunteer, December, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company I, private, served four months, died in April, 1862, mortally wounded.

Hendershott, Brown, age 21, volunteer, February 22, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G, private, served ten months, honorably discharged May 1, 1865.

Hender-shott, H., Sixth cavalry, company E.

Holland, Arius, age 17, volunteer, August 1, 1864, one year, Ninety-second regiment, company H, private, served ten months, mustered out June 10, 1865.

Hood, John Bendoah, age 26, volunteer, February 28, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private, served fourteen months, honorably discharged May, 1865.

Hood, Thomas A., age 24, volunteer, February 28, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D., private, served fourteen months, died April 29, 1865.

Host, John Moffat, Ninety-second regiment, company H.

Host, William H., Seventy-seventh regiment, company D.

Jay, George, age 27, volunteer, July 27, 1861, three years, Seventh Virginia regiment, company D, private, served two years and six months, honorably discharged in 1863; veteran enlistment, volunteer, January 1, 1864, three years, Seventh Virginia regiment, company D, private, served one year and six months, mustered out August 1, 1865.

Joy, Matthew, age 26, volunteer, November 15, 1861, three years, First light artillery, company K, private, attained corporal, served two years, honorably discharged in 1864; veteran enlistment, age 28, volunteer, February 1, 1864, three years, First light artillery, company K, corporal, served one year and six months, mustered out 1865.

Joy, Eliel Long, age 26, volunteer, February, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G, private, served four months, died June 21, 1864.

Joy, Bishop, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G.

Joy, Mordecai B., age 23, volunteer, October, 1862, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G, private.

Joy, David, age 19, volunteer, July 16, 1861, three years, Twenty-seventh regiment, company D, private, second enlistment, age 20, volunteer, November 27, 1862, three years, Seventy-sixth regiment, company I, private.

Kinard, I., Seventy-seventh regiment, company C.

Kinney, John M., age 35, volunteer, October 20, 1861, three years, First light artillery, company K, private served two years and three months, honorably discharged; re-enlisted as a veteran, volunteer, January 16, 1864, three years, First light artillery, company K, private, served one year and six months, mustered out in July, 1865.

McMullin, Ezra, age 33, volunteer, February 17, 1865, one year, Thirty-sixth regiment, company C, private, served three months, honorably discharged May 19, 1865.

McDowell, Lewis, First light artillery, company A.

McVay, Esau, age 31, volunteer, December 9, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company I, private, served nine months, honorably discharged September 8, 1862.

Mendenhall, William T., age 18, volunteer, August 2, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company H, private, served three years, mustered out June 10, 1865.

Moor, Landon Norman, age 17, volunteer, February 27, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private, served one year and three months, honorably discharged June 8, 1865.

McBeth, William, Fourth Virginia, died at Gettysburg, Pennsylvania.

Morey, William H., Thirty-sixth regiment, company G.

Mulninx, David B., age 19, volunteer, August 11, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company H, private, served ten months, honorably discharged June 22, 1863.

Mulninx, John, age 24, volunteer, February, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D.

Parker, John C., age 23, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, re-enlisted as a veteran, February, 1864, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private.

Parker, Robert L., age 24, drafted March 23, 1865, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company G, private, served three months, mustered out July 9, 1865.

Parker, Henry, Fifty-first regiment, company G, veteran.

Parker, John A., age 18, volunteer, October 31, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private; re-enlisted as a veteran February, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C.

Parr, Jacob, age 22, volunteer, October 4, 1862, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G, private.

Parr, William Lafayette, age 18, volunteer, February 22, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G, private.

Platt, James, age 22, volunteer, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company E, died March 2, 1862, mortally wounded.

Prior, Howard, age 35, drafted September 27, 1864, one year, Forty-third regiment.

Pratt, James G., Thirty-ninth regiment, company G, Provance, Joseph, volunteer, December, 1861, one year, Seventy-seventh regiment, company I, nine months, honorably discharged in September, 1862.

Provance, David, volunteer, 1861, one year, Ninth Virginia, company A, mustered out in 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran, volunteer, 1864, one year, Ninth Virginia, company A.

Provance, John William, age 42, volunteer, February 22, 1865, one year, One Hundred and Eighty-ninth regiment, company F, mustered out in 1865.

Provance, David S., age 25, volunteer, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company I, private, honorably discharged in October, 1862.

Provance, James, age 17, volunteer, May, 1861, three years, Twenty-fifth regiment, company C, private, died in May, 1868, mortally wounded.

Provance, John, age 19, volunteer, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company I, private.

Rake, William Jasper, One Hundred and Sixteenth regiment, company F.

Rew, David, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G.

Read, Joseph, age 38, volunteer, December 4, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G, private; re-enlisted as a veteran, volunteer, February, 1864, three years.

Read, Jacob, age 16, volunteer, February 29, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G, private.

Rees, Oliver, age 44, volunteer, 1865, one year, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, mustered out in July, 1865.

Rees, David, age 26, volunteer, September 14, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, served two years and six months; re-enlisted as a veteran, volunteer, February, 1864, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, served one year and six months, mustered out in July, 1865.

Rees, Thomas, age 21, volunteer, September 11, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, served two years and six months; re-enlisted as a veteran, volunteer, February, 1864, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, served one year and six months, mustered out in July, 1865.

Rinard, Isaac, age 20, volunteer, October 25, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private; re-enlisted as a veteran, volunteer, February, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private.

Russell, Levi, age 19, volunteer, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private; re-enlisted as a veteran, volunteer, February, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, died April 13, 1864.

Russell, Samuel, One Hundred and Seventy-fifth regiment, company K.

Sample, William, age 28, volunteer, September 19,

1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, served three years, mustered out September 27, 1864.

Sample, Samuel B., age 19, volunteer, September 14, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, frowned.

Scott, Abijah, Fifty-first regiment, company G.

Scott, Benjamin, age 18, volunteer, December 9, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G, private, three years, served nine months, honorably discharged August 28, 1862.

Scott, Howard, age 16, volunteer, February 6, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G, private, served seven months, died September 1, 1864.

Scott, Basil, age 21, volunteer, February 22, 1865, one year, Thirty-sixth regiment, company C, private, served five months, mustered out July 27, 1865.

Smith, Clark, age 24, volunteer, 1862, three years, Seventh cavalry, company H, private.

Smith, David, age 39, drafted September 27, 1864, one year, Fifty-first regiment, company G, private, served nine months, honorably discharged July 4, 1865.

Snodgrass, Stacy S., age 29, volunteer, November 11, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company I, private; veteran enlistment, age 31, volunteer, February, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company I, private.

Snodgrass, George Washington, age 19, volunteer, August 15, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company H, private, served three years, mustered out June 10, 1865.

Snodgrass, Samuel, age 20, substitute, 1865, one year, Sixty-third regiment, private, mustered out May, 1865.

Still, James Leroy, age 30, drafted March, 1865, one year, Thirty-ninth regiment, company E, private, served three months, mustered out July 9, 1865.

Strahl, Charles, age 22, volunteer, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, private.

Strahl, Martin, volunteer, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, private.

Strahl, Joseph, age 19, substitute, October, 1864, one year, Thirty-third regiment, company B, private, served nine months, mustered out July 20, 1865.

Swallow, George Washington, age 36, volunteer, May, 1861, three years, Twenty-fifth regiment, company H, private, honorably discharged; second enlistment, 1863, six months, Fourth Virginia cavalry, private, mustered out; third enlistment, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company A, private, mustered out 1864.

Swallow, John M., age 22, volunteer, August 1, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company H, private, served eight months, died April 14, 1863.

Thomas, Alexander, age 16, volunteer, February 5, 1862, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private, served three months, honorably discharged May 10, 1862.

Thomas, Samuel, age 19, volunteer, December 12, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G, private, served eleven months, honorably discharged November 20, 1862.

Thomas, Ezer, age 26, volunteer, November, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G, private, served six months, died May 7, 1862.

Thomas, Jacob, drafted September, 1864, one year. Thirty-ninth regiment, company E.

Thomas, Leander, drafted September, 1864, one year, Thirty-ninth regiment, company E.

Tice, Sherwood, age 23, volunteer, February, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G, private.

Tice, Henry.

Turner, George W., age 44, drafted September, 1864, one year, Fifty-first regiment, company D, private, served eight months, honorably discharged June, 1865.

Weddle, William, age 37, volunteer, October 10, 1861, three years, First light artillery, company K, private, served sixteen months, honorably discharged October 20, 1863.

Williams, Daniel, age 17, volunteer, March 22, 1865, one year, Thirty-sixth regiment, company E, private, honorably discharged May 15, 1865.

Wilson, Richard, One Hundred and Sixteenth Ohio regiment, company F.

RECAPITULATION.

De Beck's battery .....	6
One in battery A, First Ohio light artillery.....	1
Second Virginia cavalry .....	3
Fourth Virginia cavalry .....	2
One each in Seventh Ohio volunteer cavalry and Sixth Ohio cavalry .....	2
Seventy-seventh Ohio .....	52
Thirty-sixth Ohio .....	3
Thirty-ninth Ohio .....	6
Fifty-first Ohio .....	8
Ninety-second Ohio .....	8
One Hundred and Sixteenth Ohio .....	4
Sixty-third Ohio .....	2
Twenty-ninth Ohio .....	2
One Hundred and Ninety-sixth Ohio .....	3
Sixty-sixth Ohio .....	2
And one each in the Twenty-seventh Ohio, Forty- third Ohio, Thirty-third Ohio, Sixty-second Ohio, Seventy-eighth Ohio, Seventieth Ohio, One Hundred and Seventy-ninth Ohio, Sev- enth Virginia, Eighty-ninth Ohio, Ninth Vir- ginia, One Hundred and Forty-eighth Ohio National guards, One Hundred and Seventy- fifth Ohio .....	12
Total number soldiers .....	166
Died .....	21

MARIETTA TOWNSHIP.

Alcock, Thomas, age 44, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company B, corporal, served five months, mustered out October, 1864.

Baldwin, Saint Clair, age 41, volunteer, May 1, 1861, three years, Tenth regiment, company I, private, attained rank of corporal, served three years, mustered out 1864; regular veteran enlistment, age 44, volunteer, 1864, First New York light artillery, company L, private, served eight months, mustered out July 17, 1865.

Beach, John Berwick, age 21, volunteer, October 15, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, sergeant, served two years and three months, honorably discharged February, 1864; veteran enlistment, age 23, volunteer, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, sergeant, died September 1, 1866, lost leg in army.

Beach, Asa Pardee, volunteer, February 10, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, private.

Bartness, George J., Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, died.

Bean, James F., Seventh Virginia cavalry, company H.

Berry.

Blanzet, William H., three years, Eighteenth regiment.

Bodman, Frederick, Thirty-ninth regiment, company F.

Boughton, Calvin C., age 20, volunteer, September, 1861, three years, First cavalry, company L, private, served three years, mustered out 1864.

Buell, Timothy L., age 26, volunteer, September, 1862, three years, Seventh cavalry, company H, private, attained rank of sergeant, served three years mustered out 1865.

Bush, William, One Hundred and Sixteenth regiment, company C.

Cain, James Gibson, age 26, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company B, private, served five months, mustered out October, 1864.

Cain, Martin S., age 22, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company B, private, served five months, mustered out October, 1864.

Campbell, M. M., Ninety-second regiment, company F.

Campbell, S. Madison, age 18, volunteer, September, 1862, three years, Seventh cavalry, company H, private, attained rank of corporal, served two years and ten months, mustered out 1865.

Campbell, Thomas R., volunteer, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, private, died September 25, 1862.

Campbell, William R., volunteer, three years, First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, mustered out June 28, 1865.

Carpenter, Jasper N., volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company B, private, served four months, mustered out September 14, 1864.

Chambers, William, age 23, volunteer, September, 1862, three years, Seventh cavalry, company H, private, served four months, honorably discharged January, 1863.

Chambers, Ellis T., age 21, volunteer, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company F, private.

Classpil, George.

Clogston, Charles, volunteer, three years, First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, attained rank of corporal, mustered out June 28, 1865.

Cole, William Henry H., age 21, volunteer, September, 1862, three years, Seventh cavalry, company H, private, served two years and ten months, mustered out 1865.

Cole, Hiram Howe, age 21, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company B, private, served five months, mustered out October, 1864.

Cole, John W. B., age 18, volunteer, June, 1863, three years. First cavalry, company L, private, served eight months, died September 20, 1864, of typhoid fever, near Atlanta.

Coombs, William, age 18, volunteer, 1862, three years. Ninety-second regiment, company F, private, attained rank of corporal, mustered out June 10, 1865.

Conkle, Jacob, age 15, volunteer, July, 1863, six months. Fourth Virginia cavalry, company D, private, served nine months, mustered out March, 1864; reenlistment, age 16, volunteer, April, 1864, three years. Seventh Virginia cavalry, company D, private, served one year and two months, mustered out July, 1864.

Conkle, Abner, age 16, volunteer, 1863, one year. Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, served four months, mustered out July, 1865.

Cook, Charles Augustus, age 32, volunteer, August 12, 1861, three years. Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, served five and one-half months, honorably discharged January 31, 1862.

Corner, Whitney R., age 21, volunteer, February, 1864, three years. First cavalry, company L, private, served one year and six months, mustered out September 26, 1865.

Corrig, George, volunteer, 1862, three years. Ninety-second regiment, company F, private, attained rank of corporal, served three years, mustered out 1865.

Crickard, William C., age 20, volunteer, April, 1863, three years. First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, served two years and three months, mustered out June 28, 1865.

Curtis, William, age 17, volunteer, May, 1862, three months. Eighty-seventh regiment, company A, corporal, served four months, mustered out October 1, 1862.

Dailey, Isaac, First regiment light artillery, company K.

Davis, John, Thirty-sixth regiment, company I.

Davis Albert, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B.

Davis, Willard, age 38, volunteer, 1861, three years. Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, private, honorably discharged 1862.

Dibble, Hannibal, age 21, volunteer, May 27, 1861, three months. Eighteenth regiment, company B, private, served three months, mustered out August 28, 1861; second enlistment, age 21, volunteer, September, 1861, three years. First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, served two years and six months, 1864, third enlistment, age 24, volunteer, March 31, 1864, three years. First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, served one year and three months, honorably discharged 1865.

Dotson, Michael, age 28, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days. One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company B, private, served five months, mustered out September 14, 1864.

Dotson, Joseph, Third regiment, company B.

Dotson, Samuel, volunteer, September 16, 1861, three years. First cavalry, company L, corporal.

Douglas, Edward J., age 24, volunteer, July 22, 1861, three years. Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, served three years, mustered out August 2, 1864, transferred to company D, veteran reserve corps.

Dye, David L., Seventh cavalry, company H.

Edgar, Isaac, age 19, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days. One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company B, private, served five months, mustered out September 14, 1864.

Dye, Sanford, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days. One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company B, private, four months, mustered out September 14, 1864.

Guise, Abram E., First cavalry, company C.

Gurley, John, Thirty-sixth regiment, company C. Harris, Henry M., volunteer, September 16, 1861, three years. First cavalry, company L, private.

Harsha, William, age 19, volunteer, September 16, 1861, three years. First cavalry, company L, private, served two years and six months, honorably discharged 1864; veteran enlistment, age 21, volunteer, 1864, three years. First cavalry, company L, corporal, served one year and six months, mustered out September 26, 1865.

Harsha, Robert, age 19, volunteer, First cavalry, company L, private.

Hart, Jeremiah, Seventh cavalry, company H.

Hays, John, age 17, volunteer, 1861, three years. Ninth Virginia regiment, company C, private, served two years and six months, honorably discharged 1864, veteran enlistment, age 19, volunteer, 1864, three years. Ninth Virginia regiment, company C, private, attained rank of sergeant, served one year and six months, mustered out 1865.

Hemmeger, William, age 27, volunteer, November 17, 1863, three years. Ninety-second regiment, company F, private, served one year and eight months, mustered out July 20, 1865, transferred to Thirty-first when the Ninety-second was discharged.

Henneger, Alfred, age 18, volunteer, October, 1861, three years. Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, private, served two years and three months, honorably discharged 1864, veteran enlistment, age 20, volunteer, February, 1864, three years. Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, private, served two years.

Henrich, James, age 17, volunteer, 1861, three years. First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, served two years, honorably discharged 1864; veteran enlistment, age 19, volunteer, March, 1864, three years. First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, served one year and three months, mustered out 1865.

Hill, Daniel Y., volunteer, April, 1861, three months. Eighteenth regiment, company B, private, served three months, August, 1861.

Hill, John, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days. One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company B, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Hill, Edward Thomas, age 26, volunteer, February 13, 1864, three years. Seventy-seventh regiment, company H and D, private.

Hill, Wallace, age 18, volunteer, three years. Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, private, died May 6, 1863, at Alton, Illinois, of measles.

Hill, Ephraim A., age 17, volunteer, May, 1862, three months. Eighty-seventh regiment, company A, private, served four months, mustered out October 1, 1862, reenlistment, age 18, volunteer, August 9, 1863, three years. Second heavy artillery, company K, private, died April 3, 1865, of intermittent fever.

Hoffman, John Henry, age 17, volunteer, May 28, 1862, three months, Eighty-fifth regiment, company F, private, mustered out, reenlistment, age 19, volunteer, February 2, 1864, three years, First cavalry, company L, private, one year and eight months, mustered out September 26, 1865.

Hoit, Jeremiah, age 31, volunteer, September, 1862, three years, Seventh cavalry, company H, private, served two years and eight months, mustered out July 4, 1865.

House, Amos, age 37, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company B, private, served four months, mustered out September 14, 1864.

House, John, age 30, volunteer, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company B, private, served four months, mustered out September 14, 1864.

Hutchenson, H. Underhill, age 33, volunteer, October 22, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, private, attained to rank of corporal, served three years, mustered out October 20, 1864.

Kerr, John, age 22, volunteer, September, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, served three years, mustered out.

Magee, George, age 19, volunteer, September 19, 1861, three years, First cavalry, company L, private, served three years, mustered out in 1864.

Magee, Hiram, age 18, volunteer, November, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, private, served two and one-fourth years, honorably discharged February, 1864, veteran enlistment, age 20, volunteer, February, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, private, served two years.

Magee, Ansel Ward, volunteer, January 4, 1864, three years, First cavalry, company L, private, served one and two-thirds years, mustered out September 26, 1865.

Maxon, Russell W., age 18, volunteer, January, 1864, three years, First cavalry, company L, private, served eight months, died September 20, 1864.

McGrath, Thomas, aged 24, volunteer, September 1, 1861, three years, First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, served two and a half years, honorably discharged March, 1864, veteran enlistment, age 26, volunteer, March 31, 1864, three years, First Virginia light artillery, battery C, private, served one year and three months, mustered out June, 1865.

McGregory, B., Seventy-seventh regiment, company B.

Miller, John William, age 24, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company B, corporal, mustered out September, 1864.

Miller, Robert Taylor, age 23, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company B, private, mustered out September, 1864.

Miller, Charles Augustus, age 20, volunteer, September 2, 1862, three years, Seventh cavalry, company H, private, attained the rank of corporal, mustered out July 4, 1865.

Miller, James.

Mitchell, Edward S., age 19, volunteer, August 8, 1862, three years, Seventh cavalry, company H, private, served one year, died in 1863, of chronic diarrhea.

Nelson, Philip O., age 16, volunteer, January, 1864, three years, First cavalry, company L, private, served one and a half years, mustered out September 26, 1865.

Nixon, Zebulon J., age 20, volunteer, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, veteran enlistment, age 22, volunteer, 1864, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A.

Nixon, Edward William, age 19, volunteer, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company B, private, mustered out September 14, 1864.

Northrop, J. Thurston, age 17, volunteer, September 2, 1862, three years, Seventh cavalry, company H, private.

Northrop, Henry A., substitute, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company F, private, mustered out September, 1864, second enlistment, volunteer, February 15, 1865, one year, Thirty-sixth regiment, company C, private, served five and a half months, mustered out August, 1865.

Oliver, David, age 26, volunteer, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company F, private, mustered out June 10, 1865.

Oliver, Albert, age 18, volunteer, July 19, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, served two years and six months, honorably discharged in 1863, veteran enlistment, age 20, volunteer, 1864, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, served one year and six months, mustered out July 9, 1865.

Oliver, Thomas, age 16, volunteer, Seventy-seventh regiment, company I, private.

Oliver, Henry, age 17, volunteer, 1863, six months, Fourth cavalry, company C, private, reenlistment, age 17, volunteer, February, 1864, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, died August, 1864, killed at Fredericktown, Maryland.

Otis, H. L., Twenty-third regiment, company H. Posey, Dudley, age 18, volunteer, July 28, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company F, fifer, served eight and a half months, honorably discharged March 15, 1863.

Posey, Henry Clay, age 17, volunteer, March 31, 1864, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, served one and a half years, mustered out July 27, 1865.

Priest, William Henry, age 23, volunteer, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company F, private, honorably discharged 1865.

Priest, John Summer, age 19, volunteer, March 6, 1864, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, served one month, died April 6, 1864.

Rake, Abraham, Seventh cavalry, company H, died. Rake, Elias, Seventh cavalry, company H, died at Marietta, Ohio.

Rake, John, Jr., Seventh cavalry, company H, killed at Rocky Gap, Kentucky.

Reckard, Wesley J., age 24, volunteer, September, 1861, three years, First cavalry, company L, private, served seven and a half months, honorably discharged June 1862.

Reeves, Abram, volunteer, August 9, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company F, private, served two years and eight months, mustered out June 10, 1865.

Reeves, Isaac, volunteer, Ninety-second regiment, company F, died February 25, 1864, gunshot.

Reeves, Isaac, Jr., age 18, volunteer, July 20, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company F, private, served one year and six months, honorably discharged May 20, 1864.

Richardson, Edward L., age 18, volunteer, February 15, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, private, served six months, died February 25, 1864, Tyler, Texas, prisoner of war.

Riley, John Newton, age 18, volunteer, September 2, 1862, three years, Seventh cavalry, company H, private, served two years and nine months, discharged August, 1864.

Riley, Judson, age 17, volunteer, February, 1864, three years, First cavalry, company L, private, served one year and six months, mustered out August, 1865.

Riley, John, age 21, volunteer, September 16, 1861, three years, First cavalry, company L, private, served fifteen months, honorably discharged, reenlistment, age 24, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company B, corporal, mustered out September, 1864.

Riley, Warren, age 19, volunteer, September, 1861, three years, First cavalry, company L, private, served nine months, honorably discharged June 22, 1862, reenlistment, age 22, volunteer, February 10, 1864, three years, First cavalry, company L, private, attained rank of corporal, served one year and six months, mustered out September 26, 1865.

Robinson, Lucius L., age 20, volunteer, March, 1865, one year, One Hundred and Eightieth regiment, company F, private.

Robinson, Charles Eli, age 16, volunteer, January, 1864, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, served one year and six months, mustered out July, 1865.

Rood, D. R., volunteer, three years, First cavalry, company L, private.

Rumbles, Charles, Thirty-sixth regiment, company H.

Sanford, George Philip, age 20, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Second Virginia cavalry, company F, corporal, served two years and six months, veteran enlistment, age 22, volunteer, 1864, three years, Second Virginia cavalry, company F, corporal, attained rank of sergeant.

Sanford, Thomas Spencer, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company B, corporal.

Sanford, John P., volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company B, captain, served four months, mustered out September 14, 1864.

Sanford, Charles Henry, age 24, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, First cavalry, company L, private, served two years and six months, honorably discharged, veteran enlistment, age 26, volunteer, 1864, three years, First cavalry, company L, private, served one year and six months, mustered out August, 1865.

Sawyers, George W., volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company B, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Scott, Jacob Hanson, age 19, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company G, drummer, served four months, mustered out September 14, 1864.

Sheldon, Hiram, age 21, volunteer, three years, One Hundred and Sixteenth regiment, company D.

Sheldon, Charles, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company A, private.

Sheppard, Thomas R., age 19, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company A, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Smith, Moses, age 48, volunteer, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, corporal, served ten months, honorably discharged for disability May 23, 1862.

Smith, Joshua Pitt, age 26, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company B, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Smith, David Chesmy, age 24, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company B, private, four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Snyder, Joseph D., age 21, volunteer, August, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company F, sergeant, one year, died October 13, 1863.

Stanhope, John William, age 13, volunteer, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, companies C and E, drummer, honorably discharged, veteran enlistment, age 15, volunteer, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, companies C and E, drum major.

Strickler, Isaac, Ninety-second regiment, company F.

Stuckey, Jeremiah, age 35, substitute, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company A, private, died May, 1864.

Thorniley, William, volunteer, July, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company F, captain, served nine months, resigned April 9, 1863.

Thorniley, Willis Hall, volunteer, November 5, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, private, attained rank of corporal, served three years, mustered out December 10, 1864.

Thorniley, Warren, age 17, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Seventy-eighth regiment, company B, private, served four months, mustered out September 14, 1864.

Thorniley, James, volunteer, July 9, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company F, private, served three years, mustered out 1865, transferred to invalid corps in 1863.

Thorniley, Nathan DeWitt, age 20, volunteer, August 9, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company F, private, served one year, died September 4, 1863, of consumption at Nashville.

Thorniley, Rinaldo R., age 23, volunteer, August 9, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company F, private, served one year and four months, honorably discharged December 7, 1863.

Wells, John C., three years, Ninety-second regiment, company F, private.

Wendland, Julius, Seventy-second regiment, company B, private.

Wendland, Robert, Twenty-eighth regiment, company K, private.

West, James Compton, age 39, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company B, orderly sergeant, mustered out September, 1864.

West, William Wilson, age 34, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company B, first lieutenant, mustered out September, 1864.

West, Thomas Jefferson, age 21, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company B, corporal, mustered out September, 1864.

West, Henry Clay, age 18, volunteer, August 30, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, attained the rank of sergeant, served three years, mustered out in 1864.

West, Leslie Coombs, age 16, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company B, drummer, mustered out September, 1864.

Wilson, Matthew W., age 30, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company B, sergeant, mustered out September, 1864.

Wilson, Milo, age 20, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company B, private, mustered out September, 1864.

Woodward, Orlando, age 18, volunteer, January 19, 1864, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, fifer, served one year and a half mustered out July 9, 1865.

Yeardley, Frank B., volunteer, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, died.

Yeardley, John, volunteer, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B.

Wright, William, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C.

RECAPITULATION.

Buell's Pierpont battery	8
And one each in First New York light artillery, De Beck's battery, battery K, Second Ohio heavy artillery, in all	3
First Ohio cavalry	20
Seventh Ohio cavalry	15
One each in Fourth Virginia cavalry, Ninth Virginia cavalry, Fourth Ohio cavalry, Second Virginia cavalry, in all	4
One Hundred and Forty-eighth Ohio National guard	32
Seventy-seventh Ohio	19
Ninety-second Ohio	18
Thirty-sixth Ohio	14
Thirty-ninth Ohio	6
Eighteenth Ohio (three months)	2
One Hundred and Sixteenth Ohio	2
Eighty-seventh Ohio	2

And one each in Tenth Ohio, Eighteenth Ohio, Seventh Virginia, Third Ohio, Eighty-fifth Ohio, Twenty-third Ohio, Twenty-eighth Ohio, and One Hundred and Eightieth Ohio, and one not designated, in all

Total number soldiers ..... 134
Died ..... 14

HARMAR VILLAGE.

Adams, Horatio N., age 25, volunteer, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company F, private, died January 27, 1863, at Gallipolis, of dropsy.

Alexander, Robert, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, private.

Ammon, Henry, company F, Sixty-third Ohio infantry, company H, Second Ohio heavy artillery.

Berry Zenas Asa, age 18, volunteer, February 4, 1865, one year, Fifth cavalry, company D, private, served nine months, mustered out October 30, 1865.

Briant, Permenus, age 40, volunteer, September 21, 1864, one year, First light artillery, company H, private, served nine months, mustered out June 15, 1865, detailed as artificer.

Bartlett, Sylvester, volunteer, August, 1864, gunboat, private, honorably discharged.

Bartlett, H., age 18, volunteer, November 1, 1861, Sixty-third regiment, company D, private, attained the rank of corporal, served three years and eight months, mustered out July 8, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Bruch, James, Eleventh regiment.

Babcock, William Winslow, age 44, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company A, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Babcock, James Whitney, Jr., age 20, substitute, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company K, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Boring, Absolom, age 43, January 5, 1864, First cavalry, company L, private, served one year and eight months, mustered out September 26, 1865.

Bauer, Jacob, First cavalry, company L.

Barker, Jesse H., age 19, volunteer, July 29, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, corporal, attained the rank of commissary sergeant, served two years and five months, mustered out January 1, 1864.

Bisbee, William H., volunteer, May, 1861, three months, Eighteenth regiment, attained the rank of major, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Boeshar, Christian, volunteer, Thirty-ninth regiment, company F.

Bishop, William, volunteer, First cavalry, company L, private.

Briant, Andrew J., age 34, volunteer, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company F, private, served three years, mustered out June 12, 1865, sick and after one year detailed in the commissary department.

Beckwith, B., age 33, volunteer, August 18, 1864, one year, First cavalry, company H, private, served ten months mustered out July 20, 1865.

Boyd, Joseph, age 36, volunteer, August, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company G, private, served three years, mustered out June 12, 1865.

Barber, Henry, age 20, August 1, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, drummer, served two years, honorably discharged August 21, 1863, for disability.

Brown, John William, age 18, substitute, March 19, 1865, one year, Eighteenth regiment, company H, private, served seven months mustered out October 9, 1865.

Barber, Levi, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, captain, one year and three months, resigned November 29, 1862.

Brickwady, Jacob, volunteer, Thirty-ninth regiment.

Chambers, Salmon M., age 20, volunteer, October, 1861, three years, First cavalry, company L, private, served four years, mustered out September 13, 1865, enlisted as a veteran.

Chambers, Otis J., volunteer, three years, First cavalry, company L, private.

Carpenter, Theodore, age 17, volunteer, 1865, one year, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, mustered out July 27, 1865.

Caywood, William, age 50, substitute, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company A, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1865.

Caywood, John William, age 24, volunteer, September 1, 1862, three years, Seventh cavalry, company H, corporal, attained the rank of sergeant, served three years, mustered out July 4, 1865.

Chapin, Arthur B., age 19, volunteer, September 16, 1861, cavalry, company L, sergeant, served three years, mustered out 1861.

Childers, Otis L., age 20, volunteer, February 16, 1862, three years, First cavalry, company L, private, served three years mustered out September 13, 1865.

Childers, Joseph H., age 22, volunteer, August 5, 1863, three years, First light artillery, company H, private, served two years, mustered out July 31, 1865.

Childers, Simon, volunteer, Twenty-first Illinois, company D, died August 1, 1862.

Congdon, Buell, age 27, volunteer, July 22, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, companies B and F, private, attained rank of orderly sergeant served four years, mustered out July 9, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Congdon, John G., age 59, volunteer, October 17, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company K, private, honorably discharged for disability.

Chamberlain William.

Corey, David, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A.
Dailey, Thomas Cook, age 24, volunteer, May 27, 1861, three months, Eighteenth regiment, company B, private, served three months mustered out August 28, 1861, re-enlistment, volunteer, August 6, 1862, three years, First light artillery, company H, private, attained rank of sergeant served two years and ten months, honorably discharged June 14, 1865.

Dailey, William H., age 21, volunteer, September, 1861, three years, First cavalry, company L, private, mustered out September 26, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran, was discharged once for disability.

Daniels, James B., Thirty-ninth regiment, company B.

Daniels, Joseph B., age 34, volunteer, November, 1862, three years, Ninth cavalry, company B, first lieutenant, attained rank of captain, served three years, mustered out August 2, 1865.

Davis, Albert A., volunteer, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company K, private, died April 6, 1862, killed at Shiloh.

Devol, Simeon M., age 19, volunteer, August, 1861, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, served eight months, honorably discharged 1862, second enlistment, volunteer, six months, Fourth Virginia cavalry, company D, private, served six months, mustered out, third enlistment, substitute, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company A, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864, fourth enlistment, substitute, April, 1865, one year, Eighteenth regiment, company I, private, served six months, mustered out, 1865.

Dilley, James, Jr., age 39, volunteer, June 3, 1861, served three years, Tenth regiment, company G, private, served three years, mustered out 1864 captured, in prison three weeks.

Douthitt, James, volunteer, Ninety-second regiment, company F.

Duden, John, age 21, volunteer, September 16, 1861, three years, First cavalry, company L, private, served three years, mustered out September 17, 1864.

Duden, Henry, age 20, volunteer, February 1, 1862, three years, First cavalry, company L, private, attained rank of commissary sergeant, served three years and seven months, mustered out September 26, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Duden, Charles, age 19, volunteer, October, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private, attained rank of sergeant, served seven months, died May, 1862, at Camp Dennison, of typhoid fever.

Dye, Sanford, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company B, private.

Dye, Sereno, volunteer, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private.

Dye, Daniel H., volunteer, Ninety-second regiment, company F.

Eddleston, Hugh B., age 18, volunteer, September 16, 1861, three years, First cavalry, company L, private, served three years, mustered out September 17, 1864.

Eddleston, John C., age 16, volunteer, September 1, 1861, First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, served three years, died October 26, 1864, of intermittent fever, at Alexandria, Virginia.

Farley, George, Thirty-ninth regiment, company K.

Farley, John W., First cavalry, company L.
Fearing, Francis D., age 21, volunteer, August, 1862, three years, First light artillery, company H, private, served five months died January 3, 1863, of typhoid fever.

Fearing, Benjamin D., volunteer, 1861, three years,

Seventy-seventh regiment, major, attained rank of brevet brigadier general, mustered out May, 1865, transferred to the Ninety-second.

Finch, Darius, First cavalry, company L.

Gillingham, Milton, age 32, volunteer, 1861, three months, Eighteenth regiment, company B, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1861, re-enlistment, September 16, 1861, three years, First cavalry, company L, private, four years, mustered out September 13, 1865.

Green, George L., age 18, volunteer, January 15, 1864, First cavalry, company L, private, served one year, honorably discharged for disability February 27, 1865.

Gates, Charles L., age 37, volunteer, January, 1864, First cavalry, company L, private, served eight months, mustered out September 26, 1865, in hospital three months.

Goodin, Stephen, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company K. Gossett, Ephraim, age 35, substitute, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company I, private, four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Hall, Lyman W., volunteer, First cavalry, company L, private.

Hale, Alexander S., age 18, August 1, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, served four years, mustered out July 27, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Hale, William Owen, age 17, volunteer, July 24, 1863, six months, Fourth Virginia cavalry, company D, private, served eight months, mustered out March, 1864, second enlistment May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company K, private, served four months, mustered out September 14, 1864, third enlistment February 18, 1865, one year, Thirty-sixth regiment, company C, private, served five months, mustered out July 27, 1865.

Hale, Simeon, age 28, volunteer, Sixty-third regiment, company H, private.

Hill, William, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A. Harlow, Thomas C., volunteer, First cavalry, company C, private.

Hart, Percival P., age 26, volunteer, 1862, steamer Patten, served eight months, honorably discharged for disability 1863, died June 12, 1863.

Hart, David W., age 23, volunteer, 1861, three years, First cavalry, company C, first sergeant attained rank of first lieutenant, served four years, mustered out September 13, 1865.

Hart, Samuel, age 31, volunteer, January 11, 1862, three years, Seventy-fifth regiment, surgeon, breveted lieutenant colonel, served three years and seven months, honorably discharged August 5, 1865, on duty with Sixteenth United States regiment at battle of Chattanooga, afterwards in charge of United States general hospital at Chattanooga, Tullahoma, Murfreesborough and Nashville.

Henrich, John, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D.

Hill, Samuel G., volunteer, August 11, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company F, sergeant, served three years, mustered out June 10, 1865.

Hill, William.

Hollister, Arthur, volunteer, Second Ohio heavy artillery, company K, private.

Hoff, James, age 17, volunteer, July 6, 1863, Fourth Ohio volunteer cavalry, company C, served eight months, honorably discharged March, 1864; re-enlisted March, 1864, Thirteenth Ohio volunteer cavalry, company A, second sergeant, served four months, died July 30, 1864.

Henry, Jacob, age 16, volunteer, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company F, corporal, three years, mustered out 1864.

Huntsman, Cyrus S., volunteer, Seventh cavalry, company H, died in service.

Huntsman, D. D., volunteer, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B.

Ingraham, Ralph, volunteer, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private, died April 2, 1862, at Paducah, Kentucky.

Jewell, Albert, volunteer, First Michigan.

Johnson, Charles, volunteer, Tenth regiment.

Jack, David L., Ninety-second regiment, company E, private.

Judd, Charles Hildreth, age 34, volunteer, August 22, 1862, three years, Nineteenth regiment, company A, corporal, detailed clerk, served two years, honorably discharged for disability September 25, 1864.

Maxon, George W., First light artillery, company H.

Matthews, Stephen, age 35, volunteer, October 16, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company K, private, served one year, honorably discharged August 8, 1862, captured at Shiloh, in prison one month and paroled.

Matthews, Solon, age 30, volunteer, August 7, 1862, three years, First light artillery, company H, private, served three years, mustered out June 14, 1865.

Lancaster, Frank, three months, Eighty-seventh regiment, company A, private, second enlistment July 6, 1863, Fourth Virginia cavalry, company C, private, attained rank of corporal, third enlistment March, 1864, Thirteenth cavalry, company A, sergeant, honorably discharged July 18, 1865.

Marsh, Brigham, age 31, volunteer, January 5, 1864, three years, First cavalry, company L, private, served one year and eight months mustered out September 26, 1865.

Matthews, Stephen D., volunteer, Seventy-seventh regiment, company E, honorably discharged.

Matthews, John, volunteer, First cavalry.

Matthews, Solon, volunteer, First light artillery, company H.

McCulloch, Anthony W., volunteer, March 5, 1864, three years, First cavalry, company L, private.

Maxon, George W., First light artillery, honorably discharged.

McGinty, Michael, age 33, volunteer, February 3, 1864, three years, Seventy-third regiment, company F, private, died at Columbus of brain fever in 1865.

McGinty, Neil, age 24, volunteer, February 3, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company F, private, served one year and five months, mustered out July 20, 1865.

Merwin, Lewis P., First cavalry, company L, private.

Mervin, George W., volunteer, Eighteenth United States, company I, private.

Milligan, John, age 25, substitute, October 1, 1864, Fifteenth Tennessee, company K, private, served nine months, honorably discharged for disability July, 1865.

Milligan, William, age 21, volunteer, 1861, three years, First cavalry, company L, private, served four years, transferred to infantry August, 1864.

Milligan, George, age 23, volunteer, 1863, Sixty-third regiment, company H, private, served one year, died 1864.

Morton, Jackson, volunteer, First cavalry, company L.

Muncy, Isaac, age 17, volunteer, August 13, 1864, one year, First cavalry, company H, private, served one year, honorably discharged 1865.

Muncey, John D., age 25, volunteer, January 5, 1864, First cavalry, company L, private, transferred to Ninth United States colored artillery, company E, March, 1865.

Muncey, Montgomery, age 20, volunteer, January 11, 1864, First cavalry, company L, private, transferred to Ninth United States colored artillery, company E, March, 1865.

Naylor, Harrison, age 19, volunteer, June, 1861, First cavalry, company L, private, mustered out and re-enlisted as a veteran.

Naylor, James M., age 17, volunteer, September 1, 1861, three years, First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, mustered out 1865.

Nugent, Henry E., age 21, volunteer, July 2, 1863, three years, Second heavy artillery, company K, private, honorably discharged June 23, 1865.

Pattin, Thomas J., volunteer, 1864, First cavalry, company L, captain, attained rank of lieutenant colonel, mustered out.

Plant, Daniel A., volunteer, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B.

Parker, James, age 24, volunteer, April 19, 1861, three months, Eighteenth regiment, company B, private, served four months, mustered out August 28, 1861, re-enlistment, volunteer, February 16, 1861, three years, First cavalry, company L, private, wounded December 31, 1862, and honorably discharged for disability June 15, 1863.

Parks, Miles, volunteer, First Virginia cavalry, company L, private.

Price, William, age 36, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, private.

Pryor, Nathan, volunteer, First cavalry, company L, private.

Putnam, Samuel H., age 26, volunteer, September 16, 1861, three years, First cavalry, company L, sergeant, attained rank of first lieutenant, resigned October 20, 1863.

Putnam, Douglas Jr., volunteer, July, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, first lieutenant, attained rank of lieutenant colonel, honorably discharged April 11, 1864.

Pugh, Thomas, age 41, volunteer, November 9, 1864, Sixty-seventh regiment, company B, private, served five months, wounded at Fort Gregory, and discharged for disability May 31, 1865.

Quimby, George, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company L.

Quimby, Daniel.

Rardin, Thomas, volunteer, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private.

Regnier, Frederick A., volunteer, First light artillery, company H.

Rainey, Milton, volunteer, First cavalry, company L.

Rice, William, age 23, volunteer, 1861, three years, First cavalry, company L, private, served three years, mustered out in 1864.

Reppert, H. Clay, volunteer, three years, First cavalry, company L, second lieutenant, attained rank of captain, mustered out September 28, 1865.

Reppert, Walter, volunteer, February 1, 1863, three years, First cavalry, company L, corporal.

Regnier, Charles F., age 17, volunteer, August 13, 1862, three years, First light artillery, company H, private, served three months, honorably discharged December 13, 1862, for disability.

Rash, Charles, volunteer, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private.

Reese, Samuel, age 31, volunteer, August 3, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company F, private, served three years, honorably discharged June 10, 1865, detailed as teamster.

Russell, Charles, volunteer, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private.

Roush, James, age 28, volunteer, September 30, 1864, one year, First cavalry, company H, private, served nine months, mustered out June 17, 1865.

Roberts, William, volunteer, October 6, 1862, three years, private, honorably discharged June 19, 1865.

Sears, Uz, age 23, volunteer, May 9, 1861, three years, Ninth Pennsylvania, company D, private, served three years, mustered out in 1864.

Shears, Isaac, volunteer, January 4, 1864, three years, First cavalry, company L, private.

Scott, John, age 50, volunteer, three years, 1861, Seventy-seventh regiment, company K, orderly sergeant, died May 4, 1862, of congestion of the brain.

Scott, Darwin, age 18, volunteer, 1861, three years, First cavalry, company L, private, served four years, mustered out September 13, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Scott, William, age 23, Seventy-seventh regiment, company I.

Schilling, Joseph, age 17½, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company A, private, served four months, mustered out in September, 1864.

Shepard, Henry, age 35, volunteer, July, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, second lieutenant, attained rank of first lieutenant served one year, resigned June 10, 1862.

Skinner, Adolphus M., age 19, volunteer, March 23, 1864, three years, First Virginia cavalry, company

C, private, served one year and four months, honorably discharged July 11, 1865, wounded July 24, 1864, afterward served as hospital nurse.

Shepard, Courtland, Jr., volunteer, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, killed at Antietam September 17, 1862.

Smith, Jonathan, First cavalry, company L.

Smith, William H., age 24, volunteer, 1863, United States navy, master's mate.

Smith, John W., age 19, volunteer, April, 1861, Eighteenth regiment, company B, private, served three months, mustered out in 1861, re-enlistment, 1861, three years, First cavalry, company L, private, honorably discharged in 1862 for disability.

Smith, Elijah G., age 37, volunteer, October 21, 1861, First light artillery, company H, private honorably discharged April 17, 1863, for physical disability, re-enlistment, volunteer, July 8, 1863, Second heavy artillery, private, honorably discharged on account of physical disability.

Smith, Jeremiah, volunteer, October, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company F, private, served three years, mustered out June 10, 1865.

Smith, Henry M., age 18, volunteer, February, 1862, three years, Sixty-third regiment, private, served two years and three months, killed at Kennesaw Mountain, June 26, 1865.

Snodgrass, William H., First cavalry, company L. Steward, George, age 35, substitute, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company K, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Stewart, Jonathan C., First cavalry, company L.

Stevens, Hugh, Seventy-seventh regiment, company K.

Stremple, Charles, age 20, volunteer, 1861, three months, Eighteenth regiment, company B, private, mustered out August 28, 1861, re-enlisted in company B, Eighteenth Ohio battery, and died April, 1862, in Kentucky.

Stremple, Henry, volunteer, First cavalry, company L, private.

Stiles, Benjamin F., First cavalry, company L.

Sugden, Edmonds J., age 19, volunteer, July 22, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, served three years, mustered out August, 1864, detailed for hospital service.

Sugden, Thomas Henry, age 19, volunteer, December, 1863, Sixty-third regiment, company F, drummer, mustered out July 8, 1865.

Strahl, Joseph S., volunteer, 1862, six months, Eighty-seventh regiment, company A, discharged March 12, 1863, re-enlistment, company C, Fourth Ohio independent battery, cavalry company M, Thirtieth Ohio cavalry, March 14, 1864, three years, orderly sergeant, attained the rank of captain, mustered out August 18, 1865.

Thurman, John H., volunteer, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, died in service.

Tunecliff, William, January 16, 1864, three years, First cavalry, company L, private.

Turner, Thomas M., volunteer, December, 1862, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, first lieutenant, attained the rank of captain, quartermaster.

Thorniley, Thomas, volunteer, First cavalry, company L, died August 22, 1864, at Nashville, Tennessee.

Tise, Jacob, Thirty-sixth regiment, company C.

Tise, Philip B., Thirty-sixth regiment, company C.

Underwood, Oscar H., age 61, volunteer, February, 1861, three years, First cavalry, company C, second lieutenant, served nine months, resigned October, 1861.

Walters, William E., Ninety-second regiment, company F, private, honorably discharged.

Wells, John W., volunteer, August 6, 1862, three years, First light artillery, company H, private, served three years, mustered out June 14, 1865.

Walton, Josiah, age 42, volunteer, October, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company F, private.

Wilson, Rector R., age 26, volunteer, January 4, 1864, First cavalry, company L, blacksmith, served one year and eight months, mustered out September 13, 1865.

Wilson, William, age 18, substitute, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company K, private, mustered out September, 1864, detailed as telegraph operator.

Whiting, Theodore, age 17, volunteer, August 31, 1862, three years, Eleventh Virginia regiment, company D, private, died June 6, 1863, of consumption.

Young, Daniel S., age 52, volunteer, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company K, private, died September 7, 1863, never in active service.

Young, John Lewis, age 41, volunteer, October 9, 1861, three years, First Ohio light artillery, company H, orderly sergeant, served one year, honorably discharged October 15, 1862, for disability.

Young, John Lewis, Jr., age 14, volunteer, November 16, 1861, three years, First Ohio light artillery, company H, private, served three years, honorably discharged November 16, 1864.

Ward, James Edwin, age 17, volunteer, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private, served eleven months, re-enlistment, volunteer, July 6, 1863, six months, independent battalion of cavalry, company C, private, served eight months, discharged March 12, 1864, re-enlistment, volunteer, March 14, 1864, Thirtieth cavalry, company A, corporal, in fifteen battles, served one year and four months, mustered out July 18, 1865.

RECAPITULATION.

Huntington's battery .....	12
Buell's Pierpont battery .....	2
Battery K, Second heavy artillery .....	3
First Ohio light artillery .....	1
Eighteenth Ohio Independent battery .....	1
First Ohio cavalry .....	54
Seventh Ohio cavalry .....	2
Fourth Virginia cavalry .....	2
Fourth independent battalion of Ohio volunteer cavalry .....	5
Thirtieth Ohio cavalry .....	4
And one each in Fifth cavalry and Ninth cavalry .....	2
United States navy .....	1
Gunboat service .....	2
Thirty-sixth Ohio .....	16

Thirty-ninth Ohio .....	13
Ninety-second Ohio .....	12
One Hundred and Forty-ninth Ohio National guard .....	14
Sixty-third Ohio .....	5
Eighteenth Ohio (three months) .....	5
Eighteenth Ohio (three years) .....	2
Seventy-seventh Ohio .....	12
Eighty-seventh Ohio (three months) .....	2
Seventy-third Ohio .....	2
And one each in Eleventh Ohio, Twenty-first Illi- nois, Tenth Ohio, Seventy-fifth Ohio, First Michigan, Nineteenth Ohio, Eleventh Virginia, Ninth Virginia, Eighteenth United States, Fif- teenth Tennessee, Sixty-seventh Ohio, and one not designated .....	12
Total number of soldiers .....	173
Died .....	17

MARSHALL CITY—EAST WARD

Abbott, William, age 26, volunteer, August 2, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company H, private, served two years, honorably discharged October 28, 1864, re-enlisted, age 29, substitute, April 1, 1865, Eighteenth regiment, company H, private, served five months, honorably discharged October, 1865.

Abbott, Farnum, volunteer, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private.

Abbott, Charles, volunteer, United States navy.

Ackerson, Ephraim, age 26, volunteer, August 14, 1862, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, served three years mustered out, veteran enlistment, age 29, volunteer, December, 1864, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, served seven months, mustered out July 9, 1865.

Ackerson Abraham, age 19, volunteer, August 14, 1862, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, mustered out, veteran enlistment, age 22, volunteer, December, 1864, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, served seven months, mustered out July 9, 1865.

Ackerson, George Washington, age 16, volunteer, December, 1864, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, served seven months, mustered out July 9, 1865.

Adams, Joseph John, age 29, volunteer, September 16, 1861, three years, First cavalry, company L, private, served three years, mustered out September, 1864.

Alcock, Charles T., age 20, volunteer, September 1, 1862, three years, Seventh cavalry, company H, bugler, attained rank of chief bugler, served two years and ten months, mustered out July 4, 1865.

Anderson, Joseph Hall, age 27, volunteer, November 10, 1863, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company F, private, attained orderly sergeant, served one year and nine months, mustered out July, 1865.

Aplin, Joseph, age 22, volunteer, November 8, 1861, three years, First Ohio light artillery, company H, private, served three years and eight months, mustered out July 31, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Atkinson, Jonathan, volunteer, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private.

Audebert, C., age 57, volunteer, Seventy-seventh regiment, company H, private.

Bacher, Henry, age 24, volunteer, Sixty-first regiment, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company F, musician.

Baldwin, George Edward, age 22, volunteer, August 3, 1862, three years, First Ohio light artillery, company H, private, discharged February 8, 1864, for disability.

Barker, John, volunteer, Seventy-fifth regiment, company F.

Barrows, Charles Cole, age 27, volunteer, August 9, 1862, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, served three years mustered out July 9, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Bell, Mathias, age 34, volunteer, gunboat engineer, served one month.

Bickert, Ambrose, age 26, volunteer, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company F, private, three years, honorably discharged 1864.

Bordman, Frederick, Thirty-ninth regiment, company F.

Booth, Robert, age 44, volunteer, October 1, 1861, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company G, second lieutenant, served seven months, resigned May 26, 1862.

Booth, John Thomas, age 20, volunteer, May 27, 1861, three months, Eighteenth regiment, company B, private, mustered out August 8, 1861, wounded in right wrist at Chickamauga, second enlistment, volunteer, August 12, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, first corporal, attained second sergeant, served three years, mustered out August 17, 1864.

Booth, George, age 16, volunteer, August 14, 1861, Thirty-sixth regiment, company E, drummer, honorably discharged April 1, 1862.

Booth, Joseph Robinson, age 14, volunteer, October, 1861, Sixty-third regiment, company G, musician, served six months, honorably discharged April, 1862.

Booth, Frank, age 17, volunteer, 1861, First Ohio light artillery, company K, private, honorably discharged 1862, captured at Harper's Ferry, September 3, 1862, and paroled, re-enlistment, volunteer, May 28, 1862, three months, Eighty-seventh regiment, company A, private, served four months, mustered out October 1, 1862.

Brenan, William Augustine, age 18, volunteer, September 1, 1861, three years, First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, mustered out, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Brenan, Frank R., age 17, volunteer, September, 1861, three years, First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, mustered out, served in the three months' service of company G, Eighteenth regiment, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Brenan, John Victor, age 16, volunteer, September, 1861, three years, First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, mustered out, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Broadhurst, William J., age 35, volunteer, March 27, 1862, three years, First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, served eleven months, honorably discharged February 15, 1863, for disability.

Brookover, Charles, age 18, volunteer, January, 1865, one year, One Hundred and Eighty-ninth regiment, company E, private, served seven months, mustered out October, 1865.

Bruce, Robert, age 23, volunteer, June 28, 1861, Fifteenth Massachusetts regiment, company B, private, one year, mustered out 1862, wounded at Ball's Bluff.

Bruce, Napoleon, volunteer, October, 1861, Fifteenth Massachusetts regiment, company B, private.

Bruce, Wallace, age 18, volunteer, July 22, 1861, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, served four years, mustered out July 9, 1865, on detailed service as private orderly, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Bukey, John S., age 15, volunteer, May 12, 1862, three years, Eleventh Virginia cavalry, company D, sergeant, attained rank of first lieutenant, resigned May 18, 1865.

Bukey, Alexander H., age 22, volunteer, May 29, 1861, three months, Eighteenth regiment, company B, private, served three months, mustered out August 8, 1861, re-enlistment, volunteer, September 1, 1861, First Virginia light artillery, company G, corporal, attained rank of sergeant, mustered out.

Bukey, Joseph T., volunteer, January, 1862, three years, Eleventh Virginia cavalry, drum major, served three years, mustered out 1865.

Bukey, Van H., age 25, volunteer, October 28, 1861, three years, Eleventh Virginia cavalry, company D, private, attained rank of colonel, served three years and two months, mustered out December 26, 1864.

Buck, Silas, Twelfth Virginia cavalry, assistant surgeon.

Buck, George, paymaster.

Burk, John, volunteer, Seventy-third regiment, company F, private.

Burns, Israel, age 35, volunteer, February, 1864, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, served one year and five months, mustered out July 9, 1865.

Carpenter, William, age 17, volunteer, July, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, served three years, mustered out July 9, 1864, veteran enlistment, age 21, volunteer, January, 1865, navy, private, discharged September 1865.

Carpenter, Samuel, Seventy-seventh regiment, company H, private.

Caywood, John W., volunteer, three years, Seventh cavalry, company H, private, attained rank of sergeant, mustered out with regiment.

Chase, John Wallace, age 19, volunteer, September, 1862, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, served two years and ten months, discharged July 9, 1865.

Cherry, Henry, age 19, volunteer, May 28, 1862, six months, Eighty-seventh regiment, company A, private, captured and in prison in Texas ten months, re-enlistment, February, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, private.

Cherry, Albert, age 17, volunteer, August 21, 1861, three years, Second Ohio heavy artillery, company K, private, served two years, mustered out August 23, 1865.

Clarke, George, age 16, volunteer, August 10, 1864, one year, One Hundred and Eighty-second regiment, company C, private, served one year, mustered out.

Clogston, Luther E., age 34, volunteer, September 16, 1861, three years, First Ohio volunteer cavalry, company L, private, served three years, mustered out September 16, 1864.

Clogston, Ansel, age 22, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company A, private, mustered out September, 1864.

Clogston, Charles, age 18, volunteer, April 17, 1861, three months, Eighteenth regiment, company B, private, served three months, mustered out August 8, 1861, re-enlistment, volunteer, Eighteenth regiment, company B, private, attained rank of corporal, mustered out, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Cooley, William W., Thirty-sixth regiment, company K.

Cusic, L., volunteer, First light artillery, company H, private.

Davis, Jethro, age 34, volunteer, November, 1863, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, served one year and eight months, mustered out July 9, 1865.

Davenport, George, volunteer, 1861, three years, First light artillery, company H, first lieutenant, resigned January 7, 1863.

Daggett, William S., Twentieth Illinois regiment.

DeBeck, William L., volunteer, August, 1861, three years, First light artillery, company K, captain, served one year and nine months, resigned May 11, 1863.

Davis, Solomon, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B.

Dooley, Jeremiah, age 18, volunteer, three years, First Virginia light artillery, company C, corporal, mustered out 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Dotson, Joseph, age 19, volunteer, June, 1861, three years, Twenty-fourth regiment, company D, private, served three years and four months, mustered out October, 1864.

Douthitt, James, age 34, volunteer, August 10, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company F, private, attained rank of sergeant, served three years, mustered out June 10, 1865.

Douthitt, Augustus, age 18, volunteer, April, 1865, one year, Ninety-second regiment, company F, private, mustered out of service June 10, 1865.

Dow, David, age 19, volunteer, May, 1861, three months, Eighteenth regiment, company B, private, mustered out August 8, 1861, re-enlistment, volunteer, October 21, 1861, First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, attained rank of sergeant, mustered out.

Dow, John, age 18, volunteer, January 1, 1862, three years, First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, mustered out, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Dye, George, age 21, volunteer, September 16, 1861, three years, First Ohio volunteer cavalry, company L, private, attained rank of commissary sergeant, served three years, honorably discharged September 17, 1864.

Dye, William, age 20, volunteer, August, 1864, gunboat, private, served eleven months, mustered out July, 1865.

Dyer, Thomas, age 25, volunteer, April, 1861, three months, Eighteenth regiment, company B, private, served three months, mustered out with regiment, re-enlistment, age 25, volunteer, July, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, 1865, mustered out with regiment.

Dulty, John, age 40, volunteer, September 14, 1861, three years, First cavalry, company L, bugler, served three years, mustered out August 4, 1864, at Stone River.

Eaton, John W., age 19, volunteer, September 1, 1861, three years, First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, served one year, died September 3, 1862, mortally wounded at Bull Run, second battle.

Elleford, William, age 27, volunteer, September 1, 1861, three years, First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, served two years and seven months, honorably discharged April 12, 1864, disability.

Evans, L. G., age 17, volunteer, 1862, three years, Forty-ninth regiment, company B, private, served three years, honorably discharged 1865.

Everly, Frederick, age 17, volunteer, July 20, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company F, private, served three years, mustered out July, 1864, wounded July 22, 1864, at Battle of Atlanta.

Field, Joseph, age 16, volunteer, February 2, 1864, Seventy-seventh regiment, drummer, served one month, died March 5, 1864, of typhoid fever, at Little Rock.

Frisby, Charles L., age 26, volunteer, Fifty-third regiment, private, died May 26, 1863.

Flesher, Adam, age 21, volunteer, Seventh cavalry, company H, saddler, mustered out July 4, 1865.

Frisby, Richard, volunteer, One Hundred and Seventy-seventh regiment, company H, private.

Fougeres, Louis, age 18, volunteer, May, 1861, three months, Eighteenth regiment, company B, musician, served three months, mustered out August 8, 1861, re-enlisted, September 1, 1861, First Virginia light artillery, company C, fifer, mustered out.

Getth Michael, age 21, volunteer, May 28, 1862, three months, Eighty-seventh regiment, company A, private, mustered out September, 1862, re-enlisted, volunteer, August 23, 1864, one year, gunboat, private, mustered out.

Getth, Henry, age 18, volunteer, August 23, 1864, one year, gunboat, private, mustered out.

Geer, Peter, age 16, volunteer, July 22, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, attained rank of corporal, served three years, mustered out July 9, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Goldsmith, William, age 21, volunteer, September 1, 1861, three years, First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, mustered out, re-enlisted as a veteran, captured at Harper's Ferry, and again at Mark's Mills, April 25, 1864, and in prison ten months.

Goldsmith, John, age 20, volunteer, 1862, three months, Eighty-seventh regiment, company A, private, re-enlisted, volunteer, February, 1864, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, private.

Goodman, John, age 23, volunteer, May, 1862, six months, Eighty-seventh regiment, company A, private, captured and paroled with the regiment at Harper's Ferry.

Goodman, Daniel, age 20, volunteer, April 17, 1861, three months, Eighteenth regiment, company B, private, mustered out August 28, 1861.

Goodman, Nathaniel, age 18, volunteer, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private.

Green, Abraham, age 35, volunteer, December 19, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company H, private, mustered out August 12, 1864.

Gwin, Abraham, age 18, volunteer, January 22, 1864,

First Ohio volunteer cavalry, company L, private, served one year and seven months, honorably discharged August 30, 1865, for disability.

Hall, George Buster, age 19, volunteer, May, 1862, six months, Eighty-seventh regiment, company A, fifth sergeant, re-enlistment, volunteer, 1863, gunboat, master's mate, served two years, honorably discharged October, 1865.

Harte, W. James, age 19, volunteer, 1862, three months, Eighty-seventh regiment, company A, re-enlistment, December, 1862, gunboat, mid-shipman, served nine months, came home a paroled prisoner, also in one hundred days' service.

Haskins, Colonel Alex. L., volunteer, October 1, 1861, three years, Sixty-third regiment, lieutenant colonel, served one year and five months, honorably discharged March 20, 1863.

Hathaway, Luther, age 44, volunteer, July 21, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, detailed hospital steward, served one year and seven months, died April 1, 1863.

Haskins, George B., volunteer, October 10, 1861, three years, First light artillery, company K, first lieutenant, served one year, resigned October 20, 1862.

Harris, James, volunteer, July 22, 1864, one year, Twentieth colored regiment, company H, corporal, served one year, mustered out August 12, 1865.

Henton, James, age 20, volunteer, 1861, Fourteenth regulars, company C, sergeant, attained rank of adjutant.

Henton, Albert, age 21, volunteer, August, 1862, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, corporal, served two years, died September 3, 1864, shot at the battle of Berryville.

Henson, Tapley, volunteer, Seventh regiment, company C, private.

Highland, Patrick, age 30, volunteer, 1861, three years, Seventy-third regiment, company F, private, served one year, discharged August, 1862, for disability.

Highland, John, age 25, volunteer, December, 1863, Seventy-third regiment, company F, private, honorably discharged July, 1865.

Highland, Patrick, age 24, volunteer, 1861, seventy-third regiment, company F, private, mustered out July, 1865, wounded at Cross Keys and the battle of Lookout Mountain.

Hodkinson, Jonathan, volunteer, Thirteenth Pennsylvania regiment, company I, private.

Hodkinson, Thomas, volunteer, Twelfth Pennsylvania regiment, company I, private.

Hildebrand, Jesse, age 62, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, colonel, one and two-thirds years, died April 18, 1863, at Alton, Illinois.

Hill, John, age 26, volunteer, August 13, 1862, three years, First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, mustered out in 1865.

Hill, Alexander, volunteer, three years, Second heavy artillery, company K, private.

Hill, Wallace, volunteer, January 25, 1861, three years, First Virginia artillery, company C, first lieutenant, attained the rank of captain, mustered out with battery.

Holden, Charles Asa, age 20, volunteer, May, 1861, three months. Eighteenth regiment, company B, fifer, served three months, mustered out August 8, 1861, re-enlistment, volunteer, September, 1861, First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, served one year, died December 7, 1862.

Holden, Shipman B., age 22, volunteer, May, 1862, Eighty-seventh regiment, company A, private, served five months, mustered out October 1, 1862, captured and paroled.

Holden, Amos Price, age 21, December, 1861, three years, First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, mustered out, reenlisted as a veteran.

Huff, Amon P., volunteer, three years, First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, mustered out in 1865, reenlisted as a veteran.

Judd, Merit, age 58, volunteer, December 2, 1861, Seventy-seventh regiment, company K, private, mustered out August 9, 1862.

Iains, Hiram, volunteer, three years, First Ohio light artillery, company K, first lieutenant.

Judd, James Grover, age 17, volunteer, June, 1861, Eighteenth regiment, company C, drummer, mustered out, reenlistment, volunteer, July, 1863, Thirty-sixth regiment, company I, drummer, served two years, mustered out July 27, 1865.

Judd, Frank L., age 16, Seventy-seventh regiment, company A, fifer, honorably discharged, August, 1862, second enlistment, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company A, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864, third enlistment, substitute, March, 1865, Eighteenth regiment, company I, private, served seven months, mustered out October 9, 1865.

Jones, Anthony, volunteer, Seventy-seventh regiment, company H, private, taken with heart disease, served nine months as dispatch carrier for telegraph office, then furloughed and discharged.

Jennings, Charles L., company D, Second Ohio Infantry, Mexican war also, company D, Seventeenth Ohio Infantry.

Kennedy, George Washington, age 39, volunteer, September 1, 1861, three years, Seventh cavalry, company H, private, honorably discharged May 27, 1865.

Kennedy, Arius H., age 21, volunteer, January 22, 1863, three years, Third Virginia cavalry, company H, private, served two years, mustered out June 30, 1865.

Kennedy, William, age 16, volunteer, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, served one year, honorably discharged for disability, reenlistment, volunteer, July, 1863, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, private, served three months, discharged September, 1863.

Kennedy, Elisha, age 17, volunteer, February, 1864, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, served one and five-twelfths years, mustered out July 9, 1865.

Kennedy, Joel, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, Koenig, Jacob, age 45, volunteer, July, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company F, captain, served two years, died August 23, 1863, of flux and fever.

Koenig, Jacob James, age 18, volunteer, August 26, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company F, drummer, three years, mustered out in 1864.

Koon, Weedon, age 41, volunteer, December, 1861, Seventy-seventh regiment, companies I and E, private, reenlisted as a veteran, captured and in prison for ten months.

Koon, George, age 19, volunteer, July, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, served four years, mustered out July 9, 1865.

Lammott, Levi F., age 18, volunteer, May, 1862, Eighty-seventh regiment, company A, private, captured and paroled at Harper's Ferry, in Seventy-seventh regiment, served on detached duty as clerk, second enlistment, volunteer, December, 1863, Seventy-seventh regiment, company H, private.

Lammott, Eugene R. A., age 14, 1861, Seventy-seventh regiment, company H, drum major.

Lasure, Nathan, age 19, volunteer, September 1, 1861, First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, served three and nine-twelfths years, mustered out June 28, 1865.

Lemgo, Henry, age 28, volunteer, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company F, private, three years, mustered out August, 1864.

Langley, David, volunteer, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B.

Langley, George W., volunteer, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private.

Langley, Lewis D., age 19, volunteer, March 30, 1862, three years, First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, served two years, honorably discharged April 28, 1864, for disability.

Laughlin, Milton H., three years, First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, attained rank of corporal, mustered out, reenlisted as a veteran.

Langley, Henry M., volunteer, First Virginia light artillery, company C, second lieutenant, resigned April 22, 1863.

Loffman, Leon, Sixty-third regiment, company F.

Loffman, Philip, volunteer, three years, First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, mustered out in 1865, reenlisted as a veteran.

Loffman, James, age 18, volunteer, three years, First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, mustered out in 1865, reenlisted as a veteran.

Lord, Henry, age 20, volunteer, May 28, 1862, three months, Eighty-seventh regiment, company A, third sergeant, served four months, mustered out September 20, 1862, captured and paroled at Harper's Ferry, reenlisted November 16, 1863, One Hundred and Twenty-fifth regiment, company K, quartermaster sergeant, served one year and five months, mustered out June 8, 1865.

Marvin, James, age 15, volunteer, October, 1861, Eleventh Virginia, company D, private, served seven months, second enlistment May, 1862, three months, Eighty-fifth regiment, company B, private, mustered out June, 1862, third enlistment August 18, 1864, one year, United States navy, private, served eleven months, mustered out July 21, 1865.

Marwin, John, age 15, volunteer, October 12, 1864, one year, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G, private.

McCallister, John S., age 18, volunteer, September 1, 1861, three years, First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, served three years and nine months, mustered out June 28, 1865, reenlisted as a veteran.

McCormick, Captain A. W., volunteer, December, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G, captain, honorably discharged.

McFarland, B. Powell, age 36, volunteer, August, 1862, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, corporal, served two years, killed at Kennesaw Mountain June 26, 1864.

McKibben, Edwin, age 16, volunteer, March 31, 1864, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, in six battles, served one year and three months, mustered out July 27, 1865.

McKittrick, Robert H., volunteer, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, first lieutenant, attained rank of captain, served three years, mustered out 1864.

McLaughlin, Neil, age 33, volunteer, July 28, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, served four years, mustered out July 9, 1865, reenlisted as a veteran.

McManns, Michael, age 35, volunteer, 1861, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, served four years, mustered out July 9, 1865.

McNaughton, Samuel S., volunteer, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, first lieutenant, attained rank of captain, mustered out.

Miller, Frederick, age 18, volunteer, September 1, 1861, three years, First light artillery, company K, bugler, attained rank of second lieutenant, served four years, mustered out July 22, 1865, did good service at Chancellorsville.

Miner, Robert W., age 33, volunteer, September 1, 1861, three years, First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, attained rank of second lieutenant, served one year and nine months, mustered out June, 1863.

Miner, Smith, volunteer, September 1, 1861, First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, served four years, mustered out June 28, 1865, enlisted as a veteran, detailed as commissioner sergeant for nine months.

Miner, John N., volunteer, April, 1861, three months, Eighteenth regiment, company B, private, served three months, Eighteenth regiment, company B, private, served three months, mustered out August 8, 1861, reenlisted September 1, 1861, three years, First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, attained rank of corporal, served three years and nine months, mustered out June 28, 1865.

Miraben, Leonidas R., age 24, volunteer, May, 1861, three months, Eighteenth regiment, company B, private, served three months, mustered out August 8, 1861, reenlisted February 28, 1862, three years, First Virginia light artillery, company C, sergeant, served three years and four months, mustered out June 28, 1865.

Moore, Lewis Roe, age 17, volunteer, February 28, 1862, three years, First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, served three years and four months, mustered out June 28, 1865.

Moore, A. F., Thirty-ninth regiment, company B. McGirr, William P., Thirty-sixth regiment, company F.

Morgaridge, Daniel J., age 19, volunteer, November 19, 1861, three years, Second Virginia cavalry, company F, bugler, mustered out with regiment, reenlisted as a veteran.

Morgaridge, William, age 23, volunteer, August 1, 1861, three years, Eighteenth regiment, company B, private, in five battles, served three and a half years, honorably discharged, February, 1865, captured at Chickamauga, and in prison fifteen months.

Morgaridge, R. Arthur, age 25, volunteer, July, 1862, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, served three years, mustered out July 9, 1865.

Mahoken, John, volunteer, three years, First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, mustered out June 28, 1865, reenlisted as a veteran.

Mulhane, Dennis, age 35, volunteer, March, 1864, First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, served one year, mustered out June 28, 1865.

O'Neil, James H., United States navy.

Otis, Timothy, age 22, volunteer, May, 1862, three months, Eighty-seventh regiment, company A, private, served four months, mustered out October 1, 1862, captured April 25, 1864, and in prison ten months, reenlistment, volunteer, December, 1863, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, private.

Otterbein, Daniel, age 23, volunteer, July 28, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company F, private, attained rank of second lieutenant, served four years, mustered out July 9, 1865, reenlisted as a veteran.

O'Leary, Dennis, age 32, volunteer, March 30, 1862, three years, First Virginia artillery, company C, first lieutenant, served three years and four months, mustered out June 28, 1865.

Painter, Thomas, age 22, volunteer, July 22, 1861, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, attained rank of blacksmith, served four years, mustered out July 9, 1865, reenlisted as a veteran.

O'Neal, Thompson, First Virginia light artillery.

Parker, Adoniram, age 34, volunteer, August, 1862, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, served two years, died of wounds October 1, 1864.

Patton, George D. W., age 23, substitute, October 14, 1862, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, private, served three years, captured at Mark's Mills and in prison for ten months, mustered out October 10, 1865.

Payne, A. D., Sixty-fourth regiment, drum major, resigned.

Phillips, Lyman, age 28, volunteer, September, 1861, three years, First veteran Ohio cavalry, company L, private, served three years, mustered out 1864.

Phillips, Robert E., Third brigade, quartermaster, honorably discharged for disability.

Quigley, James, age 36, volunteer, September 1, 1861, three years, First light artillery, company K, private, served three years, mustered out 1864.

Quigley, Patrick J., age 15, volunteer, October, 1861, three years, First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, served three years, mustered out 1864.

Ranger, William Henry, age 20, volunteer, May, 1861, three months, Eighteenth regiment, company B, private, served three months, mustered out August 8, 1864, reenlistment, volunteer, September, 1861, three years, First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, served four years, wounded at Chancellorsville May 2, 1863, mustered out June 28, 1865.

Ranger, Francis Wesley, age 18, volunteer, July 22, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, served four years, mustered out July 9, 1865.

Reckard, Frank R., volunteer, First light artillery, company H, first lieutenant.

Reckard, James L., age 19, volunteer, September 1, 1862, three years, Seventh Ohio cavalry, company H, private, attained the rank of corporal, served three years, mustered out July 1, 1865.

Reinhart, Andrew J., age 18, volunteer, August 10, 1863, three years, Eleventh Virginia, company D, private, served one year and ten months, mustered out June 17, 1865.

Rice, George T., age 38, volunteer, July 22, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, attained the rank of major, served four years, mustered out July 9, 1865, reenlisted as a veteran.

Richards, Timothy, age 40, volunteer, February, 1864, three years, First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, honorably discharged October, 1864, became blind and sent to hospital till discharged.

Riley, Ulysses, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D.

Richards, Thomas, age 37, volunteer, September, 1862, three years, company B, Thirty-ninth Ohio Infantry, private, served two years, died September 2, 1864, from wounds.

Richards, John, age 35, volunteer, October 27, 1864, one year, First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, served nine months, mustered out June 23, 1865.

Richards, Edward H., volunteer, July 22, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, served three years, mustered out in 1864.

Ripley, Henry E., age 38, volunteer, September 1, 1861, three years, First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, served four years, mustered out June 28, 1865, reenlisted as a veteran.

Ripley, Philetus S., volunteer, September 1, 1861, three years, First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, served four years, mustered out June 28, 1865, reenlisted as a veteran.

Rodgers, George Washington, age 22, volunteer, August 30, 1861, three years, Second Virginia cavalry, company F, private, attained the rank of corporal, served four years, mustered out June 30, 1865, reenlisted as a veteran.

Rodgers, Robert, age 16, volunteer, December, 1861, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, private, served four years, mustered out March 8, 1866, reenlisted as a veteran, captured at Mark's Mills and in prison ten months.

Rewell, Martin V., First cavalry.

Schmidt, Louis, age 39, volunteer, October 4, 1861, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company F, second lieutenant, attained the rank of first lieutenant, served three years, honorably discharged August 24, 1864, for disability.

Schmidt, Edwin William, age 19, volunteer, July 6, 1861, three years, Forty-seventh regiment, company G, private.

Shires, Robert, age 19, volunteer, April 17, 1861, three months, Eighteenth regiment, company B, private, served four months, mustered out August 28th, reenlistment, volunteer, October, 1861, Sixty-third regiment, company D, drummer.

Shires, George, volunteer, October, 1862, Sixty-third regiment, company B, private, served three years, mustered out July 7, 1865.

Sherer, Peter, age 25, volunteer, April 17, 1861, three months, Eighteenth regiment, company B, private, mustered out August 28, 1861, reenlisted, volunteer, December, 1861, First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, served three and a half years, mustered out June 28, 1865.

Slattery, Patrick William, age 18, volunteer, May, 1861, three months, Twenty-second regiment, company G, private, served three months, reenlistment, volunteer, September 1, 1861, First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, served three years and nine months, mustered out June 28, 1865.

Smith, William L., age 14, volunteer, June, 1861, three months, Twenty-second regiment, company B, drummer, served three months, mustered out, reenlisted, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Twenty-second regiment, company B, drummer, served three years and three months, mustered out in 1864.

Smith, John Charles, age 18, volunteer, January 1, 1862, three years, First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, attained the rank of corporal, mustered out June 28, 1865.

Slump, John, volunteer.

Snider, Peter Bratton age 48, volunteer, September 12, 1862, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, served three years, mustered out July 9, 1865.

Smith, Moses, volunteer, July 1, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, honorably discharged in 1863.

Snider, Jacob Bratton, age 19, volunteer, September 12, 1862, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, served three years, mustered out June, 1865, served three months in an independent company called Cadwallader Grays, on detailed service as clerk.

Steed, Z.

Snider, William T., age 21, volunteer, 1862, three months, Eighty-seventh regiment, company A, private, served three months, mustered out September 20, 1862, captured at Harper's Ferry: re-enlistment, age 23, volunteer, August 18, 1864, one year, navy, private, served eleven months, mustered out July, 1865.

Snider, John, age 20, volunteer, August 18, 1864, one year, navy, private, served eleven months, mustered out July, 1865.

Snodgrass, William H., volunteer, September 18, 1861, three years, First cavalry, company L, private; re-enlisted as a veteran.

Stephens, Joseph R., age 10, volunteer, September 1, 1861, three years, Second Virginia cavalry, company E, private, served three years, mustered out in 1864, captured and in prison five months.

Swift, John, age 19, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company A, private, mustered out September, 1864.

Stone, Thompson, volunteer, Thirty-ninth regiment, company F, private.

Stilt, Jacob, age 19, volunteer, 1861, three years. First Virginia light artillery, company C, private.

Stufflebeam, Calvin, volunteer, Sixty-third regiment, company G, private.

Stump, L., Thirty-ninth regiment, company F, private.

Toothaker, Frank B., age 18, volunteer, 1862, three years. Seventh Ohio cavalry, company H, private, detailed for clerk service.

Towsley, Darius, age 48, volunteer, 1862, three months. Eighty-seventh regiment, drum major, taken prisoner at Harper's Ferry.

Towsley, Frank, age 18, volunteer, March 10, 1862, three years. First Ohio light artillery, company K, private, served three years, mustered out in 1865.

Tracy, Wesley, age 23, volunteer, May 1, 1862, three years. First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, served nine months, honorably discharged February 16, 1863, for disability.

Towsley, John, age 16, volunteer, May, 1862, three months. Eighty-seventh regiment, company A, drummer, served four months, mustered out September 20, 1862; re-enlistment, age 18, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days. One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company A, drummer, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Towsley, George, age 11, volunteer, June, 1862, three months. Eighty-seventh regiment, company G, drummer, served four months, mustered out September 20, 1862; re-enlistment, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days. One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company F, drummer, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Tracy, Samuel S., age 22, volunteer, December, 1863, three years. Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, private.

Warren, Manly, age 30, volunteer, April 27, 1861, three months. Eighteenth regiment, company B, fifer, served four months, mustered out August 28, 1861.

Way, Charles Bosworth, age 27, volunteer, October 1, 1861, three years. Eleventh Virginia, company D, private, attained rank of second lieutenant, resigned April, 1863.

Wells, Charles Elijah, age 16, volunteer, 1861, three years. Thirty-sixth regiment, company D, private, served one year, died January 14, 1862, typhoid fever, at Summersville, West Virginia.

Whentley, Isaac, age 22, volunteer, May, 1862, three months. Eighty-seventh regiment, company A, private, mustered out September 20, 1862; re-enlistment, volunteer, January 11, 1864, three years. First Ohio cavalry, company L, private, served one year and seven months, mustered out September 13, 1865.

Wheeler, Julius Frank, age 18, volunteer, August 13, 1863, three years. First heavy artillery, company L, private, served two years, mustered out August 25, 1865.

Tripp, William L., volunteer, 1862, Seventh cavalry, company H, first lieutenant, resigned December 25, 1863.

Turder, George Butler, age 23, volunteer, August 22, 1862, three years. Ninety-second regiment, company F, private, attained rank of adjutant, served one year and four months, died December 1, 1863, mortally wounded at Mission Ridge, November 25.

Turner, Frederick V., age 21, volunteer, June, 1862, three months. Eighty-seventh regiment, company A, private, served three months, mustered out September 20, 1862, captured at Harper's Ferry and paroled.

Wilson, William, age 20, volunteer, April 18, 1861, three months. Eighteenth regiment, company K, private, served three months, mustered out August, 1861; second enlistment, volunteer, 1861, three years. Second Virginia cavalry, company F, corporal, attained rank of sergeant, mustered out 1865.

Winchester, Albert, age 17, volunteer, August 27, 1861, three years. Thirty-sixth regiment, company D, private, served five months discharged January 23, 1862, for physical disability (too young) much on detailed service; re-enlistment, volunteer, August 16, 1862, three years. Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, served three years, honorably discharged June 21, 1865.

Withrow, William Wallace, age 21, volunteer, April, 1861, three months. Eighteenth regiment, company B, first corporal, mustered out August 28, 1861; re-enlistment, volunteer, January 25, 1862, three years. First Virginia light artillery, company C, second lieutenant, resigned December 28, 1862, wounded at second Bull Run battle, August 30, 1862.

Withrow, James, age 21, volunteer, May, 1862, three months. Eighty-seventh regiment, company A, private, served two months, honorably discharged July 30, 1862.

Williams, Charles B., age 29, volunteer, October 18, 1861, three years. Sixty-third regiment, company G, private, attained rank of corporal, served three years and ten months, mustered out July 8, 1865; re-enlisted as a veteran.

Wood, John, age 35, volunteer, August, 1861, three years. First light artillery, company K, private, served four years, mustered out July 31, 1865; re-enlisted as a veteran.

Wood, Alfred Spencer, age 18, volunteer, January 2, 1864, three years. First Ohio cavalry, company L, private, one year and eight months, mustered out September 26, 1865.

Wright, James M., age 26, volunteer, September 1, 1861, three years. First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, attained rank of corporal, served four years, mustered out June 28, 1865, wounded at second Bull Run battle.

Zoller, George, age 20, volunteer, July 22, 1861, three years. Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, served eight months, died March, 1862.

Wallace, Thomas, volunteer, Seventy-seventh regiment, private.

Wells Henry, volunteer, Eighty-sixth regiment, company F, private.

RECAPITULATION.

Thirty-ninth Ohio .....	42
Bull's Pierpont battery .....	9
Seventy-seventh Ohio .....	25
Eighty-seventh Ohio (three months) .....	17
Eighty-seventh Ohio (three years) .....	1
Eighty-seventh Ohio (three months) .....	19
First Ohio cavalry .....	9
Seventh Ohio cavalry .....	6
Second Virginia cavalry .....	3
Huntington battery .....	5

Sixty-third Ohio .....	9
Thirty-sixth Ohio .....	11
De Beck's battery .....	7
Florida Virginia .....	6
Seventy-third Ohio .....	4
One Hundred and Forty-eighth Ohio.....	5
Fifth Massachusetts .....	2
Nineteen second Ohio .....	3
United States navy .....	6
Gambut's service .....	6
Battery K, Second Ohio heavy artillery .....	2
Twenty-second Ohio (three months) .....	2
And one each in the Seventy-fifth Ohio, Eighty-fifth Ohio (three months), One Hundred and Eighty-ninth Ohio, Twelfth Virginia, One Hundred and Eighty-second Ohio, Twentieth Illinois, Twenty-fourth Ohio, Forty-ninth Ohio, One Hundred and Seventy-seventh Ohio, Fifty-third Ohio, Twentieth colored United States infantry, Fourteenth United States Infantry, Seventh Ohio, Thirteenth Pennsylvania Infantry, Twelfth Pennsylvania, Third Virginia cavalry, One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Ohio, Sixty-fourth Ohio, Forty-seventh Ohio, Twenty-third Ohio (three years), First Ohio heavy artillery, Eighty-sixth Ohio, making in all....	21
N : resigned .....	2
Total number of soldiers .....	133
Died .....	14

MARIETTA CITY, SECOND WAVE

Verdell, John, age 20, volunteer, July 22, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, mustered out in 1865 wounded twice; re-enlisted as a veteran.

Anderson, Edward A., age 18, volunteer, May, 1862, three months, Eighty-seventh regiment, company A, private, served six months mustered out September, 1862, captured and paroled.

Bailey, Benjamin P., first enlistment, age 17, volunteer, November, 1861, three years, Nineteenth Massachusetts regiment, company H, private, honorably discharged June 18, 1862; re-enlistment, age 20, substitute, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company A, private, served three months, mustered out September, 1864.

Baker, Alpheus, volunteer, Ninety-second regiment, company F, crippled in service.

Buck, William C., volunteer, July, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, sergeant, attained to rank of lieutenant colonel, served three years and ten months, mustered out May 15, 1865.

Buell, Frank, age 25, volunteer, April, 1861, three months, Eighteenth regiment, company B, captain, served three months, mustered out; re-enlisted October, 1861, three years, First light artillery, company C, captain, died August 22, 1862, killed at Freeman's Ford, Virginia.

Bosworth, Daniel Perkins, age 21, volunteer, April 13, 1863, United States navy, master's mate, attained to rank of acting ensign, honorably discharged October, 1862.

Braddock, Stephen A., age 24, volunteer, July, 1862,

First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, served one year, died July 2, 1863, killed at Gettysburg.

Bruce, Wallace, volunteer, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private.

Chambers, Samuel L., volunteer, January 18, 1864, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, mustered out July 9, 1865.

Burlingame, E. P., First cavalry, company L.

Cook, Pardon, Jr., age 40, volunteer, 1861, Seventy-seventh regiment, assistant surgeon, served two years, died August 21, 1863, of chills, sick one week.

Coleman, Henry, age 29, volunteer, July 22, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, served three years, mustered out in 1864.

Conter, William, age 18, volunteer, November, 1861, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company F, private, mustered out July 18, 1865; re-enlisted as a veteran.

Conter, Charles, substitute, one year, Sixty-third regiment, private, discharged.

Corey, Ebenezer, age 53, volunteer, April, 1861, three months, Eighteenth regiment, company B, fifer, attained to rank of drum major, served four months, honorably discharged August 8, 1861; re-enlistment, volunteer, Thirty-sixth regiment, drum major, served three years, mustered out August 1, 1865.

Corey, Jonathan H., age 18, volunteer, June, 1861, three months, Eighteenth regiment, company C, drummer, served two months, discharged August 8, 1861; re-enlistment, Thirty-sixth regiment, companies C and G, drummer, mustered out August 1, 1865.

Corey, Joseph, age 18, volunteer, April 17, 1861, three months, Eighteenth regiment, company B, private, served four months, mustered out August 8, 1861; re-enlistment, volunteer, January, 1862, three years, Seventy-seventh and Sixty-third regiments, company G, sergeant, attained to rank of orderly sergeant, served six months, died July 18, 1862, of typhoid fever.

Corey, Decatur, age 18, volunteer, April 14, 1864, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, died July 24, 1864, killed at the battle of Winchester.

Creal, George, Fifth United States colored infantry, company I.

Dale, Theodore D., company A, One Hundred and Forty-eighth Ohio infantry.

Davis, Charles, age 27, volunteer, August 9, 1862, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, served two years and four months, discharged December 17, 1864, discharged for disability, wounded severely in the jaw at Dallas, Georgia, May 28, 1864, and discharged.

Dawes, Ephraim C., age 21, volunteer, July, 1861, three years, Fifty-third regiment, adjutant, attained to rank of major, served three years and six months, honorably discharged in 1865 on account of wound.

Eells, Arthur D., volunteer, November, 1861, three years, Second Virginia cavalry, company F, captain, served six months, resigned May 6, 1862; re-enlistment, August 25, 1862, three years, Seventh cavalry, captain, resigned June 28, 1863.

Fell, John C., volunteer, July, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, captain, resigned April 12, 1862.

Field, Joseph, age 19, volunteer, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G, private, detailed as drummer, died March 5, 1864, at Little Rock, Arkansas.

Loughmiller, Noah Wilson, age 15, volunteer, May, 1862, First Virginia light artillery, and One Hundred and Twenty-fifth regiments, companies A and K, fifer, served three years and four months, mustered out September 25, 1865, served much on detailed service.

Franks, Lafayette, age 16, volunteer, September, 1861, three years, First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, attained rank of corporal, served three years and eight months, mustered out June 28, 1865, had previously served three months as a railroad guard.

Garnett, Thomas, age 28, volunteer, August 15, 1862, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, served two years and ten months, mustered out June 27, 1865.

Garen, Irenius A., age 17, volunteer, October 25, 1861, three years, First Virginia light artillery, company H, private, attained rank of corporal served three years and eight months, mustered out June 28, 1865.

Garen, Dudley D., age 16, volunteer, October 25, 1861, First Virginia light artillery, company H, private, served three years and eight months, mustered out June 28, 1865.

Giles, Edward, age 30, volunteer, August 20, 1864, one year, Fifth colored infantry, company G, private, served one year, mustered out August 22, 1865, a slave until the capture of New Madrid, Missouri.

Green, Richard L., volunteer, June, 1861, Twenty-fifth regiment, company H, captain, died September 5, 1862.

Grimes, David, age 20, volunteer, September, 1861, three years, First cavalry, company L, private, detailed a steamer, served three years, mustered out in 1864.

Grimes, Peter, Ninth cavalry.

Groves, Henry J., age 25, substitute, 1865, one year, Forty-third regiment, private, served seven months.

Groves, Edward, age 20, substitute, August 12, 1862, three years, First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, served three years, mustered out June 28, 1865.

Guyton, John, age 31, volunteer, September, 1861, three years, First cavalry, company L, bugler, served three years, mustered out in 1864.

Haberling, Jacob, age 21, substitute, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company A.

Hall, James Eli, age 29, volunteer, August 6, 1862, One Hundred and Fourth regiment, company G, corporal, attained rank of sergeant, served two years and ten months, honorably discharged June 17, 1865.

Harris, Samuel, age 25, volunteer, September 27, 1861, three years, Second Virginia cavalry, company F, sergeant, served three years and nine months, mustered out June 25, captured at Front Royal, Virginia, and sent to Libby prison for three months.

Hayes, Lewis, age 19, volunteer, July 31, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, served three years, honorably discharged August 26, 1864.

Henneman, George, age 22, volunteer, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, attained rank of sergeant, served three years, honorably discharged 1864.

Holden, William, age 21, volunteer, May, 1861, three months, Eighteenth regiment, company B, captain, mustered out with regiment; re-enlisted for three years and appointed assistant quartermaster.

Holden, John B., age 19, volunteer, October, 1861, three years, Eighteenth regiment, company B, and First light artillery, company K, second lieutenant, attained rank of first lieutenant, resigned March 27, 1862.

Jones, David F., age 27, volunteer, October 14, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, private, attained rank of first lieutenant, served three years, resigned December 10, 1864.

Jones, Alexander, age 19, volunteer, October 14, 1861, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, private, served one year, died September 12, 1862, of yellow fever, at Alton, Illinois.

Jones, Joseph, age 23, volunteer, September 7, 1862, Seventy-second Indiana regiment, company E, private, died March 31, 1863, typhoid fever.

Knowles, Samuel S., volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company A, captain, served four months, mustered out September 14, 1864.

Kalpell, Augustus, age 20, volunteer, April 11, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, attained to rank of first lieutenant, served three years, resigned April, 1864, was first in three months' service of company B, Eighteenth regiment.

Kelly, Joseph, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, first lieutenant, attained to rank of captain, mustered out July 27, 1865.

Lapham, Joseph H., age 17, volunteer, July 22, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, corporal, attained to rank of sergeant, served four years, mustered out July 9, 1865; re-enlisted as a veteran.

Lapham, Owen Theodore, age 17, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company A, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864, was offered seven hundred dollars to go as a substitute, but preferred to serve as a volunteer; re-enlisted, volunteer, February 4, 1865, one year, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, served five months, mustered out July 27, 1865.

Lapham, Luther T., age 16, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company A, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864; re-enlisted, volunteer, February 4, 1865, one year, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, served five months, mustered out July 27, 1865.

Lewis, David H., age 20, volunteer, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B.

Lewis, Samuel M., age 19, substitute, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company A, private, mustered out September, 1864; re-enlistment, substitute, March, 1865, one year, Eighteenth regiment, company C, private, served five months, mustered out October, 1865.

McGin, Alexander C., age 38, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company A, second sergeant, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

McElroy, E. R., volunteer, Thirty-sixth regiment, company E.

McGirr, William P., age 22, volunteer, September, 1861, three years. Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, served three years, mustered out in 1864.

McElroy, H. P., volunteer. Thirty-sixth regiment, company E.

Meister, Christian, age 21, volunteer, July 27, 1861, three years. Thirty-ninth regiment, company F, private, served three years, mustered out July 27, 1864.

McGuire, Patrick, volunteer, 1864, one year. One Hundred and Eighty-first regiment, company F, private, served ten months, mustered out 1865; second enlistment, One Hundred and Twenty-ninth regiment, company A; third enlistment, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company A.

McIntosh, Silas, volunteer. Twenty-seventh regiment, company A, Twenty-seventh United States colored infantry.

Medlicott, John, volunteer, May, 1863, three years. Second Virginia cavalry, company G, lieutenant, discharged September 27, 1864.

Moore, George, age 18, volunteer, July 18, 1861, three years. Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, served three years, died July 22, 1864, killed.

Moore, William, age 16, volunteer, September 7, 1862, three years. Second heavy artillery, company K, private, served one year and four months, honorably discharged January 7, 1864; re-enlistment, volunteer, February 1, 1865, one year. Thirty-sixth regiment, company C, private, served six months, mustered out July 27, 1865.

Morse, William S., age 18, volunteer, July 22, 1861, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, mustered July 9, 1865; re-enlisted as a veteran.

Morse, John P. D., age 18, volunteer, August 13, 1862, three years. First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, five battles, served two years and ten months, mustered out June 28, 1865.

Nye, Reuben L., age 25, volunteer, April 17, 1861, three months. Seventeenth and Eighteenth regiments, company B, private, served four months, mustered out August, 1861, wounded near Harper's Ferry; re-enlistment, August, 1861, three years. Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, second lieutenant, attained the rank of captain, served four years, mustered out July 27, 1865, breveted lieutenant colonel of volunteers, March 13, 1865.

Nye, Edward C., volunteer, June, 1862, three months. Eighty-seventh regiment, served four months, mustered out September, 1862; re-enlistment, December 23, 1863, naval service, acting master's mate ensign, honorably discharged November 4, 1865.

Nott, Perley J., volunteer, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private.

Obie, William Henry, age 15, volunteer, November, 1861, three years. Seventy-seventh regiment, companies E and G, drummer; re-enlisted as a veteran.

Obie, Charles, age 15, volunteer, December, 1863, three years. Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, served one year and seven months, mustered out July 9, 1865.

Parker, George, age 18, volunteer, August 30, 1862, three years. Seventh cavalry, company H, private, served three years, mustered out July 4, 1865, detailed for two and a half years as orderly.

Parker, Isaac D., age 28, volunteer, November 14,

1861, three years. Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, private, served three years, mustered out December 10, 1864.

Paxton, John C., volunteer, September 16, 1861, three years. Second Virginia cavalry, lieutenant colonel, attained rank of colonel, served one year and eight months, discharged May 7, 1863.

Paxton, S. G., age 30, volunteer, September 12, 1861, three years. Second Virginia cavalry, lieutenant, attained rank of regimental quartermaster, served three years, mustered out November 28, 1864.

Payne, George, volunteer. Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, honorably discharged.

Pfeifer, John, age 27, volunteer, January 20, 1864, three years. Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, served one year and six months, mustered out July 9, 1865.

Pfeifer, William, age 21, volunteer, Thirty-seventh regiment, company A, private, second lieutenant, volunteer, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private; third enlistment, volunteer, One Hundred and Thirty-fifth colored infantry, company K, private.

Pixley, Frank, age 17, substitute, May, 1864, one hundred days. One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company A, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864; re-enlistment, volunteer, February 8, 1865, one year. Thirty-sixth regiment, company H, private, served five months, mustered out July, 1865.

Porterfield, William L., age 21, volunteer, October 14, 1861, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, sergeant, attained rank of lieutenant, served six months, died April 8, 1862, at Shiloh.

Rucker, William P., on General Crook's staff.

Ranger, John, age 31, volunteer, April, 1861, three months. Eighteenth regiment, company B, private, served five months, mustered out September, 1864; re-enlistment, volunteer, October 21, 1861, three years. First Virginia light artillery, company H, private, served three years, honorably discharged October 20, 1864.

Richards, Timothy, age 40, volunteer, January 19, 1864, three years. First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, discharged October 24, 1864, for blindness.

Rees, Samuel, volunteer, three years. Ninety-second regiment, company F, private, mustered out June 28, 1865.

Sayre, Simeon S., age 27, volunteer, August 13, 1862, three years. First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, served three years, mustered out June 28, 1865.

Shiefley, Gottlieb, volunteer, One Hundred and Sixteenth regiment, company K, second lieutenant, resigned September 17, 1864.

Schlicher, Lewis, age 23, volunteer, 1862, three years. Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, bugler, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Schlicher, Frederick, age 20, volunteer, 1862, three years. Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private, attained rank of sergeant; re-enlisted as a veteran.

Schlicher, Daniel, age 17, volunteer, 1861, three years. First light artillery, company L, private, served four years, mustered out July 31, 1865; re-enlisted as a veteran.

Schmidt, Lewis, volunteer, February, 1862, Sixtythird regiment, first lieutenant, resigned August 24, 1864.

Schmidt, Emanuel, age 28, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company F, private, attained rank of corporal, served three years, honorably discharged 1864.

Shafer, Frank, age 35, volunteer, February 28, 1862, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company F, private, served one year and two months, honorably discharged April 28, 1863, for disability.

Smith, T. C. H., age 42, volunteer, August 23, 1861, three years, First cavalry, lieutenant colonel, attained rank of brigadier general, served four years, mustered out 1865, is paymaster in the United States army.

Sheldon, Hiram H., One Hundred and Sixteenth regiment, company G.

Slocumb, Albert H., company A, One Hundred and Forty-eighth Ohio infantry; also in gunboat service.

Smith, Edwin, volunteer, 1861, three years, Forty-seventh regiment, company G, private, killed at Vicksburg May 30, 1863.

Steed, James, age 22, volunteer, Sixty-third regiment, company D.

Steed, William, volunteer, Sixty-third regiment, company D.

Stricker, Matthew, age 22, volunteer, July 22, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, served four years, mustered out July 9, 1865.

Stricker, Morris, volunteer, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B.

Stricker, William, age 22, volunteer, May, 1862, Eighty-seventh regiment, company A, corporal, served four months, mustered out September, 1862.

Talbot, Jake T., age 20, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company A, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Tappan, Samuel C., volunteer, Seventh cavalry, company H, private, attained rank of second lieutenant, mustered out March 18, 1865.

Tenney, George Champion, age 20, volunteer, May, 1862, three months, Eighty-seventh regiment, company A, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1862; re-enlistment, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company A, corporal, served four months, mustered out 1864, also member of the independent company in Marietta.

Tenney, John, age 16, volunteer, June, 1861, three months, Eighteenth regiment, company C, fifer, served three months, mustered out September, 1862; re-enlisted as a veteran October 4, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company E, musician, served four years, mustered out July 27, 1865.

Tenney, Edward P., age 12, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company A, fifer, served four months, mustered out September, 1864, failed to pass muster on account of age and size, and so received no pay for service.

Theis, Louis, age 26, volunteer, August, 1863, six months, Fourth Virginia cavalry, company D, first lieutenant, served six months, mustered out in 1864.

Theis, John G., age 22, volunteer, April 17, 1861, three months, Eighteenth regiment, company B, orderly sergeant, served five months, mustered out September, 1864, re-enlistment, volunteer, 1861, three years, First Virginia light artillery, second lieutenant, attained rank of first lieutenant, served four years, mustered out July 28, 1865.

Theis, Christian, age 18, substitute, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company A, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Theis, William, volunteer, Thirty-ninth regiment, company F.

Tidd, Charles Theodore, age 17, volunteer, 1861, three years, Fourth Virginia cavalry, company F, drummer, served three years, mustered out in 1864.

Tucker, William, Ninety-second regiment, company F.

Wehers, George, age 21, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company F, private, served four years, mustered out July 9, 1865; re-enlisted as a veteran.

Welk, William, First cavalry, company L, discharged.

Wentlekin, Henry, age 24, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company A, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Wentlekin, Martin, age 19, volunteer, August 13, 1863, three years, First Virginia cavalry, company L, private, served one year, honorably discharged April 12, 1864, for disability.

Wentlekin, John, Fifth cavalry.

Whillesey, William Beale, age 21, volunteer, July, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company F, second lieutenant, attained rank of captain, served one year and three months, killed at Mission Ridge, November 25, 1863.

Wood, Jacob S., age 45, volunteer, December 10, 1861, three years, First light artillery, company K, private, served three years and six months, mustered out July 31, 1865.

Williamson, I., Second Virginia cavalry, company F.

Wood, J. L., volunteer, First light artillery, company H.

Tappen, S. C., Seventh cavalry, company H.

Wright, Amos, age 21, volunteer, November 10, 1861, three years, Second Virginia cavalry, company F, private, attained the rank of corporal, served three years and seven months, mustered out June 30, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran.

RECAPITULATION

Buell's Pierpont battery .....	2
First Virginia artillery .....	2
Huntington's battery .....	2
One each in battery L, First Ohio light artillery and De Bek's battery .....	2
First Ohio cavalry .....	5
Second Virginia cavalry .....	7
Seventh Ohio cavalry .....	4
Fourth Virginia cavalry .....	2
And one each in Ninth and Fifth Ohio cavalry....	2
United States army .....	2
Thirty-ninth Ohio .....	22
One Hundred and Forty-eighth Ohio, Not mustered .....

Seventy-seventh Ohio	11
Thirty-sixth Ohio	17
Eighteenth Ohio (three months)	9
Eighteenth Ohio (three years)	2
Sixty-third Ohio	5
Eighty-seventh Ohio (three months)	5
Ninety-second Ohio	4
Fifth United States colored infantry	2
One Hundred and Sixteenth Ohio	2
One each in the Seventeenth, Fifty-third, One Hundred and Twenty-fifth, Twenty-fifth, Forty-third, One Hundred and Fourth, Eighty-first, Twenty-ninth, Twenty-seventh, Thirty-seventh, One Hundred and Thirty-fifth and Forty-seventh Ohio, Forty-second Indiana and Ninety-first Massachusetts, making in all	14
Total number of soldiers	124
Died	12

MARIETTA IN THE WAR

Adams, Eben C. E., age 20, volunteer, July, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, major, attained colonel, served one year and eight months, resigned April 1, 1862.

Armstrong, Charles, age 28, volunteer, February, 1864, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, served one year and six months, mustered out July 9, 1865.

Armstrong, John, age 16, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company H, private, served four months, mustered out in September, 1864.

Atkinson, John, age 18, volunteer, July 22, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, served four years, mustered out July 9, 1865.

Atkinson, Frederick, age 16, volunteer, November, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company I, private; re-enlisted as a veteran, captured at Mark's Mills, and in prison ten months.

Bast, Henry, age 30, volunteer, July 20, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, corporal, served nine months, honorably discharged April 5, 1862, for disability.

Bast, Frederick, age 15, volunteer, September, 1864, one year, Fifth regiment, private, ran away from home.

Batchelor, William, age 45, volunteer, September 1, 1862, three years, Seventh cavalry, company H, commissary sergeant, honorably discharged May 17, 1865, for disability.

Block, John, age 36, substitute, 1862, Seventy-seventh regiment, private, served nine months; re-enlisted in 1863, Second light artillery, company K, private, served two years, mustered out in 1865.

Boeshaar, Christian, company F, Thirty-ninth Ohio infantry.

Boomer, Charles D., age 30, volunteer, November, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private, served one year and five months, died April 1, 1862.

Booth, George Albert, age 19, volunteer, October 20, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, corporal, served six months, died in April, 1862, mortally wounded at Shiloh.

Booth, Frederick E., age 17, volunteer, October 20, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, private, mustered out in July, 1865.

Clarke, Melvin, volunteer, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, lieutenant colonel, attained colonel, killed at Antietam September 17, 1862.

Cline, Samuel, Ninety-second regiment, company H. Clarke, Joseph D., volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company A, private, killed by an explosion at City Point August 9, 1864.

Congdon, James W., age 36, volunteer, July 22, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, second sergeant, served one year and four months, honorably discharged November 11, 1862, for disability; re-enlisted, volunteer, January, 1864, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, served six months, honorably discharged June 13, 1864.

Condit, Timothy, age 24, volunteer, 1861, three years, First cavalry, company L, private, attained second lieutenant, killed at Murfreesborough December 31, 1862.

Conner, John, age 43, volunteer, November 12, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private, served eight months, honorably discharged July 14, 1862, for disability.

Conner, John, Jr., age 21, volunteer, November, 1861, Sixty-third regiment, company F, private, served two months, died of measles in January, 1861.

Coomer, Henry, age 18, substitute, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company A, private, served four months, mustered out in September, 1864, re-enlisted, volunteer, February, 1865, one year, Thirty-sixth regiment, company H, private, served five months, mustered out July 27, 1865.

Cotton, J. D., volunteer, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, surgeon, mustered out June 10, 1865.

Darrow, Allen R., age 38, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, first lieutenant and regimental quartermaster, served four months, mustered out in September, 1864, one of the original members of the National guards, organized in Marietta in 1863.

Dutton, Leander, age 27, volunteer, July 22, 1864, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, sergeant, served one year, honorably discharged in 1862, for disability.

Dutton, Smith, age 26, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company A, second lieutenant, served four months, mustered out in September, 1864, was a member of the National guards.

Dye, Henry, Seventy-seventh regiment, company H. Dye, Elijah, age 19, volunteer, July 22, 1861, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, served four months, detailed as butcher and died of measles November 7, 1861.

Dye, Jacob, age 16, substitute, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company A, private, served four months, mustered out in September, 1864.

Ellis, Sumner, age 17, volunteer, November, 1861, three years, First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, served three years and seven months, mustered out in 1865.

1862. Harp, George, age 21, volunteer, March, 1862, three years, First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, mustered out July 9, 1865.

Field, Theodore G., age 29, volunteer, 1861, three years, First Virginia light artillery, company C, first corporal, attained lieutenant, mustered out with the battery.

Gaddie, Jacob, 1863, six months, Fourth Virginia cavalry, company C, private, served six months, mustered out.

Gates, Charles, 1861, age 19, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company A, First regiment, first lieutenant, served four months, died May 31, 1864, of pneumonia at Harper's Ferry, was one of the company of National Guardsmen.

Gear, George R., age 22, volunteer, August 15, 1862, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, attained the rank of sergeant, served three years, mustered out July 9, 1865.

Given, Abraham, First Virginia artillery.

Guckert, Henry, volunteer, July, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company F, private, served four years, mustered out July 9, 1865.

Grass, William, age 19, volunteer, July 22, 1861, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, served four years, mustered out July 9, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran, wounded at Atlanta.

Grass, Henry, age 11, volunteer, November, 1862, three years, One Hundred and Fourteenth regiment, company E, drummer, served three years, honorably discharged.

Hartwick, Peter, company G, One Hundred and Forty-eighth Ohio infantry, One Hundred and Thirty-seventh Pennsylvania infantry.

Guckert, Henry, company F, Thirty-ninth Ohio infantry.

Haynes, Charles, Thirty-sixth regiment.

Henning, Henry, volunteer, March, 1862, three years, First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, died August 13, 1863, at Washington, D. C.

Huntington, J. F., volunteer, November, 1861, three years, First Ohio, company H, captain, served two years, resigned October 26, 1863.

Jenny, William, age 19, volunteer, March, 1862, three years, First Virginia light artillery, company C, bugler, mustered out July 9, 1865.

Jaynes, James, Eleventh regiment, company E, died October 12, 1864.

Jenvey, George K., age 18, volunteer, November 19, 1861, three years, Second Virginia cavalry, company F, served three years and seven months, mustered out June 30, 1865 re-enlisted as a veteran.

Jones Charles.

Jett, George, age 17, volunteer, February 17, 1865, one year, Thirty-sixth regiment, company H, private, served six months, mustered out July 28, 1865.

Jenkins, Josiah H., age 26, volunteer, May, 1862, three months, Eighty-seventh regiment, company A, second lieutenant, mustered out September 20, 1862.

Kasper, Krus, Thirty-ninth regiment, company F.

Kendricks, John Mills, age 26, volunteer, August, 1861, Thirty-third regiment, first lieutenant, attained the rank of adjutant, served one year and one month, resigned September, 1862.

King George W., volunteer, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, died.

Kantz, John, age 18, volunteer, July 31, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company F, private, served three years, mustered out 1864.

Lacey, Charles, age 21, volunteer, March, 1862, three years, First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, died July 3, 1863, killed at Gettysburg.

Lehahardt, John Jacob, age 19, volunteer, August 13, 1862, three years, First Virginia light artillery, company C, four battles, served two years and ten months, mustered out June 28, 1865.

Lohse, Frederick, company F, Thirty-ninth Ohio infantry, company D, Fifteenth veteran reserve corps, Lehnhardt, Henry, company F, Thirty-ninth Ohio infantry, died at St. Louis, Missouri, December, 1862.

Long, Lewis, age 16, volunteer, November 4, 1861, three years, First Virginia light artillery, company G, private, served three years and nine months, mustered out July 8, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Mahnken, John, age 24, volunteer, September 1, 1861, three years, First Virginia light artillery, company E, private, served three years and nine months, mustered out June 28, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Maloy, Barney, age 24, volunteer, December, 1861, three years, First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, served three and a half years, mustered out June 28, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Maloy, Alexander E., age 21, volunteer, December, 1861, three years, First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, mustered out June 28, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Malov, James Henry, age 21, volunteer, 1862, three years, First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, mustered out June 28, 1865.

Merabin, L. R., volunteer, three years, First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, captured at Rodgersville, Tennessee, and imprisoned, nothing further heard of him.

Misenhelder, William, age 35, volunteer, September, 1862, three years, Seventh cavalry, company H, private, died.

Miller, Henry J., age 38, volunteer, September 20, 1862, three years, Seventh cavalry, company H, private, served two years and nine months, mustered out June 20, 1864.

Morris Augustus, age 22, volunteer, April, 1861, three months, Eighteenth regiment, company B, served four months, mustered out September, 1861, re-enlisted as a veteran, volunteer, September, 1861, three years, First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, served three years and nine months, mustered out June 28, 1865.

Morris, William H., age 21, volunteer, January 18, 1862, three years, gunboat, private, served two and one-half years, honorably discharged 1864, by reason of yellow fever appearing on board the gunboat.

Newton, Charles H., age 21, volunteer, July, 1863, three years, Second Ohio heavy artillery, company K, second lieutenant, attained rank of first lieutenant, served one year and seven months, honorably discharged February, 1865.

Payne, George, age 56, volunteer, November 15, 1861, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, drum major, served five months, honorably discharged April 17, 1862.

Payne, Abram Darrow, age 27, volunteer, October 14, 1861, Sixty-fourth regiment, company B, musician, honorably discharged May 7, 1863.

Payne, George L., age 23, volunteer, July 22, 1861, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, principal musician, honorably discharged January, 1863, for disability.

Pearce, William, age 58, volunteer, January, 1862, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, chaplain, resigned 1862.

Pearce, Charles, age 25, volunteer, August 13, 1862, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private, attained orderly, served three years, mustered out July 25, 1865.

Pearce, Edgar P., June, 1862, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, first lieutenant, mustered out March 8, 1866, brigade quartermaster in General Steele's army.

Pearce, Ebenezer, age 27, volunteer, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, served three years, mustered out 1864.

Petre, Frederick, age 34, volunteer, 1861, three years, First light artillery, company H, private, honorably discharged March, 1862, for disability.

Petre, Charles, age 21, volunteer, December 8, 1861, three years, First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, served three years and six months, mustered out June 28, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Paff, Lewis, age 20, volunteer, July 31, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company F, private, served three years, mustered out 1864, detailed for duty in a battery two years of the time.

Pixley, William W., volunteer, First light artillery, company H, private.

Pixley, George C., company C, First West Virginia cavalry, died January, 1862, at Clarksburg, West Virginia.

Reiter, Nicholas, age 36, volunteer, August 12, 1861, three years, First Virginia light artillery, company H, private, served one year and six months, died in 1863 of lung fever.

Rudig, Adam, age 44, volunteer, February, 1864, one year, Thirty-ninth regiment, company F, private, served thirteen months, died March, 1865, of diarrhoea.

Rudig, Jacob, age 19, volunteer, February, 1864, one year, Thirty-ninth regiment, company F, private, served one year and four months, mustered out July 9, 1865.

Schminke, Augustus, age 32, volunteer, October, 1862, three years, Seventh cavalry, company H, bugler, served one year, died November 6, 1863, killed at Rogersville, Tennessee.

Schneider, Philip, age 30, volunteer, October, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company F, private, served one year, honorably discharged December, 1862, his team ran away and injured him.

Scisson, Lewis E., volunteer, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, captain, attained major, mustered out.

Shaw, Sidney F., age 37, volunteer, October 23, 1862, three years, Fifteenth Virginia regiment, company G, captain, acting chief engineer of West Virginia.

Shaw, Rodney K., age 31, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company G, second lieutenant, attained captain, served one year, resigned September 18, 1862, for disability.

Shaw, Nathaniel H., age 41, volunteer, July 8, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, served three months, honorably discharged October 4, 1861, for disability.

Snider, John B., Thirty-ninth regiment, company B.

Shockley, David, age 23, volunteer, 1861, three years, First light artillery, company H, private, served four years, mustered out July 31, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Simmons, Orrin, First light artillery, company K.

Sinclair, Jesse B., age 16, volunteer, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, drummer, attained corporal, served four years, mustered out July 15, 1865; re-enlisted as a veteran, was captured at Mark's Mills, and in Tyler prison, Texas, for ten months.

Stoful, John, Fifth regiment, company A.

Smith, Samuel H. W., age 23, volunteer, July, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, private, three years, honorably discharged October 8, 1864, detailed as printer and served as such for eighteen months; re-enlistment, substitute, 1865, one year, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private.

Smith, J. J.

Snider, Peter, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B.

Sniffen, James, Seventh cavalry, company H.

Stewart, T. R., Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, died October 20, 1861, of typhoid pneumonia.

Steen, Eli W., company B, Thirty-ninth Ohio infantry.

Sniffen, J. Wesley, Seventh cavalry, company H.

Solar, George, volunteer, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, died.

Stump, Lawrence, age 27, volunteer, February, 1864, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, served one year, died April 4, 1865, of wound in lungs.

Thomas, James L., volunteer, Seventy-seventh regiment, company E, private.

Styner, First light artillery, company H.

Thomas, Samuel R., volunteer, Seventy-seventh regiment, company F, honorably discharged.

Vandine, Samuel, age 29, volunteer, May, 1862, three months, Eighty-eighth regiment, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1862; re-enlistment, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, private, served four months, mustered out in September, 1864.

Wellbrook, Henry, age 35, volunteer, February, 1862, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company F, private, served one month, died March 31, 1864, of diarrhoea, at St. Louis.

Wilson, John, volunteer, honorably discharged.

Warren, George, age 36, volunteer, September, 1861, three years, First cavalry, company L, sergeant, served three years, honorably discharged in 1864; re-enlistment, volunteer, October 12, 1864, one year, Twenty-first Kentucky, company I, private, honorably discharged October 24, 1865.

Wildt, Joseph B., Jr., volunteer, First light artillery, company H, private, honorably discharged July, 1862.

Wildt, Joseph, volunteer, Fifty-eighth regiment, captain.

Walters, Thomas B., volunteer, March 21, 1863, Sixth regiment, served one year, company D.

Shaw, Sidney F., age 28, volunteer, Sixty-third regiment, lieutenant; re-enlistment, volunteer, September, 1862, Fifteenth Virginia, company G, captain, attained rank of chief engineer, which position he held from October 16, 1864, to July 1, 1865, when he was made major.

Wells, William.

RECAPITULATION.

Buck's Pierpont battery (First Virginia artillery) . . . . .	12
First Virginia light artillery . . . . .	3
Huntington's battery . . . . .	7
Battery K, Second heavy artillery . . . . .	2
De Beck's battery . . . . .	1
Seventh Ohio cavalry . . . . .	6
First Ohio cavalry . . . . .	2
One each in Fourth Virginia cavalry and Second Virginia cavalry . . . . .	2
Thirty-ninth Ohio . . . . .	26
Seventy-seventh Ohio . . . . .	16
One Hundred and Forty-eighth Ohio National guards . . . . .	8
Thirty-sixth Ohio . . . . .	6
Ninety-second Ohio . . . . .	2
Sixty-third Ohio . . . . .	1
And one each in Fifth Ohio, One Hundred and Fourteenth Ohio, Eleventh Ohio, Eighty-seventh Ohio (three months), Thirty-third Ohio, Eighteenth Ohio (three months), Sixty-fourth Ohio, Sixty-seventh Ohio, Fifteenth Virginia infantry, Eighty-eighth Ohio, Fifty-eighth Ohio, Sixth Ohio, Fifteenth Virginia infantry, Twenty-first Kentucky infantry, and one in gundat service, making in all . . . . .	15
Total number soldiers . . . . .	108

MUSKINGUM TOWNSHIP.

Andrews, Christian, age 26, volunteer, September 1, 1862, three years, First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, served two years and nine months, mustered out June 30, 1865; re-enlisted as a veteran.

Andrews, Daniel, Sixty-third regiment, company F, Arend, Daniel, age 19, volunteer, October, 1861, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company F, private, served ten months, honorably discharged on account of rheumatism.

Paker, Alpheus, age 41, August 5, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company F, private, served fourteen and one half months, honorably discharged November 28, 1862.

Barker, John D., age 29, volunteer, September, 1861, three years, First cavalry, company L, first lieutenant, attained rank of captain, served three years and four months, resigned January 21, 1864.

Barker, J. Gage, age 26, volunteer, July 29, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, first lieutenant, attained rank of captain, served three years and two months, resigned October, 1864, wounded at battle of Berryville, September 3, 1864, and severely at Winchester.

Barker, Arthur W., age 24, volunteer, July 29, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, honorably discharged April 24, 1863, transferred December 10, 1861, to accept an appointment, wounded severely at Antietam September 17, 1862, second enlistment, volunteer, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A.

Barker, Jesse H., volunteer, July 29, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, attained rank of commissary sergeant, served three years, honorably discharged in 1864 for disability.

Barker, Luther D., volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company A, private, served one hundred days, mustered out September, 1864.

Barnhart, William, volunteer, July 29, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, served three years, mustered out 1864.

Barnhart, William, age 19, volunteer, July 5, 1863, six months, Fourth independent battalion cavalry, private, served nine months, mustered out March 12, 1864; re-enlistment, age 20, volunteer, September 5, 1864, one year, One Hundred and Seventy-fourth regiment, company D, private, served ten months, mustered out June 28, 1865.

Barnhart, Jasper, age 19, volunteer, July 5, 1863, six months, Fourth independent battalion cavalry, private, served nine months, mustered out March 12, 1864; re-enlistment, age 20, volunteer, September 5, 1864, one year, One Hundred and Seventy-fourth regiment, company D, private, served ten months, mustered out June 28, 1865.

Bartlett, Henry, age 19, volunteer, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company D, private, mustered out July 8, 1865; re-enlisted as a veteran.

Baumgardner, John G., age 18, volunteer, March 31, 1865, one year, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, served four months, mustered out July 27, 1865.

Bell, Wilson, aged 27, volunteer, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, mustered out July 9, 1865; re-enlisted as a veteran.

Bell, George Washington, age 25, volunteer, December 3, 1863, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company K, private, served one year and six months, mustered out June, 1864.

Bell, William, age 17, volunteer, July 5, 1863, six months, Fourth independent battalion cavalry, private, served nine months, mustered out March 12, 1864; re-enlistment, age 18, volunteer, September 15, 1864, one year, One Hundred and Seventy-fourth regiment, company D, sergeant, attained rank of orderly sergeant, served ten months, mustered out June 28, 1865.

Bey, Frederick, age 21, volunteer, October 12, 1862, three years, Seventh cavalry, company H, blacksmith.

Bingham, William H., age 34, volunteer, August, 1862, three years, First light artillery, company H, private, discharged.

Bishop, Lyeurgus, age 29, volunteer, 1862, three years, First light artillery, company H, died June 14, 1863.

Burlingame, E. P., volunteer, September 14, 1861, three years, First cavalry, company L, private, attained rank of first sergeant, served four years, mustered out September 26, 1865, veteran, re-enlisted.

Bragg, Benjamin, age 21, volunteer, April 17, 1861, three months, Eighteenth regiment, company B, private, served four months, mustered out August 28, 1861, re-enlistment, age 21, volunteer, July 29, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, corporal, attained rank of second lieutenant, served two years and six months, mustered out July 27, 1865; veteran enlistment, age 23, volunteer, February, 1864, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, sergeant, attained rank of second lieutenant, served one year and six months, mustered out July 27, 1865.

Brown, Asa, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment.

Briggs, Felix, age 28, volunteer, Twenty-third Kentucky regiment, company I, private, died January 24, 1864.

Briggs, T. L.

Briggs, Sabinus, age 24, volunteer, One Hundred and Thirty-ninth Pennsylvania, company H, re-enlistment.

Creal, George, age 26, volunteer, July 29, 1863, three years, Fifth colored infantry, company I, private, served two years, honorably discharged September 22, 1865.

Cook, Jacob, age 16, volunteer, October, 1861, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company F, private, served six months, died May 1, 1862.

Dabold, Jacob, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company A, private.

Danner, William, age 42, volunteer, February 14, 1865, one year, Thirty-sixth regiment, company C, private, served five and one-half months, mustered out July 27, 1865.

Davis, Freeman L., volunteer, three years, First cavalry, company L.

Davis, Herman, volunteer, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, served three years, mustered out.

Decker, John, Thirty-ninth regiment, company F.

Devol, Stephen, volunteer, July 29, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, served two and a half years, mustered out in February, 1864; veteran enlistment, volunteer, February, 1864, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, served one year and a half, mustered out July 27, 1865.

Devol, Charles H., age 20, volunteer, July 29, 1862, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, attained rank of corporal, served three years, mustered out July 27, 1865.

Devol, William, age 19, volunteer, August 12, 1862, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, mustered out July 27, 1865.

Devol, Benjamin, substitute, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company A, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864; re-enlisted, one year, Eighteenth regiment, company I, private, mustered out.

Devol, Harris, age 18, volunteer, July 29, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, served three years, mustered out in 1864.

Dyar, Joseph, age 25, volunteer, July 29, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, corporal, honorably discharged.

Tile, Henry, Sixteenth regiment, company A.

Gilpin, Daniel, age 23, substitute, October 6, 1864, one year, Seventy-eighth regiment, company E, private, served nine months, mustered out June 26, 1865.

Gilpin, Jackson, age 17, volunteer, October 6, 1864, one year, First cavalry, company L, private, served nine months, mustered out June 26, 1865.

Hamilton, Albert G., age 24, volunteer, August 2, 1863, three years, Second heavy artillery, company K, private, served two years, mustered out August 23, 1865.

Hamilton, John A., age 16, volunteer, August 27, 1863, three years, Second heavy artillery, company K, private, served one year and nine months, honorably discharged May 12, 1865.

Haney, James, age 23, volunteer, 1861, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company G, private, served one year, honorably discharged in 1862; re-enlistment, age 26, volunteer, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private, served one year, mustered out in 1865.

Heckler, John, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A.

Heckler, Joseph, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A.

Heckler, Godfrey, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A.

Hill, Prescott, age 29, volunteer, January 5, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, companies H and D, private.

Hill, William, volunteer, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private.

Kidwell, George Washington, age 16, volunteer, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, died.

Ladd, William, age 32, volunteer, August 12, 1862, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, died.

Ladd, Salathiel, age 28, volunteer, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, served three years, mustered out in 1864.

Ladd, John Asher, age 22, volunteer, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, died.

Lancaster, J. Leroy, age 27, volunteer, August 9, 1862, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, served two years and eleven months, mustered out July 27, 1865.

Lancaster, William, age 21, volunteer, July 29, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, served four years, mustered out July 27, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Lancaster, Francis, age 19, volunteer, May 28, 1862, three months, Eighty-seventh regiment, company A, private, served four months, mustered out October 1, 1862, re-enlisted twice.

Lancaster, F. T., Thirteenth cavalry, company A.

Lancaster, Mordecai, age 17, volunteer, May 28, 1862, three months, Eighty-seventh regiment, company A, private, served four months, re-enlisted as a veteran, killed by explosion at Petersburg.

Marshal, William, age 21, volunteer, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, attained rank of corporal, served two years, died in 1863, mortally wounded June 29, 1863.

Maxwell, S. Newton, age 23, volunteer, May 28, 1862, three months, Eighty-seventh regiment, company A, served four months, mustered out October 1, 1862.

Mellor, Walter H., age 37, volunteer, May, 1864, three months, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company K, orderly sergeant.

Monett, A. Lake, age 22, volunteer, May 28, 1862, three months, Eighty-seventh regiment, company A, private, served four months, mustered out October 1, 1862.

Monett, Moses M., age 18, volunteer, July 29, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, served six months, honorably discharged January 31, 1862.

More, Alfred, Thirty-ninth regiment company B.
Nye, Charles N., volunteer, May 28, 1862 three months, Eighty-fifth regiment, company B, private, mustered out October 1, 1862, re-enlisted May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company A, orderly sergeant, four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Otten, John, volunteer, re-enlisted as a veteran.
Palmer, David P., age 18, volunteer, July, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, served three years, mustered out September, 1864, wounded at Mission Ridge.

Perrin, Lyman, volunteer, July 29, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, served two years and nine months, re-enlisted as a veteran, killed by a bushwhacker May, 1864.

Pixley, George, age 21, volunteer, April 17, 1861, three months, Eighteenth regiment, company B, private, served four and a half months, mustered out August 28, 1861.

Putnam, Israel Pitt, age 20, volunteer, November 15, 1861, three years, First Virginia light artillery company C, corporal, served two years and two months, honorably discharged February 16, 1863.

Putnam, George W., age 21, volunteer, July 29, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, sergeant, attained rank of first lieutenant, served three and a half years, resigned January 13, 1865.

Putnam, William Rufus, volunteer, commanding Camp Putnam, Ohio, colonel.

Ridgeway, George, volunteer, Eighteenth regiment, company B, died.

Ridgeway, Joseph, Thirty-sixth Iowa.

Rhodes, Joseph, age 33, volunteer, September 14, 1861, three years, First cavalry, company L, private, mustered out 1864.

Robinson, William, First cavalry, company L, died.

Ross, William, Ninth cavalry, company B.

Ross, Griffin, Ninth cavalry, company B.

Saner, Henry, age 24, volunteer, October 6, 1862, three years, Seventh cavalry, company H, private, served two years and eleven months, honorably discharged September 3, 1864.

Saner, Conrad, age 23, volunteer, October 6, 1862, three years, Seventh cavalry, company H, private, served two years and eight months, honorably discharged May 24, 1865.

Selby, James Calhoun, age 22, volunteer, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, second lieutenant, attained rank of captain, served three years, mortally wounded at Berryville, Virginia, September 3, 1864, died September 14, 1864.

Shaw, John L., age 35, volunteer, April 17, 1861, three months, Eighteenth regiment, company B, private, served four and a half months, mustered out August 28, 1861.

Schwartz, Martin, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A.

Smith, George P., volunteer, August, 1862, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, attained rank of sergeant, served three years, mustered out August 28, 1865.

Smith, Christopher C., volunteer, August 11, 1862, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, served one and a half years, honorably discharged February 29, 1864.

Smith, John, age 24, volunteer, August 4, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private.

Snider, Henry, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment.

Spears, James, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A.
Stackhouse, Wallace, age 48, volunteer, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company H.

Stacy, Miles A., volunteer, July, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, orderly sergeant, attained rank of captain, served four years, mustered out July 27, 1865.

Stacy, James.

Stacy, Joel Elliot, age 21, volunteer, July 29, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, served two and a half years, mustered out February, 1864, veteran enlistment February, 1864, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A.

Stacy, Arius F., age 18, volunteer, August 24, 1861, three years, company A, private, served three years, mustered out 1864.

Steed, James, volunteer, 1861, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company D, private.

Steer, Edward, age 18, volunteer, July 29, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company F, private, served three years, mustered out June 10, 1865.

Stewart, Frank, volunteer, July 29, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, killed.

Stow, Seldon S., age 19, volunteer, July 29, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, served four years, mustered out July 27, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Stow, Charles R., age 17, volunteer, 1862, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private.

Strohl, William, age 29, volunteer, November 11, 1862, three years, One Hundred and Twenty-fifth regiment, company E, private, attained rank of corporal, served two years and ten months, mustered out September 25, 1865.

Strohl, Joseph, volunteer, May 28, 1862, three months, Eighty-seventh regiment, company A, private, served four months, mustered out October 1, 1862, re-enlistment, volunteer, June 28, 1863, six months, Fourth independent battalion cavalry, company C, sergeant, served eight months, mustered out March 12, 1864, third enlistment, volunteer, March 14, 1864, three years, Thirtieth cavalry, companies A, K and E, orderly sergeant, attained rank of captain, served one year and four months, mustered out August 10, 1865.

Swartz, Martin, age 19, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, served two years and six months, mustered out February, 1864, veteran enlistment, volunteer, February, 1864, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G.

Wagoner, Theobald, company A.

Wagoner, Michael, age 19, volunteer, August 2, 1863, three years, Second heavy artillery, company K, private, served two years, mustered out August 23, 1865.

Ward, J. Edwin, age 17, volunteer, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private, served eleven months, honorably discharged 1862, re-enlistment, age 19, volunteer, July 6, 1863, six months, Fourth independent battalion cavalry, company C, private, served eight months, mustered out March 12, 1864, third enlistment, age 20, volunteer, March 14, 1864, three years, Thirtieth cavalry company A, corporal, served one year and four months, mustered out July, 1865.

Wellspring, John, volunteer, October 20, 1861, three years, First light artillery, company H, private, served two years, honorably discharged September 22, 1863.

Wendleken, Henry W., age 18, substitute, April 1, 1865, one year, Eighteenth regiment, company E, private, served six and one-half months, mustered out October 19, 1865.

West, Gordon B., age 20, volunteer, April 17, 1861, three months, Eighteenth regiment, company B, private, served four and one-half months, mustered out August 28, 1861, re-enlistment, 1863, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company E, lieutenant, attained rank of captain, mustered out March 8, 1866, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Welking, Philip, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B.

Wood, Osmer J., volunteer, July 29, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, companies A and K, sergeant, attained rank of first lieutenant, served two years, resigned August 27, 1863.

Wood, Gustavus Adolphus, volunteer, July 29, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, corporal, served two years and five months, honorably discharged December 7, 1862, wounded at Antietam, September 17, 1862, and at Chickamauga, September 19, 1863.

RECAPITULATION.

Huntington's battery .....	3
Buell's Pierpont battery .....	2
Battery K, Second Ohio heavy artillery .....	3
First Ohio cavalry .....	6
Fourth Ohio independent battalion cavalry .....	5
Seventh Ohio cavalry .....	3
Thirtieth Ohio cavalry .....	3
Ninth Ohio cavalry .....	2
Thirty-sixth Ohio .....	40
Sixty-third Ohio .....	6
One Hundred and Forty-eighth Ohio .....	7

Thirty-ninth Ohio .....	5
Seventy-seventh Ohio .....	5
Eighteenth Ohio (three months) .....	5
Eighty-seventh Ohio .....	5
Eighteenth Ohio (three years) .....	2
Ninety-second Ohio .....	3
One Hundred and Seventy-fourth Ohio .....	3
One each in Twenty-third Kentucky, Thirty-sixth Iowa, One Hundred and Thirty-ninth Pennsylvania, Fifth colored infantry, Sixteenth Ohio, Seventy-eighth Ohio, Eighty-fifth Ohio (three months), One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Ohio, not designated two .....	10

Total number of soldiers .....	III
Died .....	13

NEWPORT TOWNSHIP.

Adams, Moses, age 46, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company G, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Adams, Alcynus, age 17, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company G, private, served four months mustered out September, 1864.

Adkins.

Bobb, Reese Smith, age 31, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company G, corporal, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Ballentine, William Henry, age 50, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company G, corporal, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Ballentine, George Kimberly, age 20, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Sixth Virginia regiment, company G, private, attained the rank of sergeant, three years, mustered out October, 1864.

Ballentine, John T., age 18, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Sixth Virginia regiment, company G, private, three years, mustered out October, 1864.

Ballentine, William Edward, age 17, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Sixth Virginia regiment, company G, private, served three years, mustered out October, 1864.

Baldwin, Sinclair, volunteer, company A.

Baldwin, Silas, age 22, volunteer, September 1, 1861, three years, First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, served two years and six months, mustered out in 1864, re-enlistment, age 24, volunteer, 1864, three years, First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, served one year mustered out June 28, 1865.

Barker, Joseph, age 28, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company B, corporal, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Batelle, Charles D., age 16, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company G, fifer, served four months, mustered out September, 1867.

Bell, Austin, age 18, volunteer, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private.

Bell, William Henry, age 42, volunteer, August 22, 1862, three years. One Hundred and Sixteenth regiment, company F, drummer, attained the rank of private, three years, mustered out June, 1865.

Blakely, Lewis, Second Arkansas light artillery, died.

Blakely, William Hervy, age 21, volunteer, September 9, 1861, three years. Eighteenth regiment, company F, private, served three years and three months, mustered out December 15, 1864.

Blakely, Andrew S., age 17, volunteer, September 9, 1861, three years. Eighteenth regiment, company F, private, served four years, mustered out October 9, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Bosworth, Sumner, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company G, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Burge, C., volunteer, First Virginia regiment, company I, died.

Britton, Charles Russel, age 16, volunteer, August, 1863, six months. One Hundred and Twenty-ninth regiment, company F, private, served eight months, mustered out March 11, 1864, re-enlistment, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company G, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Bush, John L., age 48, volunteer, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company G.

Bush, William Casner, volunteer, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G.

Bush, Josephus, age 18, volunteer, July 13, 1863, six months, One Hundred and Twenty-ninth regiment, company F, private.

Carpenter, David, age 31, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company G, private, mustered out September, 1864, re-enlistment, age 32, drafted March, 1865, one year, honorably discharged.

Carpenter, Jasper, age 31, volunteer, May 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company B, private, mustered out September, 1864.

Carver, Isaac P., age 18, volunteer, January 1, 1862, three years. First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, served two years, honorably discharged in 1864, veteran enlistment, age 20, volunteer, 1864, three years, First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, served one year and six months, mustered out June 28, 1865.

Conner, Joseph Long, age 32, drafted March 23, 1865, one year, Forty-third regiment, served two months, honorably discharged May 24, 1865, by reason of instructions from the War Department.

Chapeell, Conrad.

Coner, Thomas Jason, age 19, volunteer, July 22, 1861, three years. Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, corporal, attained rank of sergeant three years, mustered out in 1864.

Cooke, Milton Gilbert, age 47, volunteer, September 6, 1861, three years. First cavalry, company L, blacksmith, served one year and six months, honorably discharged.

Cree, John R., age 21, volunteer, May 28, 1862, three months, Eighty-fifth regiment, company F, private, mustered out.

Cooke, James Monroe, age 16, August 13, 1861, three years. Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, served four years, mustered out July 9, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Crandall.

Crocker, Joseph, age 42, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company G, corporal.

Crumbley, E. A., age 38, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company G, private, mustered out in September, 1864.

Cunningham, Michael, age 40, volunteer, August 6, 1862, three years. Ninety-second regiment, company F, private, honorably discharged.

Cutshaw, William, age 18, volunteer, 1864, three years, One Hundred and Seventy-fifth regiment, company K, private, died.

Cutshaw, Sheppard, age 16, volunteer, 1864, Eighth Virginia cavalry, company C.

Cutshaw, Shannon, age 15, volunteer, 1864, one year, One Hundred and Seventy-fifth regiment, company K, private, died at Nashville, Tennessee.

Dana, Frederick F., age 18, volunteer, September 1, 1862, three years. Seventh cavalry, company H, served three years mustered out July 4, 1865.

Dale, Edward R., Seventy-seventh regiment.

Dana, Charles L.

Davis, Hamilton F., age 16, volunteer, October 8, 1861, three years. Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, private, served two years and four months, honorably discharged, veteran enlistment, age 19, volunteer, 1864, three years. Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, private, served five months, died July 1, 1864, died in prison in Tyler, Texas.

Davis, John Wilson, age 19, drafted March 23, 1865, one year. Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, served four months, mustered out July 9, 1865.

Davis, K. B., age 23, volunteer, July, 1863, six months. One Hundred and Twenty-ninth regiment, company F, private, served nine months, mustered out March 11, 1864, re-enlistment, substitute, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company G, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Davis, James W., age 22, volunteer, April 1861, three months. Eighteenth regiment, company C, private, four and one-half months, mustered out in August, 1861, re-enlistment, substitute, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company K, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1861.

Davis, Henry Edward, age 20, volunteer, September 1, 1862, three years. Seventh cavalry, company H, private, served one year and seven months, died April 4, 1864, a prisoner at Andersonville, captured November 15, 1863, in Kentucky.

Davis, Sanford, age 33, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company G, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Dick, J., age 16, volunteer, 1861, three years, Eighteenth regiment, company F, private, served three years, mustered out in 1864.

Dolson, Emanuel, volunteer, May, 1861, three years, Twenty-fifth regiment, private, served eleven months, honorably discharged March, 1862, for disability, a prisoner, captured at Rogersville, November 6, 1863, re-enlistment, volunteer, 1862, three years, Seventh cavalry, company H, private, served one year and ten months, died July 20, 1864.

Dotson, George, age 17, volunteer, August, 1864, one year, Second heavy artillery, company K, private, served ten months, honorably discharged May 25, 1865, from hospital after three months sickness.

Dowens, George, age 57, volunteer, October 19, 1861, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company F, fife major, honorably discharged for disability.

Edgell, Benjamin Ellis, age 23, volunteer, July, 1863, six months, One Hundred and Twenty-ninth regiment, company F, orderly sergeant, mustered out.

Edgerton, Luther, volunteer, First cavalry, company L, died May 13, 1862, of fever, at Louisville, Kentucky.

Edgerton, William H., volunteer, July, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, first lieutenant, resigned June 25, 1862.

Edwards, Benjamin, May, 1861, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company G, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Edwards, Dennis, age 25, volunteer, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company F, private.

Elsou, Lewis, age 33, volunteer, August, 1862, three years, Eleventh Virginia regiment, company D, private, served two years and nine months, mustered out June, 1865.

Farley, Pearson, age 45, volunteer, one hundred days, May, 1864, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company G, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Farley, John, age 18, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company G, private, served four months mustered out September, 1864.

Francis, A. J., age 29, volunteer, August, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company F, private, served one year, died November 1, 1863, of chronic diarrhoea in Chattanooga.

Francis, Stephen, age 27, volunteer, August 8, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company F, private, served two years and ten months, mustered out June, 1865.

Friedel, Andrew, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company G, private served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Gano, Jacob, age 21, volunteer, September, 1861, three years, First cavalry, company L, corporal, attained rank of sergeant served three years, mustered out 1864.

Garrison, Rodney S., age 20, volunteer, July 22, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, served one year, honorably discharged 1862, re-enlistment, age 23, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company G, private.

Gates, Jewett, age 23, volunteer, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company G, private, served three months, died 1864.

Goddard, George, age 35, drafted, March 23, 1865, one year, Thirty-ninth regiment, company G, private, served four months, mustered out July 9, 1865.

Greene, Christopher, age 55, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company G, sergeant, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Green, James Brown, age 31, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company G, private, attained rank of sergeant.

Gregg, Levi.

Greenwood, Frank, age 16, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company G.

Guillinger, Michael, age 16, volunteer, January 22, 1864, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company F, private, served one and one-half years, honorably discharged 1865.

Guillinger, Thomas, age 44, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company B, private.

Guillinger, Jacob H., age 37, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company G, private, attained rank of corporal.

Haight, Charles C., age 21, volunteer, August 26, 1861, three years, Sixth Virginia regiment, company G, sergeant, served three years, mustered out.

Haight, George Washington, age 19, volunteer, May, 1862, thirteen months, One Hundred and Eighty-fifth regiment, company F, private, mustered out 1862, at Bermuda Hundred.

Hall, Eli Worthington, age 17, substitute, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company G, private, served six weeks, died July 6, 1864, at Bermuda Hundred.

Hall, Oscar, age 14, volunteer, September 1, 1862, three years, Ninety-seventh regiment, company A, private, served five months, died January, 1863, in hospital, Tennessee.

Haynes, Alfred, age 16, substitute, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company G, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Hays, Preston G., age 19, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company G, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Hazel, Frederick, age 18, volunteer, January 18, 1864, three years, First cavalry, company L, private, served one year and four months, honorably discharged May 21, 1865.

Higgins, Thomas Neely, age 33, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company G, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Hill, Addison, age 18, volunteer, November, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, private, served two years, mustered out December, 1863, re-enlisted, volunteer, 1864, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, private.

Hill, Cornelius, age 41, volunteer, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company B, private, died July 19, 1864, of chronic diarrhoea, at Bermuda Hundred.

Hill, William Wallace, age 18, volunteer, October, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, private, one battle, served one and one-half years, died May 3, 1863, of measles, at Alton, Illinois.

Hill, Henry McKibben, age 23, volunteer, October 22, 1862, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, private.

Hutchinson, Charles, volunteer, Thirty-sixth regiment, company E, private.

Hughes, David D., age 16, volunteer, July 18, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, served four years, mustered out July 9, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Jobes John, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, private, died.

Jobes, Carby, age 37, drafted March 23, 1865, one year, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, served four months, mustered out July 9, 1865.

Johnson, E. A., First Virginia regiment.

Johnson, A. F., Fourteenth regiment.

Lang, Ebenezer, age 17, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company G, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Lang, William, age 20, volunteer, August 24, 1861, three years, Sixth Virginia regiment, company G, private, served three years, mustered out 1864.

Larkins, Elias, First cavalry, company L.

Leonard, Augustus, age 34, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company G, first lieutenant, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Little, Arthur B., volunteer, October 25, 1862, three years, Seventh cavalry, company H, corporal, attained the rank of sergeant, served three years, mustered out July 4, 1865.

Little, Thomas O., age 22, volunteer, 1861, three years, First cavalry, company L, private, served three years, honorably discharged re-enlistment, volunteer, 1864, three years, First cavalry, company L, private.

Matheny, John Seventh cavalry, company H.

Manley, Bryan, First Virginia artillery, company C.

Mathers, John, age 38, volunteer, 1861, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company G, private, served nine months, honorably discharged in 1862, re-enlistment, substitute, private.

Mathers, Alexander, age 21, volunteer, September, 1861, three years, Seventy-fifth regiment, company D, private, served two years, honorably discharged September, 1863, for disability.

Mathers, Matthew, age 21, volunteer, January, 1865, one year, First cavalry, company L, private.

Mathers, Joseph, age 17, volunteer, January, 1865, one year, First cavalry, company L, private.

Matthews, David, volunteer, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private.

Matthews, Edward, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G, private, died April 27, 1862, near Cincinnati.

McDaniels, J.

McCoy, Thomas A., age 26, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company B, private served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

McCallister, Charles, Eighteenth regiment.

McElfresh.

McElhinney, Joseph M., volunteer, May, 1864, One hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company G, captain, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

McIntire, Fidellius, age 32, volunteer, August 11, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company F, private, served three years, mustered out June 15, 1865.

McLain.

McPeak, Jasper, volunteer, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company F, private, served one year and eight months, died April 19, 1863, at Carthage, Tennessee, of fever.

McVey, Thomas Jett, age 18, volunteer, November 14, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, private, taken prisoner at Shiloh and not heard from since.

Middleswartz, H. F., volunteer, July, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company F, first lieutenant, attained the rank of captain, served three years, mustered out June 19, 1865.

Middleswartz, George W., age 23, volunteer, July 22, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, served four years, mustered out July 9, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Middleswartz, H. F., age 22, volunteer, July 22, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, served four years, mustered out July 9, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Middleswartz, N., age 22, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company B, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Miller, Greenbury, drafted, spring of 1865.

Moor, Abijah, age 22, volunteer, October 23, 1861, three years, Seventy-fifth regiment, company B, private, served three years and two months, mustered out December, 1864.

Newlen, Henry, age 30, volunteer, November 26, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G, private, served three years, mustered out December 23, 1864.

Newlen, David, age 27, 1864, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company G, private.

Newlen, Martin, age 24, volunteer, November 26, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G, private.

Nine, George, Fourth Virginia cavalry, company G.

Newlen, Ira, age 17, volunteer, November 26, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G, private, mustered out December, 1863, re-enlistment, volunteer, December, 1863, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G, private.

Noland, Stephen, age 33, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company G.

Nune, Jacob.

Noland, Augustus, age 27, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company G.

Nine, Lewis, volunteer, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, killed at New Madrid.

Noland, Johnson, age 24, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company G.

Noland, Justus, age 21, volunteer, 1862, three years, Seventh cavalry, company H, private, served one year and eight months, died March, 1864, at Camp Nelson, of smallpox.

Nolan, Philip.

Osborn, Joseph, Eighteenth regiment, company F.

O'Blenas, Henry, age 19, volunteer, May 28, 1862, three months, Eighty-fifth regiment, company F, corporal, mustered out re-enlistment volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company G, sergeant, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

O'Blenas, Abram Gnyton, age 18, volunteer, May 28, 1862, three months, Eighty-fifth regiment, company F, private, mustered out, second enlistment, age 19, volunteer, 1863, six months, One Hundred and Twenty-ninth regiment, company F, private, mustered out March 11, 1864, third enlistment, age 20, volunteer, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company G, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

O'Neil, Gilbert, age 25, volunteer, September, 1861, three years, First cavalry, company L, private, served two years, honorably discharged in 1863 by reason of deafness, re-enlistment, age 20, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company G, private, four months, mustered out September, 1864.

O'Shurn, Ezra J., age 18, volunteer, September 16, 1861, three years, Eighteenth regiment, company F, private, served three years and two months, honorably discharged November 9, 1864, veteran enlistment, November, 1864, three years, Eighteenth regiment, companies F and B, private, served five months, honorably discharged April, 1865.

Paxton, Martin, Thirty-sixth regiment, private.

Paxton, John L., First Virginia light artillery, private.

Peckens, Austin W., age 23, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Eighteenth regiment, company F, private, served one year and eight months, honorably discharged April, 1863, on account of wound in right breast, received at Stone River.

Peckens, H. Sheppard, age 20, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Eighteenth regiment, company F, private, served three years and three months mustered out November 9, 1864, re-enlistment, substitute, one year, Eighteenth regiment, company F, private, attained rank of corporal, mustered out October 9, 1865.

Peckens, George Conner, age 18, volunteer, 1861, three years, Eighteenth regiment, company F, private, served nine months, honorably discharged in 1862 for disability.

Pegg, Henry, age 20, volunteer, November 18, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G, private.

Petty, Henry Wesley, age 26, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company B, private.

Pryor, Nathan, age 21, volunteer, September, 1861, three years, First cavalry, company L, private, served two years and four months, mustered out January, 1864, re-enlistment, volunteer, January, 1864, three years, First cavalry, company L, private.

Reese, William, age 21, volunteer, September, 1861, three years, First cavalry, company L, private, served three years, mustered out in 1864.

Reynolds, Daniel S., age 42, volunteer, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, mustered out, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Reynolds, Charles Wesley, age 16, volunteer, July, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Reynolds, Theodore M., age 15, volunteer, February 18, 1862, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company G, drummer, honorably discharged, second enlistment, age 17, substitute, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company G, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864, third enlistment, age 18, volunteer, March 10, 1865, one year, One Hundred and Ninety-sixth regiment, company F, served three months, honorably discharged June 14, 1865.

Ritchie Isaac, age 27, drafted March 23, 1865, one year, Thirty-ninth regiment, company I, private, served four months, honorably discharged July, 1865.

Ritchie, St. Clair, age 17, volunteer, September 1, 1861, three years, First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, served three years and nine months, mustered out June 28, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Ritchie, William, age 18, volunteer, January 21, 1864, three years, First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, served eighteen months, mustered out June 28, 1864.

Ross, Welland, Thirty-third regiment, company F.

Rowland, Rufus Henry, age 20, volunteer, August 10, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company F, drummer, served three years, mustered out June 10, 1865.

Rowland, Robert S., age 20, volunteer, August 28, 1862, three years, Seventh cavalry, company H, private, served three years, mustered out June 10, 1865.

Scott, Maxwell, age 49, volunteer, October, 1861, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company F, private, served eight months, honorably discharged July 5, 1862, for disability.

Seacord, D.

Seevers, Daniel D., age 44, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company G, private.

Seevers, Richard D., age 40, volunteer, July 22, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, served thirteen months, honorably discharged August, 1862, for disability, reenlistment, volunteer, January 11, 1864, three years. Thirty-sixth regiment, company K, private, served ten months, died November 15, 1864, of wound received at Winchester, July 24, 1864.

SeEVERS, Abram, age 42, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company G, private, served one and a half years.

SeEVERS, James, age 16, volunteer, March, 1862, three years, Third Virginia cavalry, company H, private, mustered out.

SeEVERS, William James, age 22, volunteer, February 9, 1864, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, served eighteen months, mustered out July 9, 1865.

SEXTON, Linsey, Second Virginia cavalry, company D.

SHREVE, Thomas, age 36, volunteer, March, 1864, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company K.

SHREVE, James Wesley, age 19, volunteer, March, 1864, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F.

SMITH, J. Higgins, age 22, volunteer, 1861, three years, First cavalry, company L, private.

SMITH, James Keith, age 43, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company G.

SMITH, George W., age 37, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company G.

SMITH, Samuel Thomas, age 34, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company G.

SMITH, S. R., Ninth cavalry.

SMITH, George, age 30, drafted, March 23, 1865, one year.

SMITH, Henry, age 21, volunteer, 1864, three years, First cavalry, company L, private, served one year and four months, honorably discharged July 4, 1865.

SMITH, Jonathan, Seventy-seventh regiment, died.

STEWART, John, Thirty-sixth regiment, company B.

STEWART, J. H., age 32, volunteer, September, 1861, three years, First cavalry, company L, private, served three years, mustered out 1864.

STEWART, Ira, age 19, volunteer, September, 1861, three years, First cavalry, company L, private, served four months, died January, 1862, of typhoid fever.

THOMAS, George W., age 16, volunteer, August 12, 1863, six months, One Hundred and Twenty-ninth regiment, company D, private, served eight months, mustered out April, 1864, reenlisted age 17, volunteer, August 12, 1864, one year, One Hundred and Seventy-ninth regiment, company I, private, served nine months, mustered out June 18, 1865.

THOMPSON, Edgar, Ninety-second regiment, company K, private, died.

THOMPSON, S., age 21, volunteer, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company F, private, served three years, mustered out 1864, served last two years in invalid corps.

TIDD, George Washington, age 18, volunteer, August 7, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company F, private, served two years and nine months, mustered out June 10, 1865.

TIDD, Charles Wesley, age 17, volunteer, August 18, 1863, six months, Fourth Virginia cavalry, company

G, private, served four months, died December 17, 1863, at Clarksburg, Virginia, of typhoid fever.

TURNER, Benjamin Stokely, age 18, First cavalry, company I.

TURNER, William Parker, age 16, volunteer, September 26, 1874, one year, First cavalry, company H, private, served eight months, honorably discharged 1865.

TUTTLE, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment.

UNGER, Jacob, Ninety-second regiment, company F.

VANWAY, Moses, age 24, volunteer, September, 1865, three years, First Virginia light artillery, died.

VANWAY, James, age 37, volunteer, November 9, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G, private, served three years, mustered out, 1864.

VANWAY, William, age 36, drafted, March 23, 1865, one year, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, served four months, honorably discharged July 9, 1865.

VANWAY, Isaac, age 23, Ninety-second regiment, company F, private, died April, 1863.

VANWAY, Thomas Mills, age 21, volunteer, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G, private.

WARD, Martin, volunteer, Seventy-seventh regiment, company E, private, in prison at Tyler, Texas, died July 8, 1864.

WEST, Stephen A., age 22, volunteer, November 29, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private, served three years, mustered out December 11, 1864, reenlisted, age 25, substitute, March 28, 1865, one year, Eighteenth regiment, company C, private.

WETZEL, James, One Hundred and Twenty-fifth regiment, died.

WHITSEL, James, One Hundred and Twenty-fifth regiment, died.

WETZEL, Joseph.

WHEELER, Jesse, age 46, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment.

WHEELER, John, age 21, volunteer, September 1, 1861, three years, First light artillery, company K, private, served two years and six months, honorably discharged, enlisted as a veteran, volunteer, 1864, three years, First light artillery, company K, private.

WHEELER, Lewis, age 20, volunteer, September, 1861, three years, First light artillery, company K, private, reenlisted as a veteran volunteer, 1864, three years, First light artillery, company K, private.

WHISTON, Silas Adkins, age 24, volunteer, 1862, three years, Seventh cavalry, company H, private, served three years, mustered out July 4, 1865.

WHITE, Walter Cole, age 23, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company G, private.

WILLIAMS, Sylvester, age 16, volunteer, March, 1863, three years, Seventh Virginia, company D, died.

WILLIAMSON, James, age 24, volunteer, October 23, 1861, three years, Seventy-fifth regiment, company B, private, served three years and three months, mustered out December 12, 1864.

WILSON, William, age 29, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company G, private.

WOOD, Soranus Shaw, age 25, volunteer, September 1, 1862, three years, Seventh cavalry, company H, corporal, attained sergeant, served two years and nine months, mustered out June 12, 1865.

Wood, Joseph E., volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company G, corporal, mustered out in September, 1864.

Wood, John C., age 21, volunteer, May, 1862, three years, Eighty-fifth regiment, company F, private, re-enlistment, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company G, second lieutenant, served three months, mustered out in September, 1864.

Wood, William Ware, age 17, volunteer, 1861, three years, First cavalry, company L, private, died of chronic diarrhœa in 1864.

Woodward, John, age 36, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company B, private.

Wright, Luther.

Zanille, B. F., Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, died.

Zanille, John, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B.

RECAPITULATION.

Powell's battery	5
Huntington's battery	4
Second Arkansas light artillery	1
Battery K, Second Ohio heavy artillery	1
First Ohio cavalry	18
Fourth Virginia cavalry	2
First Virginia light artillery	2
De Back's battery	3
Seventh Ohio	10
Second Virginia cavalry	1
Third Virginia cavalry	1
Ninth Ohio cavalry	1
One Hundred and Forty-eighth Ohio National guard	58
Seventy-seventh Ohio	10
Thirty-ninth Ohio	10
Ninety-second Ohio	15
Sixth Virginia infantry	5
Eighteenth Ohio (three years)	10
One Hundred and Seventy-fifth Ohio	2
One Hundred and Twenty-ninth Ohio	5
Thirty-sixth Ohio	8
Sixty-third Ohio	4
Seventy-fifth Ohio	3
Eighty-fifth Ohio	4
One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Ohio	2
And one each in the Twenty-fifth Ohio, One Hundred and Sixteenth Ohio, One Hundred and Eighty-fifth Ohio, One Hundred and Seventy-ninth Ohio, One Hundred and Ninety-sixth Ohio, Forty-third Ohio, Ninety-Seventh Ohio, Thirty-third Ohio, First Virginia, Seventh Virginia, Eleventh Virginia, Fourteenth Virginia, and nine not designated, in all	21

Total number of soldiers	211
Died	32

PALMER TOWNSHIP.

Agin, William, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company F, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Berfield, Humphrey, age 19, volunteer, October 19, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private, attained rank of orderly sergeant, mustered out December 11, 1864 on detached service part of time.

Beswick, George, volunteer, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company H, private.

Biggins, Brazil B., age 27, volunteer, November, 1862, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company H, private, wounded at Corinth, re-enlisted.

Biggins, James H., age 15, volunteer, August, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company G, private, died of measles March 14, 1863.

Biggins, Thomas W., age 42, volunteer, November, 1862, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company H, private, died of fever December, 1864.

Brown, Andrews, age 56, volunteer, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, private, killed in battle of Shiloh April 6, 1862.

Brown, Silas A., age 23, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company I, private, mustered out September, 1864, sick most of time.

Brown, Charles A., age 27, volunteer, August 7, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company G, third sergeant, attained rank of first lieutenant, mustered out June 10, 1865, wounded at Chickamauga, captured and paroled.

Brown, John A., age 18, volunteer, September 5, 1864, three years, Eighteenth regiment, company F, private, attained rank of corporal, served one year, mustered out October 9, 1865, sick most of time.

Camp, David H., age 22, volunteer, November 16, 1861, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company F, private, attained rank of orderly sergeant, mustered out July 8, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Camp, George L., age 27, volunteer, August 15, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company G, private, served three years, mustered out June 8, 1865.

Carter, John G., Eighteenth regiment, company F.

Campbell, Harvey, age 33, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company I, corporal, served four months, mustered out September, 1864, detailed for clerk service, also orderly and commissary.

Cooper, Armine R., age 21, volunteer, August 5, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, served four years, mustered out July 27, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Danley, Joseph, age 39, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company I, private, died of measles June, 1864.

Danley, William E., volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company I, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Danley, Harvey, age 22, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company I, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Danley, James, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days. One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company I, private.

Danley, Joel N., age 25, volunteer, August 15, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company D, corporal, served seven months, died at Carthage, of measles, March 20, 1863.

Danley, John W., age 32, volunteer, January 1, 1864, three years, First cavalry, company L, private, mustered out September, 1865.

Dunsmore, Carmi S., volunteer, Ninety-second regiment, company G.

Ferguson, Daniel, age 27, volunteer, October, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private, reenlisted as a veteran.

Ferguson, Andrew, age 19, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company F, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1865.

Fowler, L. R., volunteer, Fourth Virginia, company D, private.

Gard, James H., age 35, volunteer, August 1, 1863, six months, Fourth Virginia cavalry, company D, private, served seven months, mustered out March 7, 1864.

Guy, Ezekiah F., age 19, volunteer, October 28, 1863, One Hundred and Twenty-second regiment, company C, corporal, served one year and eight months, mustered out June 26, 1865, sick with smallpox and wounded at Winchester.

Hildebrand, Jesse, age 39, volunteer, October, 1862, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company A, second lieutenant, served one year and three months, resigned January 23, 1864.

Hemphill, Orson, age 21, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company I, corporal, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Huston, John P., volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company F, private.

Hoon, James P., age 34, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company I, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Jenkins, Samuel, volunteer, Second Virginia cavalry, company F.

Lake, George, age 18, volunteer, June, 1862, three months, Eighty-seventh regiment, private, served three months, mustered out September 20, 1862, reenlistment, volunteer, 1863, three years, Second heavy artillery, private.

Lazure, E. E., age 21, volunteer, October 23, 1861, three years, Second Virginia cavalry, company F, private, served three years and nine months, mustered out July 4, 1865, reenlisted as a veteran.

Morris, Thomas C., age 17, volunteer, February 7, 1865, Thirty-sixth regiment, company H, private, honorably discharged July 27, 1865, sick most of the time with camp disease.

Morris, Jonathan G., age 15, volunteer, October 29, 1861, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company G, private, served three months, died of measles January 23, 1862.

Morris, John, volunteer, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, private.

Morris, Benaiah K., volunteer, Ninety-second regiment, company G, private.

Morris, William, age 34, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company I, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Morris, R. S., age 22, substitute, August 13, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company G, private, served three years, mustered out July 1, 1865, transferred to veteran reserve corps.

Murdough, J. G., age 30, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company F, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Murdough, Charles J., age 22, volunteer, August, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company G, private, served one year and eight months died April 29, 1864.

Nulton, Henry, age 26, volunteer, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, private.

Palmer, James D., age 18, volunteer, February 11, 1864, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company F, private, died March 18, 1864, of measles.

Perry, Armstrong H., age 23, volunteer, August 12, 1861, three years, Second Virginia cavalry, company F, private, served one year and five months, honorably discharged January, 1863, for disability.

Payne, Joseph D., age 25, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company I, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Payne, Francis M., age 21, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company I, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Pugh, John A., age 17, volunteer, February 9, 1865, Thirty-sixth regiment, company H, private, served five months, mustered out July 27, 1865.

Pugh, Henry L., volunteer, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, companies F and D, fifer, attained rank of captain, mustered out March 8, 1865.

Pugh, Austin, age 34, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company F, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Reed, Joseph, age 19, volunteer, August, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company F, private, served three years mustered out June, 1865, wounded at Chickamauga, and afterwards on various detached service.

Skipion, William, age 33, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company I, corporal, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Sheets, Hiram, died.

Smith, Henry, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company I.

Trotter, James, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company F, private.

Trotter, Richard, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company F, private.

RECAPITULATION.

Second heavy artillery .....	1
Second Virginia cavalry .....	3
Fourth Virginia cavalry .....	1
First Ohio cavalry .....	1
One Hundred and Forty-eighth Ohio National guard .....	20
Ninety-second Ohio .....	9
Seventy-seventh Ohio .....	7
Sixty-third Ohio .....	6
Thirty-sixth Ohio .....	3
Eighteenth Ohio (three years) .....	2
One each in Eighty-seventh Ohio, One Hundred and Twenty-second Ohio, Fourth Virginia, not designated one, in all .....	4
Total number of soldiers .....	55
Died .....	9

SALEM TOWN-SHIP.

Alden, Jonathan, age 39, volunteer, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company H, private, served three years, mustered out June 10, 1865.

Alden, Benjamin G., volunteer, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company H, private, attained the rank of second lieutenant, resigned October 14, 1863.

Alden, Philetus, volunteer, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company H, private, served three years, mustered out June 10, 1865.

Baesshar, Christian, Thirty-ninth regiment, company F.

Bartell, Frederick, age 23, volunteer, 1862, three years, Seventh cavalry, company H.

Bay, Jacob F., age 21, volunteer, October 12, 1862, three years, Seventh cavalry, company H, blacksmith, served two years and nine months, mustered out July 4, 1865.

Best, John, age 20, volunteer, April 13, 1864, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, in six battles, served one year and three months, mustered out July 27, 1865.

Boye, Theodore, volunteer, May 28, 1862, three months, Eighty-seventh regiment, company A, corporal, in one battle, served four months, mustered out October 1, 1862.

Boye, August, volunteer, May 28, 1862, three months, Eighty-fifth regiment, private, served four months, mustered out October 1, 1862.

Brown, Jacob, age 20, volunteer, August 15, 1864, one year, One Hundred and Seventy-fourth regiment, company D, private, served ten months, mustered out June 28, 1865.

Chandler, Isaac, age 17, volunteer, August 23, 1864, one year, One Hundred and Seventy-fourth regiment, company D, private, served ten months, died June 30, 1865, of intermittent fever, at Charlotte, North Carolina.

Chapman, Sidney D., age 22, volunteer, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company H, private, attained the rank of corporal, served one year, died November 19, 1863, mortally wounded at Chickamauga September 19, 1863.

Close, Allen, age 22, volunteer, August 12, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, served three years, mustered out in 1864.

Clay, Benjamin F., volunteer, July 20, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private.

Clay, Daniel, volunteer, 1863, six months, Fourth cavalry, company C, private.

Crawford, William, volunteer, 1862, three years, Seventh cavalry, company H, private, served three years, mustered out with regiment.

Crawford, John, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, served three years, reenlistment, December, 1863, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, served one year, mustered out with regiment.

Dauber, Frederick, age 22, volunteer, 1862, three years, Seventh cavalry, company H, attained the rank of corporal, served three years, mustered out July 4, 1865.

Deitz, Frederick, age 21, volunteer, 1863, six months, Fourth cavalry, company C, sergeant, mustered out, reenlistment, age 22, volunteer, 1864, three years, Thirtieth cavalry, company C, second lieutenant, mustered out August 10, 1865.

Delong, Charles, age 39, volunteer, August 12, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, served four years, mustered out July 27, 1865, reenlisted as a veteran.

Delong, Charles R., Thirty-sixth regiment, company G.

Dice, John.
Dillon, William Henry, age 17, volunteer, October 31, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, companies A and G, private, served five months, died May 8, 1862, at Shiloh, of homesickness.

Doan, Richard, age 27, volunteer, August, 1863, three years, Second heavy artillery, company K, private, mustered out in 1865, transferred to invalid corps.

Doan, Josiah M., age 25, volunteer, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, served four years, mustered out July 27, 1865, reenlisted as a veteran.

Doan, Archibald S., age 23, volunteer, 1861, three years, Twelfth regiment, company D, private, attained the rank of sergeant, served three years, mustered out in 1864.

Doan, David C., volunteer, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company H, private, served three years, mustered out in 1865.

Doan, Edwin T., age 20, volunteer, May 28, 1862, three months, Eighty-seventh regiment, company A, private, in one battle, served four months, mustered out October 1, 1862, reenlistment, age 21, volunteer, August, 1863, three years, Second heavy artillery, company K, sergeant, attained the rank of orderly sergeant, served two years, mustered out August 23, 1865.

Doud, Connor, volunteer, 1862, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, served three years, mustered out July 27, 1865.

Ewing.
Fantz, Frederick, 1862, three years, Ninth cavalry, company B, private, served three years, mustered out July 20, 1865.

Feldner, Henry, age 20, volunteer, 1861, three years,

Sixty-third regiment, company G, private, served four years, mustered out July 8, 1865.

Dressler, Michael.

Feldner, Samuel, age 17, volunteer, September 9, 1862, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company G, private, served three years, mustered out July 8, 1865.

Fenn, Benjamin, volunteer, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G.

Fisher, Thomas, age 21, volunteer, April 17, 1861, three months, Eighteenth regiment, company B, private, served four months, mustered out August 28, 1861, badly wounded at South Mountain, second enlistment, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, honorably discharged 1862, third enlistment, 1863, three years, Second heavy artillery, company K, sergeant, attained rank of second lieutenant, served two years, mustered out in 1865.

Flanders, Alden, age 23, volunteer, August, 1863, six months, Seventh cavalry, company C, fifer, served eight months, mustered out in March, 1864.

Fulton, Robert, age 20, volunteer, August, 1862, three years, Seventh cavalry, company H, private, attained rank of corporal, served three years, mustered out July 3, 1865.

Gibson, Henry J., volunteer, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, died September 12, 1862, of wounds received at battle of South Mountain.

Goodwill, Jeremiah A., volunteer, Ninety-second regiment, company F, died.

Gould, Luther W., age 17, volunteer, July, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, served six months died January 21, 1862, of measles and pneumonia.

Gould, Daniel W., age 24, 1862, three years, Ninth cavalry, company B, three years, honorably discharged in 1865.

Gray, James C., age 21, volunteer, May 27, 1862, three months, Eighty-seventh regiment, company A, private, in one battle, served four months, mustered out 1862, reenlistment, volunteer, August, 1863, six months, Fourth independent battalion cavalry, company C, corporal, served eight months, mustered out in March, 1864.

Gray, John, volunteer, Seventy-seventh regiment, company A, died.

Gray, Thomas, volunteer, January, 1864, three years, Twelfth regiment, company D, private, died in Andersonville prison.

Guitteau, Hamilton H., age 25, volunteer, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company H, private, attained rank of sergeant, three years, mustered out June 10, 1865.

Hayt, Theodore, age 31, volunteer, July 29, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, sergeant, served two years, honorably discharged November, 1863.

Hallet, Howard, Twenty-fifth regiment, company I.

Hallet, Asa Davis, age 18, volunteer, 1861, three years, Forty-second regiment, company D, private, attained rank of corporal, mustered out at expiration of service.

Hardy, Andrew J., volunteer, 1862, three years, Seventh cavalry, company H, sergeant, attained rank of lieutenant, served three years, mustered out July 4, 1865.

Hardy, James M., volunteer, 1862, Seventh cavalry, company H, private, served three years, mustered out July 10, 1862.

Harris, Daniel, age 26, volunteer, 1862, three years, Seventh cavalry, company H, private, served three years, mustered out July 4, 1865.

Harth, Daniel, age 24, volunteer, 1861, three months, Sixteenth regiment, private, mustered out, second enlistment, volunteer, 1861, three years, Thirty-first regiment, company K, private, served two years and six months, mustered out December 26, 1863, veteran enlistment, age 26, volunteer, 1863, three years, Thirty-first regiment, company K, private, served one year and six months, mustered out July 9, 1865.

Hazen, Charles D., age 24, volunteer, August, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company H, corporal, attained rank of sergeant, served three years, mustered out June 10, 1865.

Hazen, Stowell S., volunteer, 1861, three years, Twelfth regiment, company D, private, served one year, honorably discharged in 1862, disabled by wound received at Antietam, reenlistment, volunteer, 1863, three years, Second heavy artillery, company K, second lieutenant, attained rank of captain, resigned in 1865.

Hockingberry, Peter, volunteer, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private.

Hockingberry, Oakley, volunteer, 1861, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private.

Hill, Irwin, volunteer, three years, Fourth cavalry, company C.

Hess, Jacob, volunteer, Sixty-third regiment, company I, honorably discharged.

Hoit, John A., age 27, volunteer, August, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company H, private, served three years, mustered out June 10, 1865.

Hoit, Nicholas G., age 18, volunteer, October 29, 1863, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, served one year and six months, died in April, 1865.

Howlan, Jesse, volunteer, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, reenlisted, volunteer, Second Ohio heavy artillery, company K, private, mustered out with regiment.

Hunter, David C., age 24, volunteer, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, lieutenant, attained rank of sergeant, served four years, mustered out July 27, 1865, reenlisted as a veteran.

Happ, Zachariah, Second heavy artillery, company H, honorably discharged.

Hutchinson, W. H., volunteer, Seventy-seventh regiment, company K, honorably discharged.

Johnson, Henry W., volunteer, Ninety-second regiment, company H.

Kelly, Calvin V., age 18, September 3, 1864, one year, One Hundred and Seventy-ninth regiment, company F, private, served ten months, mustered out June 16, 1865.

Kyles, Frederick, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private.

Lauer, John, volunteer, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company F, private.

Lenhardt, Henry, age 22, volunteer, Thirty-ninth regiment, company F, private, died December 1, 1862, of chronic diarrhea, at Louisville, Missouri.

Lindamood, James, age 35, volunteer, August 8,

1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company K, private, served three years, mustered out June 10, 1865.

Lingo, Archelaus R., volunteer, three years, Twenty-fifth regiment, company I, sergeant, served four years, 1865, reenlisted as a veteran.

Lindner, Earnest, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, lieutenant, attained rank of adjutant, served ten months, resigned June 28, 1862.

Lindner, Carl W., volunteer, May 28, 1862, three months, Eighty-fifth regiment, company F, private, served four months, mustered out October, 1862, reenlistment, volunteer, November, 1863, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, attained rank of corporal, served one year and eight months, mustered out July 27, 1865.

Magruder, John N., age 21, volunteer, three years, Thirty-six regiment, company G, private.

Magruder, Nahum W., age 18, volunteer.

Magruder, Asahel.

Marsh, William, age 18, volunteer, 1861, three years, Forty-second regiment, company D, private, served three years, mustered out, 1864.

Marsh, John, age 15, volunteer, August, 1863, six months, Fourth independent battalion cavalry, company C, private, served eight months, mustered out, March, 1864, reenlistment, 1864, one year, Twenty-third regiment, company G, private, mustered out 1865.

Mathews, John T., volunteer, June, 1861, three years, Third regiment, company C, private, attained rank of corporal, mustered out, wounded at Perryville, Kentucky, reenlistment, volunteer, 1864, three years, One Hundred and Ninety-third regiment, lieutenant, adjutant of regiment.

McCoy, Joshua, aged 20, volunteer, October 19, 1861, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company G, private, served two years, died August, 1863, of chronic diarrhoea at Memphis, Tennessee, transferred to gunboat service.

McKinsey—Thirty-sixth regiment, company H.

Moore, William H., age 37, volunteer, August 14, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company H, private, three years, mustered out June 10, 1865.

Moor, E. R., volunteer, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, second lieutenant, attained rank of first lieutenant, honorably discharged August 1, 1863.

Morgan, James Wheeler, age 24, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, November 5, 1861, of measles at Gallopis.

Morgan, George Henry, age 22, volunteer, August, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company H, private, served three years, mustered out June 10, 1865.

Morse, Madison, age 51, volunteer, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, fifer, three years, mustered out 1864.

Morse, William Wallace, age 24, volunteer, 1861, three years, Twelfth regiment, company D, private, three years, died June 26, 1864, killed at the battle of Lynchburg.

Morse, Wilbur Fisk, age 22, volunteer, April 17, 1861, three months, Eighteenth regiment, company B, private, served four months, mustered out August 28, 1861, re-enlistment, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, served three years, mustered out 1864.

Morse, Wilkinson M., age 20, volunteer, 1863, three years, Fifth Virginia cavalry, company G, private, served two years, mustered out in 1865.

Morse, Wayne, age 16, volunteer, March, 1865, one year, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, honorably discharged in 1865.

Morse, Winslow W., age 18, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company A, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Munnel, George, age 20, volunteer, August, 1862, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, served one year, died September 20, 1863, of chronic diarrhoea, at Chattanooga.

Murdock, Churchill, age 20, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, served three years, mustered out July 27, 1865.

Murdock, Andrew, Twenty-sixth regiment, company F.

Murdock, Lewis, age 18, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, attained to rank of corporal, served four years, mustered out July 27, 1865.

Palmer, John A., volunteer, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, first sergeant, attained to rank of first lieutenant, resigned January 18, 1863.

Palmer, Jewett, Jr., volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, captain, attained to rank of major, served three years and three months, resigned November 29, 1864, re-enlisted as veteran.

Payne, Orrin, volunteer, 1862, three months, Eighty-seventh regiment, company A, private, mustered out with regiment.

Perkins, Miles O., volunteer, 1864, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, mustered out July 27, 1865.

Pfaff, Christopher J., age 19, volunteer, September 1, 1862, three years, Seventh cavalry, company H, served three years, mustered out July 4, 1865.

Poland, Zimri, age 17, volunteer, February, 1864, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, served one year and six months, mustered out July 27, 1865.

Porter, Daniel, volunteer, August, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company H, private, served three years, mustered out with regiment.

Reese, Thomas, volunteer, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G.

Roth, Henry, volunteer, Third regiment, company K.

Roth, Christian, Seventy-seventh regiment, company K.

Sankford, Franklin, age 16, volunteer, December 7, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company K, private, served eight months, honorably discharged August 11, 1862, for disability.

Schofield, William, volunteer, January, 1864, three years, Twelfth regiment, company D, private, served one year, mustered out at end of war.

Schofield, Joseph C., age 18, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, served four years, mustered out July 27, 1865.

Schofield, William A., age 18, volunteer, January, 1864, three years, Twelfth regiment, company D, private, served one year, mustered out at end of war.

Schofield, Charles M., age 20, volunteer, June, 1861, three years, Twelfth regiment, company D, private, attained to rank of sergeant, served three years, was in Andersonville prison eight months, re-enlistment, volunteer, December, 1863, three years, Twelfth regiment, company D, first sergeant, served one year, mustered out with regiment.

Sherlick, Frederick, age 35, volunteer, August, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company H, private, served nine months, died April 7, 1863.

Smith, John, volunteer, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A.

Smith, Philip, volunteer, Twenty-eighth regiment, company A.

Smith, Frederick, volunteer, One Hundred and Fifty-fifth regiment, company E.

Spears, John, age 18, volunteer, August, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, Company H, private, served one year, died October 14, 1863, of chronic diarrhœa.

Stanley, James, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, first lieutenant, attained to rank of captain, served three years and three months, honorably discharged November 25, 1864, was in company B, Eighteenth Ohio volunteer infantry, three months.

Stanley, Thomas, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, attained to rank of sergeant, died May 9, 1864, killed at Cloyd Mountain, West Virginia.

Stewart, Thomas R., volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, died October 21, 1862, of typhoid pneumonia.

Shaffer, Albert, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A.

Stickrod, Lewis, age 18, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, served four years, mustered out July 27, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran, badly wounded.

Shaffer, James, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A.

Stickrod, Paul, age 16, volunteer, August, 1863, six months, Fourth cavalry, company C, private, served eight months, mustered out March 8, 1864, second enlistment, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, served four months, mustered out September, 1864, third enlistment, 1865, one year, Eighteenth regiment, company E, private.

Smith, August, volunteer, One Hundred and Seventy-fourth regiment, company D.

Thomas, Rees, age 23, volunteer, 1861, three years, Third regiment, company C, private, served three years, mustered out in 1864.

Thomas, David, age 21, volunteer, May 28, 1862, three months, Eighty-seventh regiment, company A, private, served four months, mustered out October 1, 1862, second enlistment, age 22, volunteer, August, 1863, six months, Fourth independent battalion cavalry, company C, second lieutenant, served eight months, mustered out March, 1864, third enlistment, age 23, volunteer, March, 1864, three years, Thirteenth cavalry, company A, second lieutenant, attained the rank of captain, served one year and three months, mustered out August 10, 1865.

True, Melvin C., age 22, volunteer, August 12, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, attained the rank of orderly sergeant, served three years, mustered out in 1864.

True, Wilbur F., age 20, volunteer, August, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company H, private, served one year and six months, honorably discharged in 1864; while guarding a sutler's goods, a keg of tobacco fell on him and crippled him for life.

True, Joseph O., age 22, volunteer, August 12, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, served three years, mustered out in 1864.

True, Hanson W., age 20, volunteer, three years, Twenty-fifth regiment, company I, private, served three years, mustered out in 1864.

True, Hurd A., age 18, volunteer, 1862, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, three years, mustered out July 27, 1865.

True, Russel H., age 19, volunteer, May 28, 1862, three months, Eighty-seventh regiment, company A, private, served four months, mustered out October 1, 1862, second enlistment, age 20, volunteer, August, 1863, six months, Fourth independent battalion cavalry, company C, sergeant, served eight months, mustered out March 12, 1864, third enlistment, age 21, volunteer, March, 1864, three years, Thirteenth cavalry company A, sergeant, attained the rank of lieutenant, served one year and three months, mustered out August 10, 1865.

True, John A., age 20, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, attained the rank of corporal, served four years, mustered out July 27, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Twiggs, Benjamin, age 23, volunteer, September, 1862, three years, Seventh cavalry, company H, private, served three years, mustered out July, 1865.

Waldeck, Simon, volunteer, three years, First cavalry, company L, private, served three years, court-martialed once.

Watkins, Hamilton, age 17, volunteer, August 16, 1864, one year, fifer, attained the rank of private, served ten months, mustered out June 22, 1865.

Wharff, Charles W., Seventy-seventh regiment, company H, honorably discharged.

Wharff, George, age 17, volunteer, August 22, 1862, three years, One Hundred and Sixteenth regiment, company H, private, nineteen battles, served three years, mustered out June 14, 1865, had not a day's sickness.

Wharff, Oliver K., age 44, volunteer 1861, three years, Eighteenth regiment, company H, private, served one year, honorably discharged in 1862; re-enlistment, age 45, volunteer, August 22, 1862, three years, One Hundred and Sixteenth regiment, company H, private, served two years, honorably discharged in 1864.

Wheatstone, Joseph, age 17, volunteer, August, 1863, six months, Fourth independent battalion cavalry, company C, private, served eight months, mustered out March 12, 1864, re-enlistment, age 18, volunteer, 1864, one year, One Hundred and Twenty-sixth regiment, company A, private, four battles, mustered out June 25, 1865.

Wheatstone, Isaac, age 17, volunteer, May 3, 1864, nine months, Ninety-second regiment, company H, private, served one year, mustered out June 10, 1865.

Wiess, W.

Wilson, Freeland C., volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company G, private, discharged in 1861.

Williams, Reese, age 17, volunteer, September 18, 1862, three years, One Hundred and Sixteenth regiment, company H, corporal, attained the rank of first lieutenant, served three years, mustered out June 14, 1865, badly wounded at Piedmont, Virginia, in 1864.

Williams, William, volunteer, Twenty-seventh regiment, company D.

Wilson, Riley, artillery, company A, died.

Wilson, William W., age 23, volunteer, 1861, three years, Third regiment, company C, corporal, attained the rank of sergeant, served three years, mustered out in 1864, wounded and captured at Rome, Georgia, on the straight raid, paroled.

Wilson, John, age 34, volunteer, January 1, 1862, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, served two years and nine months, died September 24, 1864.

Wilson, Eli, age 23, volunteer, August 1, 1864, one year, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, served one year, mustered out July 27, 1865.

Wilson, Amos, age 19, volunteer, July 20, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, served four years, mustered out July 22, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Young, William, age 21, volunteer, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company H, private, died at Carthage, Tennessee, of chronic diarrhoea.

RECAPITULATION

Battery K, Second Ohio heavy artillery .....	5
Battery H, Second Ohio heavy artillery .....	1
Seventh Ohio cavalry .....	10
Fourth independent battalion of Ohio volunteer cavalry .....	5
Fourth Ohio cavalry .....	5
Thirtieth Ohio cavalry .....	3
Ninth Ohio cavalry .....	2
First Ohio and Fifth Virginia cavalry, one each ..	51
Thirty-sixth Ohio .....	20
Ninety-second Ohio .....	7
Seventy-seventh Ohio .....	7
Eighty-seventh Ohio .....	6
Twelfth Ohio .....	7
Sixty-third Ohio .....	4
Third Ohio .....	4
Three each in Thirty-ninth Ohio, Twenty-fifth Ohio, One Hundred and Sixteenth Ohio and One Hundred and Seventy-fourth Ohio .....	12
Two each in Eighteenth Ohio (three years), Eighteenth Ohio (three months), Forty-second Ohio, Eighty-fifth Ohio, One Hundred and Forty-eighth Ohio National guard .....	10
One each in Sixteenth Ohio, Twenty-third Ohio, Twenty-sixth, Twenty-seventh Ohio, Twenty-eighth Ohio, Thirty-first Ohio, One Hundred and Twenty-sixth Ohio, One Hundred and Fifty-fifth Ohio, One Hundred and Seventy-ninth Ohio, One Hundred and Ninety-third Ohio, and six not designated, in all .....	16
Total number of soldiers .....	151
Died .....	16

UNION TOWNSHIP.

Adams, Isaac N., age 16, volunteer, August, 1862, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, served nine months, died at Memphis, Tennessee, May 15, 1863, of bloody flux.

Atkinson, Samuel, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Apple, Samuel, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company F, private, served three years, mustered out July 27, 1865.

Bodman, Frederick, volunteer, Thirty-ninth regiment, company F.

Baker, John, age 23, drafted, 1865, one year.

Beebe, Jerry, May, 1864, one hundred days. One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company I, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Beebe, Joseph, May, 1864, one hundred days. One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company I, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Biedle, Jacob, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, private, died in service.

Bostner, William, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C.

Callahan, Emery, volunteer, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company F, died in service.

Clark, John, volunteer, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B.

Craig, Stewart, volunteer, First cavalry.

Cutter, Lewis L., Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, enlisted December 24, 1863, discharged March 28, 1866.

Cutter, William H., volunteer, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, killed at the battle of Mark's Mills, April 30, 1864.

Cobb, William, Seventy-seventh regiment, company H.

Dice, John, age 21, drafted, 1865, one year.

Davis, Douglas, Seventy-seventh regiment, company H.

Emge, Adam, volunteer, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company G, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Fouracker, Richard, age 52, volunteer, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company H, lieutenant, attained rank of captain, served one year, honorably discharged September 2, 1862, for physical disability.

Fouracker, Louis McK., age 25, volunteer, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company H, sergeant, served three years, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Fouracker, Levi James, age 23, volunteer, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company H, second lieutenant, honorably discharged October 21, 1862, died March 5, 1875, of wounds received at Shiloh.

Fouracker, Douglass W., age 20, volunteer, 1861, Seventy-seventh regiment, company H, orderly sergeant, died August 11, 1862, buried at Memphis, Tennessee.

Farmer, James, Seventy-seventh regiment, company H, honorably discharged for disability.

Harlen, Enos, volunteer, Seventy-seventh regiment, company H, served six months, honorably discharged for disability.

Harden, James, age 20, Seventy-seventh regiment, company H, killed at Shiloh April 6, 1862.

Haines, Jacob, volunteer, Sixty-third regiment, company G, died.

Henry, Owen, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company K, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Kramer, Henry, Sixty-third regiment, company G, mustered out.

Liner, John, volunteer, Eighth regiment, company B, three years.

McAffie, Henry, age 22, substitute.

McKinney, James, Seventy-seventh regiment, company H, died January 2, 1862, in Union township.

Myres, William, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company I, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Myres, Jacob, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company H, private, served three years.

O'Hern, James.

Power, David, volunteer, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, private, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Power, James, volunteer, Seventy-seventh regiment, company H.

Power, Robert, drafted 1865, died in 1865 of a swelling in the knee.

Pinkerton, Calvert, drafted 1865.

Rehml, John, First cavalry, company L, died October 1, 1862, of diarrhoea.

Schlauback, Conrad, volunteer, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, mustered out July 9, 1865; re-enlisted as a veteran.

Schilling, John, volunteer, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company F, served three years.

Sheppard, Thomas, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company I, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Shuster, William, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company I, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Tilton, Leroy D., May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company I.

Power, Tyrannus, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company I, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Roesch, John, drafted, 1865, one year, sent a substitute.

Weaver, Nicholas, age 44, drafted, 1865, one year, exempt from physical disability.

Witham, J. M., May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company I, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Ladd, Richard, Sixty-third regiment, company G.

Ladd, Salathiel, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, served his term.

Ladd, John, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, died.

Miller, Austin, 1864.

Linn, Daniel O., Ninety-second regiment, company F.

RECAPITULATION.

First Ohio cavalry .....	3
Seventy-seventh Ohio .....	17
One Hundred and Forty-eighth Ohio National guards .....	9

Thirty-ninth Ohio .....

Thirty-ninth Ohio .....

Sixty-third Ohio .....

One each in Eighth Ohio, Ninety-second Ohio, not designated, 1863, in all .....

Total number soldiers .....

Died .....

WARREN TOWNSHIP.

Anderson, William, age 22, volunteer, February 24, 1864, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company K, private, served one year and three months, mustered out July 27, 1865.

Anderson, James, age 20, volunteer, March 5, 1864, three years, First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, served one year and three months, mustered out June 28, 1865.

Anderson, Edward, age 26, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company K, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Asbury, Dudley E., age 25, volunteer, October 4, 1864, one year, One Hundred and First United States colored regiment, sergeant-major, served one year, mustered out October 1, 1865.

Appel, Valentine, age 21, volunteer, July 31, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, served three years, mustered out August 12, 1864.

Appel, Simeon, volunteer, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company F, private.

Baker, Manuel T., age 27, volunteer, August 1, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, served three and a half years, died February 10, 1865, captured at Winchester, July 24, 1864, imprisoned at Danville, where he died.

Baker, Francis, age 16, volunteer, spring of 1864, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, died March 16, 1864, of measles, at Chattanooga.

Baker, John L. A., age 39, volunteer, September 1, 1862, three years, Seventh cavalry, company H, private, served two years and ten months, mustered out July 4, 1865.

Bailey, Peter, age 31, volunteer, March 4, 1864, three years, One Hundred and Twenty-second regiment, company I, private, died May 7, 1864, wounded in the battle of the Wilderness May 7, 1864, taken to Danville, prison and supposed to be dead.

Bailey, Daniel, age 25, volunteer, August 1, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, served four years, mustered out July 27, 1865; re-enlisted as a veteran.

Bailey, Seth, age 19, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company K, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Beckford, Otis, age 17, volunteer, August 9, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, served four years, mustered out July 27, 1865; re-enlisted as a veteran.

Boothby, David, age 20, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company K, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Boothby, Cornelius E., age 25, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company K, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Boothby, Joseph N., age 24, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company K, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Bendict, George, Second cavalry

Brabham, Wellington, age 20, volunteer, October 1, 1864, First cavalry, companies H and L, private, served eight months, honorably discharged June 28, 1865, for disability.

Call, John, age 29, volunteer, March, 1864, Thirty-sixth regiment, company C, private, served five months, died in August, 1864, of measles.

Call, David, age 24, volunteer, October, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, companies C and F, private, served five months, died March 18, 1863, of erysipelas, at Nashville, Tennessee.

Carpenter, Ezra J., age 19, volunteer, September 30, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, served two years and ten months, mustered out July 27, 1865; re-enlisted as a veteran and detailed as a veteran.

Carpenter, Alfred, age 22, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, served three years, died October 29, 1863, re-enlisted as a veteran, killed at Winchester.

Carpenter, Spencer, age 18, volunteer, spring of 1862, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G, private, served four years, mustered out March 8, 1866, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Cecil, John T., age 27, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company K, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Cecil, Edward S., age 24, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company F, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Cecil, George K., age 20, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company K, private, served four months, mustered out in September, 1864.

Chalfant, Basil, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D.

Chute, Albert, age 27, volunteer, December, 1861, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company I, private, served six months, honorably discharged June 16, 1862, for disability.

Cole, Hiram Harvey, age 25, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, corporal, served two years, killed September 18, 1863, at Chickamauga.

Cole, Dudley, age 22, volunteer, October, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, private, mustered out June 30, 1865.

Christopher, William H., age 18, volunteer, December 20, 1863, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private, two years and three months, mustered out in March, 1866.

Christopher, Clark L., age 26, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company K, private, served four months, mustered out in September, 1864.

Coffman, Charles, age 26, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company K, private, served four months, mustered out in September, 1864.

Cochran, Charles, age 22, volunteer, October 16, 1862, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, companies D and H, private, served three years and five months, mustered out March 8, 1866.

Crael, Charles, age 21, volunteer, September, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, corporal, served two years and ten months, mustered out July 27, 1865.

Daugherty, William, age 31, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, sergeant, served three years, mustered out in 1864.

Devore, James, age 17, volunteer, winter of 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, died June 19, 1864, wounded at Chickamauga.

Faris, Samuel, age 18, volunteer, August, 1862, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, served two years and nine months, honorably discharged June 14, 1865.

Ferril, Charles.

Finch, Lewis J., age 20, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, served four years, mustered out July 9, 1865; re-enlisted as a veteran.

Finch William W., volunteer, Ninety-second regiment, company G.

Finch, Henry, age 17, volunteer, July, 1862, three years, Second heavy artillery, private, three years, mustered out August 23, 1865.

Froochel, Walter, volunteer, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private.

Fish, Timothy, age 26, volunteer, 1863, three years, Second heavy artillery, private, missing and supposed to be dead.

Fish, James, age 25, December 25, 1863, three years, First cavalry, company L, served two years and nine months, private, mustered out September 28, 1865, in hospital several months with smallpox.

Fish, William, age 21, volunteer, three years, December, 1863, First cavalry, company L, private, died of measles in January, 1864.

Farley, William, age 18, volunteer, Seventy-third regiment, company F, private, died at Chattanooga, Tennessee, July 10, 1864.

Farley, Kins, age 19, volunteer, Tenth cavalry, company L, private, died at Kingston, Georgia, June 17, 1864.

French, Columbus, age 31, volunteer, May, 1865, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company K, private, served four months, mustered out in September, 1864.

Gilpin, William R., age 23, volunteer, January, 1862, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company G, private, served three years and six months, mustered out July 8, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Gilpin, Felix, age 16, volunteer, January 1, 1862, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company G, private, served three years and six months, died of smallpox March 26, 1864, wounded at Corinth, transferred to gunboat service January 3, 1863.

F. Gray, Frank S., Thirty-sixth regiment, company F.

Greenwood, Theodore, age 21, volunteer, June, 1862, three years, captain, died September 27, 1862, quartermaster on General Rosecrans' staff.

Hale, Selkirk, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F.

Hall, E. K., Twenty-second regiment.

Hall, W. H. G.

F. Hall, Alexander, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F.

Hanna, James, age 26, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, corporal, served two years, honorably discharged in 1863, for disability.

Hanna, William W., age 21, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, attained sergeant, served four years mustered out July 27, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Hart, Samuel M., age 35, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company K, private, served four months, mustered out in September, 1864.

Harris, Joseph, Seventy-third regiment, company F.

Harris, Lewis, Seventy-third regiment, company F.

Harte, Miller H., age 19, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company K, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Hawkins, Thomas, age 25, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company K, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Hawkins, Granville, age 22, volunteer, August 16, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, served three years, mustered out August, 1864.

Hawkins, James, age 37, volunteer, spring of 1862, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company H, private, died January 14, 1864, of smallpox, at Alton, Illinois.

Henderson, James, age 36, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company K, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864, off duty with sickness most of the term.

Henderson, John S., age 21, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company D, private, served four years, mustered out July 27, 1865, slightly wounded at Chattanooga.

Hohn, John, age 34, volunteer, August, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company G, private, served one year and two months, died October, 1863, wounded in the heel at Chickamauga September 20, 1863, and died of blood poisoning.

Holden, Andrew, age 35, volunteer, October 11, 1861, three years, Seventy-third regiment, company F, private, served three years and ten months, mustered out July 20, 1865.

Hollister, G. R., age 18, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company K, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Hollister, John L., age 23, volunteer, August, 1862, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, served three years, mustered out July 27, 1865.

Hollister, Charles S., age 20, volunteer, August, 1863, three years, Second heavy artillery, private, served two years, mustered out August 23, 1865.

Hudson, John, Sixty-third regiment, company F.

Hutchinson, Joseph T., age 28, volunteer, September, 1861, three years, First Virginia light artillery, private, served two years, died September 12, 1863, of camp disease, in Virginia.

Hudson, Samuel, Sixty-third regiment, company F.

Hutchinson, Henry W., age 31, volunteer, September 1, 1861, three years, First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, honorably discharged 1863, for disability.

Hufferd, John W., age 16, August 1, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, served four years, mustered out 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Hufferd, William H., age 16, volunteer, August, 1863, six months, One Hundred and Twenty-ninth regiment, company F, private, served seven months, honorably discharged March, 1864, re-enlistment, age 17, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864; re-enlistment, volunteer, winter 1864-5, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, mustered out July 27, 1865.

Ingram, Thomas M., age 18, volunteer, August, 1863, six months, One Hundred and Twenty-ninth regiment, company F, private, served seven months, mustered out March, 1864, re-enlistment, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company F, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864, re-enlistment, volunteer, Thirty-second regiment, company B, private, mustered out May, 1865.

Johnson, Jacob, volunteer, February, 1864, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, mustered out July 27, 1864, sick for six months.

Johnson, Bloomfield, age 31, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company K, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Jones, Andrew, age 34, volunteer, December 4, 1863, three years, Seventy-sixth regiment, company D, corporal, mustered out July 15, 1865.

Lacy, Eliza, Thirty-sixth regiment, company K, Leavers, W. J.

Lightfoot, John, age 20, volunteer, 1864, First cavalry, private, mustered out September 28, 1865.

Lightfoot, James, age 21, volunteer, December, 1863, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private, served two years and three months, mustered out March 8, 1864, captured in 1864, and in prison at Camp Ford ten months.

Lightfritz, Samuel, age 37, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company F, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Lynch, Thomas, age 20, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company K, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Malcolm, Andrew, age 15, volunteer, August 10, 1862, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, served three years, mustered out July 27, 1865.

Moore, Thomas W., volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, captain, served seven months, resigned March 5, 1862, re-enlistment, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, colonel, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Malcolm, James M., age 24, volunteer, September, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, corporal, attained rank of sergeant, served three years and six months, mustered out March, 1865.

Malcolm, John W., age 19, volunteer, September, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, served two years and ten months, died July 24, 1864, killed at Winchester.

Malcolm, Horace H., age 16, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company K, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

McClure, Andrew J., age 25, volunteer, April, 1861, three months, First Iowa artillery, private, mustered out for disability; re-enlistment, volunteer, 1861, three years, First Iowa artillery, private, honorably discharged March, 1863.

McClure, Theodore D., age 21, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Fortieth Illinois regiment, company G, colored sergeant, served three years, mustered out August, 1864.

McGovern, Peter, age 19, volunteer, 1861, two years, Second Virginia light artillery, company K, private, served two years, mustered out 1863; re-enlistment, volunteer, 1863, Second cavalry, private.

McGovern, Michael, age 17, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, served three years, died September 29, 1865, wounded twice and died of lockjaw from second wound.

McGovern, Edward, age 16, volunteer, February, 1864, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, served one year and four months, mustered out July 27, 1865.

Miller, Edward, Second cavalry, company L.

Moore, Henry, Twenty-fifth regiment, company B. Morgan, Vincent, age 29, volunteer, September 26, 1864, Sixty-fifth regiment, company I, private, served nine months, mustered out June 16, 1865.

Morris, John R., age 30, volunteer, August 1, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, served one year and six months, honorably discharged February, 1863, for disability.

Morris, Joseph, age 20, volunteer, August 1, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, served four years, mustered out July 27, 1865, wounded at Winchester July 20, 1864, captured and in Danville seven months, furloughed home and rejoined regiment in April, 1865.

Morris, Daniel, age 20, volunteer, April, 1865, Eighteenth regiment, company I, private, mustered out.

Patten, Thomas, age 37, volunteer, September 16, 1861, three years, First cavalry, company L, private, served three years, mustered out September, 1864.

Pardew, Henry, age 31, volunteer, April, 1862, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company H, private, died January 14, 1863, of small-pox at Alton.

Prettyman, Eli, Seventy-seventh regiment, company H.

Pearce, Thomas R., age 42, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, served four years, mustered out July 27, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Pearce, Israel J., age 19, volunteer, September 1, 1862, three years, Seventh cavalry, company H, private, served two years and ten months, mustered out July, 1865.

Pryor, William, age 26, volunteer, July, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company F, private, served one year, honorably discharged June 17, 1863, for disability, lost his hearing.

Prettyman, John, Seventy-seventh regiment, company H.

Pryor, Francis, age 24, volunteer, July, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company F, private, served three years, honorably discharged July 17, 1865, wounded February 25, 1864, captured at Calhoun, Georgia, August 14, 1865, in various prisons seven months, and paroled, captured while detailed as train guard, sick four months, detailed as orderly, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Pryor, Matthew, age 21, volunteer, September 11, 1861, three years, First cavalry, company L, private, served four years, mustered out September 28, 1865.

Pryor, Jasper, age 17, volunteer, August 13, 1863, three years, Second heavy artillery, company K, private, served four months, died December 12, 1863, of typhoid pneumonia.

Rannelly, Joseph, Second cavalry, company C.

Rannelly, William, Second cavalry, company C.

Reason, Oliver.

Reading, Simon J., age 22, volunteer, February 24, 1864, Thirty-sixth regiment, company K, private, served one year and five months, mustered out July 27, 1865.

Reppert, Byron D., age 22, volunteer, September 1, 1861, three years, First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, served three years and six months, mustered out March 30, 1865.

Ritchey, Joseph, Seventy-seventh regiment, company H.

Roberts, Ezekiel, age 19, volunteer, July, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, served three years and eight months, mustered out March 10, 1865, wounded at Lewisburg and at Winchester, captured at Martinsburg and in prison one month.

Roberts, John, age 32, volunteer, April 6, 1863, Eighty-eighth regiment, company B, private, served two years and three weeks, mustered out July 3, 1865.

Rood, Vincent, age 19, volunteer, First light artillery.

Rummerfield, Aaron E., age 17, volunteer, February 27, 1865, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, served five months, mustered out July 27, 1865.

Roush, Absalom, age 17, volunteer, September 30, 1864, First cavalry, company H, private, served nine months, mustered out June 17, 1865.

Roush, William, age 25, volunteer, September 30, 1864, First cavalry, company H, private, served one year, mustered out September, 1865, was in the hundred days' service.

Rumbold, Charles H., age 24, volunteer, March 12, 1864, Thirty-sixth regiment, company B, private, served one year and four months, mustered out July 27, 1865, sick and in the hospital seven months.

Rumbold, Benjamin F., age 19, April 5, 1865, Thirty-sixth regiment, company B, private, served three months, mustered out July 27, 1865, was in the hundred days' service.

Rumbold, Joseph I., age 20, volunteer, October 4, 1864, First cavalry, company L, private, served four months, died February 13, 1865, of camp disease and pneumonia.

Shafer, Martin, age 24, volunteer, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, died June, 1864, by a shell, Lynchburg, Virginia.

Sheid, John T., age 17, volunteer, February 2, 1864, Seventy-seventh regiment, company F, private, served two years, mustered out March 8, 1866.

Skipton, Hiram, age 25, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, attained rank of corporal, served three years and nine months, mustered out May 27, 1865, wounded at Lexington June 11, 1864.

Skipton, William.

Skipton, Samuel, age 38, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, attained rank of corporal, served three years, mustered out August, 1864.

Scott, William W., volunteer, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, first lieutenant, honorably discharged August 31, 1862.

Scott, Joseph C., age 19, volunteer, August, 1862, three years, Huntingdon battery, private, served two years and ten months, mustered out June, 1865.

Smith, Gilead, age 20, volunteer, December 10, 1861, Sixty-third regiment, company F, private, served one year, died January 17, 1863, wounded at Corinth, October 4, 1862, intermittent fever ensued, and caused his death.

Smith George W., age 19, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company F, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Smith, John, Seventy-seventh regiment, company H.

Stage, William J., age 40, volunteer, October 3, 1864, three years, First cavalry, company H, private, served one year, mustered out September, 1865.

Stage, Thomas, age 37, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company F, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Strain, James M., age 43, volunteer, August 1, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, served three years and three months, honorably discharged October 27, 1864, wounded at Lexington, Virginia, in June, 1864.

Stump, John, age 33, volunteer, September 1, 1862, three years, Seventh cavalry, company H, private, served six months, died April 22, 1863, at Nicholasville, Kentucky, sick with inflammatory rheumatism three months.

Trachel, Walter, age 24, volunteer, July 22, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company B, private, served three years, mustered out July 30, 1864.

Tyrel, William, volunteer, three years, Ninety-second regiment, private.

Turrl, Henry L., age 20, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, served three years, mustered out August, 1864, served also in Sixth Virginia infantry, wounded at battle of Winchester and in hands of the rebels ten days.

Turrl, Charles, age 28, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, in three battles, served one year, honorably discharged August, 1862, for disability.

Tunnecliff, William, age 28, volunteer, November, 1861, three years, First cavalry, company K, private, served three years and ten months, mustered out September 13, 1865, detached as clerk in quartermaster's department, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Tunnecliff, Joseph, age 23, volunteer, May, 1861, three years, Fifth regiment, company C, private, served three years, mustered out June 20, 1864, captured in 1862, confined in Libby prison three months and paroled.

Welch, Edward, October, 1861, three years, Seventy-third regiment, company F, private, served three years, died 1864, wounded three times at Winchester, died probably in January.

Wheeler, Lewis.

Wynn, A. D., age 30, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company K, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Wynn, Joseph D., age 34, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, sergeant, served three years, mustered out September, 1864, wounded twice.

Wynn, Amos D., age 28, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company K, private, four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Wright, Benjamin, age 24, volunteer, August 1, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, corporal, attained rank of sergeant, served two years and nine months, died May 20, 1864, at Gallipolis.

Wright, David, age 22, volunteer, September, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company G, private, served one year and ten months, died July 17, 1864, died from wound received at the battle of Kennesaw Mountain, June 23, 1864.

Wright, William, age 18, volunteer, 1862, three years, Seventh cavalry, company H, private, died 1864, captured at Rogersville, Tennessee, and in various prisons, dying in Andersonville, from deprivation and hardship.

Vaughn, James, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, served two years and seven months, died May 9, 1864, killed at Cloyd Mountain.

Zearing, Joseph, age 24, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, fifer, served two years, died November 12, 1863, at Gallatin.

Zearing, William H., age 21, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, served three years, mustered out September 9, 1864, was also in the three months' service.

Zearing, James E., age 19, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company D, fifer, served three years, mustered out September 9, 1864.

Zearing, John L., age 17, volunteer, August, 1861, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, served three years, mustered out September 9, 1864.

RECAPITULATION.

Buell's Pierpont battery .....	3
Huntington battery .....	1
Battery K, Second Ohio heavy artillery.....	1

Second heavy artillery	3
One each in First Ohio light artillery, First Virginia artillery, First Iowa light artillery	3
First Ohio cavalry	11
Seventh Ohio cavalry	2
Second Ohio cavalry	2
Second Louisiana cavalry	1
Thirty-sixth Ohio	52
One Hundred and Forty-eighth Ohio National guard	27
Seventy-seventh Ohio	13
Ninety-second Ohio	15
Sixty-third Ohio	5
Thirty-ninth Ohio	3
Seventy-third Ohio	4
One Hundred and Twenty-ninth Ohio	5
Second Ohio	2
And one each in Fifth Ohio, Twenty-second Ohio, Twenty-fifth Ohio, Eighteenth Ohio (three years), Thirty-second Ohio, Seventy-sixth Ohio, Sixty-fifth Ohio, Eighty-eighth Ohio, One Hundred and Twenty-second Ohio, First Iowa, Second Virginia, Fortieth Illinois, One Hundred and First United States colored infantry, not designated, five, making in all	18
Total number of soldiers	167
Died	28

WATERBURY TOWN-HILL

Allen, Leonidas, age 21, volunteer, August 14, 1861, three years, Eighteenth regiment, company F, private, died of typhoid fever at Louisville, Kentucky, June 30, 1863.

Alberry, Richard, age 25, volunteer, December 31, 1863, Second Virginia cavalry, company E, private, served one year and six months, mustered out July 1, 1865.

Alberry, John, age 21, volunteer, December 31, 1863, Second Virginia cavalry, company E, private, served one year and six months, mustered out July 1, 1865; re-enlisted as a veteran.

Alberry, Antony, age 18, volunteer, December 31, 1863, Second Virginia cavalry, company E, private, served one year and six months, mustered out July 1, 1865.

Alberry, Joseph, age 15, volunteer, December 31, 1863, Second Virginia cavalry, company E, private, served one year and six months, mustered out July 1, 1865.

Anderson, William R., volunteer, Ninth cavalry, company B, private, died of fever.

Beach, Thomas H. B., age 28, volunteer, 1863, three years, Ninth cavalry, company B, mustered out July 30, 1865.

Becket, Humphry, age 22, volunteer, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company D, private, mustered out July 8, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Becket, Jesse M., volunteer, September 15, 1861, three years, Second Virginia cavalry, company E, corporal, served three years, mustered out 1864.

Bishop, William, volunteer, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, mustered out July 27, 1865; re-enlisted as a veteran.

Bishop, Henry, volunteer, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, mustered out July 27, 1865; re-enlisted as a veteran, wounded at Berryville, West Virginia, September, 1864.

Bolun, Daniel, age 25, volunteer, September 15, 1861, three years, Second Virginia cavalry, company E, corporal, mustered out; re-enlisted as a veteran.

Bosman, James, volunteer, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private.

Belman, James, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A. Brown, Charles W., age 21, volunteer, October 6, 1861, three years, Sixty-third regiment, companies D and G, sergeant, attained rank of orderly sergeant, died of typhoid fever, 1862.

Brown, Samuel W., age 17, volunteer, December 17, 1861, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company B, musician, served one year and one month, discharged for disability January, 1863, wounded at Corinth, re-enlistment, February, 1864, Sixty-third regiment, company B, served one year and five months, mustered out July 8, 1865.

Brown, William C., age 17, volunteer, August 14, 1862, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, served three years, mustered out July 27, 1865, severely wounded July 24, 1864.

Brown, John, age 18, volunteer, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company H, private, served three years, mustered out June 10, 1865.

Brown, William P., age 20, volunteer, three years, Eighteenth regiment, company F, private, mustered out October, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Bucy, William T., volunteer, 1861, three years, Second Virginia cavalry, company F, private, served four years, mustered out 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Brown, John W., volunteer, August, 1864, One Hundred and Eighty-second regiment, private, served eleven months, mustered out July 7, 1865.

Brown, John, age 28, volunteer, Ninety-second regiment, company H, private, honorably discharged for disability.

Burris, Lorain, volunteer, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company H, private, killed April 6, 1862, at Shiloh.

Bartlett, George B., volunteer, October 9, 1861, three years, Sixty-third regiment, companies A and D, corporal, attained rank of captain, acting assistant quartermaster engineers' department, Mississippi, mustered out with regiment.

Burris, Franklin.

Burris, James, age 35, volunteer, September 1, 1861, Second Virginia cavalry, company E, private, mustered out 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Burris, Royal, Ninety-second regiment.

Burrows, James, volunteer, Second Virginia cavalry, private, mustered out July 30, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Callahan, Cyrus, age 25, volunteer, three years, Second Virginia cavalry, company E, private, mustered out July 30, 1865.

Clark, Henry, age 26, volunteer, 1864, three years, One Hundred and Eighty-second regiment, company C, private, mustered out July 7, 1865.

Cheatham, Richard B., age 40, volunteer, 1861, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company D, sergeant, attained lieutenant, served two years, died in Memphis, Tennessee, July 18, 1863.

Craig, Samuel S., age 20, volunteer, Sixty-third regiment, company D, died, transferred to company C, First marine.

Crawford, A. W., volunteer, Ninety-second regiment, company H.

Crooks, Ralph, volunteer, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, served three years, mustered out in 1864.

Crawford, James, volunteer, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company F, private, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Cross, John W., age 22, volunteer, 1864, One Hundred and Eighty-second regiment, private, died at Nashville, Tennessee.

Culver, B. F., age 22, volunteer, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, assistant surgeon, served four months, mustered out with regiment.

Daoff, L., Seventy-seventh regiment, company H.

Dean, Charles, age 30, volunteer, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company H, private, served three years, mustered out June 10, 1865.

Dean, John, age 35, volunteer, December 23, 1863, three years, Eighteenth regiment, company F, hospital nurse.

Devol, Silas A., age 18, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, served three years, mustered out in 1864.

Devol, Henry F., age 30, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, captain, attained to Brigadier general, served four years, mustered out July 31, 1865.

Devol, Hiram.

Devol, Alexander C., age 17, volunteer, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, served three years, honorably discharged in 1864.

Devol, Isaac L., age 19, volunteer, March 14, 1865, Eighteenth regiment, company H, private, served seven months, mustered out October 9, 1865.

Devol, Gilbert, age 16, volunteer, March 14, 1865, Eighteenth regiment, company H, private, seven months, mustered out October 9, 1865.

Devol, Samuel, age 19, volunteer, January 1, 1863, three years, Second Virginia cavalry, company F, private, served two years and five months, mustered out June 30, 1865.

Dixon, Nicklow, age 19, volunteer, 1861, three years, Eighteenth regiment, company F, private, served three years, mustered out in 1864.

Dixon, Wilson, volunteer, 1861, three years, Eighteenth regiment, company F, private, served three years, mustered out in 1864.

Dickson, Isaac, age 19, volunteer, 1865, Eighteenth regiment, company H, private, mustered out October 9, 1865.

Dixon, William, age 19, volunteer, May, 1864, Fourth Virginia cavalry, private, served six months, mustered out in November, 1864.

Dobbins, James, age 30, volunteer, Ninety-second regiment, company H, private, honorably discharged for disability.

Dobbins, Anthony, volunteer, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private.

Dolan, Lewis C., age 17, volunteer, March, 1863,

One Hundred and Ninety-sixth regiment, private, served six months, mustered out September 11, 1865.

Dyer, Charles, volunteer, 1861, three years, Second Virginia cavalry, company F, private, served four years, mustered out June 30, 1865; re-enlisted as a veteran.

Dyer, John, age 21, volunteer, September 17, 1861, three years, Second Virginia cavalry, company F, private, re-enlisted as a veteran, lost left arm near Winchester September 5, 1864.

Dyer, Samuel, age 18, volunteer, February, 1864, First cavalry, company L, private, served one year and seven months, mustered out September 13, 1865.

Eakins, James, age 24, volunteer, July 14, 1861, three years, Thirteenth regiment, musician, served eleven months, mustered out June 3, 1862.

Fisher, Joshua G., volunteer, January, 1864, Second Virginia cavalry, company F, sergeant, honorably discharged, wounded in Texas, and discharged for disability.

Flag, Luther, volunteer, Twenty-fifth regiment, company H, private, died of fever.

Fletcher, Wesley T., age 25, volunteer, Fourteenth United States colored heavy artillery, private.

Fleming, David, volunteer, Seventy-seventh regiment, company F, private, died.

Fleming, Aaron.

Fouts, John W., volunteer, October, 1861, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company D, captain, attained the rank of major, served four years, mustered out July 8, 1865.

Gittings, Harry C., volunteer, Ninth cavalry, company B.

Gittings, Metamoras, age 22, volunteer, May 15, 1861, three years, Twenty-fourth regiment, company B, private, served eight months, died January, 1862, mortally wounded at Murfreesborough.

Gliddons, James L., volunteer, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, died May, 1862, mortally wounded at Lewisburg.

Gooden, Henry, age 37, volunteer, August, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company H, private, served two years and ten months, mustered out June 10, 1865 wounded at Chickamauga.

Grubb, Charles M., volunteer, 1861, three years, Eighteenth regiment, company F, first lieutenant, served three years, mustered out November 9, 1864.

Gooden, Solomon M., age 26, volunteer, August, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company H, private, served one year and five months, died January 6, 1864, of diarrhea.

Green, Obed, One Hundred and Eighty-second regiment.

Gooden, John, age 18, volunteer, Eighteenth regiment, company H, private.

Grubb, John, Thirty-third regiment, company F, private.

Gooden, Moses, age 32, September 1, 1862, One Hundred and Twenty-second regiment, Company C, private, captured in battle of Wilderness, fate unknown.

Grubb, Archibald, age 25, volunteer, three years, Second Virginia cavalry, company E, private, served three years, mustered out, wounded near close of his time.

Greiver, Henry C., volunteer, Second heavy artillery, private, mustered out August, 1865.

Grubb, Goodill, age 21, volunteer, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Grubb, Lewis, age 26, volunteer, 1861, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company D, private, attained the rank of second lieutenant, served nine months, resigned May 26, 1862.

Hagerman, John B., volunteer, 1861, Sixty-third regiment, company D, lieutenant, resigned in 1861, re-enlisted, volunteer, 1864, One Hundred and Eighty-second regiment, died.

Hagerman, John H., age 18, volunteer, Fourth Virginia cavalry, company D, lieutenant, died.

Hall, Theodore, age 21, volunteer, August, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company H, private, served three years, mustered out June 10, 1865.

Hall, John, age 23, 1861, three years, Second Virginia cavalry, company F, private, served three years, mustered out in 1864.

Hall, Alfred, volunteer, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company H, private.

Hall, Frederick, age 29, volunteer, August, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company H, private, served three years, mustered out June 10, 1865.

Haley, Edward, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private.

Harwood, William W., age 26, volunteer, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, attained the rank of commissary sergeant, served four years, mustered out July 27, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Hastings, Adam, age 22.

Henderson, Samuel, volunteer, Seventy-seventh regiment, company K, private, died.

Henderson, Charles, volunteer, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company D, private, re-enlisted as a veteran, killed on skirmish line at Big Shanty, Georgia, June 17, 1864.

Henderson, John, volunteer, May 7, 1861, three months, Eighteenth regiment, company K, captain, served three months, mustered out, August 28, 1861.

Henderson, Thompson H., volunteer, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company H, private, served three years, mustered out June 10, 1865.

Higgins, Alexander H., volunteer, July 30, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company H, captain, served ten months, resigned May 9, 1863.

Hill, John, Eighteenth regiment, company F, private.

Hill, Samuel, age 20, volunteer, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company D, private, honorably discharged for disability, re-enlistment, volunteer, Second Virginia cavalry, private, mustered out June 30, 1865.

Hill, Isaac V., age 21, volunteer, February 15, 1865, One Hundred and Eighty-sixth regiment, company I, private, served seven months, mustered out September 18, 1865.

Hill, Obadiah P., age 19, volunteer, October 10, 1861, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company D, private, attained the rank of captain, mustered out July 8, 1865.

Hoon, Samuel, age 20, volunteer, October 8, 1861, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company D, private, served two years and nine months, mustered out July 8, 1865, lost right leg at Decatur, Georgia, July 22, 1864.

Hoon, Madison, age 20, volunteer, October 1, 1861, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company D, corporal, attained rank of captain, served two years and nine months, mustered out July 8, 1865.

Hoon, John, age 23, volunteer, May, 1861, three months, Eighteenth regiment, company K, private, served three months, mustered out August 28, 1861.

Hutchinson, Calvin A., volunteer, August 27, 1863, six months, Fourth Virginia cavalry, company D, captain, served ten months, mustered out June 23, 1864.

Humphrey, Samuel H., age 21, volunteer, August, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company H, private, served three years, mustered out June 10, 1865, transferred to invalid corps.

Hurlbut, Benoni W. H., age 18, volunteer, One Hundred and Eighty-second regiment, company C, private, served six months in the Fourth Virginia cavalry.

Jackson, Samuel L., age 18, volunteer, March, 1865, One Hundred and Ninety-sixth regiment, company F, private, served seven months, mustered out September 11, 1865, served six months in Fourth Virginia cavalry.

Jackson, John T., age 23, volunteer, October, 1861, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company D, private, served three years, mustered out 1864.

Jackson, A. M., Eighteenth regiment, company H, private.

Jackson, Frank, volunteer, 1865, One Hundred and Eighty-sixth regiment, private, mustered out September, 1865.

Jackson, B. F., age 21, volunteer, Eleventh Iowa Regiment, company D, re-enlisted February 14, 1865, One Hundred and Eighty-sixth regiment, company I, first lieutenant, served four months, resigned June 4, 1865.

James, Marion, age 19, volunteer, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company H, private, died September, 1863, of wounds received at Chickamauga.

Johnson, Robert, Ninety-second regiment, company H, private.

Johnson, Newton, age 20, volunteer, August 15, 1861, three years, Eighteenth regiment, company F, private.

Johnson, William, age 25, volunteer, 1861, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company D, private, mustered out July 8, 1863, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Johnson, James, age 22, volunteer, 1861, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company D, private, mustered out July 8, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Johnson, Benjamin, volunteer, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company D, private, honorably discharged for loss of speech.

Jordan, John, age 21, volunteer, six months, Fourth Virginia cavalry, company D, private.

Jordan, Mitchell, age 18, volunteer, six months, Fourth Virginia cavalry, company D, private, re-enlisted, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Justice, George, age 15, volunteer, June 3, 1862, Eighteenth regulars, company F, corporal, wounded at Chickamauga and twice at Jonesboro.

Justice, William, age 15, volunteer, March, 1861, one year. Eighteenth regiment, company H, private, served one year, mustered out 1862, re-enlisted, volunteer, six months, Fourth Virginia cavalry, private, served six months, mustered out.

Justice, Henry, age 15, volunteer, September, 1864. Thirty-eighth regiment, company I, private, served ten months, mustered out July, 1865.

Juniper, John, age 27, volunteer, August 15, 1861, three years. Eighteenth regiment, company F, captain, served two years and two months, resigned October 4, 1863, died September 13, 1864, of chronic diarrhoea.

King, Martin S., age 20, volunteer, three years, Second Virginia cavalry, company E, private, mustered out June 30, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Kendal, John, age 23, volunteer, May, 1861, three months. Eighteenth regiment, company F, private, served three months, mustered out August 28, 1864, re-enlistment, volunteer, 1861, three years. Eighteenth regiment, company F, private, served three years, mustered out 1864.

Kendall, Hiram, age 17, volunteer, 1861, three years, Eighteenth regiment, company F, private, served four years, mustered out October 9, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Kirby, John, age 22, volunteer, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company H, private, three years, mustered out June 10, 1865.

Lady, Hiram, age 24, volunteer, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company D, private, mustered out July 8, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Keghoe, J., volunteer, three years. Sixty-third regiment, company D, captain, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Lang, James, age 19, volunteer, 1861, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company F, private, served three years, mustered out 1864, captured July 22, 1864, and held nine months.

Langhery, Thornton, volunteer, September, 1861, three years, Second Virginia cavalry, company F, private, served four years, mustered out June 30, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Langley, Benjamin H., age 17, volunteer, three years, Second Virginia cavalry, company F, private, mustered out June 30, 1865.

Latamore, John W., age 18, volunteer, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company D, private, mustered out July 8, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Long, Morris D., age 40, volunteer, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company H, orderly sergeant, served eighteen months, died of typhoid fever at Nashville.

Mason, H. W., Second Virginia cavalry, company F, private, mustered out July 12, 1865, transferred to Fifteenth regiment, company G, veteran reserve corps.

Mason, Winchester.

Mass, A. J., age 50, volunteer, April, 1861, served three months. Eighteenth regiment, company K, drummer, served four months, mustered out August 28, 1865.

Mankins, A. S., age 30, volunteer, 1862, Ninety-second regiment, company H, private.

McAttee, William H., age 20, volunteer, September, 1861, three years, Second Virginia cavalry, company F, private, served three years and nine months, mustered out June 30, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran, captured near Murfreesboro in 1862 and taken to Libby prison.

McCall, William R., age 17, volunteer, September, 1861, three years, Seventeenth regiment, company H, private, died.

McDonald, John, volunteer, three years. Ninety-second regiment, company H, private.

McDonald, James, age 38, volunteer, September 15, 1861, three years, Eighteenth regiment, company F, private.

McDeed, John, volunteer, September 1, 1861, three years, Second Virginia cavalry, company F, private, mustered out June 30, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran.

McGuigan, Thomas D., aged 28, volunteer, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company H, second sergeant, served one year, honorably discharged for disability.

McGuigan, John G., age 35, volunteer, August 13, 1862, three years, Fourteenth regiment, company D, second sergeant, died in 1863 of fever.

McGuigan, William E., age 30, volunteer, September 15, 1861, Second Virginia cavalry, company E, second sergeant, served thirteen months, discharged for disability in 1862.

McGuigan, Eli M., age 23, 1861, three months, Eighteenth regiment, company K, corporal, served three months, mustered out 1861, re-enlistment December 24, 1863, First heavy artillery, company I, served one year and six months, mustered out July 25, 1865.

McKendry, Albert, age 25, volunteer, 1862, Ninety-second regiment, company H, private, honorably discharged for disability in 1863, wounded at Chickamauga.

McKendry, Elijah, age 20, volunteer, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, re-enlisted as veteran, missing.

McKelvey, William, age 18, volunteer, March, 1865, Eighteenth regiment, company H, private.

McMann, Orlof, age 17, volunteer, one hundred days, private, died at Winchester.

Morris, age 38, volunteer, December 31, 1863, Second Virginia cavalry, company E, private, served one year and six months, mustered out July 1, 1865.

Newton, Nathan, volunteer, three years, Second Virginia cavalry, company F, private, re-enlisted as a veteran, wounded at Fisher's Hill and died at Winchester.

Newton, William A., age 23, volunteer, February 17, 1862, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company C, musician, served three years, mustered out July 8, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran, last eighteen months clerk in adjutant general's office.

Nickerson, Allen, age 21, volunteer, August 7, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company H, mustered out July 12, 1865, transferred to Fifteenth regiment, company G, veteran reserve corps.

Nickel, James, age 22, volunteer, three years, Second Virginia cavalry, company F, corporal, attained rank of sergeant, mustered out June 30, 1865, in three months' service, re-enlisted as a veteran, offered a lieutenancy.

Nickel, William, age 24, volunteer, 1861, three months, Eighteenth regiment, company K, corporal, attained rank of sergeant, served three months, mustered out, re-enlisted.

Nixon, James M., age 22, volunteer, October 1, 1861, three years, Eighteenth Iowa, company F, private, discharged for disability April 22, 1863, wounded at Murfreesboro, losing a leg.

Nixon, B. F., age 16, volunteer, October, 1863, three years, Eleventh Virginia regiment, company A, private, served one year and eight months mustered out June 17, 1865, died August 1, 1865, from wound in leg.

Nixon, George E., age 21, volunteer, March 8, 1865, Eighteenth regiment, company F, private, served seven months, mustered out October 9, 1865.

Nixon, William M., age 29, volunteer, December 31, 1863, three years, Second Virginia cavalry, company E, private, served one year and six months, mustered out June 30, 1865.

Nixon, William, age 34, volunteer, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company H, private, mustered out June 10, 1865.

Norman, A. W., volunteer, October 1, 1861, three years, Eighteenth regiment, company H, private, served four years, mustered out October 9, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Norman, Joseph G., volunteer, October 1, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company K, private, served four years, mustered out July 27, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran, was captured while sick at Winchester, and paroled.

Norman, William, volunteer, 1865, One Hundred and Eighty-sixth regiment, company I, private, mustered out September 26, 1865.

Norman, Milton, age 32, volunteer, February 10, 1864, Twenty-seventh regiment, company D, private, mustered out July 11, 1865.

Null, Samuel, volunteer, Sixty-third regiment, company D, private, mustered out July 4, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Norris, Peter, regulars.

Palmer, Isaac, L., age 16, volunteer, July 24, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, division teamster, served four years, mustered out July 27, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran, injured in July, 1864, and in hospital till December, 1864.

Palmer John D., volunteer, April 22, 1861, three months, Third regiment, company G, private, served three months, second enlistment, June 25, 1861, Third regiment, company C, private, served three years, mustered out June 23, 1864, captured May 3, 1863, paroled May 15, third enlistment, volunteer, August, 1864, One Hundred and Eighty-second regiment, company C, color sergeant, attained rank of orderly sergeant, served eleven months, mustered out July 7, 1865.

Palmer, George B., age 22, volunteer, January 1, 1863, three years, Second Virginia cavalry, company E, private, served two years and five months, mustered out June 30, 1865, after one year transferred to ambulance corps.

Palmer, Andrew B., age 18, volunteer, February 4, 1865, One Hundred and Twenty-sixth regiment, company I, private, served three months, died May 21, 1865, of measles.

Parcel, Theodore, age 13, volunteer, August, 1863, six months, Fourth Virginia cavalry, company D, private, served ten months, mustered out June 23, 1864.

Parsons, Hardeson, age 21, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, served two years and six months, honorably discharged

February, 1865, for disability, re-enlisted as a veteran, wounded.

Parsons, Silas D., age 17, substitute, August, 1864, one year, One Hundred and Eighty-second regiment, company C, private, served eleven months, mustered out July 7, 1865.

Patterson, John, age 22, volunteer, three months, Fourth Virginia cavalry, company F, private, served three months, mustered out.

Perry, Richard, volunteer, Ninety-second regiment, company H, private, died January 6, 1864, of diarrhoea.

Pettibone, John W., age 30, volunteer, December 31, 1863, First cavalry, company L, supposed to be dead.

Philips, C. S., Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, Pixley, Joseph, volunteer, 1864, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, one year, mustered out July 27, 1865.

Pratt, Charles C., One Hundred and Eighty-second regiment, company C.

Preston, Benjamin, age 28, volunteer, 1862, Ninety-second regiment, color bearer, wounded October, 1863, and honorably discharged.

Pyle, George D., Second Virginia cavalry, company F, killed at Spencer Court House.

Quimby, Ezra, Seventy-seventh regiment, company H, private, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Ramsey, Philip.

Reed, George, age 27, volunteer, June 4, 1861, three years, Twenty-fifth regiment, company H, private, served three years, mustered out in 1864.

Ramsey, James, age 16, volunteer, 1861, three years, Sixty-seventh regiment, private.

Reynolds, Charles, age 21, volunteer, July 14, 1861, three years, Thirteenth regiment, musician, served eleven months, mustered out June 3, 1862, served six months in Fourth Virginia cavalry.

Reyhoe, James F., age 26, volunteer, October, 1861, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company D, private, re-enlisted as a veteran, afterward raised a company of colored troops.

Richards, D. J., volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, captain, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Roach, Rufus W., age 17, volunteer, November 6, 1863, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company F, private, attained the rank of corporal, served one year and eight months, mustered out July 8, 1865.

Roach, Marcellus S., age 17, volunteer, fall of 1861, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company F, corporal, served three years, mustered out in 1864, captured July 22, 1864, and in prison for nine months.

Roach, Wallace S., volunteer, fall of 1861, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company F, private, attained the rank of second lieutenant, mustered out July 8, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Roberts, Elisha, age 20, volunteer, 1861, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company D, private, died March 24, 1862, killed by an accident near New Madrid.

Ross, Daniel, volunteer, 1861, three years, Second Virginia cavalry, company F, private, mustered out June 30, 1865, veteran, captured at Front Royal in the fall of 1864 and paroled, also in first three months' service.

Ross, James, age 21, volunteer, September 19, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private served three years and ten months, mustered out

July 24, 1865, in first three months' service, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Ross, Franklin, age 18, volunteer, 1861, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company D, private, died June 17, 1864, veteran, killed on skirmish line at Big Shanty, Georgia.

Shockley, John, age 31, volunteer, three years, First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, mustered out in 1865.

Scott, Andrew E., volunteer, November 22, 1861, three years, Second Virginia cavalry, company E, captain, served two months, resigned January 12, 1862.

Scott, William H., volunteer, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private.

Scott, O. P. H., Second Virginia cavalry, company F, lieutenant, attained to rank of captain, resigned December 23, 1862.

Scott, Freeman, age 18, volunteer, August 28, 1863, three years, Second Virginia cavalry, company F, private, died.

Serogan, John, One Hundred and Eighty-second regiment, company C.

Skillington, William O., age 22, volunteer, August 10, 1864, One Hundred and Eighty-second regiment, company C, private, mustered out July 14, 1865, served in the first months.

Skillington, Thomas, age 13, volunteer, August, 1863, Fourth Virginia cavalry, company D, private, died in August, 1863, a prisoner.

Slaters, James W. F., age 18, volunteer, fall of 1861, three years, Eighteenth regiment, company F, private, attained to rank of second lieutenant, served four years, mustered out October 9, 1865.

Slater, D. S., age 22, volunteer, fall of 1864, Eighteenth regiment, company H, private, one year, mustered out October 9, 1865.

Sleigh, George W., age 27, volunteer, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company A, corporal, attained to rank of sergeant, served three years, mustered out June 10, 1865.

Shipman, Joseph S., volunteer, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company H.

Smith, Charles, age 30, volunteer, Ninety-second regiment, company H, private.

Spayerman, John, Ninth cavalry, company B, private.

Spencer, George W.

Spooner, Cyrus, age 31, volunteer, January 1, 1863, Second Virginia cavalry, company F, private, served one and a half years, mustered out June 30, 1865.

Stewart, Tartus L., volunteer, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company H, private, died November 25, 1863, killed at Mission Ridge.

Stewart, John V.

Swift, Jr., Lyman W., age 24, volunteer, December 4, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company F, private, served four years and four months, mustered out March 8, 1866, captured at Mark's Mills, and in prison nine months.

Swift, John, age 22, volunteer, Seventy-seventh regiment, company F, private, died August 10, 1862.

Taylor, Thomas C., volunteer, 1861, three years, One Hundred and Eighty-second regiment, company C, private.

Taylor, John, age 19, volunteer, June 8, 1861, three years, Twenty-sixth regiment, company D, private, served four years, mustered out August 1, 1865, wounded in 1864, and served in hospital till muster out.

Taylor, Theodore, age 19, volunteer, September, 1864, One Hundred and Eighty-second regiment, company C, private, served seven months, died March 23, 1865, of measles.

Thomas, —, Twenty-sixth regiment, company F.

Thurlow, Silas, Sixty-third regiment, company F. Thornbury, William H., volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, served ten months, died June, 1864, killed at Lynchburg.

Townsend, William C., age 22, volunteer, 1861, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company D, private, attained the rank of corporal, mustered out July 4, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Truesdale, John W., age 16, three years, Eighteenth regiment, company F, private, served three years, mustered out.

Tuesdale, Joseph F., age 16, volunteer, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company D, private, mustered out July 4, 1865.

Tyson, Ira, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company H, private.

Tyson, Charles, Eighteenth regiment, company H, private.

Vincent, W. J., age 31, January 1, 1864, Second Virginia cavalry, company F, private, served one year and six months, mustered out July, 1865.

Tucker, Wesley, age 25, volunteer, September, 1861, three years, Sixty-third regiment, first lieutenant, served nine months, resigned June 18, 1862, sergeant in first three months' service.

Tucker, James, age 22, volunteer, September, 1861, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company D, second sergeant, served seven months, honorably discharged in 1861, in first three months' service, discharged for disability.

Vincent, H., age 20, volunteer, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company D, private, mustered out July 4, 1865, re-enlisted as veteran.

Vincent, C. W., age 17, volunteer, August 11, 1864, One Hundred and Eighty-second regiment, company C, corporal, served one year, mustered out July 7, 1865, served six months in Fourth Virginia cavalry.

Vincent, Marion, age 18, volunteer, July 24, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, served three years, honorably discharged in 1864, by reason of wounds.

Voschel, Ebenezer, volunteer, Sixty-third regiment, company H, private, died.

Walters, Ralph, age 31, volunteer, January 1, 1862, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company F, private, served three years and six months, honorably discharged, mustered out July 4, 1865, veteran.

Ward, Isaac, volunteer, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company H, private, mustered out March 8, 1866, veteran.

Whissen, Amos A., volunteer, April, 1861, three months, Seventeenth regiment, company H, first lieutenant, served three months, mustered out, re-enlistment, volunteer, November 4, 1861, three years. Seventeenth regiment, company H, captain, served two years, resigned October 27, 1863, re-enlistment, volunteer, October 1, 1864. One Hundred and Eighty-second regiment, company C, captain, attained rank of major, served nine months, mustered out July 7, 1865.

Whitney, James, age 25, volunteer, six months, Fourth Virginia cavalry, private, served six months, mustered out.

White, Hiram, age 28, volunteer, April 23, 1861, three months. Eighteenth regiment, company K, corporal, served four months, mustered out August 28, 1861.

Wilson, Daniel, age 25, volunteer, three years. Sixty-third regiment, company D, private, mustered out July 4, 1865, veteran, detached as ferryman in 1863.

Wilson, William, age 20, volunteer, September, 1864, three years. One Hundred and Seventeenth regiment, company F, private, served eleven months, mustered out August 1, 1865.

Wilson, James.

Winstanley, Peter, age 23, volunteer, August, 1862, three years. Ninety-second regiment, company H, private, served ten months, mustered out June 10, 1865.

Winstanley, James, age 32, volunteer, August 11, 1864, one year. One Hundred and Eighty-second regiment, company C, corporal, served eleven months, mustered out July 7, 1865.

Wood, Newton, age 20, volunteer, October 14, 1863. Eleventh Virginia regiment, company A, private, honorably discharged April 17, 1865, for disability.

Wood, William, age 17, volunteer, September 15, 1863. Eleventh Virginia regiment, company A, private, honorably discharged in 1865, wounded at battle of Petersburg March 31, 1865, discharged on account of wound.

Worstall, George, age 35, volunteer, August, 1862. Ninety-second regiment, company H, private served two years and ten months, mustered out June 10, 1865.

Wright, Horace, volunteer, Seventy-seventh regiment, company H, private, discharged.

Wright, Royal, volunteer, Seventy-seventh regiment, company H, private, died.

Wright, Russell, Seventy-seventh regiment, company H.

RECAPITULATION

De Beck's battery.....	2
One each in Buell's battery, Fourteenth United States colored heavy artillery, Second Ohio heavy artillery, First Ohio heavy artillery, in all.....	4
Second Virginia cavalry.....	35
Fourth Virginia cavalry.....	10
Ninth Ohio Cavalry.....	4
First Ohio Cavalry.....	2
Sixty-third Ohio.....	42
Ninety-second Ohio.....	33
Eighteenth Ohio (three years).....	26
Eighteenth Ohio (three months).....	7
Thirty-sixth Ohio.....	23
One Hundred and Eighty-second Ohio.....	17
Seventy-seventh Ohio.....	12
One Hundred and Eighty-sixth Ohio.....	4

Three each in One Hundred and Forty-eighth Ohio national guards, Eleventh Virginia, in all.....

Two each in Third Ohio, Seventeenth Ohio, Twenty-fifth Ohio, Twenty-sixth Ohio, One Hundred and Ninety-sixth Ohio, and Thirteenth Ohio, in all.....

One each in the Fourteenth Ohio, Twenty-fourth Ohio, Twenty-seventh Ohio, Thirty-third Ohio, Thirty-eighth Ohio, Sixty-seventh Ohio, One Hundred and Twenty-second Ohio, One Hundred and Twenty-sixth Ohio, One Hundred and Seventeenth Ohio, Eleventh Iowa, Eighteenth United States regulars, not designated 8, in all.....

Total number of soldiers.....
Died.....

WATERTOWN TOWNSHIP

Adams, Demas, age 18, volunteer, September 13, 1861, three years. Eighteenth regiment, company F, orderly sergeant, served three years, mustered out September, 1864, captured near Lookout Mountain, re-enlistment, 1864, One Hundred and Eighty-sixth regiment, company I, attained the rank of second lieutenant, mustered out September 25, 1865, held in Libby prison and Belle Isle, six months.

Adams, Augustine, age 16, volunteer, October, 1861, three years. First light artillery, company H, private, served three years, mustered out October 23, 1864.

Adams, Hamlin M., age 25, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days. One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company A, private.

Andrews, Samuel, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days. One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company I, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Arnold, Joseph A., age 18, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days. One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company I, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Bartlett, George, volunteer, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company D, private.

Beebe, Lyman, age 27, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days. One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company I, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864, detailed as hospital nurse.

Beebe, John W., age 20, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days. One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company I, private, mustered out September, 1864, sick.

Bohl, Conrad, age 35, volunteer, October 22, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, sergeant, honorably discharged for disability.

Brabham, John W., age 23, volunteer, August 27, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company H, private, served one year honorably discharged September, 1862, wounded at Shiloh, re-enlistment, May, 1864, one hundred days. One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company K, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864, third enlistment, October, 1864, one year, First cavalry, company L, private, served eight months, mustered out June, 1865.

Brabham, Rickard B., age 16, volunteer, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company H, private, discharged March 20, 1863, for disability.

Brahman, Stanton L., age 34, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company H, wagonmaster, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Bidel, Jacob, volunteer, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, private, died.

Brabham, Thomas J., volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company H, private, served three years and three months, mustered out December, 1864.

Brabham, George W., age 26, volunteer, October 19, 1862, three years, Ninth cavalry, company B, private, died August 10, 1864, captured at Knoxville, January 25, 1864, confined in Belle Isle and in Andersonville, where he died.

Brabham, Henry H., age 24, volunteer, October 19, 1862, Ninth regiment, company B, private, served three years, mustered out December, 1864.

Buchanan, George W., age 28, volunteer, August 11, 1862, three years, Eighty-seventh Indiana, company A, private, served three years, mustered out June, 1865, captured and paroled, wounded at Chickamauga.

Buchanan, Charles, age 23, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company I, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1865.

Burchett, William T., age 25, volunteer, February 9, 1865, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company H, private, served five months, mustered out July 27, 1865.

Breckenridge, James F., one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company D, private, died September 10, 1864, at Baltimore, Maryland.

Burris, Bernard, age 29, volunteer, October, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company H, private, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Burris, Rufus, age 25, volunteer, October, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company H, private, honorably discharged for disability, re-enlistment, October 6, 1864, one year, Seventy-first regiment, company F, private, captured and imprisoned four months.

Burns, Reuben, age 18, volunteer, October, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company H, private, honorably discharged for disability, re-enlistment, Seventy-seventh regiment, company H, private, honorably discharged for disability.

Burris, John J., age 26, October, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company H, private, honorably discharged.

Burris, Francis M., age 18, volunteer, October, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company H, private, died April 6, 1862, killed at Shiloh.

Burris, Albert, age 18, volunteer, October, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company H, private, re-enlisted as a veteran, captured near Camden and imprisoned at Camp Ford ten months.

Burris, Harvey, age 16, volunteer, October, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company H, private, honorably discharged for disability, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Chamberlain, John D., Jr., age 21, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company I, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1865.

Colwell, William W., age 17, volunteer, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, honorably discharged for disability.

Colman, William H., age 18, volunteer, February, 1865, Thirty-sixth regiment, company H, private, mustered out July 27, 1865.

Colvin, Charles, Seventh cavalry.

Cooksey, T. H., age 29, volunteer, October 9, 1862, three years, Ninth cavalry, company B, private, attained the rank of ordnance sergeant, honorably discharged June 12, 1865, for disability.

Cozzens, Samuel, age 24, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company I, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Criswell, Isaac, age 34, volunteer, January 5, 1864, First cavalry, company C, private, served one year and eight months, mustered out September 13, 1865.

Creaser, Adam, age 17, volunteer, July 29, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company F, corporal, attained to rank of sergeant, served four years, mustered out July 9, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Danielson, Leroy H., age 38, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company I, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Day, Thomas, age 25, volunteer, August, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company F, second lieutenant, served five months, resigned January, 1863, re-enlistment, volunteer, March, 1863, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, adjutant, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Dauley, Hiel, One Hundred and Twenty-fifth regiment, company I.

Day, Alvin, age 18, volunteer, February, 1864, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private.

Deming, Henry M., age 25, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, served one year, honorably discharged July, 1862, first discharge for disability, second discharge sick at Washington and sent home, re-enlistment, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company I, private, served four months, mustered out in 1864.

Deming, Edward N., age 18, volunteer, October, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, private, captured at Shiloh, taken to Mobile, and supposed to be dead.

Deming, Lester C., age 19, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company I, private, served four months, honorably discharged in 1864.

Devore, David A., age 20, volunteer, January, 1862, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company D, private, served seven months, honorably discharged August 13, 1862, died August 20th of diarrhœa.

Dickerson, Greensbury E., age 45, volunteer, September, 1862, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company H, private, served one year, honorably discharged September, 1863, for disability.

Dickerson, Milton H., age 16, volunteer, September, 1862, three years. Seventy-seventh regiment, company H, private, served nine months, died June 17, 1863, taken sick just after the battle of Shiloh.

Dickerson, Cassius M. C., age 15, volunteer, March 16, 1865, Eighteenth regiment, company K, private.

Ewing, Marquis, volunteer, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company H, private.

Fish, James, age 24, volunteer, 1864, First cavalry, private.

Fohl, John, age 21, volunteer, July 29, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company F, private, first sergeant, served four years, mustered out July 9, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Ford, Daniel, age 44, volunteer, June 11, 1864, One Hundred and Twenty-second regiment, company G, private, four battles, served one year, mustered out June 26, 1865.

Gilpin, Manley, age 17, volunteer, October 14, 1861, three years, Sixty-second regiment, company I, private, served three years, mustered out October, 1864.

Gilpin, Joseph, age 20, volunteer, November, 1861, three years, Sixty-second regiment, company I, private, honorably discharged for disability, died in 1865.

Gilpin, James, age 15, volunteer, October, 1861, three years, Sixty-second regiment, company I, private, served ten months, honorably discharged August, 1862, for disability.

Gilpin, Jonas, volunteer, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company D, private, died.

Gilpin, Jonas, Jr., age 20, volunteer, September, 1861, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company D, private, served ten months, died in 1862.

Gilpin, Matthew, December, 1863, Sixty-third regiment, company D, private, captured and supposed to have died in Andersonville prison.

Gilpin, Sullivan, age 18, volunteer, April, 1861, three months, Eighteenth regiment, private, served four months, mustered out August 28, 1861, re-enlisted as a veteran, volunteer, September, 1861, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company D, served four years, mustered out July 8, 1865, wounded in the battle of the Wilderness May, 1864.

Gilpin, Rufus, age 18, volunteer, October, 1863, three years, One Hundred and Twenty-second regiment, company C, private, served one year and nine months, mustered out July, 1865.

Gilmor, William W., age 24, volunteer, August 1, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, attained to rank of corporal, served four years, mustered out July 27, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran, captured at Lewisburg, May 23, 1862, in prison for four months, and wounded at Mission Ridge.

Gilmor, Cromwell, age 31, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company I, private, honorably discharged September, 1864, sick two months, and died three weeks after his return home.

Gossett, Warden, age 20, volunteer, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company H, private, honorably discharged November, 1862, sick most of the time and discharged for disability.

Gossett, Miles, age 16, volunteer, July, 1861, six months, Fourth Virginia cavalry, company D, private, served six months, mustered out February, 1862.

Gossett, Lindsay, age 28, volunteer, 1863, six months, Fourth Virginia cavalry, company B, private, served six months, mustered out.

Greene, Harvey, age 20, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, served nine months, died May 1, 1862, of pneumonia, in West Virginia.

Greene, James P., age 25, volunteer, November, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, second sergeant, served seven months, died June, 1862, captured at Shiloh, April, 1862, imprisoned and died in prison hospital in Georgia.

Hagerman, George W., age 37, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company I, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864, detailed as provost guard, at Bermuda Hundred.

Hall, William, age 18, volunteer, November 26, 1861, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company F, private, honorably discharged for disability, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Harry, John W., volunteer, six months, Fourth Virginia cavalry, private, served six months, mustered out.

Henry, George, age 27, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company I, private, mustered out September, 1864, sick the whole time at Bermuda Hundred.

Henry, B. F., age 38, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company I, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864, detailed as provost guard at Bermuda Hundred.

Henry, John, age 18, volunteer, August 9, 1864, one year, gunboat, private, served one year, mustered out June 12, 1865.

Henry, Arius N., age 23, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, served ten months, honorably discharged June 1, 1862, for disability.

Henry, George, age 34, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company I, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Henry, David, age 29, volunteer, October 28, 1861, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company F, private, served three years and nine months, mustered out July 8, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Henry, Joseph, age 25, volunteer, October, 1862, Sixty-third regiment, company F, private, served two years, died September 26, 1864.

Hinton, Samuel, age 28, volunteer, October, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company F, private, served four years, mustered out March 8, 1866, captured at Sabine River, and in Camp Ford prison ten months.

Hinton, William B., age 30, volunteer, October, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company F, private, mustered out March 8, 1866, captured at Sabine River, and in Camp Ford prison ten months.

Hootsel, Joseph, volunteer, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, private.

Hootsel, Peter, volunteer, October, 1861, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, private, died in Camp Ford prison.

Hootsel, John, age 19, volunteer, June, 1862, three months, eighty-seventh regiment, company A, private, mustered out September 20, 1862, re-enlistment, February, 1865, Thirty-sixth regiment, company H, mustered out July 27, 1865.

Hootsel, Frank, volunteer, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company F, died.

Hootsel, George, volunteer, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company F.

Hootsel, William, volunteer, March, 1865, Eighteenth regiment, company K.

Humiston, Charles, age 39, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company I, private, died, 1864, of measles.

Humphrey, Orton E., age 19, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company I, private, honorably discharged September 1864.

Klinger, Joseph, age 19, volunteer, July 11, 1863, three years, Second heavy artillery, private, mustered out August 23, 1865.

Librand, Frederick, age 20, volunteer, June, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company F, private, served two years, honorably discharged 1863, for disability, re-enlistment, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company I, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

McGrew, Jesse, age 18, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company I, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Martin, Henry W., age 20, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company I, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864, in hospital two months.

McFarland, W. P., age 36, volunteer, October, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company E, private, captured near Pine Bluffs and imprisoned in Camp Ford prison ten months.

Mellor, Thomas, age 29, volunteer, 1861, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company D, private, served four months, died July 8, 1862.

Micham, William M., volunteer, Ninety-second regiment, company G, died.

Miser, Adam, age 21, volunteer, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private.

Morris, John, age 29, volunteer, November, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, private, mustered out 1866, captured at Pine Bluffs, imprisoned at Camp Ford ten months, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Morris, Elza, age 21, volunteer, November, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private, died September 16, 1862, of fever.

Morris, Elwood, age 21, volunteer, November, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private, honorably discharged for disability, died one month after his brother, October, 1862.

Morris, Harvey, age 22, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company I, private, honorably discharged September, 1864.

McNeal, Cromwell, age 29, volunteer, October 16, 1861, Forty-first Illinois, assistant surgeon, died June 11, 1862, was attacked with measles, before full recovery was overdone by excessive labor at his post, and died.

McNeal, Franklin, age 25, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company I, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Moloney, Reuben, volunteer, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B.

Munton, Enoch, age 30, volunteer, February 27, 1864, Thirty-sixth regiment, company K, private, mustered out May, 1865.

Newbanks, Alfred D., age 24, volunteer, October, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, private, died January 19, 1862, at Camp Putnam, of measles and pneumonia.

Neason, John, age 21, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, died 1865, at Andersonville, of wound.

Palmer, Gabriel V., age 20, volunteer, April, 1861, three months, Eighteenth regiment, private, served four months, mustered out August 28, 1861, re-enlistment, July 6, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, served three years, mustered out August, 1864, wounded at Chattanooga, September 24, 1863, transferred to invalid corps, re-enlistment, February 22, 1865, Forty-third regiment, company A, private, mustered out July 13, 1865.

Peter, Philip, age 42, volunteer, October, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, sergeant, served three years and three months, died January 8, 1865, captured April 25, 1864, imprisoned at Camp Ford, died in prison hospital.

Proctor, Alfred, age 20, volunteer, February 27, 1864, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, died March 21, 1864, of measles.

Proctor, Edward, age 18, volunteer, March 27, 1864, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, served one year and four months, mustered out July 27, 1865.

Reed, George W., age 17, volunteer, 1863, six months, Fourth regiment, private, served eight months, mustered out, re-enlistment, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company I, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Radecker, William, age 22, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company I, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Rice, William, Second cavalry.

Rigg, John C., age 21, volunteer, July 29, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, discharged March, 1865, captured at Chickamauga, imprisoned nine months, paroled, could not be discharged on account of parole till March 18, 1865.

Riley, George W., first enlistment, volunteer, three months, Eighty-fifth regiment, company F, private, served three months, mustered out, second enlistment, volunteer, August, 1863, six months, Fourth Virginia cavalry, company D, private, served six months, mustered out February, 1864, third enlistment, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company I, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864, fourth enlistment, age 25, volunteer, February 10, 1865, one year, Thirty-sixth regiment, company H, private, served five months, mustered out July 27, 1865.

Ross, Thomas, Seventy-seventh regiment, company H.

Riley, Albert, volunteer, 1863, six months, Fourth Virginia cavalry, company D, private, served six months, mustered out March 15, 1864, re-enlistment, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company I, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864, re-enlistment, February 10, 1865, one year, Thirty-sixth regiment, company H, private, served five months, mustered out July 27, 1865.

Ryan, Thomas, age 25, volunteer, June, 1862, three months, Eighty-seventh regiment, company A, private, mustered out September 20, 1864.

Rutter, William C., age 41, volunteer, October, 1861, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, private, served one year, died September 24, 1862, captured at Shiloh and died in prison at Macon, Georgia, of disease caused by privation and bad usage.

Remeley, John L., age 25, volunteer, October, 1861, three years, First cavalry, company L, private, died October 1, 1862, buried near Fort Blair, Kentucky.

Schwartzcup, Adam, age 21, volunteer, 1861, Twenty-eighth regiment, private, died 1862 in hospital at Bull Run, Virginia.

Scott, Watson, Seventy-seventh regiment, company A.

Smith, Henry, age 21, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company I, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Snow, C. P., age 44, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company I, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Starling, Stephen, age 31, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company I, private, honorably discharged September 20, 1864, left in hospital at Washington with measles, and not able to rejoin regiment.

Steber, Adam, volunteer, Thirty-sixth regiment, company B, private, died July 4, 1863, of erysipelas.

Steeber, Jacob, age 26, volunteer, October 8, 1861, First Virginia light artillery, company C, private, served three years and eight months, mustered out June 28, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Webster, John L., age 31, volunteer, October, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company H, private, served six months, honorably discharged April, 1862, for disability, re-enlistment, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company I, private, served four months, mustered out in 1864.

Webster, Andrew, age 19, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company I, private, served four months, mustered out in September, 1864.

Wells, Adams, age 18, volunteer, 1861, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, three years, private, died in February, 1863.

Wells, Ira, volunteer, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, three years, private, died.

Wigner, W. D., age 21, volunteer, December, 1862, pilot on gunboat, mustered out in 1865, pressed as pilot into rebel service, ran his boat aground and escaped to Union lines, when the Diana was captured, and escaped by swimming, served as first-class pilot through the war.

Wilson, Daniel, age 25, volunteer, September, 1861, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company D, private, served four years, mustered out July 8, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Waterman, Ralph O., age 36, volunteer, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company F, private, died at Jackson, Tennessee.

Waterman, Charles L., age 22, volunteer, July, 1863, six months, Fourth Virginia cavalry, company D, first corporal, attained first sergeant, served six months, mustered out in February, 1864, re-enlisted, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company I, served two months, July 23, 1864, died of camp fever, taken sick at Bermuda Hundred.

Winsor, Henry H., age 16, volunteer, September 1, 1863, six months, Fourth Virginia cavalry, private, served six months, mustered out in February, 1864, re-enlisted, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company I, private, served four months, mustered out in September, 1864.

Wolcott, Lewis, age 24, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, died in hospital at Summerville, December 1, 1861.

Wolcott, Rollin, age 16, volunteer, July, 1863, six months, Fourth Virginia cavalry, company D, private, served six months, mustered out March 12, 1864, re-enlisted, volunteer, March 20, 1864, Third United States cavalry, company D, private, served through the war.

Wolcott, Roscoe, age 22, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company I, orderly, served four months, mustered out in September, 1864.

Wolcott, C. F., age 15, volunteer, October 24, 1861, three years, First light artillery, company H, private, corporal gunner, served three years, mustered out October 23, 1864.

Woodruff, Mark, age 18, volunteer, June, 1861, three years, Seventh Missouri cavalry, private, served two years and three months, honorably discharged September 1, 1863, re-enlisted in March, 1864, Seventy-seventh regiment, company G, corporal, wounded twice, captured at Mark's Mills, taken sick and died on the journey.

Woodruff, Mansley, age 20, volunteer, August 1, 1862, one year, Sixtieth regiment, company K, private, mustered out October 10, 1862, re-enlisted in February, 1865, One Hundred and Ninety-fourth regiment, company C, private, attained corporal, mustered out October 24, 1865, captured at Harper's Ferry, paroled and exchanged.

Woodruff, Anson, age 17, volunteer, March, 1864, Thirty-third regiment, company F, drummer, served one year and four months, mustered out July 27, 1865.

Woodruff, George N., age 18, volunteer, 1861, three years, Forty-ninth regiment, private, served four years, mustered out in September, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Woodruff, O. Jerome, age 41, May, 1864, volunteer, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company I, private, served four months, mustered out in September, 1864.

Waterman, Daniel, volunteer, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, private.

Vincent, Thomas, age 19, volunteer, November 25, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B, private, served one year, honorably discharged November 26, 1862, for disability.

Quimby, Sol, volunteer, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company H.

Quimby, Hanford, volunteer.

RECAPITULATION

Huntington's Battery	2
Buell's battery	1
Second heavy artillery	1
First Virginia cavalry	9
Ninth Ohio cavalry	3
Second Ohio cavalry	1
Seventh Ohio cavalry	1
Third United States cavalry	1
Seventh Missouri cavalry	1
First Ohio cavalry	4
Seventy-seventh Ohio	42
One Hundred and Forty-eighth Ohio	38
Thirty-sixth Ohio	20
Sixty-third Ohio	12
Ninety-second Ohio	4
Thirty-ninth Ohio	3
Eighteenth Ohio (three years)	3
Sixty-second Ohio	3
Eighteenth Ohio (three months)	2
Seventh Ohio	2
One Hundred and Twenty-second Ohio	2
Gambel's service	2
One each in Sixtieth Ohio, Forty-third Ohio, Forty-first Illinois, Forty-ninth Illinois, Twenty-eighth Pennsylvania, Eighty-seventh Indiana, Eighty-fifth Ohio, One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Ohio, One Hundred and Eighty-sixth Ohio, One Hundred and Ninety-fourth Ohio	10
Total number soldiers	146
Died	26

WESLEY TOWNSHIP.

Baker, George H., age 16, volunteer, June, 1861, three years, Fourth Virginia cavalry, company D, private, served three years, mustered out June 23, 1864.

Baker, Francis, age 18, 1864, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F.

Bachelor, Alexander, age 20, volunteer, August 14, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company G, private, died December 19, 1864, wounded at Chattanooga and also at Franklin, Tennessee, captured and died in hospital.

Barnes, Lewis H., age 19, volunteer, 1864, Thirty-sixth regiment, company B, private, died October 26, 1864, at Annapolis, Maryland.

Beebe, Guy, Seventy-third regiment, company F.
Brill, Benjamin F., age 19, volunteer, August 1, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, attained rank of sergeant, wounded and had typhoid fever, transferred to the invalid corps, re-enlisted in the veteran reserve corps.

Brill, Alexander H., age 26, volunteer, October 27, 1861, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company G, private, attained rank of first lieutenant, mustered out July 8, 1865, sick with typhoid, bilious and intermittent fevers, detailed for recruiting service, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Brill, John R., age 17, volunteer, May 17, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company D, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864, re-enlistment, February 15, 1865, Nineteenth regiment, company D, private, served eight months, mustered out October 21, 1865.

Brill, William H., age 25, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company D, corporal, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Caldwell, William B., age 19, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B.

Callahan, George E., age 26, volunteer, August 12, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company G, private, died March 6, 1863, at Carthage, Tennessee.

Callahan, Ezekiel, age 35, Ninety-second regiment, company G, died.

Campbell, Alexander A., age 40, volunteer, October 15, 1861, three years, Seventy-third regiment, company F, sergeant, served three years, honorably discharged in 1864, after the re-enlistment acted as sergeant in pioneer company till put in charge of the ambulance train.

Carpenter, George W., age 33, volunteer, January 26, 1864, Thirty-sixth regiment, company A, private, served one year and six months, mustered out July 27, 1865.

Carr, R. C., Fifth regiment, company G.

Carwee, Seneca, Second cavalry, company F.

Clarke, Leander, age 19, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F.

Clayton, David E., age 25, volunteer, August, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company G, private, attained rank of sergeant, served two years and ten months, mustered out June 10, 1865.

Clayton, James A., age 24, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company D, corporal, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Clayton, Isaac C., age 21, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company B, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Coler, Charles H., age 18, volunteer, July 18, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company C, private, served four years, mustered out July 9, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Coler, George M., age 20, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company D, private, died August 20, 1864, of camp disease at City Point.

Coler, Patrick Perley, Seventy-seventh regiment, company F.

Coler, John E., age 22, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company D, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864, sick for two months.

Coler, Felix W., age 28, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company D, private, died August 28, 1864, of congestion of the lungs.

Colwell, W. W., age 18, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B.

Cowee, Sardine, age 23, volunteer, February 27, 1864, One Hundred and Twenty-second regiment, company C, private, served one year and four months, mustered out June 20, 1865.

Cowee, John T., age 19, volunteer, February 20, 1864, One Hundred and Twenty-second regiment, company C, private, served one year and four months, mustered out June 20, 1865.

Duer, George A., age 42, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F.

Cowee, Seneca A., age 21, volunteer, August 12, 1861, three years, Second Virginia cavalry, company F, private, served four years, mustered out June 30, 1865, much on detached duty in hospital.

Denny, Charles W., age 18, volunteer, Sixty-third regiment, company I, died December 30, 1864.

Ellis, Pierson, age 18, volunteer, October 9, 1861, three years, Second Virginia cavalry, company H, private, served three years and ten months, mustered out June 30, 1865, on detailed service as messenger and orderly, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Ellis, Alonzo, age 35, Seventy-seventh regiment, company F, died.

Ellis, Asbury F., age 32, volunteer, October 14, 1861, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company G, private, served four months, honorably discharged February 17, 1862, for disability, re-enlistment, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company D, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Ellis, Lindley F., age 22, volunteer, Second Virginia cavalry, company H.

Engle, Richard, Sixty-third regiment, company G.

English, Gideon, age 24, volunteer, March, 1864, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, honorably discharged in 1865, sick and never in active service.

Fowler, Lester R., Seventy-fifth regiment, company B.

Fairies, George, age 30, Fifth regiment, company C.

Gates, Leander S., age 22, volunteer, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company F, private.

Graham, James M., age 16, volunteer, October 20, 1861, three years, Fifty-third regiment, company B, private, served three years and ten months, mustered out August 12, 1865.

Graham, Finley B., age 17, volunteer, January 18, 1865, One Hundred and Ninety-third regiment, company E, private, served seven months, mustered out August 6, 1865.

Graham, Finley P., age 19, volunteer, August 18, 1862, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, mustered out July 27, 1865, captured at Winchester, July 24, 1864, and in prison seven months, and then paroled.

Grosvenor, Samuel L., age 35, volunteer, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company B, private, attained to rank of first lieutenant, mustered out February 17, 1865.

Grosvenor, David, age 22, volunteer, August, 1862, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, served one year and four months, died December 29, 1863, wounded at Mission Ridge, died from effects of wound.

Grosvenor, Ebenezer, age 34, Eighteenth regiment, company H.

Hacker, William, age 27, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F.

Haines, Josiah E., age 22, volunteer, November 8, 1864, Seventy-third regiment, company F, private, served eight months, mustered out July 20, 1865.

Haines, Charles L., age 20, volunteer, February 8, 1864, Seventy-third regiment, company F, private, died in March, 1864, of measles, at Chattanooga.

Haines, Nathaniel A., age 18, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company D, private, died May 21, 1864, drowned, seized with cramp while bathing.

Hampton, Amos, age 22, volunteer, August, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company A, sergeant, died in 1863, from wound received at Chattanooga.

Hampton, Thomas, age 31, volunteer, February, 1864, Sixty-third regiment, company I, private, honorably discharged in 1865, captured at Winchester, July 24, 1864, and in Libby prison five months.

Hartman, John, age 19, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B.

Heald, William S., age 53, volunteer, December 11, 1861, three years, Seventy-third regiment, company F, private, served one year and five months, honorably discharged May, 1863, detailed as hospital nurse, discharged for disability.

Heald, Caleb M., age 27, volunteer, December 11, 1861, three years, Seventy-third regiment, company F, private, attained the rank of sergeant, served three years and seven months, mustered out July 11, 1865, transferred to Twelfth Ohio battery and re-enlisted as a veteran.

Heald, Nathan, age 17, volunteer, November 11, 1861, three years, Seventy-third regiment, company F, private, died July 4, 1863, wounded in the battle of Gettysburg, July 2.

Heald, Edmund, age 15, volunteer, December 11, 1861, three years, Seventy-third regiment, company F, private, attained the rank of corporal, served three years and seven months, mustered out July 20, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Hecker, William, age 28, volunteer, March 30, 1864, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, served one year and three months, honorably discharged in June, 1865, captured at Winchester, July 24, 1864, in prison seven months and in hospital seventeen weeks.

Hill, Spencer K., age 18, volunteer, August 22, 1861, three years, Thirtieth regiment, company K, private, attained the rank of corporal, in eighteen battles, served four years, mustered out August 13, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Hill, George E., age 23, Thirty-ninth regiment, company C.

Hill, I. S., age 26, Seventy-fifth regiment, company G.

Hobson, Thomas C., age 19, volunteer, August 15, 1862, Ninety-second regiment, company G, private, died February 22, 1863, while aiding Lieutenant Merrill, was captured, paroled for nine days, but stayed to assist the wounded, and died in Danville prison.

Hobson, Samuel M., age 32, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company D, orderly sergeant, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Howland, E. M., age 25, July, 1863, Twenty-fourth regiment, assistant surgeon, served three years, mustered out June 24, 1864, captured and in Libby prison three months, and exchanged.

Jones, Allen, age 28, Fifteenth regiment, company F.

Johnson, Jonathan, age 25, 1864, Seventy-seventh regiment, company F.

Julier, D. Alanzo, age 20, volunteer, fall of 1861, three years, Eighteenth regiment, company F, private, died March 29, 1862, at Nashville, Tennessee, of typhoid fever.

Kass, James, Seventy-third regiment, company F.
Kester, Aaron M., age 25, volunteer, September 4, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, died December 7, 1863, at home on sick furlough.

Kinkhead, Benton, age 16, volunteer, October 26, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private, served three years and two months, honorably discharged December 11, 1864, wounded and captured April 25, 1864, in the battle of Mark's Mills, exchanged after two months' imprisonment.

Kinkhead, Julius, age 36, volunteer, December 12, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private, served three years, mustered out December 11, 1864.

Lambert, Elwood, age 36, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company D, private, served four months, mustered out September 14, 1864.

Lee, Edwin, age 28, volunteer, June 18, 1861, three years, Thirty-ninth regiment, company K, private, served four years, mustered out July 9, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Lee, Samuel, age 35, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company D, corporal, served four months, mustered out September 14, 1864.

Lee, Wesley, age 26, volunteer, February, 1864, Fifty-third regiment, company B, private, mustered out August 11, 1865.

Lindy, H. H. I., age 19, volunteer, six months, Eighty-seventh regiment, company D, private.

Louthan, James, age 23, volunteer, November 11, 1861, three years, Seventy-third regiment, company F, private, mustered out July 20, 1865, home one year for disability on irregular discharge, ordered to report and remained with the regiment.

Louthan, John, age 27, volunteer, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F.

Lytle, Samuel, age 44, volunteer, September 16, 1861, three years, Eighteenth regiment, company F, private, served seven months, honorably discharged April 15, 1862.

Magers, William, age 17, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company D, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Mains, Abiram, age 31, volunteer, March 31, 1864, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, served one year and three months, honorably discharged June 9, 1865, wounded October 19, 1864, at Cedar Creek, Virginia, and in hospital all winter.

Mains, Elijah, age 25, volunteer, February, 1862, three years, Second Virginia cavalry, company F, private, served three years and four months, mustered out June 30, 1865.

Mains, Simon H., age 20, volunteer, September 24, 1861, three years, Second Virginia cavalry, company F, private, served three years and nine months, mustered out June 30, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Mains, Richard G., age 17, volunteer, September 25, 1861, three years, Seventeenth regiment, company H, private, honorably discharged in the winter of 1864, wounded and captured September 20, 1862, and in various prisons for fifteen months.

Marshall, Jesse B., age 29, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company B, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Marshner, Samuel F., age 21, Eighteenth regiment, company F.

Marshner, Daniel P., age 20, Eighteenth regiment, company F.

Martin, Nathan, age 24, volunteer, January 6, 1862, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private.

Martin, Benjamin, age 21, volunteer, December 3, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private, died May 2, 1862, from the effects of wounds received at Shiloh, March 6, 1862.

McKain, John B., Thirtieth regiment, company K.
McKain, Franklin, One Hundred and Ninety-third regiment, company E.

Miller, Nathan, age 19, volunteer, February 16, 1864, Thirty-sixth regiment, company K, private, served one year and five months, mustered out July 27, 1865.

Miller, Thomas, age 18, Seventy-seventh regiment, company B.

Miller, Peter, age 19, volunteer, August 15, 1862, Ninety-second regiment, company G, private, served three years, mustered out June 10, 1865, wounded at Chickamauga, detailed for team service.

Miller, Oliver, age 18, volunteer, February 18, 1864, Seventy-third regiment, company F, private, served one year and four months, mustered out June, 1865, severely wounded at Atlanta, afterwards detailed as hospital nurse.

Mills, Christopher, age 18, volunteer, February, 1864, Sixtieth regiment, company E, private, honorably discharged August, 1865, off duty a good deal by sickness.

Mills, Thomas W., age 15, volunteer, October 26, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company D, private, served four years and five months, mustered out March, 1866, captured at Mark's mills, April 25, 1864, and in Tyler prison for ten months, sick with fever two months.

Monroe, Abner S., age 17, volunteer, October 20, 1861, three years, Fifty-third regiment, company B, private, served four years, mustered out August 11, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Morlan, Samuel, age 20, volunteer, August 15, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company G, second sergeant, attained the rank of orderly sergeant, died May 4, 1863, at Carthage, Tennessee.

Morlan, Barzillei, age 36, Third Virginia, company B.

Moshier, Daniel, age 18, volunteer, October 8, 1861, three years, Eighteenth regiment, company F, private, served three years, transferred to the invalid corps, honorably discharged September 26, 1864, for disability.

Moshier, Samuel T., age 20, volunteer, October 8, 1861, three years, Eighteenth regiment, company F, private, served three years, mustered out October 1864, in hospital a good deal.

Morris, Nathan, age 18, volunteer, December 25, 1861, three years, Seventy-third regiment, company F, private, served six months, killed at the battle of Cross Keys, June 8, 1862.

Morris, Elwood, age 21, volunteer, December 25, 1861, three years, Seventy-third regiment, company F, private, mostly on detached service and transferred to First veteran reserve corps.

Morris, Mordecai, age 20, volunteer, January 16, 1865, One Hundred and Ninety-third regiment, company E, private, served six months, mustered out August 4, 1865.

Morris, Silas S., age 19, volunteer, January 16, 1865, One Hundred and Ninety-third regiment, company E, private, served six months, mustered out August 4, 1865.

Morrow, James, Sixty-third regiment, company G, died.

Morris, William, age 28, Third colored regiment, company C, private, died June 15, 1865, at Goldsborough, North Carolina, of chronic diarrhea.

Painter, John, age 23, Twenty-fifth regiment, company H.

Painter, William, age 19, Thirty-sixth regiment, company H.

Palmer, J. Amos, fifth regiment, company G.

Penrose, Albert, age 20, volunteer, August 1, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, missing, probably killed at Winchester, July 24, 1864.

Penrose, William, age 17, volunteer, February 22, 1865, one year, One Hundred and Eighty-ninth regiment, company F, private, mustered out September 26, 1865.

Pewithers, Charles J., age 32, volunteer, November 19, 1861, three years, Second Virginia cavalry, company F, corporal, died June 22, 1864, by explosion of ammunition wagon.

Pickering, Elwood E., age 16, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company E, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864, re-enlistment, February 20, 1865, Fifty-third regiment, company B, private, mustered out August 11, 1865.

Pickering, Jasper C., age 18, volunteer, February 13, 1864, Fifty-third regiment, company B, mustered out August 11, 1865, wounded May 14, 1864, at Re-saca.

Pickering, B. C., Seventy-third regiment.

Price, Jacob L., age 30, volunteer, February 5, 1864, three years, One Hundred and Twenty-second regiment, company C, private, served eight months, died October 19, 1864, mortally wounded September 19, 1864.

Rardin, Andrew, age 32, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company D, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Rardin, Eli, age 33, volunteer, February, 1864, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, mustered out July 27, 1865, wounded July, 1864.

Rardin, Leroy L., volunteer, three years. First light artillery, company K, private, cannoneer, died May, 1862, of fever, in Franklin hospital.

Rardin, Levi H., volunteer, three years. First light artillery, company K, cannoneer, in fourteen battles, mustered out February, 1865.

Rardin, John C., age 17, volunteer, February, 1865, One Hundred and Eighty-eighth regiment, company E, private, mustered out September 21, 1865.

Rardin, Jacob C., age 26, volunteer, September, 1861, three years, Second Virginia cavalry, company F, private, honorably discharged March, 1863, for disability.

Rardin, William H. H., age 22, volunteer, September, 1861, three years, Second Virginia cavalry, company F, private, mustered out June 30, 1865, wounded at Guyandotte.

Randolph, Isaiah N., age 27, volunteer, August 13, 1862, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, mustered out July 27, 1865, wounded in battles of Winchester and Perryville.

Reed, John W., age 17, volunteer, July 4, 1863, three years, First heavy artillery, company I, private, served two years, mustered out July 25, 1865.

Read, Stephen W., age 18, volunteer, September, 1861, First cavalry, company L, died of typhoid fever at Louisville, January, 1862.

Rester, Aaron, age 27, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F.

Rowland, John, age 17, volunteer, November, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company F, private, mustered out March 8, 1866, wounded at Shiloh, captured in the Red River expedition, held ten months.

Roman, Isaac, age 20, volunteer, October 8, 1861, three years, Sixty-third regiment, private, served one year, honorably discharged November, 1862, for disability, wounded at battle of Corinth, re-enlistment May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company D, sergeant, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Ross, James, age 26, volunteer, November 25, 1861, three years, Seventy-third regiment, company F, private, attained rank of first lieutenant, served one year and eight months, mustered out July 20, 1865, wounded at Resaca May, 1864.

Sharpe, Joel, age 19, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company D, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864, re-enlistment February 22, 1865, One Hundred and Eighty-ninth regiment, company F, private, served seven months, mustered out September 28, 1865.

Shaner, Emmor, age 24, volunteer, August 8, 1862, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, served three months, honorably discharged November 24, 1862, for disability.

Sheets, Henry C., age 32, volunteer, September 24, 1861, three years, Eighteenth regiment, company I, private, served three years, mustered out November 9, 1864.

Sheets, Harrison, age 22, volunteer, October 8, 1861, three years, Eighteenth regiment, company F, private, served two years and three months, killed January 2, 1863, at Stone River.

Sheets, John W., age 21, volunteer, One Hundred and Twenty-ninth regiment, company A, private, died January 14, 1864, at Cumberland Gap.

Simpson, William, Fifth regiment, company G.

Shinn, James H., age 19, volunteer, One Hundred and Twenty-second regiment, company C, private, died 1864, at the battle of the Wilderness.

Sherman, Jasper, Sixty-third regiment, company F.

Sivill, Samuel N., age 41, volunteer, August 13, 1862, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, honorably discharged February 2, 1863, for disability.

Sivill, Tobias, age 16, volunteer, October 14, 1861, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company G, private, served three years and ten months, mustered out July 8, 1865.

Sivill, Nathan, age 18, volunteer, September 22, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, died February 8, 1862, of measles and typhoid fever.

Slotterback, Joseph, age 18, volunteer, March 2, 1864, Seventy-seventh regiment, company F, private, captured at Mark's Mills April 25, 1864, and died in Tyler prison June 29, 1864, of typhoid fever.

Slotterback, Henry, age 24, volunteer, February 23, 1864, Seventy-seventh regiment, company F, private, died July 6, 1864, of typhoid fever.

Smith, Thomas, age 34, volunteer, October, 1862, three years, Ninth cavalry, company B, corporal.

Smith, Josiah, age 18, volunteer, October 10, 1861, Second Virginia cavalry company H, private, captured, and supposed to have died in prison.

Smith, Wilton, age 22, Thirty-ninth regiment, company C.

Spear, Henry L., age 23, volunteer, February 29, 1864, Seventy-seventh regiment, company C, private, served two years, mustered out March 8, 1866, captured and in Tyler prison for ten months.

Starman, Jonathan, Seventy-seventh regiment, company F.

Stoneman, John, age 23, volunteer, 1861, three years,

Seventy-seventh regiment, company F, private, killed at Pittsburg Landing, 1862.

Stoneman, Jasper, age 20, volunteer, 1861, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company G, sergeant, served seven months, died of typhoid fever at Nashville, June, 1862.

Tate, John, Fifth regiment, company G.

Taylor, David, age 55, volunteer, October 11, 1861, three years, Seventy-third regiment, company F, private, served four months, honorably discharged February 11, 1862, discharged for disability and died at home, April 11, 1862, of lung disease.

Taylor, William W., age 31, volunteer, August 18, 1861, three years, Eighteenth regiment, company C, private, served four months, mustered out October 9, 1865, re-enlisted as a veteran, captured September, 1863, in Libby, Danville, Andersonville and Florence prisons.

Taylor, Brintal, age 27, volunteer, three years, August 18, 1861, Eighteenth regiment, company C, private, honorably discharged February, 1865.

Taylor, Finley W., age 18, volunteer, August 18, 1861, three years, Eighteenth regiment, company C, private, served three years, mustered out November, 1864.

Taylor, John Wesley, age 15, volunteer, August 18, 1861, three years, Eighteenth regiment, company C, private, served three years, mustered out November 10, 1864, captured at battle of Stone River, held six weeks and paroled.

Taylor, Wilson P., age 14, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company D, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864, re-enlistment, February 15, 1865, six months, One Hundred and Eighty-ninth regiment, company F, private, served seven months, mustered out September 25, 1865.

Underwood, William H., age 22, volunteer, September 22, 1861, three years, Nineteenth regiment, company D, private, attained rank of orderly sergeant, served four years, mustered out October 21, 1865.

Vanfleet, John, age 23, volunteer, October, 1861, three years, Seventy-seventh regiment, company F, private, missing, re-enlisted as a veteran.

Way, Milton, age 18, volunteer, January 20, 1862, three years, Twentieth regiment, company I, private, served three years and five months, mustered out July 15, 1865.

Way, Samuel, age 24, volunteer, August, 1862, three years, Ninety-second regiment, company A, private, served seven months, died March 20, 1863, at Carthage.

Way, William, Twenty-eighth regiment, company I.

Wilson, Washington, age 24, volunteer, November 5, 1861, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company G, private, served nine months, honorably discharged August 27, 1862, for disability.

Wilson, James M., age 20, volunteer, November 3, 1861, three years, Sixty-third regiment, company G, corporal, died September, 1864, of camp disease at Atlanta, Georgia.

Wilson, Nathan, age 34, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company D, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Wilson James C., age 37, August 8, 1862, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company I, private, served two months, honorably discharged October 30, 1862, for disability, wounded at Antietam.

Wilson, Finley V., age 21, volunteer, August 1, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, mustered out October 6, 1864, wounded at South Mountain, Mission Ridge and Winchester.

Wilson, Jacob B., age 19, volunteer, September, 1861, Seventeenth regiment, company H, private, died 1863, supposed to have been killed at Chickamauga.

Wilson, Andrew F., age 20, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company D, corporal, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Wilson, Jacob P., age 21, volunteer, August, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, served three years, mustered out August 1, 1864.

Wilson, Harmon T., age 20, volunteer, August 8, 1862, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, killed September, 1864, at Berryville.

Wilson, Abram P., age 27, volunteer, September, 1861, three years, Thirty-sixth regiment, company F, private, served three years, mustered out August, 1864.

Wilson, William F., age 34, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company D, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Witham, Nathan R., age 30, volunteer, May, 1864, one hundred days, One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, company D, private, served four months, mustered out September, 1864.

Witham, Wesley K., age 20, volunteer, February 15, 1865, six months, One Hundred and Eighty-ninth regiment, company F, private, served seven months, mustered out September 28, 1865.

Wood, Matthews, age 31, volunteer, October 6, 1862, three years, Ninth cavalry, company C, private, attained rank of corporal, honorably discharged June 13, 1865, for disability.

Yocum, John, age 18, Ninety-second regiment, company G.

RECAPITULATION.

De Beck's battery .....	2
First Ohio heavy artillery.....	1
Second Virginia cavalry .....	9
Ninth Ohio cavalry .....	2
One each in First Ohio cavalry and Second Ohio cavalry .....	2
Fourth Virginia cavalry.....	3
One Hundred and Twenty-second Ohio .....	4
Thirty-sixth Ohio .....	29
One Hundred and forty-eighth Ohio .....	23
Seventy-seventh Ohio .....	20
Seventy-third Ohio .....	17
Thirteen each in Sixty-third Ohio and Eighteenth Ohio (three years) .....	26
Ninety-second Ohio .....	9
Five each in the Fifth Ohio and Fifty-third Ohio ..	10
Four each in Thirty-ninth Ohio, One Hundred and Eighty-ninth Ohio, One Hundred and Ninety-third Ohio .....	12

Two each in Seventeenth Ohio, Thirtieth Ohio, Seventy-fifth Ohio, Nineteenth Ohio .....	8
One each in Third Ohio, Fifteenth Ohio, Twenty-fourth Ohio, Twenty-fifth Ohio, Sixtieth Ohio, Twentieth Ohio, Twenty-eighth Ohio, Eighty-seventh Ohio, One Hundred and Twenty-ninth Ohio, One Hundred and Eighty-eighth Ohio, Third Virginia infantry .....	11

Total number of soldiers .....	180
Died .....	33

RECAPITULATION OF SOLDIERS OF WASHINGTON COUNTY.

ARTILLERY

First Virginia light artillery (Buell's battery)....	109
First Ohio (DeBeck's battery) .....	56
First Ohio (Huntington's battery).....	55
First Ohio light artillery (scattering).....	10
Second Ohio heavy artillery (battery K).....	25
Second Ohio heavy artillery (scattering) .....	10
One each in the Eleventh and Eighteenth Ohio independent batteries, First United States artillery, First New York artillery, Second Arkansas light artillery, First Iowa light artillery, and Fourteenth United States colored heavy artillery .....	7

CAVALRY (VOLUNTEERS)

First Ohio cavalry .....	163
Second Ohio cavalry .....	5
Fourth Virginia cavalry .....	12
Fifth Ohio cavalry .....	3
Seventh Ohio cavalry .....	105
Ninth Ohio cavalry .....	61
Thirteenth Ohio cavalry .....	11
First Virginia cavalry .....	7
Second Virginia cavalry .....	91
Third Virginia cavalry .....	4
Fourth Virginia cavalry .....	68
Fourth Ohio independent battalion .....	16
One each in the Sixth and Twelfth Ohio, Fifth, Seventh and Ninth Virginia, Fifth and Sixth Kentucky, Third Iowa, Second Louisiana, Third United States, Seventh Missouri .....	11

INFANTRY (VOLUNTEERS)

First Ohio .....	2
Second Ohio .....	4
Third Ohio .....	8
Fifth Ohio .....	10
Tenth Ohio .....	3
Eleventh Ohio .....	2
Twelfth Ohio .....	10
Thirteenth Ohio .....	2
Fourteenth Ohio .....	2
Fifteenth Ohio .....	5
Sixteenth Ohio .....	2
Seventeenth Ohio .....	7
Eighteenth Ohio (three years) .....	104

Eighteenth Ohio (three months) .....	61	Second Virginia .....	3
Nineteenth Ohio .....	5	Fourth Virginia .....	4
Twentieth Ohio .....	6	Sixth Virginia .....	7
Twenty-second Ohio .....	3	Seventh Virginia .....	7
Twenty-third Ohio .....	6	Ninth Virginia .....	4
Twenty-fourth Ohio .....	3	Eleventh Virginia .....	17
Twenty-fifth Ohio .....	26	Fourteenth Virginia .....	2
Twenty-sixth Ohio .....	3	Fifteenth Massachusetts .....	2
Twenty-seventh Ohio .....	13	Eighteenth United States regulars .....	3
Twenty-eighth Ohio .....	3	Fifth United States colored regiment .....	11
Thirtieth Ohio .....	4	Twenty-seventh United States colored regiment .....	5
Thirty-second Ohio .....	5	One each in the Fourth, Sixth, Seventh, Twenty-
Thirty-third Ohio .....	6	ninth, Thirty-first, Thirty-seventh, Forty-fifth,
Thirty-sixth Ohio .....	553	Forty-ninth, Fifty-second, Fifty-ninth, Sixty-
Thirty-eighth Ohio .....	2	first, Seventy-second, Seventy-sixth, Eighty-
Thirty-ninth Ohio .....	242	first, Eighty-ninth, Ninety-first, Ninety-se-
Forty-second Ohio .....	3	venth, One Hundred and Fourth, One Hundred
Forty-third Ohio .....	12	and Seventeenth, One Hundred and Twenty-
Forty-seventh Ohio .....	2	eight, One Hundred and Thirty-second, One
Fifty-first Ohio .....	25	Hundred and Thirty-fifth, One Hundred and Fifty-third Ohio .....	16	Fifty-fifth, One Hundred and Seventy-seventh
Fifty-eighth Ohio .....	4	Ohio, One Hundred and Seventy-eighth, One
Sixtieth Ohio .....	2	Hundred and Eighty-third, One Hundred and Sixty-second Ohio .....	13	Eighty-fifth, One Hundred and Eighty-eighth,
Sixty-third Ohio .....	181	and One Hundred and Ninety-seventh Ohio,
Sixty-fourth Ohio .....	2	Third and Twelfth Virginia, Twentieth, Twen-
Sixty-fifth Ohio .....	4	ty-first, Twenty-seventh, Fortieth, Forty-first,
Sixty-sixth Ohio .....	5	and Forty-ninth Illinois, Twelfth, Thirtieth,
Sixty-seventh Ohio .....	4	Twenty-eighth, Sixty-second, One Hundredth,
Seventieth Ohio .....	3	One Hundred and First and One Hundred
Seventy-first Ohio .....	11	and Thirty-ninth Pennsylvania, Eighteenth,
Seventy-third Ohio .....	101	Twenty-first, and Twenty-third Kentucky,
Seventy-fifth Ohio .....	22	First, Thirty-sixth, Eleventh, and Forty-se-
Seventy-seventh Ohio .....	503	venth Iowa, Forty-second and Eighty-seventh
Seventy-eighth Ohio .....	10	Indiana, First Michigan, Fifteenth Tennessee,
Eighty-fifth Ohio .....	14	Nineteenth Massachusetts, Fourteenth United
Eighty-sixth Ohio .....	2	States, One Hundred and Ninth, Fourth, One
Eighty-seventh Ohio .....	50	Hundred and First, One Hundredth, and
Eighty-eighth Ohio .....	7	Twentieth United States colored, Tenth Cali-
Ninety-second Ohio .....	329	fornia .....	3
One Hundred and Fourteenth Ohio .....	2	United States Army .....	10
One Hundred and Sixteenth Ohio .....	50	Carried over .....	10
One Hundred and Twenty-second Ohio .....	12	Number with service not designated .....	8r
One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Ohio .....	13
One Hundred and Twenty-sixth Ohio .....	2	Total number soldiers and marines from
One Hundred and Twenty-ninth Ohio .....	25	Washington county .....	4,052
One Hundred and Forty-first Ohio .....	4
One Hundred and Forty-eighth Ohio .....	111
One Hundred and Seventy-fourth Ohio .....	14	THE SOLDIERS' MONUMENT.
One Hundred and Seventy-fifth Ohio .....	38
One Hundred and Seventy-sixth Ohio .....	8	The losses of the war fell heavily upon
One Hundred and Seventy-ninth Ohio .....	35	Washington County, and the number who lost
One Hundred and Eighty-first Ohio .....	12	their lives in the service seems large when com-
One Hundred and Eighty-second Ohio .....	21	pared with the total number who went out, and
One Hundred and Eighty-fourth Ohio .....	4	one of the first acts of the public-spirited citi-
One Hundred and Eighty-sixth Ohio .....	14	zens of the county after the war was over was
One Hundred and Eighty-seventh Ohio .....	14	to secure the erection of a suitable monument
One Hundred and Eighty-ninth Ohio .....	9	to commemorate the great sacrifice of life in
One Hundred and Ninety-first Ohio .....	2	the glorious cause of the Union. Accord-
One Hundred and Ninety-third Ohio .....	6	ingly, as early as June 7, 1865, a meeting was
One Hundred and Ninety-fourth Ohio .....	10	held in the interests of the enterprise.
One Hundred and Ninety-fifth Ohio .....	4
One Hundred and Ninety-sixth Ohio .....	15
First Virginia .....	2

On Wednesday forenoon, June 7, immediately after the adjournment of the session of the County Commissioners, the gentlemen constituting the board, to-wit: J. J. Hollister, W. Thomas, and Anthony Sheets, together with several other citizens, held a meeting at the office of the county auditor, to consider the propriety and feasibility of erecting a monument to the memory of the soldiers from Washington County, who had fallen in this war against the Rebellion. A. R. Darrow was appointed chairman, R. M. Stimson, secretary. J. J. Hollister made some feeling remarks as to the exceeding propriety of the noble object, and gave some facts and figures from the tax duplicate touching the increased wealth and prosperity of the county—showing that a tax of one mill on a dollar would raise $13,000.

Mr. Darrow, Captain McCormick, Hon. W. F. Curtis, Mr. Sheets, W. S. Ward, R. M. Stimson, Rufus E. Harte, and others, made brief remarks, and all agreed that the object ought and could be carried into effect, by taxation, or by subscriptions, or by both methods in conjunction—erecting a monument that should be an honor to the county, and to the noble dead whose names should be thereon engraved.

J. J. Hollister, A. R. Darrow, and Rufus E. Harte were appointed a committee to devise a plan for the erection of the monument, to report at a future meeting.

It was resolved to call a meeting of the citizens of Washington County, to be held at the Court House in Marietta, on Friday, July 14, 1865, at two o'clock, P. M., the day on which the county commissioners held an adjourned session, to organize for the erection of the monument.

The hope was expressed that public-spirited citizens from every township in the county would be present. A. R. Darrow was chairman of this meeting and R. M. Stimson, secretary. Accordingly, at the time and place named, the friends of the movement assembled and effected a temporary organization by electing F. A. Wheeler chairman, and Theodore G. Fields, secretary. Rufus E. Harte, chairman of the committee on permanent organization, then reported a scheme of organization, including a preamble and nine articles, which was unanimously adopted and signed by 41 citizens,* and the association adjourned to meet on the day named in the constitution for the regular annual meeting, the second Tuesday in August (8th), 1865, at two P. M.

One of the central ideas of the association was to construct a monument in such form that the names of the soldiers could be engraved on the monumental stone, an idea which was abandoned in the practical working out of the plan, as will be seen further on in this sketch.

The association was duly incorporated under the laws of Ohio, and on August 8, 1865, the following-named officers and trustees were elected: President, Rufus E. Harte, ex officio a trustee; clerk, Theodore G. Field; trustees for one year, John C. Paxton, J. W. Andrews and William F. Curtis; trustees for two years, Rufus R. Dawes, Enoch S. McIntosh and Henry H. Drown; trustees for three years, Samuel C. Skinner, T. W. Moore and A. W. McCormick.

The trustees began their work at once. They procured a handsomely lithographed certificate of membership graded at different prices, so that all, even the children, of a family could become members and thus help on the great undertaking. Agents were appointed in the different townships to solicit subscriptions, and to circulate the certificates of membership. On August 14, 1866, Gen. R. R. Dawes, president of the trustees, reported the following assets:

*The following were the persons present at the first meeting: J. J. Hollister, J. W. Andrews, E. Corey, W. P. Skinner, L. W. Chamberlain, S. C. Skinner, R. M. Stimson, David Alban, J. C. Paxton, William B. Loomis, R. R. Dawes, T. G. Field, R. K. Shaw, S. B. Robinson, C. F. Buell, J. S. Sprague, S. S. Knowles, Eli Johnson, C. R. Rhodes, A. W. McCormick, William F. Curtis, R. E. Harte, T. W. Moore, A. R. Darrow, I. N. Carman, B. F. Hart, H. H. Drown, J. D. Cotton, F. A. Wheeler, W. B. Hollister, Owen Franks, Z. G. Bundy, John Jones, A. T. Nye, Thomas Henton, L. S. Protsman, S. Maxwell, D. P. Bosworth, W. S. Ward, B. F. Pixley, S. Newton.

Fees of membership .....	$1,426 00
Donation Soldiers' Aid Society, Marietta ....	200 00
Ladies' League No. 420 Bonn .....	17 20
Other sources .....	16 00
Total .....	$1,659 20

General Dawes pushed the sales of certificates of membership so that by August 13, 1867, he was enabled to turn over to Hon. W. F. Curtis, treasurer of the trustees, $2,735.09. Up to that date the finances of the association were mainly under the direction of Gen. R. R. Dawes. On August 19, 1868, Mr. Curtis reported $2,890.03. We find no further signs of the treasurer for five years.

When, on August 12, 1873, Mr. Curtis reported the fund at $3,861.13, and in connection therewith he said: "The premium on the fifty-two bond and the interest due on the Salem bond will increase the above amount to something over four thousand dollars." General Dawes moved the thanks of the association be tendered Mr. Curtis for his efficient efforts in increasing the funds in something over one thousand and two hundred dollars, which motion was carried unanimously. The trustees now felt justified in receiving bids for the construction of the monument, and the following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, That a committee of three trustees be appointed to correspond with such persons as they may select, and receive proposals for a monument, and report at the next annual meeting of the association, the designs to be reported with the bids, and fully exemplified, provided that the cost of the monument shall not exceed six thousand dollars.

R. E. HARTE,
R. R. DAWES,
R. L. NYE,
Committee.

At the next annual meeting the committee reported having received a limited number of bids which upon examination proved unsatisfactory. The committee were then directed to procure other bids, and "that the designs should be for a shaft surmounted by a figure of a soldier in uniform, the material granite and the cost not to exceed five thousand dollars," and to report by September 20th the same year (1874), at which date it was voted to contract with T. O'Hare, of Cincinnati, Ohio, for a monument at the sum of $4,550, which they did, the work to be delivered in six months. The contract was afterward modified so that the material should be Quincy granite instead of "light granite," at an additional cost of $150, making the total $4,700. The site for the monument was chosen after due consideration of all other points, it being a point on the common 50 feet from Front street and the same distance from the line of Putnam street, in the city of Marietta.*

The monument was completed in due time and was highly spoken of as a work of art. The art critic of a leading Cincinnati journal spoke in high terms of the work of Thomas O'Hare, more especially of the statue, intended for the top. He said:

The sculptor has wisely refrained from an attempt to create in marble any ideal type of soldiery manhood; he has only striven to represent the young farmer-soldier, sun-browned and vigorous from healthy labor in the field, imbued with the natural heroism inherited by the descendants of a race of hunters, and sternly calm in the firm consciousness of duty. The young soldier figure is altogether characterized less by grace than by strength—not the trained strength of a well muscled athlete, but with ponderous physical force of a western laborer, with tendons hardened by field work, and such a frame work of bone as only those who live upon a phosphatic country diet possess.

We have no fancy warrior in this memorial statue, but only the image of a fair-haired country youth of rugged face and form, like hundreds who left their homes to die for the Union. Men and women, husbands and mothers, brothers and sisters of the soldier-dead of Ohio will recognize in the pathetic truthfulness of the marble feature some memory of loved ones lost. And this is what the public demand in such works, and what even the most unpatriotic mind may admire.

It is rather a pity that the statue itself, which is but six feet high, is to stand upon a pedestal 26 feet in height. At such an altitude the finer beauties of the statue cannot be advantageously seen. Considering the size of the pedestal, the statue should have been colossal.

INSCRIPTIONS.

The pedestal will, however, be very handsome—a quadrilateral shaft of Quincy granite, with belts of the same material bearing in raised letters the names:

*The other sites voted on were Camp Tupper (Quadranaou), Capitolium Square, and a point on the common near the Congregational Church.

Gettysburg, Missionary Ridge, Shiloh, Corinth, Antietam.

Above the first belt will be the figure of an eagle with outspread wings, perching on a shield in Carrara marble—the same material used in the statue.

On the east side of the die is a polished tablet, with this inscription:

Erected in memory of the soldiers of Washington County, Ohio, who lost their lives in the United States service in the war for the suppression of the Rebellion of 1861.

Washington County was represented in the following and many other organizations: Thirty-sixth, Thirty-ninth, Sixty-third, Seventy-third, Eighty-seventh, Ninety-second, and One Hundred and Forty-eighth Ohio Infantry, First, Seventh, and Ninth Ohio and Second West Virginia Cavalry, and First Ohio and First West Virginia Light Artillery.

Names of the fallen may be seen at the recorder's office.

The base of the monument was completed May 31, 1875. In an excavation in the center stone was placed a tin box hermetically sealed, in which were placed lists of county and city officers, etc.*

The monument having been completed, preparations were made without delay for the dedication. On May 14, 1875, the trustees had appointed R. E. Harte, R. R. Dawes, and the secretary, R. L. Nye, a committee on dedication, with instructions that the secretary correspond with General Rutherford B. Hayes, inviting him to deliver the dedicatory oration, but owing to other engagements he declined.

General W. T. Sherman, General John Pope, General George Crook, General Edward F. Noyes, and other distinguished military men were invited to be present. General T. C. H. Smith, of Marietta, was finally chosen to deliver the oration, and September 17, 1875, fixed as the day for the ceremonies.

On the appointed day, at 10 A. M., a large concourse of people from different parts of the county, estimated at three thousand, assembled to witness the dedication. On the speakers' stand, near the monument, was General John Pope, of the regular army, General Manning F. Force, of Cincinnati, and others. General Smith's oration was an eloquent tribute to the noble dead of the county, of which we are able to give only the closing paragraphs:

We should have done injustice to the manhood of these dead if we had neglected to recall this day their deeds as soldiers. We shall do more than justice—we shall desecrate their memory as citizens who gave their lives for the common weal—if we fail on this occasion to appreciate the animating spirit on our side, as distinguished from the passions and purposes which actuated and inflamed those on that side against which we strove, and over which, under God, we prevailed.

Do not think I talk party politics. The men who fought this war for us, to whatever party they may now belong, are above criticism as to their motives in public affairs, and their opinions are entitled to respect. I speak only of that on which, then, we all agreed, and ask that by the memory of these dead we may never give it up. Let us, to whatever party we belong, never give up the sentiment and the duty that united us in the war. The Rebellion was a crime against free government. If that conviction is given up by those who held it, the days of our Government are numbered. And so long as any considerable portion of our people refuse to accept that conviction, so long is our Government in danger.

Let us remember, then, we who were on the stage of action in the great contest, and you our inheritors remember, for what these dead fought—for what they died. And to all, and to future generations, let the appeal rise from the graves of those to whom we now dedicate this monument: "We, to tell of whom this stone was raised, ask of those who come after us that they see to it that we did not die in vain."

In the evening, at the City Hall, a reunion

*The following is a list of the articles in the box: Holy Bible, presented by the Washington County Bible Society; Constitution of the United States, with manual of same, by I. W. Andrews, presented by J. M. Fuller; Constitution of Ohio, with volume of Ohio laws, 1873; brief history of Washington County Soldiers' Monument Association, and a list of its officers from organization to date; constitution or articles of association of the Washington County Soldiers' Monument Association; roll of the officers of Washington County; roll of officers of the city of Marietta; copies of the Marietta Register, Times, College Ohio, and Zeitung; revised ordinances of the city of Marietta, presented by S. J. Hathaway; directory of the churches of Marietta and Harmar; Masonic calendar of American Union lodge and chapter and Harmar lodge. The constitution and by-laws and list of officers of the following benevolent societies: Elk Eye encampment and Marietta and Guttenburg lodge of Odd Fellows, Manhattan and Muskingum tribes of Red Men, Reynold lodge Knights of Pythias, Marietta and Harmar lodges of Good Templars; also a roll of Pierpont Battery; a copy of the Boston Post, one hundred years old; a premium list and list of officers of the Washington County Agricultural and Mechanical Association, and various other articles presented by citizens.

of veterans was held, President Israel W. Andrews, of Marietta College, delivering the address of welcome. He referred in complimentary terms to the distinguished guests present; he welcomed the soldiers from far and near who were gathered together on the occasion to renew their acquaintance and friendship; he paid a tribute to the heroic dead whose memories it was sought to perpetuate by the monument dedicated, though a feeble expression of the gratitude of our people; he referred to the distinguished general of the army and the distinguished jurist, who had laid aside his duties as a private citizen to join the army when our country was in danger. His remarks were received with hearty applause.

Gen. John Pope spoke in a feeling manner of the "ties of friendship between comrades who fought side by side on so many bloody fields." He referred to the subject then so much discussed of conciliating the South. In closing he said:

Let us remember the solemn legacy these dead men have bequeathed us, consecrated by their lives to maintain among our ourselves, and to transmit to their and our descendants the results they laid down their lives to achieve.

Judge Force said:

But why are these dead so honored? Why is tribute given to them that is not given to wealth, or to power, or to learning? Is it because they were brave? Because they were patient? Because they were victorious? Because they were slain? No; it is none of these. It is because they died for us; because they gave themselves a cheerful sacrifice that our country might remain one, our free institutions stand perpetual. It is because of the work they did, but still more for the spirit in which they did it.

The monument erected to-day is a tribute of the people to public virtue. Let it stand as long as this nation shall last. It will be honored so long as our institutions shall be upheld by a worthy people. Let it stand in our park, facing the setting sun, no mere ornament, but a lesson and a stimulus. As years roll by and generation succeeds generation, let old and young find in its sculptured face both history and admonition. As the sunlight plays about the inscription like the wind breathing upon Aeolian strings, the letters will seem vocal, and chant in earnest tones: "The dead died to save their country, let the living so live as to keep it worthy."

After Judge Force had spoken, Hon. Oliver P. Morton, Senator of Indiana, being in the city, came upon the stage, and was called upon to speak. He thereupon referred, in eloquent terms, to the occasion and the commemorative object of the meeting, but confined his remarks to the National as against the States Rights idea.

Speeches were also made by General A. J. Warner and Rev. John Tenney, of Marietta; also by John Beach, a one-armed soldier.

The main object of the association was now accomplished,* but the roll of the dead, referred to on the monument as recorded at the recorder's office remained unprepared until the spring of 1880. S. J. Hathaway having been elected secretary of the association in 1878, prepared a bill to enable soldiers' monument associations to record names of fallen soldiers, war of 1861 to 1865 inclusive.

Hon. Henry Bohl, then representing Washington County in the State Legislature, procured the passage of the bill May 27, 1879, so that the assessors in the spring of 1880 were required to take an enumeration of all deceased soldiers who enlisted from this county. A blank was prepared giving the facts. The assessors did their work as well as it could be done after so many years had elapsed since the war. This was supplemented by facts and data, procured at much labor and trouble, from other sources, until a sufficient degree of fullness and accuracy was obtained to justify the record to be made.

*Through the efforts of one of Marietta's public-spirited citizens—M. P. Wells, Esq.—a neat iron fence was, in the spring of 1877, placed around the monument, part of the money to pay for which was donated by the Philomathean society, composed of young ladies of the Marietta high school. The same gentleman then followed up the work so well begun by moving for a donation of four cannon from the United States arsenal, at Washington, to place at the four corners of the monument. The Hon. A. J. Warner, our Representative in Congress from this district (thirteenth), procured the passage of a bill, approved June 8, 1880, donating to the association four twenty-pound Parrot guns. These were received in the summer of 1880, were let into four stone blocks and placed at the corners of the monument, as they now stand.

How sleep the brave, who sink to rest,
By all their country's wishes blest!
When spring, with dewy fingers cold,
Returns to deck their hallowed mould,
She there shall dress a sweeter sod
Than Fancy's feet have ever trod.

By fairy hands their knell is sung;
By forms unseen their dirge is sung;
There Honor comes, a pilgrim gray,
To bless the turf that wraps their clay;
And Freedom shall awhile repair
To dwell a weeping hermit there!

CHAPTER XXIX.

THE SPANISH-AMERICAN AND PHILIPPINE WARS.

SPANISH-AMERICAN WAR—PHILIPPINE WAR—GEN. HARRISON GRAY OTIS.

SPANISH-AMERICAN WAR.

The cause of the Spanish-American War was the long-continued cruelties and injustice of the Spanish rule in Cuba. The sympathies of the American people had been for many years aroused in behalf of the Cubans, but never found adequate expression until the last struggle for independence began. Negotiations were pending in 1897 to find if some peaceable way could not be found out of the terrible conditions which existed in the unhappy island. While these efforts were being made in behalf of peace and humanity the destruction of the U. S. cruiser "Maine," in Havana harbor, February 15, 1898, lit the spark of war throughout the country and started a warlike furor which nothing could withstand.

War was declared and the tremendous energies of seventy millions of people were put in action to free Cuba from Spanish rule. The momentous events of the year 1898 constitute such recent history that it is needless to recount them here. Spain was vanquished.

As in the war of the Rebellion, Washington County did her part well, so in the Spanish-American war and the Philippine war which was a heritage from the struggle for Cuban independence, Washington County did her full duty.

Two companies, namely, "D," and "E" of the Seventh Ohio infantry, were raised in this county. In addition to these a large number of men were recruited in this county for the United States hospital service and a number of men from this county enlisted in other organizations and served during the Cuban war and in the Philippines.

We give herewith the full company rolls of the two companies above named, furnished by Gen George R. Gyger, Adjutant General of Ohio. We made an effort to ascertain the names of the others and have obtained the names of a few of the soldiers who enlisted in other organizations, which are added hereto.

The following is a list of names of members of Company D, Seventh Reg., O. V. I., in the war with Spain, recruited at Lower Salem, Washington County, Ohio, for two years' service. This company was mustered into the United States service May 13, 1898, at Columbus, Ohio; mustered out November 6, 1898, at Columbus, Ohio.

The place of residence at the date of enlistment is given and in some cases the soldier was not a resident of the county.

From the head of the list down to and including Albert Wilson, the date of entering the service is given as April 25, 1898. The latter part of the list contains names of recruits who entered the company under the second call, the date of entering the service being given opposite each name.

Where the date of discharge is not specifically stated opposite the name, the soldier was mustered out with the company.

MUSTER-ROLL OF COMPANY D, 7TH REGIMENT OF INFANTRY, OHIO VOLUNTEERS.

Judson D. Hovey, Major, age 43, Lower Salem.
Fred C. Wooster, Captain, age 26, Elba.
James H. Rhodes, First Lieutenant, age 29, Lower Salem.
Otis A. True, Second Lieutenant, age 28, Lower Salem.
Edward S. Blake, First Sergeant, age 33, Lower Salem.
Lee Miraben, Quartermaster Sergeant, age 34, Marietta.
Allan M. Whetstone, Second Sergeant, age 28, Lower Salem.
Rees A. Alban, Third Sergeant, age 25, Elba.
George F. Zumbro, Fourth Sergeant, age 24, Lower Salem.
Joseph P. Hartshorn, Fifth Sergeant, age 27, Lower Salem.
Harry T. Watkins, First Corporal, age 24, Lower Salem.
Fred C. Boeshaar, Second Corporal, age 23, Lower Salem.
Clinton Hockenberry, Third Corporal, age 26, Lower Salem.
Theodore Folger, Fourth Corporal, age 23, Marietta.
Elum Hartshorn, Fifth Corporal, age 22, Lower Salem.
Arthur G. Hardy, Musician, age 21, Whipple.
Jacob Sunder, Artificer, age 36, Marietta.
Truman Wilson, Wagoner, age 25, Warner.
Abicht, James W., private, age 20, Whipple.
Amos, Elmer E., private, age 34, Reno.
Ball, Allan, private, age 23, Elba.
Broon, Henry, private, age 24, Lower Salem.
Biehl, Frank H., private, age 26, Lowell.
Best, Charles H., private, age 30, Marietta.
Baker, John, private, age 36, Marietta.
Barnes, George H., private, age 29, McArthur.
Craig, Ellsworth, private, age 21, Kilmer.
Chapman, Elmer S., private, age 24, Marietta.
Chapman, Albert E., private, age 22, Stanleyville.
Cline, George T., private, age 21, Rainbow.
Davis, Richard, private, age 28, Marietta.
Davidson, Elias E., private, age 42, Marietta.
Evans, James F., private, age 30, Masterton.
Foraker, Richard E., private, age 31, Marietta.
Geren, Walter F., private, age 23, Marietta.
Heydrick, Gilbert, private, age 24, discharged October 4, 1898, Marietta.
Hoffman, Edward, Musician, age 24, Heslop.
Hardy, Maurice L., private, age 22, Lower Salem.
Hart, Thomas W., private, age 33, transferred to U. S. Signal Corps July 8, 1898, Marietta.
Jacobs, William H., Corporal, age 28, Lower Salem.
Johnson, Irving J., private, age 29, Constitution.
Koon, Warren M., Corporal, age 23, Dalzell.
Kehl, Henry, private, age 24, Lower Salem.
Miracle, Wade, private, age 21, Elba.

Mattern, William G., private, age 21, Marietta.
Minor, Samuel, private, age 35, transferred to U. S. Signal Corps, July 8, 1898, Marietta.
Miller, John, private, age 23, Constitution.
Nott, Oscar, private, age 29, Marietta.
Pryor, Isaac M., private, age 27, Lower Salem.
Prewett, George M., private, age 35, Briggs.
Posey, Alexander, private, age 23, Marietta.
Richey, Lumley H., private, age 20, Warner.
Richey, Arthur, private, age 18, Warner.
Richey, Peter, private, age 25, discharged October 4, 1898, Marietta.
Rhodes, Charles, private, age 18, Lower Salem.
Schofield, Carl S., private, age 20, Rainbow.
Semon, Alfred H., private, age 24, Marietta.
Smith, Enoch F., private, age 18, Marietta.
Smith, Emory F., private, age 24, promoted to Corporal, Elba.
Stover, George W., private, age 25, Lowell.
Sarver, Earnest L., private, age 22, Reno.
Schockey, Chauncey P., private, age 24, McArthur.
Twiggs, Warner A., Corporal, age 29, Lower Salem.
Trein, Frank E., private, age 20, Marietta.
Wharff, Archie A., Corporal, age 22, Warner.
Whetstone, Frederick, private, age 18, Lower Salem.
Wilson, Clyde E., Corporal, age 24, Whipple.
Welking, Earnest, private, age 19, Lowell.
Weiss, Jacob T., private, age 36, discharged September 5, 1898, Coal Run.
Worstell, John C., private, age 23, died July 12, 1898, Beverly.
Wilson, Albert, private, age 26, transferred to Company H, June 8, 1898, Chillicothe.

Recruits enlisted and mustered into Company D, 7th Regiment, O. V. I.:

Stickrath, August J., private, age 25, June 8, 1898, promoted to Corporal, Lower Salem.
Abicht, Augustus, private, age 19, June 15, 1898, Whipple.
Anders, Christian, private, age 31, June 17, 1898, Marietta.
Addelspringer, James F., private, age 23, June 17, 1898, Harrietsville.
Augustein, George, private, age 27, June 17, 1898, Lowell.
Bowman, Frank W., private, age 23, June 17, 1898, Constitution.
Bond, Walter, private, age 23, June 17, 1898, Caldwell.
Breckenridge, Wallace, private, age 18, June 17, 1898, Elba.
Belford, Walter, private, age 21, June 17, 1898, Caldwell.
Cain, Durwand, private, age 19, June 17, 1898, Caldwell.
Dye, George, private, age 18, June 17, 1898, Dexter City.
Enocks, Warren, private, age 21, June 17, 1898, Lower Salem.
Huddleson, Charles H., private, age 22, June 17, 1898, Middle Creek.
Howell, Ivan S., private, age 18, June 17, 1898, Olga.
James, Homer M., private, age 23, June 17, 1898, Caldwell.

Keerps, George, private, age 34, June 17, 1898, discharged October 4, 1898, Marietta.

Lichtner, George N., private, age 31, June 17, 1898, Marietta.

Love, Edward O., private, age 24, June 17, 1898, Marietta.

Lent, Charles A., private, age 15, June 17, 1898, Harrietsville.

Oliver, Charles H., private, age 19, June 17, 1898, Gasville.

Slack, William H., private, age 21, June 17, 1898, Elba.

Smith, Walter G., private, age 21, June 17, 1898, Marietta.

Stackhouse, Doctor J., private, age 38, June 17, 1898, Lowell.

Travis, Hes., private, age 26, June 17, 1898, Elba.

Williams, Reese, private, age 25, June 17, 1898, Caldwell.

Briggs, Harry, private, age 22, June 18, 1898, Dexter City.

Lehnhard, Carl Jacob, private, age 21, June 18, 1898, Marietta.

Miller, Clifton E., private, age 21, June 18, 1898, Caldwell.

McCullough, David R., private, age 24, June 18, 1898, Marietta.

McClure, Frank G., private, age 19, June 18, 1898, Marietta.

Cooley, Herman L., private, age 31, June 22, 1898, Athens.

Gildea, Leonard, private, age 18, June 22, 1898, Ironton.

Gildea, Patrick L., private, age 40, June 22, 1898, Ironton.

Jackson, Albert, private, age 21, June 22, 1898, Ironton.

King, Richard, private, age 24, June 22, 1898, Ironton.

Manoway, William, private, age 25, June 22, 1898, discharged October 4, 1898, Ironton.

Neff, James, private, age 23, June 22, 1898, discharged October 4, 1898, Ironton.

Sanders, Walter, private, age 18, June 22, 1898, Ironton.

Knox, Delmar, private, age 21, July 21, 1898, Marietta.

Laurie, William, private, age 22, July 21, 1898, Marietta.

Jewell, Lewis J., private, age 35, June 30, 1898, entered the service as a member of Company L, transferred to Company D, Marietta.

Taylor, Horace S., private, age 25, April 25, 1898, entered the service as member of Company A, transferred to Company D, May 31, 1898, Marietta.

MUSTER-ROLL OF COMPANY E, 7TH REGIMENT OF INFANTRY, OHIO VOLUNTEERS.

William L. West, Captain, age 47, New Matamoras, mustered in May 13, 1898, mustered out November 6, 1898.

Louis S. Hanshunaker, First Lieutenant, age 28, New Matamoras, mustered in May 13, 1898, mustered out November 6, 1898.

Charles W. Hare, Second Lieutenant, age 23, New

Matamoras, mustered in May 13, 1898, mustered out November 6, 1898.

Frank Hare, First Sergeant, age 21, New Matamoras, mustered in May 13, 1898, mustered out November 6, 1898.

Frank Cunningham, Quartermaster Sergeant, age 25, New Matamoras, mustered in May 13, 1898, mustered out November 6, 1898.

William S. Miller, Sergeant, age 25, New Matamoras, mustered in May 6, 1898, mustered out November 6, 1898.

William J. Stewart, Sergeant, age 37, New Matamoras, mustered in May 13, 1898, mustered out November 6, 1898.

Frank W. Martin, Sergeant, age 22, New Matamoras, mustered in May 13, 1898, mustered out November 6, 1898.

Frank C. Nicholson, Sergeant, age 20, New Matamoras, mustered in May 13, 1898, mustered out November 6, 1898.

George W. Powell, Corporal, age 29, New Matamoras, mustered in May 13, 1898, mustered out November 6, 1898.

Samuel A. McCool, Corporal, age 23, New Matamoras, mustered in May 13, 1898, mustered out November 6, 1898.

Thomas B. Green, Corporal, age 28, New Matamoras, mustered in May 13, 1898, mustered out November 6, 1898.

Clarence S. Armstrong, Corporal, age 25, New Matamoras, mustered in May 13, 1898, mustered out November 6, 1898.

John Cunningham, Corporal, age 19, New Matamoras, mustered in May 13, 1898, mustered out November 6, 1898.

Charles G. Andrews, Corporal, age 27, New Matamoras, mustered in May 13, 1898, mustered out November 6, 1898.

George D. Watson, Corporal, age 22, New Matamoras, mustered in May 13, 1898, mustered out November 6, 1898.

William L. Davis, Corporal, age 23, Ironton, mustered in June 22, 1898, mustered out November 6, 1898.

Frank C. Breese, Corporal, age 24, Ironton, mustered in June 18, 1898, mustered out November 6, 1898.

John C. Gillespie, Corporal, age 22, New Matamoras, mustered in May 13, 1898, mustered out November 6, 1898.

Robert Travis, Corporal, age 25, New Matamoras, mustered in May 13, 1898, mustered out November 6, 1898.

William W. Sibson, Artificer, age 24, New Matamoras, mustered in May 13, 1898, mustered out November 6, 1898.

Henry W. Kirkbride, Wagoner, age 30, New Matamoras, mustered in May 13, 1898, mustered out November 6, 1898.

Charles J. Cunningham, Trumpeter, age 19, New Matamoras, mustered in May 13, 1898, mustered out November 6, 1898.

Clarence E. Wisecup, Trumpeter, age 24, New Matamoras, mustered in May 13, 1898, mustered out November 6, 1898.

Harry Barnhart, Cook, age 19, New Matamoras, mustered in May 13, 1898, mustered out November 6, 1898.

Bratton, Edward A., private, age 31, New Matamoras, mustered in May 13, 1898, mustered out November 6, 1898.

Bond, William J., private, age 26, New Matamoras, mustered in May 13, 1898, mustered out November 6, 1898.

Buckle, George L., private, age 20, Ironton, mustered in June 22, 1898, mustered out November 6, 1898.

Barrow, Louis, private, age 24, Ironton, mustered in June 22, 1898, mustered out November 6, 1898.

Bauer, Herman E., private, age 29, New Matamoras, mustered in June 18, 1898, mustered out November 6, 1898.

Blowers, Robert, private, Ironton, mustered in June 22, 1898, mustered out September 15, 1898.

Cook, Branch W., private, Ironton, mustered in June 22, 1898, mustered out August 25, 1898.

Cunningham, Harry, private, age 22, New Matamoras, mustered in May 13, 1898, mustered out November 6, 1898.

Carter, Samuel, private, age 31, New Matamoras, mustered in June 18, 1898, mustered out November 6, 1898.

Dillon, John, private, age 19, Ironton, mustered in June 22, 1898, mustered out November 6, 1898.

Donovan, William A., private, age 26, New Matamoras, mustered in June 18, 1898, mustered out November 6, 1898.

Eddy, Charles D., private, mustered in June 18, 1898, mustered out October 4, 1898.

Elliott, Otto R., private, age 21, New Matamoras, mustered in June 18, 1898, mustered out November 6, 1898.

Fox, Charles W., private, age 27, New Matamoras, mustered in May 13, 1898, mustered out November 6, 1898.

Feeney, Thomas E., private, age 22, Ironton, mustered in June 22, 1898, mustered out November 6, 1898.

Fischer, John S., private, age 21, New Matamoras, mustered in June 18, 1898, mustered out November 6, 1898.

Griffin, Robert W., private, age 28, New Matamoras, mustered in May 13, 1898, mustered out November 6, 1898.

Gautschi, Otto, private, age 19, New Matamoras, mustered in May 13, 1898, mustered out November 6, 1898.

Greenwood, Homer L., private, age 19, New Matamoras, mustered in May 13, 1898, mustered out November 6, 1898.

Hanna, Frank, private, age 22, New Matamoras, mustered in May 13, 1898, mustered out November 6, 1898.

Hill, Harry, (Hall?), private, age 19, Ironton, mustered in June 22, 1898, mustered out November 6, 1898.

Heath, Thornton A., private, age 21, New Matamoras, mustered in June 18, 1898, mustered out November 6, 1898.

Hofer, Albert R., private, age 18, New Matamoras, mustered in June 18, 1898, mustered out November 6, 1898.

Hamilton, Edward F., private, Chillicothe, mustered in May 13, 1898, mustered out November 6, 1898.

Helter, Earl W. (Kelter?), private, age 22, Ironton, mustered in June 22, 1898, mustered out November 6, 1898.

Hener, Clay, (Keener?), private, age 28, New Matamoras, mustered in June 18, 1898, mustered out November 6, 1898.

Harris, Harry, private, age 19, New Matamoras, mustered in June 18, 1898, mustered out October 4, 1898.

Hillene, Edward, (Killene?), private, Ironton, mustered in June 22, 1898, mustered out October 4, 1898.

Lentz, Harry A. (Harvey?), private, age 19, New Matamoras, mustered in May 13, 1898, mustered out November 6, 1898.

Long, Elmer P., private, age 24, New Matamoras, mustered in June 18, 1898, mustered out November 6, 1898.

Leach, David F., private, age 26, New Matamoras, mustered in June 18, 1898, mustered out November 6, 1898.

Miracle, Forest H., private, age 19, New Matamoras, mustered in May 13, 1898, mustered out November 6, 1898.

Murphy, Herbert, private, age 21, New Matamoras, mustered in May 13, 1898, mustered out November 6, 1898.

Moore, Hiram, private, age 23, New Matamoras, mustered in June 18, 1898, mustered out November 6, 1898.

Mann, Homer D., private, age 21, New Matamoras, mustered in June 18, 1898, mustered out November 6, 1898.

Myers, Charles, private, age 30, New Matamoras, mustered in June 18, 1898, mustered out November 6, 1898.

Neeley, George E., private, age 22, New Matamoras, mustered in May 13, 1898, mustered out November 6, 1898.

Pruden, William J., private, age 40, Coolville, Ohio, mustered in June 18, 1898, mustered out November 6, 1898.

Pilcher, William J., private, age 22, Ironton, mustered in June 22, 1898, mustered out November 6, 1898.

Riedell, Charles A., private, age 24, Ironton, mustered in June 22, 1898, mustered out October 4, 1898.

Ridgeway, William D., private, age 32, New Matamoras, mustered in May 13, 1898, mustered out November 6, 1898.

Riley, John Charles, private, age 18, New Matamoras, mustered in May 13, 1898, mustered out November 6, 1898.

Smith, Howard, private, age 18, New Matamoras, mustered in May 13, 1898, mustered out November 6, 1898.

Smith, William C., private, age 19, Ironton, mustered in June 22, 1898, mustered out November 6, 1898.

Stone, Ralph D., private, age 19, New Matamoras, mustered in May 13, 1898, mustered out November 6, 1898.

Thompson, Howard C., private, age 18, Ironton, mustered in June 22, 1898, mustered out November 6, 1898.

Thomas, Daniel H., private, age 19, Ironton, mustered in June 22, 1898, mustered out November 6, 1898.

Thorp, Edward E., private, age 19, Bellaire, mustered in June 18, 1898, mustered out November 6, 1898.

Thompson, George B., private, age 33, New Matamoras, mustered in May 13, 1898, mustered out October 4, 1898.

Wheeler, Frank, private, age 21, New Matamoras, mustered in May 13, 1898, mustered out November 6, 1898.

Way, Thomas F., private, age 28, Bellaire, mustered in May 13, 1898, mustered out November 6, 1898.

Way, William S., Jr., private, age 25, Graysville, O., mustered in May 13, 1898, detached.

Ward, Adam, private, age 21, Ward, O., mustered in May 13, 1898, mustered out November 6, 1898.

Woods, Harry, private, age 19, Wheeling, W. Va., mustered in May 13, 1898, mustered out November 6, 1898.

Walbert, Richard, private, age 28, Ironton, O., mustered in June 22, 1898, mustered out November 6, 1898.

RECRUITS

Gross, Edward M., First Lieutenant, New Matamoras, mustered in May 13, 1898, resigned July 25, 1898.

Brooks, Frank O., Second Lieutenant, New Matamoras, mustered in May 13, 1898, resigned May 30, 1898.

Campbell, Carl C., private, New Matamoras, mustered in May 13, 1898, discharged August 25, 1898.

Ribb, Hiram, private, New Matamoras, mustered in May 13, 1898, discharged August 29, 1898.

Kerr, Patrick M., Sergeant, New Matamoras, mustered in May 13, 1898, mustered out October 4, 1898.

Kane, Hugh B., Corporal, New Matamoras, mustered in May 13, 1898, mustered out October 4, 1898.

Galbreath, William P., Corporal, New Matamoras, mustered in May 13, 1898, mustered out October 4, 1898.

Hall, Ira, Corporal, New Matamoras, mustered in May 13, 1898, mustered out October 4, 1898.

Rupp, Harry C., Musician, New Matamoras, mustered in May 13, 1898, mustered out October 4, 1898.

Grubbs, William J., Musician, New Matamoras, mustered in May 13, 1898, mustered out October 4, 1898.

Wood, John C., Wagoner, New Matamoras, mustered in May 13, 1898, mustered out October 4, 1898.

Bennett, Homer L., private, New Matamoras, mustered in May 13, 1898, mustered out October 4, 1898.

Breece, Charles A., private, Ironton, mustered in June 22, 1898, mustered out October 4, 1898.

Davis, James, private, New Matamoras, mustered in May 13, 1898, mustered out October 4, 1898.

Dipple, Theodore, private, New Matamoras, mustered in May 13, 1898, mustered out October 4, 1898.

Eaton, George W., private, New Matamoras, mustered in May 13, 1898, mustered out October 4, 1898.

Ehod, Willia E., private, New Matamoras, mustered in May 13, 1898, mustered out October 4, 1898.

Feeny, James W., private, New Matamoras, mustered in May 13, 1898, mustered out October 4, 1898.

Griffin, Perry L., private, New Matamoras, mustered in May 13, 1898, mustered out October 4, 1898.

Goodman, William J., private, New Matamoras, mustered in May 13, 1898, mustered out October 4, 1898.

Kaster, Benjamin W., private, New Matamoras, mustered in May 13, 1898, mustered out October 4, 1898.

Lamping, Frank, private, New Matamoras, mustered in June 18, 1898, mustered out October 4, 1898.

Mason, Charles F., private, New Matamoras, mustered in May 13, 1898, mustered out October 4, 1898.

McBee, Charles, private, New Matamoras, mustered in May 13, 1898, mustered out October 4, 1898.

Mann, Freeman H., private, New Matamoras, mustered in June 18, 1898, mustered out October 4, 1898.

Stickle, Alexander, private, New Matamoras, mustered in May 13, 1898, mustered out October 4, 1898.

Morrison, Simeon D., Corporal, New Matamoras, mustered in May 13, 1898, mustered out September 15, 1898.

Cline, Llewellyn, private, New Matamoras, mustered in May 13, 1898, mustered out September 6, 1898.

Hubbard, Frank S., Corporal, New Matamoras, mustered in May 13, 1898, mustered out November 6, 1898.

Irwin, Melvin O., private, New Matamoras, mustered in May 13, 1898, mustered out November 6, 1898.

PHILIPPINE WAR.

Hostilities at the beginning of the Spanish-American war were inaugurated by Admiral Dewey when he sailed into Manila Bay, May 1, 1898, and engaged the Spanish fleet ranged in line of battle off Cavite. This engagement had been anticipated for some weeks and the newspapers had been rife with comments comparing the two fleets and their armaments and speculating as to the probable outcome of a contest between forces so evenly matched. Dewey had on the whole a stronger fleet, as it was supposed, but to offset this it was claimed that the Spaniards had the backing of strong fortifications armed with heavy guns. The American fleet, however, destroyed the Spanish ships one after the other, and in the short space of a few hours what was a formidable and powerful naval force was wrecked and sunk. Dewey was now master of the Bay of Manila, but in his strength lay his weakness. He had no land forces to follow up his advantages and hold what he had conquered, as by all the rules of war he was entitled to do. The news of his great victory set the country wild with enthusiasm and rejoicing. Troops were at once started to his relief, the voyage requiring several weeks, causing great delay. Meanwhile a native by the name of Aguinaldo appeared. He had been in hiding at Hong Kong, China. He asked the privilege of going ashore and doing something against the common foe, the Spaniard. This he was allowed to do and a little later on was allowed to take the Spanish arms stored in the arsenal at Cavite and arm his followers with them. This was where Dewey made his great mistake, as he afterward stated before a Senate committee. After the surrender of the islands and after they had been formally ceded to the United States by Spain, Aguinaldo and his followers refused to recognize the sovereignty of the United States and waged war against the government to drive our forces from the Islands. The government had no choice but to stay where the fortunes of war had placed our victorious flag. If we had abandoned the islands, other powers, who were watching our movements, would have stepped in to reap the advantages of our victory. Upon the departure of our troops, anarchy would have reigned supreme. The warring factions of a semi-barbarous people would have rendered business and trade impossible and would have jeopardized the lives and property of Americans and all foreigners. This was the opinion of the best judges of the situation and it was but the act of good statesmanship to decide to maintain the supremacy of the American flag and hold the country. Hence, the so-called, Philippine War. It was waged by our government vigorously and successfully. Although waged against a barbarous foe where it was difficult to observe all the rules of civilized warfare, yet on the whole the war was conducted in a humane manner. As General Sherman said "War is hell," so in this case the hardships and suffering, although terrible while it lasted, could not have been softened or ameliorated, to any great extent, and still have resulted in success. It was the very hardness and cruelty of the war which hastened its close. It was not of our seeking but once in, we fought it to a successful close.

Washington County had a good many soldiers in the various organizations serving in the Philippines, but after the close of the Spanish-American War, by the Treaty of Paris, the government did not call upon the States for volunteers, as was the case at first, but called for United States volunteers. So that the men from this county were scattered throughout the army. It has been difficult to gather these names for the roll of this history but a number of names have been secured and are appended to this sketch. Like all soldiers of the great Commonwealth of States, they are held in honorable remembrance.

Clarence E. Creighton, Marietta, Ohio.—Enlisted in Co. G, 33d U. S. Vol. Inf., August 17, 1899. Died February 22, 1901. Philippine War.

George W. Price, Marietta, Ohio.—Enlisted July 18, 1898, in the U. S. Hospital Corps, 1st Division, 2nd Army Corps. Transferred September 9, 1898. Discharged March 12, 1899. Spanish-American War.

Okey J. Eddy, Yankeebug, Ohio.—Enlisted in Co. E, 8th Ohio Infantry, March 13, 1898. Died August 22, 1898, on board steamer "Mohawk" and was buried at sea. Spanish-American War.

Roma B. Devol, Marietta, Ohio.—Enlisted July 18, 1898, in the U. S. Hospital Corps, 1st Division, 2nd Army Corps. Died August 23, 1898. Spanish-American War.

Harry Clinton Smith, Marietta, Ohio.—Hospital Corps, U. S. A. Enlisted July 18, 1898. Discharged October 18, 1898.

Barker E. Kigans.—Enlisted July 20, 1898, hospital steward, U. S. Hospital Corps. Discharged September 18, 1899. Now serving in the 57th Company, U. S. Coast Artillery, Fort Wadsworth, New York.

George T. Cline.—Enlisted October 8, 1899, in Co. I, 43d U. S. Vol. Inf. Mustered out and discharged July 5, 1901. 'Also served in Co. O, 7th Ohio Infantry (Salem Rifles), Spanish-American War.

Edward Drayer.—Enlisted October 4, 1899, in Co. I, 43d U. S. Vol. Inf. Mustered out and discharged July 5, 1901. Philippine War.

Isaac Cline.—Enlisted July 18, 1898, in the U. S. Hospital Corps. Died in Josiah Simpson General Hospital, November 30, 1898. Spanish-American War.

Milford Maloney.—Enlisted October 3, 1895, in Troop F, 2nd U. S. Cavalry. Mustered out and discharged October 24, 1898, from St. Joseph's Hospital. Spanish-American War.

Ben Longfellow.—Enlisted July 18, 1898, in the U. S. Hospital Corps. Mustered out October 18, 1898. Spanish-American War.

Benjamin S. Via.—Enlisted June 24, 1896, in Battery A, 2nd U. S. Light Artillery. Discharged June 23, 1899. Spanish-American War.

Charles Wright.—Enlisted August 19, 1899, in Co. F, 33d U. S. Vol. Inf. Discharged April 17, 1901. Philippine War.

Lycurgus A. Hall.—Enlisted April 26, 1898, in Co. K, 3d Illinois Infantry. Mustered out and discharged January 16, 1899. Spanish-American War.

Albert Anderson.—Enlisted October 4, 1899, in Co. I, 43d U. S. Vol. Inf. Discharged July 5, 1901. Philippine War.

Ray Hoover.—Enlisted October 4, 1899, in Co. I, 43d U. S. Vol. Inf. Discharged July 5, 1901. Philippine War. Re-enlisted, First Lieutenant U. S. Infantry.

Howard F. Watters, Marietta, Ohio.—Enlisted June 20, 1899, in Co. G, 22d U. S. Infantry. Transferred to Co. G, 13th U. S. Infantry, January 26, 1902. Honorably discharged June 27, 1902. Philippine War.

John B. Barnes, Lower Salem, Ohio.—Enlisted June 15, 1895, in Troop D, 5th U. S. Cavalry. Discharged June 14, 1898, private. Re-enlisted June 17, 1898, private and hospital steward, in the U. S. Hospital Corps. Discharged June 1, 1899. Spanish-American War.

Irwin W. Lyman, Marietta, Ohio.—Enlisted October 4, 1899, in Co. I, 43d U. S. Vol. Inf. Discharged July 5, 1901. Philippine War.

Edward W. Griffin, Marietta, Ohio.—Enlisted July 18, 1898, in the U. S. Hospital Corps, 1st Division, 2d Army Corps. Discharged May 12, 1899. Spanish-American War.

Lewis Maloney, Marietta, Ohio.—Enlisted July 18, 1898, in the U. S. Hospital Corps, 1st Division, 2d Army Corps. Discharged, 1899. Spanish-American War.

William Berentz, Marietta, Ohio.—Enlisted July 18, 1898, in the U. S. Hospital Corps, 1st Division, 2d Army Corps. Discharged May 1, 1899. Spanish-American War.

John F. Hamilton, Marietta, Ohio.—Enlisted July 18, 1898, in the U. S. Hospital Corps. Discharged December 31, 1898.

William Outerson, Marietta, Ohio.—Enlisted June 21, 1898, seaman and quartermaster, U. S. steamer "Glacier." Discharged January 21, 1899. Spanish-American War.

Everett R. Hays, Newport, Ohio.—Enlisted July 18, 1898, in the U. S. Hospital Corps, 1st Division, 2d Army Corps. Died in hospital at Fortress Monroe, October 16, 1898.

Walter T. Stanley, Lower Salem, Ohio.—Enlisted June 27, 1898, corporal, Co. E, and U. S. Vol. Engineers. Died October, 1898, in hospital at Montauk Point, New York.

Arthur F. Cole.—Enlisted June 27, 1898, first sergeant, Co. E, and U. S. Vol. Engineers. Discharged April 20, 1899, in Cuba.

Leonard Lawton, Barlow, Ohio.—Enlisted June 30, 1898, sergeant, Co. B, and U. S. Vol. Engineers. Discharged April, 1899.

John Patterson Dodge, Beverly, Ohio.—Commissioned June 4, 1898, as brigade surgeon with rank of major of volunteers. Mustered out January 23, 1899.

Andrew J. Congleton, Marietta, Ohio.—Enlisted in 2nd U. S. Cavalry. Served three years during Spanish-American War and then re-enlisted in Troop I, 2nd U. S. Cavalry and is still in service.

GEN. HARRISON GRAY OTIS

Was born in Adams township, Washington County, February 10, 1837. His grandfather served in a New Hampshire battalion in the Revolution until wounded and honorably discharged. His father came to Washington County in 1800. Harrison received such education as the district schools afforded and then learned the printer's trade. Previous to the Civil War he had removed to Kentucky, and from that State, in 1860, he was sent as delegate to the National Republican Convention which nominated Lincoln for the Presidency. When hostilities commenced, he enlisted as a private in the 12th Reg., Ohio Vol. Inf., serving with that organization for three years and subsequently with the 23rd Reg., Ohio Veteran Volunteers, for 13 months. During this service he participated in 15 actions, was twice wounded in battle, received several promotions, was twice brevetted "for gallant and meritorious conduct during the war," and was honorably discharged from the service August 1, 1865, after having attained the rank of lieutenant-colonel.

He then wished to resume his work in civil life and therefore declined to accept a commission in the regular army. He was official reporter of the Ohio House of Representatives in 1866-67; was foreman of the United States Government Printing Office, 1869-70, and later was an officer of the United States Patent Office, resigning as chief of division in 1876. In that year he removed to California, edited the Santa Barbara Press, 1876-79; and was special United States Treasury Agent in charge of the seal islands of Alaska, 1879-81. Since 1882 he has been editor of the Los Angeles Times, except during the Spanish-American War, in which he was appointed brigadier-general of volunteers, May 27, 1898. He served against the Filipino insurgents in Luzon, commanding the 1st Brigade, 2nd Division, of the 8th Army Corps, and leading his brigade at the capture of Calocan, February 10, 1899. He was brevetted major-general for meritorious conduct in battle, March 25, 1899, and after the campaign against Malolos, the Filipino capital, in which he took part, he resigned, was honorably discharged, returned to California, and resumed his newspaper work. His fellow citizens say, "Otis helped to make Los Angeles what it is more than any other man."

He married Eliza A. Wetherby at Lowell, Ohio, September 11, 1869, and they have three living daughters.

CHAPTER XXX.

SKETCHES OF PIONEERS.

THE FIRST WHITE PEOPLE IN OHIO—GEN. RUFUS PUTNAM—REV. MANASSEH CUTLER, LL. D.—GEN. BENJAMIN TUPPER—COMMODORE ABRAHAM WHITTLE—COL. ROBERT OLIVER—MAJOR HAFIELD WHITE—COL. EBENEZER SPROAT—COL. RETURN JONATHAN MEIGS—ARTHUR ST. CLAIR—ICHABOD NYE—MRS. REBECCA IVES GILMAN—MRS. MARY LAKE—ISAAC AND REBECCA WILLIAMS—COL. WILLIAM STACY—MAJOR ANSELM TUPPER—COL. BENJAMIN TUPPER—GEN. JOSEPH BUELL—REV. DANIEL STORY—JOHN MATHEWS—EPHRAIM CUTLER—DAVID PUTNAM—NAHUM WARD.

THE FIRST WHITE PEOPLE IN OHIO.

(From the address of Hon. R. M. Stinson, April 7, 1899.)

It is asked were there no white people in what is now the State of Ohio, before the settlement at the mouth of the Muskingum, 1788? Certainly. Passing the French, already noticed, there were white captives and traders and missionaries among the Indians. As early as 1770, Richard Conner, a trader from Maryland, was living with his wife, in the Pickaway Plains, with the Shawanese, and a son was born to them in 1771 in that region. This, I think, was Col. John Conner, the founder of Connersville, the county seat of Fayette County, Indiana. He and a younger brother, also of the same origin, were prominent citizens of Indiana in its early history. I had the facts from the family record at Connersville in 1881, but the communication to me from the descendants has been mislaid.

Mr. Henry, from a prominent family in Lancaster, Pennsylvania, was also at the same period, and in the same quarter, living as a gunsmith with the Shawanese.

John Lewis Roth was born at Gnadenhutten, July 4, 1773; and Johanna Maria Heckewelder was born at Salem, April 16, 1781—children of Moravian missionaries, at the afore-named stations, on the upper Muskingum, or its main branch, the Tuscarawas. After the massacre at Gnadenhutten, in 1782, and the breaking of the missionary stations, on the Tuscarawas, they were taken to Bethlehem, Pennsylvania, and both lived and died there at an advanced age.

There were also "Squatters" along the upper Ohio River, in the present counties of Jefferson and Belmont, perhaps elsewhere, who were in 1785 warned and driven off the Congress Lands by United States officers.

All that is claimed is that at Marietta was the first permanent settlement in Ohio, by owners of the land, with the forms of law.

GEN. RUFUS PUTNAM.

(From the Address of Senator Hoar, Rutland, Massachusetts, September 17, 1899.)

Rufus Putnam was born in Sutton in this county, on the 9th of April, (O. S.) 1738. He came of a race of Worcester and Essex County yeoman, distinguished in every generation, so far as we know their history, for public spirit, simplicity, integrity and common sense.

GEN. RUFUS PUTNAM.

He was a cousin, with a single remove, of General Israel Putnam, the man "who dared to lead where any man dared to follow." He was, I think, the grandnephew of Joseph Putnam, father of Israel, another hero of the old Putnam breed, who defied another horrible she-wolf, the witchcraft delusion, at the height of its power, in the very den where it was born.

Elisha Putnam, father of Rufus, died when the son was seven years old. General Putnam's account of his family says his father was a much respected citizen, town clerk, a deacon in the church and representative from Sutton in the General Court. He died June 10, 1745.

His mother married again. The stepfather seems to have cared little for the child. He was illiterate himself and despised learning. The little boy, as he tells us in a pathetic diary, written late in life, had no chance to go to school, and little opportunity for learning at home. No books were furnished him, and he had little time to use them.

Captain Sadler, the stepfather, kept a tavern. Rufus got a few pennies by waiting upon guests and blacking their boots, with which he bought powder, and with the help of an old gun killed some partridges which he sold, and with the proceeds bought a spelling book and an arithmetic. From these he learned what he could, and to go as far as the rule of three in arithmetic. But the miserly stepfather would not allow him the light of a tallow candle in the long winter evenings and ridiculed his aspirations for learning.

CONSULTED BY WASHINGTON

One evening in the winter of 1775-76, Putnam was invited to dine at headquarters. Washington detained him after the company had departed to consult him about an attack on Boston. The general preferred an entrenchment of Dorchester Heights, which would compel Howe to attack him and risk another Bunker Hill engagement with a different result, to marching his own troops over the ice to storm the town. But the ground was frozen to a great depth and resisted the pick-ax like solid rock.

Putnam was ordered to consider the matter, and if he could find any way to execute Washington's plan to report at once. He himself best tells the story of the accident—we may almost say the miracle—by which the deliverance of Massachusetts from the foreign invader, a veteran British army 11,000 strong, was wrought by the instrumentality of the millwright's apprentice:

"I left headquarters in company with another gentleman, and on our way came to General Heath's. I had no thought of calling until I came against his door, and then I said, 'Let us call on General Heath,' to which he agreed. I had no other motive but to pay my respects to the general. While there, I cast my eye on a book which lay on the table, lettered on the back 'Miller's Field Engineer.' I immediately requested the general to lend it to me. He denied me. I repeated my request. He again refused, and told me he never lent his books.

"I then told him he must recollect that he was one, who, at Roxbury, in a measure compelled me to undertake a business which, at the time, I confessed I had never read a word about, and that he must let me have the book. After some more excuses on his part and close pressing on mine, I obtained the loan of it."

In looking at the table of contents his eye was caught by the word "chandelier," a new word to him. He read carefully the description and saw its importance at a glance. The chandeliers were made of stout timbers, 10 feet long, into which were framed posts five feet high and five feet apart, placed on the ground in parallel lines and the open spaces filled in with bundles of fascines, strongly picketed together, thus forming a movable parapet of wood instead of earth, as theretofore done.

Putnam soon had his plan ready. The men were immediately set to work in the adjacent apple orchard and woodlands, cutting and bundling up the fascines and carrying them with the chandeliers on to the ground selected for the work. They were set up in their place in a single night.

When the sun went down on Boston on the 4th of March, Washington was at Cambridge and Dorchester Heights as nature or the husbandman had left them in the autumn. When Sir William Howe rubbed his eyes on the morning of the 5th, he saw through the heavy mists the entrenchments, on which he said, the rebels had done more work in a night than his whole army would have done in a month. He wrote to Lord Dartmouth that it must have the employment of at least 12,000 men. His own effective force, including seamen, was about 11,000. Washington had but 14,000 fit for duty.

"Some of our officers," said the Annual Register—Edmund Burke was the writer—"acknowledge that the expedition with which these works were thrown up, with their sudden and unexpected appearance, recalled to their minds the wonderful stories of enchantment and invisible agency which are so frequent in the Eastern romances."

Howe was a man of spirit. He took the prompt resolution to attempt to dislodge the Americans the next night, before the works were made impregnable. Earl Percy, who had learned something of Yankee quality at Bunker Hill and Lexington, was to command the assault. But the power that dispersed the armada baffled all the plans of the English general. There came a "dreadful storm at night," which made it impossible to cross the bay until the Americans works were perfected.

We take no leaf from the pure chaplet of Washington's fame when we say that the success of the first great military operation of the Revolution was due to Rufus Putnam. The Americans under Israel Putnam marched into Boston, drums beating, and colors flying. The veteran British Army aided by a strong naval force, soldier and sailor, Englishman and Tory, sick and well, bag and baggage, got out of Boston before the strategy of Washington, the engineering of Putnam, and the courage of the despised and untried yeomen, from whose leaders they withheld the usual titles of military respect. "It resembled," said Burke, "more the emigration of a nation than the breaking of a camp."

THE OTHER COMPANY, LAND GRANT AND THE ORDINANCE SECURED.

It remained only to get the grant of lands. There had been various schemes in Congress from March 1, 1784, for the organization of the Northwest Territory. Jefferson reported one on the first day of March in that year, which contained a provision excluding slavery after 1800. The subsequent history proves beyond a question that a toleration of slavery until that time would have ended in making the whole territory slaveholding.

But even that limited and ineffective prohibition was stricken out by Congress. March 16, 1785, Rufus King, of Massachusetts, offered a resolve that there should be no slavery in this Territory. It was sent to a committee, of which he was chairman, and amended by postponing the prohibition of slavery until 1800, and with a clause providing for the surrender of fugitive slaves. That was never acted upon and died in committee.

In 1786 a new committee was raised to propose a plan for the government of the Territory. They made a report which contained no prohibition of slavery whatever. That report also remained without action until the end of Congress.

When Putnam had got his plan for the company ready and secured his associates, he sent General Parsons to Congress to secure the grant of lands and the passage of an ordinance for the government of the Territory. But Parsons returned, having accomplished absolutely nothing.

Putnam was not discouraged. He met Manasseh Cutler, the other director in Boston, June 25, 1787, and it was agreed that Cutler should renew the attempt in which Jefferson and Rufus King and Parsons and Washington and several committees of the Continental Congress had so conspicuously failed.

Manasseh Cutler records in his diary: "I conversed with General Putnam and settled the principles on which I am to contract with Congress for lands on account of the Ohio Company."

Cutler reached New York, where Congress was in session on the 6th of July and was introduced into their chamber. He explained his scheme to the members of Congress. In three days a new committee was appointed, the ordinance which had expired with the last session brought forward and committed. A copy of the ordinance was sent to Cutler, that he might make remarks and prepare amendments. The next day, the 10th, the ordinance was newly modeled. It was reported to Congress on the 11th. But it did not include the clause prohibiting slavery because, as Nathan Dane, who reported it, said, he had no idea the States would agree to it. But Dane moved it as an amendment. It was inserted and passed unanimously, save the single vote of Abram Yates.

During the two or three days that this ordinance was pending, the committee proposed to reject some of Cutler's amendments; he does not specify which. "Thereupon he paid his respects to all the members of Congress in the city, informed them of his intention to depart that day, and if his terms were not acceded to turn his attention to some other part of the country."

They urged him, as he says, to "tarry till the next day, and they would put by all other business to complete the contract." He records further in his diary that "Congress came to the terms stated in our letter without the least variation."

Why was it that Congress came in three days to terms which the influence of Washington and of Jefferson had failed to accomplish for more than four years? Putnam and Cutler were masters of the situation. The Ohio Company might well dictate its own terms, even in dealing with the farsighted statesmen of 1787.

Washington said of Rufus Putnam that he was the best engineer in the army, whether French or American. At the end of the war he directed Putnam to report a comprehensive plan for fortifying the whole country. I have seen General Putnam's elaborate scheme. I think among his papers at Marietta College, or in the archives at Washington. It was never executed, in spite of earnest appeals of some of our ablest statesmen in every generation from Washington to Jackson and Tilden and Eugene Hale.

It remains a monument of that national providence of which we have shown so many conspicuous examples, especially in the matter of preparation for defense and for war and which, during the last few months, has even dimmed the glories of Manila and Santiago.

To be a great engineer is to be a great soldier. To be a great engineer with only such advantages of education as Rufus Putnam enjoyed is to be a man of consummate genius. But to have been the trusted friend of Washington, to have conceived as by a flash of inspiration the works which with an inferior force compelled England to evacuate a fortified town and to quit Massachusetts forever; to have constructed the very fortress and citadel of our strength and defense in the War of the Revolution; to have been in Lord Bacon's front rank of sovereign honor; to have founded a mighty State, herself the mother of mighty States; to have planned, constructed and made impregnable the very citadel and fortress of liberty on this continent; to have turned the mighty stream of current and empire from the channel of slavery into the channel of freedom, there to flow forever and forever—if this be not greatness, then there is no greatness among the living or the dead.

During the years he lived in Rutland, he was representative to the General Court, selectman, constable, tax collector, on a committee to lay out school lands, committee to make repairs of school house, State surveyor, commissioner to treat with the Penobscot Indians, volunteer in putting down the Shays rebellion, on committee to settle with Jabe Fairbanks. He was one of the founders and first trustees of the Leicester Academy, and, with his family of eight children, gave from his slender means £100 toward its endowment. The rest of his life is, in large part, the history of Marietta for more than 30 years. "The impression of his character, says the historian, "is strongly marked in the history of Marietta, in their buildings, institutions and manners."

Now this seems to me to be a good, honest, old-fashioned American story. It is a Massachusetts story. It is a Worcester County story; although we by no means pretend to a monopoly of such things in Massachusetts or in Worcester County. We have got over wondering at them. The boy went to school but three days after he was nine years old. That has happened before to many a boy who became a great man, from Ulysses to Abraham Lincoln.

A Worcester County farm in those days was a pretty good school. It was a pretty good school, both for the intellect and the heart. The boy learned the secrets of the forest and the field, the names and habits of bird and beast. He could take care of himself anywhere. He became an expert woodsman and sharpshooter.

He heard high topics discussed in the church—I beg your pardon—in the meeting-house. The talk by the blacksmith's forge and the tavern fire, and the rude drafting board of the millwright, when the great political contest with England was pending, was of the true boundary between liberty and authority in the government of the State and between men's free will and God's foreknowledge and omnipotence in the government of the universe.

RUFUS PUTNAM'S HOME IN MARIETTA.*

There seems to be a good reason to believe that the house was the one now known as the Rufus Putnam house at the corner of Second and Washington streets. I quote the opinion of a life-long resident of Marietta and one well acquainted with all the facts relating to its early history with regard to this matter. She says: "Upon examination of General Putnam's letter of 1790, and by comparing it with papers and charts descriptive of the Campus Martius from 1788 to 1795, I am satisfied that the orders given to Colonel Meigs in regard to building and the lumber supplied relate to the house built for him in the Campus Martius, 1788 to 1790, which covered ground not less than 30 by 18 feet and which stood next to the S. E. Blockhouse, which was at the N. W. corner of Second and Washington streets.

"General Putnam brought his family to Marietta in 1790, arriving November 5th. He took them to his house in the Campus Martius and they resided there during the Indian war, 1791 to 1795. (This is shown by historical record.)

"It is a matter of local knowledge that for many years previous to and until his death in 1824, General Putnam resided in the house now standing at the corner of Washington and Second streets, which covers the same ground (and more) than the Campus Martius house of 1788-1795 stood upon. I think that the present structure which I have always known as 'The General Rufus Putnam house,' was erected with the original house as a nucleus. I am satisfied that a careful examination by competent house builders would prove this beyond a question."

For 85 years I have been a resident of Marietta and have paid more than ordinary attention to the residences of its citizens, especially those of olden times. I have read with interest the conclusion of the above writer and in conversation with the person, and after extensive examination, I am of the impression that General Putnam had but the one house in Marietta, at the corner of Second and Washington streets. I well remember, though only a boy, the day of his death. By the order of the proper authorities, the tolling of the bell at the time of the death and funeral of residents had been omitted, on account of the general sickness in the town. On the occasion of the death of General Putnam, this order was suspended and on the day of his death the bell tolled to the number of his years, and on the day of his burial the tolling of the bell commenced at the time of the procession leaving his house and continued till the return to the same spot. With my father and elder brother, I attended the funeral. I was particularly impressed, as my father was called on to be a bearer and we two boys fell into the procession alone. The death of General Putnam and his funeral took place at his home at the corner of Washington and Second streets.

*Written by Hon. George M. Woodbridge.

A granite monument erected by his grandson, Col. W. R. Putnam, marks the place of his rest. It has this inscription:

GEN. RUFUS PUTNAM.

A Revolutionary officer, and the leader of the colony which made the first settlement in the Territory of the Northwest at Marietta, April 7, 1788.

Born April 9, 1738.

Died May 4, 1824.

Persis Rice, wife of

Rufus Putnam,

Born November 10, 1737.

Died September 6, 1820.

The memory of the just is Blessed.

The children of Gen. Rufus Putnam were: Ayres, born 1761, died 1762; Elizabeth, born 1765, died 1830; Persis, born 1767, died —; Susanna, born 1768, died 1840; Abigail, born 1770, died 1805; William Rufus, born 1771, died 1855; Franklin, born 1774, died 1776; Edwin, born 1776, died 1843; Patty, born 1777, died 1842, and Catharine, born 1780, died 1808. William Rufus married, in 1803, Jerusha Guiteau. Their son, William Rufus Putnam, Jr., was born June 13, 1812. Edwin Putnam married a Miss Safford and had a family of five children, three sons and two daughters. Susanna married Christopher Burlingame. Abigail married William Browning, of Belpre. Persis married Perly Howe, of Belpre. Martha married Benjamin Tupper, of Putnam (now Zanesville). Catharine married Ebenezer Buckingham.

REV. MANASSEH CUTLER, LL. D.

The interest which a majority of those who consult this volume, have in Dr. Manasseh Cutler centers in his splendid services for the New England Ohio Company and his immeasurable influence for good, as exerted through the ordinance of 1787, of which much has been already said within these pages, but it is desirable that in a work devoted to the history of a settlement, of which he was one of the founders, a personal sketch of the man should be given to convey, however inadequately, some idea of his life, his talents, and his worth.

Rev. Manasseh Cutler, son of Hezekiah and Susanna (Clark) Cutler, was born in Killingly, Connecticut, May 28 (old style), 1742. His father was a respectable farmer and the son spent his earlier years in the usual manner of a New England farmer's boy. He early displayed promising tokens of genius and made rapid progress in study. He prepared for college under Rev. Aaron Brown—a Killingly preacher—and entered Yale in 1761. He graduated with high honors in 1765. In the following year he married Mary Balch, daughter of Rev. Thomas and Mary (Sumner) Balch. He studied law, was admitted to the bar in 1767, and pleaded a few cases in the Norfolk County, Massachusetts, courts, but having entertained, for some years, serious thoughts of entering the ministry, he began in earnest his theological studies in 1769, under the direction of his father-in-law, who was the first pastor of the South Church, of Dedham, Massachusetts. In his diary under date of November, of the preceding year, appears an entry showing that he had even then given much consideration to the subject. He says: "Prosecuted my studies—began to make sermons. May God grant me his blessing in so important an undertaking, and make me serviceable to the cause of religion and the souls of my fellow-men." After completing the course of study usual at that day he was ordained at Ipswich Hamlet (afterward Hamilton), Massachusetts, September 11, 1771. His pastorate here continued 52 years, until his death, in 1823. Dr. Cutler regarded himself as consecrated to the ministry and repeatedly refused opportunities to enter other, and very tempting, avenues of life. His labors in the church were very successful. Rev. Dr. Benjamin Wadsworth thus spoke of him: "Christ crucified was the great theme of his preaching. His public discourses were prepared in Gospel style, but with studied accuracy, argumentative energy and persuasive pathos. They were serious and practical, rather than speculative and metaphysical: he could be a son of thunder and a son of consolation: his object was to win souls to Christ, and to establish them intelligent, judicious, and exemplary Christians." Another writer has said of him: "As a preacher, he was grave, dignified, and impressive in manner, and select in the matter of his discourses. In doctrine, a moderate Calvinist, he steadily maintained the religious opinions with which he commenced his ministry, to the end of his life." Felt, in his history of Ipswich, Massachusetts, says: "His voice in preaching was not loud, but distinct and audible to his congregation. * * * His style of writing was clear, perspicuous and strong." His published sermons are: "Charge at the Ordination of Rev. Daniel Story, 1798" (the first ordained minister in the Northwest Territory), "A National Fast Sermon, 1799," "A Sermon before the Bible Society of Salem and Vicinity, 1813," and "A Century Discourse of Hamilton Church, 1814."

Dr. Cutler became, while a young man, very fond of scientific study, and, later in life, it is not too much to say, was more distinguished as a scientist than any man in America, except Benjamin Franklin. In the early part of the Revolutionary War an American privateer captured and brought into port a British prize, containing among other valuables a fine library, consisting chiefly of medical and botanical works. These books became the nucleus of what is now the Salem Athenæum. The botanical department—a field till then but little cultivated in this country—being very congenial to Dr. Cutler's taste, engaged his eager attention. He prepared a paper on botany which the American Society of Arts and Sciences published in their memoirs, and which Dr. Franklin (as he himself afterward assured Dr. Cutler) caused to be republished in the Columbian Magazine, printed at Philadelphia. In the year 1785 Dr. Cutler published four papers in the Memoirs of the American Academy, in three departments of science—astronomy, meteorology, and botany.

Dr. Cutler, who had already taken degrees in law and divinity, soon after the breaking out of the War of the Revolution, became a student and practitioner of medicine. The regular physician of the hamlet had been called to active military service, and the people were obliged to send to neighboring towns for medical aid. In this exigency Dr. Cutler qualified himself to fill the place made vacant. In due time he acquired a high reputation as a physician, and in the treatment of some difficult cases his success became quite proverbial. Many valuable medical papers are preserved among his manuscripts. His knowledge of botany was blended advantageously with that of medicine. It may here be remarked that one of his papers upon a topic of the former science was instrumental in bringing into use lobelia and other indigenous plants.

The public honors conferred upon him give some idea of the estimation in which Dr. Cutler was held as a man of literature and science—such an accumulation as is rarely annexed to the ministerial character. They rank in the following order: He graduated from Yale in 1765; received the degree of Master of Arts from Harvard in 1770; was elected a member of the Academy of Arts and Sciences, 1781; of the Philosophical Society, Philadelphia, 1784; and an honorary member of the Massachusetts Medical Society, 1785; received the degree of Doctor of Laws from Yale College, 1789; was elected member of the Agricultural Society, 1792; of the Historical Society, 1792; a representative to Congress from 1800 to 1804; an honorary member of the Linnæan Society, Philadelphia, 1809; president of the Bible Society of Salem and vicinity, 1811; a member of the American Antiquarian Society, 1813; and of the New England Linnæan Society, 1815. Dr. Cutler was better and more widely known during his life as a scientist than as a preacher. And now the popularity of the preacher and the renown of the scientist are both eclipsed by the fame of the author of the ordinance of 1787. As the agent who introduced and who secured the adoption of the clause in that immortal instruction which gave it the name of the "Ordinance of Freedom," he organized the force which, swelling steadily and irresistibly as the years rolled on, changed the destiny of the Nation and of millions of human beings by barring its progress and so making possible the final overthrow of American slavery. Only in recent years has Dr. Cutler's name been covered with the glory of this great deed. But his agency in the formation of the ordinance—in the insertion and passage of the clause prohibiting slavery in the Northwest Territory—has been established beyond a doubt.

The events which led to Dr. Cutler's great opportunity, if not forming as long a train as that of the steps by which he was fitted to take advantage of the opportunity, were nevertheless numerous. It is not necessary that they should here be recounted. He took a deep interest in the success of the American patriots. He served during two campaigns as chaplain in the Revolutionary Army.

While his negotiations with Congress were pending Dr. Cutler journeyed to Philadelphia to visit Benjamin Franklin (a man, by the way, whom he resembled in tastes, talents and achievements, as will be seen, when the story of his life is fully told). James Parton, in his life of Franklin, introduces Dr. Cutler's description of this visit as one of the best contemporary accounts of the distinguished American. The following extracts from this description we reproduce as showing something of the character of the writer and the esteem in which he was held by Franklin.

The journal reads:

Dr. Franklin's house stands up a sort of eminence from the street. We found him in the garden, sitting upon a grass plot, under a very large mulberry tree, with several other gentlemen and two or three ladies.*** He rose from his chair, took me by the hand, expressed his joy at seeing me, welcomed me to the city and begged me to seat myself close to him. His voice was low; his countenance open, frank and pleasing. I delivered him my letters. After he had read them, he took me again by the hand and with the usual compliments introduced me to the other gentlemen.*** Here we entered into a free conversation and spent our time most agreeably, until it was quite dark.*** After it was dark we went into the house, and he invited me into the library, which is likewise his study.

Here Franklin exhibited to his scientific friend many interesting objects—a glass machine for representing the flow of the blood in the arteries and veins of the human body, a copying press, a long artificial arm and hand (his own invention) for taking books down from high shelves, and other devices and curiosities.

Dr. Cutler, in the summer of 1788, visited the infant settlement which he had been instrumental in founding, for the purpose of attending a meeting of the directors of the Ohio Company. He left Hamilton, in his sulky, July 21st, and arrived at Marietta August 19th. On the 27th of the month he performed the burial service for a child of Maj. Nathaniel Cushing, the first funeral among the settlers here. He preached on the Sabbath in the hall at the Campus Martius; and was present in the same hall September 2, 1788, at the opening of the first court held northwest of the river Ohio, under the forms of civil jurisprudence, officiating as chaplain on that occasion. He was greatly interested in examining the ancient mounds, squares and other earthworks at Marietta, which he thought were a thousand years old, and were made by some nation more civilized and powerful than any Indians known to exist in America. After his arrival in Massachusetts he wrote to Gen. Rufus Putnam: "On my return home I found several letters from different parts of Europe. The most of them request me to send a particular account of the ancient works found in North America. These works seem to have engaged the attention of the literati in Europe, and I wish to gratify those with whom I have the honor to correspond, as far as possible. I must beg you to forward to me the surveys of the works at Marietta. Accurate measurements I find to be of consequence in their minds. Pray attend to the width of the openings, and the distances and relative situations of all the works to one another." Dr. Cutler gives an account of these remarkable earthworks in a note to his charge at the ordination of Rev. Daniel Story.

Dr. Cutler at one time contemplated removing his family to the new purchase, but after this visit he writes that he could not do so without making great sacrifices, and, although the country equalled, and in some respects much exceeded his expectations, especially as a grazing country, and he felt the warmest interest in the success and prosperity of the settlement, he finally abandoned the plan.

Soon after the peace made by General Wayne with the western Indians, in 1795, President Washington tendered to Dr. Cutler a commission as judge of the Supreme Court in the Ohio Territory, which he declined.

Although Dr. Cutler was not of the pioneers at Marietta, two of his sons, Ephraim and Jervis, were, and a third, Charles, was also an early resident of Ohio. Another son died in infancy. Temple, the youngest of the four who lived to maturity, never removed to the West, and died in New England in 1857. Dr. Cutler had three daughters: Mary, who became the wife of Dr. Joseph Torrey, of Hamilton; Elizabeth, who married Fitch Poole and lived in Danvers; and Lavinia, who married Captain Jacob Berry.

In the autumn of 1800 Dr. Cutler was elected a member of Congress, and again in 1802, when, having served two terms, he declined a re-election. His people entertained a high estimate of his talents and patriotism, and he accepted the honors conferred with the modest diffidence which true dignity inspires. Whether at home or abroad, his mind was intent on projecting great and good plans, consulting the benefit of generations to come; and his persevering genius rarely failed of carrying them into effect. In politics Dr. Cutler was a Federalist.

This great and good man having nobly fulfilled his life duty passed away July 28, 1823, at the ripe age of 81 years.

In the village burying ground of Hamilton, Massachusetts, is a monument to his memory bearing the following inscription:

REV. MANASSEH CUTLER, LL. D.

He died July 28, 1823, in the 81st year of his age.

He was beloved for his domestic and social virtues. His talents were of a high order. He was eminent for his Botanical, Medical, Political and Theological knowledge. He was a member of literary and scientific societies in both Europe and America. After a useful ministry of fifty-two years in this place, he expired, with a firm and peaceful reliance on his Redeemer.

"They that trust in the Lord shall be as Mount Zion, which cannot be removed but abideth forever."

This stone is erected to his memory by his church.

On the reverse side is the following:

Sacred to the memory of
MRS. MARY CUTLER,
Consort of Rev. Dr. Cutler, who deceased
Nov. 3, 1815, in the 73d year of her age.
"Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord."

GEN. BENJAMIN TUPPER.

The important part taken by Gen. Benjamin Tupper in the measures leading to settlement at Marietta, makes his personal career a subject of general interest. He was born at Stoughton, Massachusetts, in 1738. While yet quite young his father died, and he was apprenticed to a tanner named Whitherton, in Dorchester. He left Dorchester at the age of 16, and lived on a farm at Easton.

He served as a private soldier in the French war most of the time for about three years. About this time he also taught school at Easton two or three winters.

He was married November 18, 1762, to Huldah White, of Easton. She was a woman of much strength and beauty of character, and was well fitted to be the companion of a public man during a trying epoch of history. A short time after their marriage they removed from Easton to Chesterfield, which continued to be the family residence until they came to Marietta.

Mr. Tupper, at the opening of the Revolution, was lieutenant in a militia company at Chesterfield, and under command of Major Halley, of Northampton, participated in preventing the Supreme Court from sitting under authority of the British crown. He thus early joined the illustrious line of revolutionists. When the war had actually begun, he entered the service with the rank of major, and was an actor in the events which took place at Boston harbor.

Mr. Tupper was promoted to the colonelcy in 1776. He participated in the battle of Long Island. During the campaign of 1777, he served under General Gates. In 1778, he was under General Washington, and had a horse killed under him at the battle of Monmouth. In 1780 he served in the army of the Hudson. About the close of the war he was promoted to the rank of brigadier-general by brevet.

When the war had closed, he returned to his family at Chesterfield.

The circumstances which brought him to the valley of the Ohio, the survey under the ordinance of 1785, his visit to Fort Harmar, his conference with General Putnam and its result, are already known to the reader.

General Tupper's last military services were in the suppression of Shays' rebellion, in Massachusetts, in which he performed an important part.

General Tupper came to Marietta with the first company of families, August 19, 1788. He served as judge of the Court of Quarter Sessions until his death in June, 1792. His wife died at Putnam, Ohio, February 21, 1812.

Their family consisted of three sons and four daughters. Maj. Anselm Tupper died at Marietta, December 25, 1808; Col. Benjamin Tupper died at Putnam in February, 1815; Gen. Edward W. Tupper died at Gallipolis in 1823; Rowena, the oldest daughter of General Tupper, and wife of Secretary Winthrop Sargent, died at Marietta in 1790; Sophia, wife of Nathaniel Wilys, Esq., of Connecticut, died in October, 1780; Minerva, wife of Col. Ichabod Nye, died at Marietta in April, 1836; the other daughter died young, before the family emigrated to Ohio.

DESCENDANTS OF GEN. BENJAMIN TUPPER IN WASHINGTON COUNTY, OHIO.

1. Miss Laura Virginia Nye, Marietta.
2. Mrs. Mary Hayward Leonard, Marietta.
3. Miss Bessie May Leonard, Marietta.
4. Miss Stella Rhu Leonard, Marietta.
5. Miss Josephine Ann Hayward, Waterford.
6. Mr. Benjamin Dana Shaw, Waterford.
7. Miss Panthea Georgiana Shaw, Waterford.
8. Miss Augusta Caroline Shaw, Waterford.
9. Miss Ellen Rebecca Hayward, Waterford.
10. Mrs. Sarah Nye Lovell, Marietta.
11. Miss Mary Cram Nye, Marietta.
12. Mr. James Walker Nye, Marietta.
13. Miss Katherine Parr Nye, Marietta.
14. Miss Rebekah Dodge Nye, Marietta.
15. Mrs. Maria Nye Buell, Marietta.
16. Miss Rowena Wyllys Buell, Marietta.
- 17-20. Mr. Anselm Tupper Nye (three minor children of Anselm T. Nye), Marietta.
- 21-22. Mrs. Ellen Lewis Buell (one minor child), Marietta.
23. Mr. Benjamin Harry Nye, Marietta.
24. Miss Helena May Nye, Marietta.

- 25-31. Mr. John Dana (six minor children), Belpre.
32. Mr. William Fisher Dana, Belpre.
- 33-35. Mrs. Grace Holbrook (Dana) Devoil (two minor children), Beverly.
- 36-37. Mr. Charles Sumner Dana (one minor child), Marietta.
38. Mrs. Frances Bancroft McKay, Marietta.
39. Miss Agnes Dana McKay, Marietta.
40. Mr. Donald Dana McKay, Marietta.
41. Mrs. Rowena Putnam Stone, Belpre.
42. Mr. Anselm Tupper Stone, Belpre.
- 43-45. Mrs. Mary Nye Stone McGee (two minor children), Belpre.
46. Mrs. Grace Winifred Stone Athey, Belpre.
47. Miss Elizabeth Curtis, Newbury.
- 48-50. Mrs. Dolly Putnam Druly (two children), Rockland.
51. Mrs. Laura Guthrie Curtis Preston, Marietta.
52. Dr. Harry Norvell Curtis, Marietta.
53. Miss Helen Moore Curtis, Marietta.
54. Colonel Reuben Linnell Nye, Marietta.
55. Miss Calista Putnam Nye, Marietta.
56. Mrs. Lucy Holmes (Nye) Davis, Marietta.
57. Miss Grace Davis, Marietta.
- 58-59. Mr. Northrop Stone (one child), Belpre.
60. Miss Huldah Putnam, Rockland.

COMMODORE ABRAHAM WHIPPLE.

In the Mound Cemetery at Marietta is a tombstone bearing the following inscription:

Sacred to the memory of
COMMODORE ABRAHAM WHIPPLE
whose name, skill, and courage will ever remain the pride and boast of his country.

In the late Revolution he was the first on the seas to hurl defiance at proud Britain, gallantly leading the way to wrest from the mistress of the ocean her scepter, and there to wave the star-spangled banner.

He also conducted to the sea
the first square-rigged vessel ever built on the Ohio, opening to commerce resources beyond calculation.*

While Ohio is pointing with pride to her many great sons, she should not neglect to know the life, and honor the memory of the brave men who planted ripe civilization on her savage soil. The high position of so many of these among the celebrated men of the Revolution is a source of pride and congratulation.

Abraham Whipple, a descendant of John Whipple, one of the original proprietors of the Providence plantations, was born in Prov-

*This inscription was written by Judge Ephraim Cutler, his warm friend and admirer.

idence, Rhode Island, in 1733. In early life he was drawn into ocean commerce, and attained to the command of a vessel engaged in the West India and St. Croix trade. He followed the sea for many years before the Revolution, during which he acquired a practical knowledge of navigation and an intimate acquaintance with the ocean and its harbors. Near the close of the French war he was given command of a privateer. During this period he exhibited qualifications which brought him into notice. He was brave and confident and his ready mind was never at a loss for an expedient. The reputation acquired during the French war drew him into the incipient acts of the Revolution. In 1772 he headed a company of his townsmen who burned an odious British schooner, stationed at Narragansett Bay, for the purpose of forcing oppressive maritime laws. One thousand pounds was offered for the detection of the leader, and five hundred pounds for any member of the company. But England was at that time so universally hated that although more than fifty knew the secret none were found willing to inform. Historians generally consider the burning of the "Gaspee," June 17, 1772, by Captain Whipple and the Providence Company, the overt act of the Revolution.

Little Rhode Island was first to renounce allegiance to the British crown, and the first to send to sea under legislative authority a vessel of war. Two days before the battle of Bunker Hill, two sloops were purchased and armed, one with 12, the other with eight guns. The larger was placed under command of Captain Whipple, with orders to clear the bay of British tenders to the frigate "Rose" under command of Sir James Wallace, who blockaded the harbors and rivers, preventing a large number of homeward bound vessels from entering the port. Captain Whipple sailed on the 15th of June, down Narragansett Bay and attacked two of the enemy's traders. He forced one to retire and took the other a prize. This bold stroke cleared the bay and entitles Whipple to the honor of having fired the first gun at the British on the sea, in the opening of the Revolutionary War.

But to narrate the life of Commodore Whipple during the next seven years would be telling an important part of the naval history of the Revolution, and belongs to a book of wider scope. Our purpose here is to give the citizens of Washington County an idea of the national importance of one of the founders of society in their own State and community.

In 1772 he was excused from the service and returned to his farm at Cranston. He was given command, in 1784, of one of the first merchant vessels sent to Great Britain after the peace. "To Commodore Whipple was given the honor of first unfurling the American flag on the Thames." After his return he again retired to his farm, and was a member of his State Legislature during the first rage of the paper money lunacy.

In a pitiful petition to Congress, in 1786, he sets forth his financial condition. His grievances are similar to those of many others who took part in the battles for freedom, and in this age of pensions the prayer of the petition may not be uninteresting. After setting forth his military services, he says:

Thus having exhausted the means of supporting myself and family, I was reduced to the sad necessity of mortgaging my little farm, the remnant I had left, to obtain money for a temporary support. The farm is now gone, and, having been sued out of possession, I am turned into the world at an advanced age, feeble and valetudinary, with my wife and children, destitute of a house or home that I can call my own, or have the means of hiring. This calamity has arisen from two causes, viz.: First, from my disbursing large sums in France and Charleston. In the former I expended in the service of the United States to the amount of three hundred and sixty French guineas—a large part of that sum was appropriated to the pay of marine, the other part for sea stores to accommodate a number of gentlemen passengers sent on board by the commissioners to take passage for America, and for which I have never been recompensed; and, secondly, my having served the United States from the 15th of June, 1775, to December, 1782, without receiving a farthing of wages or subsistence from them since December, 1776. My advances in France and Charleston amount in the whole to nearly seven thousand dollars in specie, exclusive of interest. The repayment of this, or a part of it, might be the happy means of regaining the farm I have been obliged to give up, and snatch my family from misery and ruin."

The whole amount due from the United States was about $16,000. He received in final settlement securities the nominal amount expended in France. He was forced to sell these securities at a discount of 80 per cent. This amount, however, enabled him to regain his Cranston farm, which he sold in 1788 and came to Ohio. During the Indian war he lived in comparative quiet in the house of his son-in-law, Colonel Sproat. He, indeed, considered the whites aggressors in the Indian country, and was inclined to deal with the red men as peaceably as possible.

In 1796, in his 63rd year, he removed with his wife to a farm of 12 acres, located on the Muskingum, two miles from Marietta, and depended upon its productions and his own labor for a livelihood.

In 1811, when failing health and reduced circumstances were oppressing him, he followed the advice of friends and applied to Congress for a pension. In answer to his petition he was allowed half the pay of a captain, which was at that time $60 a month. The remaining years of his life were free from anxiety.

The following note which appeared in the Western Spectator in 1811 tells its own modest story:

My thanks to the gentlemen of Marietta for their subscriptions to enable me to purchase a horse. If I am never able to make restitution, that the great Governor of nature, who created us all, may do it, is the wish of an old, worn-out officer of the United States.

ABRAHAM WHIPPLE.

His sympathetic life companion was Sarah Hopkins, sister of Governor Hopkins, of Rhode Island. Their family consisted of two daughters and one son. The oldest daughter married Col. Ebenezer Sproat, and the younger, Dr. Comstock, of Rhode Island. She never came to Ohio. John, the only son, left Marietta at an early period and followed a seafaring life. He never married, and with him the family name became extinct.

Mrs. Sarah Whipple died in October, 1818, in her 80th year. Commodore Whipple died May 20, 1819, on his farm. He was a leading actor from beginning to end of that trying struggle which resulted in the establishment of our nation. Impoverished, he struggled in later life in the midst of the events incident to the first settlement of the Northwest. It is pleasant to reflect that his last years were spent in ease and contentment.

COL. ROBERT OLIVER.

It is a fortunate circumstance that so many of the colony of first settlers were men of superior character and ability. One of the most useful members of the Ohio Company was Col. Robert Oliver. He was born in 1738 in the north of Ireland. His parents moved to America while Robert was young, and settled on a farm in Worcester County, Massachusetts. His education was as good as the schools of that period afforded.

He entered the Revolution as a lieutenant, but at the close of the war had advanced to the position of colonel. He served under Gen. Rufus Putnam in the campaign against Burgoyne, and was highly complimented as a disciplinarian. After the close of the war he again settled on a farm, where he lived quietly until 1786, when he volunteered to assist in putting down Shays' rebellion.

Upon the formation of the Ohio Company he invested in two shares of their land and came to Marietta in the summer of 1788. The formation of the Millsburg colony and the erection of Wolf Creek Mills is fully noticed in another chapter.

In 1790 Colonel Oliver was elected to fill the vacancy on the board of directors of the Ohio Company caused by the death of General Parsons. His services in that capacity were of great value, especially during the trying period of the Indian war.

Colonel Oliver was the colleague of Colonel Meigs in the first Territorial Legislature, and was selected as one of the Council, which was composed of five representatives, nominated by the Governor and commissioned by the President of the United States. In 1800 he was chosen president of the Council. He served as colonel of militia, and judge of the Court of Common Pleas. He served his township as magistrate until his death, which occurred in May, 1810.

MAJ. HAFFIELD WHITE

Died at Wooster, Washington County, December 13, 1818, at the age of 80 years. He was a soldier in the French and Indian War and in the Revolution took part in the battles of Lexington, Bunker Hill, Trenton, Princeton and Saratoga, and continued in the patriot army to the close of the war. He received the thanks of Washington for valuable assistance rendered at the crossing of the Delaware. The last 30 years of his life were spent in making a new home for himself on the frontier of the country which he had defended from his youth. That country never repaid him for the arduous toil of many campaigns nor even for the private property he had sacrificed in the cause of liberty.

COL. EBENEZER SPROAT.

A distinguished character in the early history of Ohio is the tall sheriff who headed the procession at the opening of the first court in the Territory, and whose imposing figure so impressed the Indians that they gave him the name of "Hetuck" (Big Buckeye). There is a tradition that from this circumstance the term Buckeye came to be applied to all Ohioians.

Colonel Sproat was born in Middleborough, Massachusetts, in 1752. He had the advantage of early education and became familiar with the principle and practice of surveying. He assisted his father on the farm and was remarked for his strong vigorous frame. He stood erect six feet four inches tall. At the opening of the Revolution, Mr. Sproat was given command of a company but soon rose to the position of major in the Tenth Massachusetts Regiment, under Colonel Sheppard. In 1778 he became lieutenant colonel in Glover's brigade. It has been said that he was not only the tallest man in the brigade, but also the most complete disciplinarian. At the close of the war he retired to Providence and employed himself at surveying. While here he became attached to Catharine Whipple, whom he married. Colonel Sproat now turned his attention to mercantile pursuits, for which he was singularly unfitted. He was fond of company and freehanded, and as a natural result failed after a short period, losing his own fortune and his wife's patrimony. In 1786, Colonel Sproat was given an appointment on the survey of the seven ranges, and the following year was made one of the surveyors of the Ohio Company's Purchase. In the fall of that year he led a detachment to Simrell's ferry, where he superintended the building of the "Mayflower." Colonel Sproat continued as surveyor for the company until 1791, when the Indian war prevented further operations. He held the position of high sheriff, under commission of Governor St. Clair, for 14 years. He invested the office with all the dignity of ancient ceremony, which his commanding presence gave a peculiar effect. He always carried a sword as the badge of office. During the Indian war, he served as paymaster of the troops. The family of Colonel Sproat consisted of his wife and one daughter, who came to Marietta with Commodore Whipple. His daughter married Solomon Sibley, Esq. Colonel Sproat was a friend of General Washington and an acquaintance of La Fayette. He was a staunch Federalist and saw the fall of his party with regret. He took a live interest in agriculture, particularly gardening. His garden covered nearly an acre of ground and was tastefully laid out in squares and walks. He died suddenly in February, 1805.

COL. RETURN JONATHAN MEIGS.

Another of the celebrated spirits of the Revolution and one, too, who figures prominently in the early history of Ohio, was Col. Return Jonathan Meigs. He was apprenticed a hatter in early life and afterward had a shop in his native State of Connecticut.

Mr. Meigs was a member of the Colonial military company, of Middletown, and when the war became imminent was chosen captain. After the news of the first bloodshed at Lexington, Captain Meigs volunteered and was received into the service with the rank of major.

After his release he again signified his willingness to enter the service, and was commissioned colonel by Congress. He raised a regiment of volunteers, known in history as the "Red Cap Regiment." The expedition of this regiment against Sag Harbor, Long Island, is celebrated, and its conduct at Stony Point highly honorable. After the war Colonel Meigs returned to Middletown, where he remained until the formation of the Ohio Company. His services were engaged by the company as a surveyor, and in the spring of 1788 he entered on the duties of his office. Before the Territorial officers had arrived Colonel Meigs had drawn up a code of rules, which served for the government of the Territory. After the organization of the government, under the ordinance of Congress, he was made one of the associate justices and justice of the peace. He was also commissioned clerk of the Court of Quarter Sessions and prothonotary of the Court of Common Pleas.

Colonel Meigs was commissary of the clothing department during the treaty of 1795, at Greenville. It was through his exertions that Joseph Kelly, the boy captive, was restored to his mother.

Washington County was ably represented in the first Territorial Legislature by Colonels Meigs and Oliver. This was an important session, and Colonel Meigs' intimate knowledge of affairs made him a superior member.

In 1801 he was appointed by President Jefferson Indian agent in the Cherokee nation, where he removed and resided until his death, which occurred in 1823.

His family consisted of three sons—Return Jonathan, John, and Timothy. Colonel Meigs was held in the highest esteem in the army, in Marietta, and among the Indians, where he spent the evening of his busy life.

ARTHUR ST. CLAIR.

First, and, practically, the only Governor of the Northwest Territory, was born in Scotland in 1734. He became a subaltern in the British Army, and was detailed to America for duty during the French war. He was present at the storming of Quebec. In 1763 he was given command of Fort Ligonier, in Pennsylvania, where he settled and received one thousand acres of land. He sympathized with the colonies in their difficulties with Great Britain, and at the opening of the Revolution was given command of a regiment of Continentals. He was afterward promoted to the rank of brigadier-general, and before the close of the war was made major-general. He had command of Ticonderoga when it was captured by Burgoyne, and was charged with everything reflecting on his honor as a military man, but a court-martial sustained his conduct and fully exonerated him. His military career although not brilliant was creditable.

In 1785 he was elected a representative of Ligonier, where he settled after the war, to the Continental Congress, and was afterward chosen president of that body.

The Northwest Territory was formed in 1787, and General St. Clair received the appointment of governor. His home in Ligonier, Westmoreland county, was known as "Pott's Grove." He had made some improvements when his duties called him to Ohio. In the winter of 1790 he removed to Marietta with all his family, excepting his wife, who remained to superintend the homestead. His household at Marietta consisted of a son, Arthur St. Clair, Jr., and three daughters—Louisa, Jane and Margaret, and an aged colored woman who acted as cook. Arthur studied law, and engaged in practice in Cincinnati; Louisa was a young lady of 18; Jane was two years younger, "a girl of retiring manners and feeble constitution;" Margaret, the youngest child, died that year with fever. Louisa has been the subject of much comment. She was quick and vigorous both in mind and body. She seemed in her element amid the wild and dangerous surroundings of the period. She was often to be seen riding on a wild and spirited horse at full speed through the thick woods and over logs and streams. She was one of the best pedestrians at the garrison, and frequently came out victorious in walking or running races. She could shoot a rifle with the accuracy of a skilled woodsman, and was exceedingly fond of the chase. Although she had a passion for athletic sports, intellectual pursuits were by no means neglected. She had been educated with much care in Philadelphia.

Governor St. Clair was removed by President Jefferson a few months before the formation of the State government in 1803. He had suffered great financial loss, and the last years of his life were spent in poverty. He returned to his Pennsylvania farm and in vain appealed to Congress for a bounty. The Legislature of his State recognized his services by voting him an annuity of $300, which was afterwards increased to $600. He died on his farm in the Ligonier Valley, August 31, 1818.

ICHABOD NYE.

Was from Tolland, Connecticut. His ancestors, both on his mother's side and his father's, were English, and came from England to America in 1639. They were of those who came here to escape religious persecution. They first settled in Scituate, and then Barnstable, Massachusetts, the church to which they belonged coming over almost in a body. A part of the family after some years moved westward to Tolland, Connecticut. The father of Ichabod Nye was George Nye. His mother was Thankful Hinckley. George Nye owned a farm at Tolland on which he resided. December 21, 1763, Ichabod Nye was born. At the age of 15 he was apprenticed to a tanner in Hadley, for the purpose of learning the trade. In this it was considered he had an advantage not shared by his brothers who were reared on the farm. It is probable that he finished his apprenticeship, though he entered the Revolutionary Army at the early age of 16. Among the names of Revolutionary soldiers found at the State House in Boston is the following: "Ichabod Nye, age sixteen, five feet, eleven inches high; black hair; Colonel Porter's regiment, 1779." He afterwards served in Colonel Sear's regiment, which belonged to the Northern Army under Gates. He was with this branch of the army during the campaign which terminated with the surrender of Burgoyne at Saratoga.

In 1785 Ichabod Nye married Minerva, daughter of Gen. Benjamin Tupper. At the close of the war, they were residing with General Tupper, at Chesterfield, Massachusetts.

General Tupper, immediately on his return from the army in 1783, made known to his friends and neighbors his intention to go to the Western territory. They regarded it as mere talk on his part. He, however, immediately set about the formation of the Ohio Company. Mr. Nye has written: "I had engaged to come west to settle with him, and we began to prepare for the undertaking. Soon after the defeat of Shays, I began to collect timber to build wagons, and went with a sleigh to Williamsburg for timber of oak as there was none to be obtained in Chesterfield, nor was there a wagon fit for such a journey to be obtained in the State of Massachusetts, and but one man in our part of the State who could make one. I engaged him, however, and he built us two wagons, one for the family, or rather both families, and one for the goods and utensils belonging to them. With these we made our destination on the Ohio bank at Wellsburg, Virginia, in company with Colonel Cushing and family, Major Goodale and family, and were joined there by Major Coburn and family, and his son-in-law, Andrew Webster, and family. I left this company at Wellsburg and came overland on the Virginia side with the horses and two hired men, reaching Marietta ten days before them." They descended the river in the "Mayflower," which had been sent up for that purpose, and arrived at Marietta August 19, 1788. Their journey had occupied ten weeks, having been detained at Wellsburg, waiting for Major Coburn.

When these families arrived in Marietta, the Campus Martius was in process of building, but not finished. They occupied such houses as they could obtain near the Campus Martius, generally small log houses. General Tupper soon put up a dwelling in the Campus Martius, on the southwest side, on the ground afterward occupied by the residence of Ichabod

Nye. In September, 1788, Mrs. Nye wrote as follows to some friends in New England: "We now live in the city of Marietta, where we expect to end our days. We find the country much more delightful than we had any idea of." And in November Miss Rowena Tupper writes: "The country has been so often spoken of that it is needless for me to say more than that it answers every expectation." In 1790 Mr. Nye began to sink vats for a tanyard in the extreme northern portion of the town on Seventh street. These vats were built from the timbers of the boat in which his brother, Ebenezer Nye, had descended the river, and were the first tan vats in the Northwestern Territory. This situation was during the Indian war, which soon followed, a hazardous one, but no attack was made upon him there. He afterward sunk some vats near the upper end of Third street, but the ground was unfavorable, and he finally erected buildings near the corner of Seventh and Putnam streets, where the main building of the chair company now stands. At that time Putnam street was not opened beyond Fifth. It was at this place that the heaviest part of his business was carried on. His customers were from all parts of the surrounding country, and the reputation of the leather made there was of the highest character.

During the Indian war, Mr. Nye lived in General Tupper's house in the Campus Martius. His brother, Ebenezer Nye, with his family and Mrs. Kelley (a widow) with her children, lived in the Southeast Block-house. After the close of the war Ichabod Nye purchased the Southwest Block-house, which had been the residence of Governor St. Clair, and resided there until 1814. He owned four lots on the south end of the square, north of Scammel street, and he left the stockade and lived for a time in a house standing on the lot corner of Front and Scammel. In 1820 he built his dwelling house on the stockade, where he resided during the remainder of his life, and where two of his sons have always lived until 1880. In 1809 he erected the brick store on Putnam street now (1881) occupied by Jacob Pfaff as a bakery. The upper story was used for the Masonic lodge hall; the lower story for a store. In the spring of 1810 he opened a store in this building, in which he kept dry goods, groceries, shoes—in fact such goods as were in demand. In August, 1813, he entered into a partnership with Charles Shipman, and they removed the goods to Athens and opened a store there under charge of Mr. Shipman, then a young man. In 1816 this partnership was dissolved, and Mr. Nye reopened his store on Putnam street, Marietta. He had also formed, in 1805, a partnership with Col. Benjamin Tupper, his brother-in-law, and they had opened a store in Springfield, now the Ninth Ward of Zanesville, Ohio. He afterward withdrew from this partnership, and established two of his sons in the mercantile business with himself, one under the firm name of I. & A. Nye, and the other A. Nye & Co. These were also in Springfield. He finally transferred the goods from the Marietta store and the store of I. & A. Nye, in Putnam, to Waterford, Ohio. In March, 1819, A. T. Nye took charge of the business there, and in 1824 he purchased the stock and continued the business under his own name. After 1824 Ichabod Nye had no further interest in mercantile business.

Colonel Nye, as he was always called, having been commissioned in militia about 1804, was very little engaged in public business. He was a subscriber to the Muskingum Academy, and was always interested in educational matters. He was a member of the Masonic lodge in Marietta. In his youth his opportunities for obtaining an education were limited, but he was a man who read a great deal, and of the very best, and he also kept himself well informed on all public affairs. He had a strong and vigorous mind, and generally formed his own opinions. He was strongly attached to the administration of General Washington, and belonged to the Federal party as long as that party existed, and afterwards to the Whig party. He died November 27, 1840. His first wife, Minerva Tupper, died April 20, 1836. Their children who survived infancy were: Horace; Panthea, who married Rothius Hayward, of Waterford, Ohio; Arius, Anselm Tupper, Sophia, who married Rev. Cyrus Byington, of the Choctaw Mission; Rowena, who married William Pitt Putnam, of Belpre; Huldah, died June 22, 1838, not married; Ichabod Hinckley, Edward White. The only children who now survive (1881) are Anselm T. Nye, born in the Campus Martius, November 9, 1797, and Edward White Nye, born April 13, 1812. Ichabod Hinckley Nye, so well known and highly esteemed in Marietta, died at the homestead, on the stockade, in June, 1880. Colonel Nye married in 1840, Mrs. Rebecca Howe Beebe, who survived him some years.

Ebenezer Nye, brother of Ichabod Nye, settled in Rainbow. His descendants live in Athens, Meigs and Muskingum counties. From these two brothers are descended all of the name in Southeastern Ohio, who are of English descent.

MRS. REBECCA IVES GILMAN.

The center of a circle of cultured intellects during the period of early settlement was Rebecca Ives Gilman, wife of Joseph Gilman. She was the daughter of Benjamin Ives and granddaughter of Hon. Robert Hall, under whose direction a fine mind was stored with useful information, and a taste cultivated for polite literature. Her early associates were people of culture and education.

Mrs. Gilman was bright and fascinating in conversation. Her friendship was much sought and highly valued. But she never permitted her polite studies to interfere with domestic duty. She is described as a model housekeeper and mother. After the death of her husband in 1806, she lived in her own house at Harmar until 1812, when she removed with her son, Benjamin Ives Gilman, to Philadelphia, where she died in 1820.

MRS. MARY LAKE.

The name of Mary Lake was for many years a household word in the pioneer families of Marietta. Her example both in the Revolution and here demonstrated the capability of a kind hearted, strong minded woman in seasons of distress. Mary Bird was born in Bristol, England, in 1742. At the age of 20, she married Archibald Lake, a seaman, and moved to St. John, New Foundland. Here he followed fishing until the place came into possession of the French, when he removed to New York and engaged in ship-building. New York at an early period of the war was occupied by the British, and Mrs. Lake determined to be of use to her adopted countrymen, for she enlisted heartily in the American cause, deserted the city and went into the hospitals at Fishkill and then at New Windsor, where she was the comforting angel of many suffering soldiers. The war over her husband was at a loss for profitable employment, and welcomed the news of the opening of the new territory west of the Ohio, where he could find a home.

The family came to Marietta in 1789. Mrs. Lake's kindness of heart and skill in the sick room were soon found out. Her superior intelligence and purity of character, placed her in high esteem in the new settlement. In the spring of 1790 smallpox broke out in Campus Martus. Most of the physicians were young, and knew little of the disease. Her experienced services during this trying period were found of the highest value.

Mrs. Lake was a lady of intense purity, and wore all the graces of pure religion. She taught the first Sunday-school in the Territory. After the regular preaching service, Mrs. Lake gathered the children about her and instructed them from the Westminster Catechism and the Bible.

After the peace of 1795, she moved to the Rainbow settlement on the Muskingum, where she died in 1802, leaving an estimable family. Her grave is marked with a monument erected by the Sunday-school children of Ohio.

ISAAC AND REBECCA WILLIAMS.

During the toilsome period of early settlement two inhabitants of Virginia by kind offices so endeared themselves to the residents of this side, that a sketch of their lives belongs in this volume. The village facing the mouth of the Muskingum bears their name.

Isaac Williams was born in Pennsylvania in 1737. In early life his parents removed to Winchester, Virginia, then a frontier town. He was fond of hunting, and soon became acquainted with the out of the way places of the wild country in which he lived. When he was 18 years old the Colonial government employed him as a spy to watch the movements of the Indians. He served in the army of General Braddock, and was connected with the military movements in the west during the French and Indian War. He was one of the first settlers of Brooke County, (West) Virginia. He removed west about 1769. He had previously visited the Ohio on hunting and trapping expeditions, which he made annually. He accumulated large tracts of land by making entries under the Virginia laws. Clearing and planting one acre in corn entitled the holder to $400.

While residing in Brooke County he became acquainted with and married Rebecca Martin, a widow. Her first husband had been killed by the Indians.

Mr. Williams accompanied Lord Dunmore in his campaign against the Indians in 1774, and was present when the treaty was made near Chillicothe. Mrs. Williams had come to Virginia in 1771, and was living with her brothers near the mouth of Grave Creek. While living here an incident occurred which proves that she was a very remarkable woman. She made an expedition to her sister's, 50 miles down the river in a canoe. On her return, night overtook her, and she determined to go ashore and wait for the rising of the moon. On returning she found it necessary to wade a few steps to reach the canoe. When just in the act of stepping on board, her foot rested on the cold, dead body of an Indian who had been murdered a few days before. Without screaming, she stepped into the canoe and rowed on her way homeward.

In the spring of 1773 Joseph and Samuel

Tomlinson, her brothers, entered 400 acres of land in the bottom opposite the mouth of the Muskingum, which they presented to their sister Rebecca in consideration for previous services. In 1786, Fort Harmar having been built and garrisoned, Mr. and Mrs. Williams desired to occupy their land. Saplings had grown on the clearing made 15 years before, but the land was easily reduced to a state of cultivation.

This early settlement on the Virginia side was a fortunate circumstance for the early settlers of Marietta. Mr. Williams, by the time the New England colony arrived, had his farm under a good state of cultivation, and during the distressing famine of 1790 supplied the hungry pioneers on the other side of the river with corn, of which he had a large crop. Speculators, always ready to take advantage of peoples' misfortunes, urged him to take $1.25 a bushel for his whole crop. "Dod rot 'em," said the old man, "I would not let 'em have a bushel." When a purchaser came he proportioned the number of bushels to the number of members in the family, in order that he might be able to serve all alike. He charged no one more than 50 cents per bushel, the current price in plentiful years. In the fullest sense he improved his opportunity for doing good.

Rebecca was skilled in the healing art, and often relieved distressed pioneers and hunters by the application of simple remedies. Mr. and Mrs. Williams were always social, clever, and kind. They liberated their slaves in later years, and left them substantial tokens of friendship. Mr. Williams never missed an opportunity to indulge his passion for hunting, even in his old age. The citizens of Marietta mourned his death in September, 1820, as one of their own number.

COL. WILLIAM STACY.

A man highly esteemed for his many excellent qualities, and honored for his services and sufferings in the cause of freedom, has many descendants yet living in the county. He was a native of Massachusetts, and when the outbreak at Lexington aroused American patriotism, he was the first member of the New Salem militia company to renounce his allegiance to the king. The company was reorganized, and entered the American service with Mr. Stacy as captain.

In 1778 Captain Stacy was promoted to the rank of lieutenant-colonel of Col. Ichabod Alden's regiment of the Massachusetts Line. He was with his regiment on the perilous campaign, in 1778, against the Indians and Tories in the Cherry Valley, New York, and was a witness of the slaughter of November 11th, in Oneida County. Colonel Stacy was here taken prisoner, and was taken a distance of about 200 miles to an Indian village near the present site of Geneva. After a council of the chiefs, he was sentenced to be burned. The Indians were under the command of Joseph Brant whom Colonel Stacy saw in the surrounding crowd, while the fires were being kindled under him. It is said that he gave Brant the sign of Freemasonry, and that that chief, whose word was law, directed his release.

Colonel Stacy was held as a prisoner by the Indians for four years. After his release he returned to his farm at New Salem until 1789, when he removed with his five sons and one son-in-law with their family to Marietta. Two of the sons, John and Philemon, were victims of the attack on Big Bottom, January 2, 1791. John was killed, and Philemon was taken prisoner, and died in captivity. Gideon, the youngest son, settled in New Orleans, and established a ferry across Lake Pontchartrain. The remaining member of the family settled in this country.

After the death of his first wife Colonel Stacy married Mrs. Sheffield, a lady of high rank. He died at Marietta in 1804.

MAY, ANSELM TUPPER.

Eldest son of Gen. Benjamin Tupper, came to Marietta as one of the surveyors of the Ohio Company, April 7, 1788. Previous to that time he had been in the Western country with his father, engaged in the survey of the seven ranges.

General Tupper entered the service of his country immediately after the battle of Bunker Hill. At that time his son Anselm was very young, only 13, but he was with his father in an engagement on North River, in August, 1776. In 1779 when 16 years of age, he received the appointment of adjutant in the regiment of Colonel Sproat, of the Massachusetts Line, in which position he served until the close of the war. This regiment was engaged at Trenton, Princeton, Monmouth and other battles. Major Tupper enjoyed the confidence and personal friendship of his commanding officer.

Immediately upon their arrival at the Muskingum, in 1788, the surveyors began their work, and continued it until driven into the forts by the hostility of the Indians. During the Indian war, Major Tupper lived in the Campus Martius. He taught the first school opened there in the Northwest Block-house. He was a man of intellectual ability and especially in mathematics had the reputation of being a good scholar. He is said to have possessed a refined and polished address, and was of fine personal appearance and military bearing. An oil portrait exists, representing him when very young, in the uniform of the Massachusetts regimental officers. He was appointed post major of the Campus Martius, and continued in this position during the war. He was the favorite of the officers in the garrison, especially of Colonel Sproat, and his wit, sometimes in verse, seemed to give them great satisfaction though at their expense. On one occasion, when Colonel Sproat was left behind in a foot race with Dr. Story, the minister, Major Tupper wrote some lines, in which the following gave a momentary offense to Colonel Sproat:

It was a point, they all gave in,
Divinity could outstrip sin.

Some poetic pieces were written by him in connection with Masonic celebrations, he being a member of the Masonic lodge. His verses generally had for their subject some local event, among others "The Indian Feast," to commemorate the dinner given to the Indian chiefs at the Campus Martius. Another piece was a parody on the "Battle of the Kegs," and was called the "Battle of the Muskingum," a humorous account of the affairs which occurred at Marietta in connection with the capture of Blennerhassett's boats, usually called Burt's flotilla. This was published in a Lancaster paper, and afterwards in Safford's "Life of Blennerhassett."

About 1801 Edward W. Tupper engaged in ship building in Marietta. One of his vessels, the "Indiana," was built five miles up the Muskingum. Another, called the "Orlando," was built at the foot of Putnam street, Marietta. The "Orlando" went out under the command of Capt. Matthew Miner, and Major Tupper went out as second officer. The vessel arrived at New Orleans the fourth of July, 1804, and found the city in great commotion, celebrating the first Fourth of July since the cession of Louisiana to the United States government. They then crossed the Atlantic to the Mediterranean Sea, up to Trieste, at the head of the Adriatic. She was sold, and Major Tupper returned home by way of England. After his return to America he went to Gallipolis, to be with his brother, Edward. His health failing, he returned home to Marietta, where he died, December, 1808, at the house of his sister, Mrs. Ichabod Nye. He is buried in Mound Cemetery, by the side of his father, and near his old friend and commander, Colonel Sproat.

COL. BENJAMIN TUPPER.

Youngest son of General Tupper, was born in Chesterfield, Massachusetts. He came to Marietta with his father in 1788. In 1802 he married Martha Putnam, daughter of Gen. Rufus Putnam. For several years he was receiver of the United States Land Office at Marietta. In 1806 he removed to Springfield, afterwards Putnam, Ohio, and entered into mercantile business with his brother-in-law, Ichabod Nye.

He afterward formed another partnership, which continued until his death, in 1814. Of his children, but one is now (1881) living, Mrs. Catharine Munam, of Zanesville, Ohio. His only son, Benjamin, died some years since. His youngest grandson, Theodore Tupper, died on the battlefield at Shiloh, at the age of 19. His body was not recovered. In his death the name of Tupper became extinct in the family line of Gen. Benjamin Tupper.

GEN. JOSEPH BUELL.

Was not a member of the Ohio Company, but he was a soldier who spent two years in the western country before the pioneers arrived. The greater part of those two years he spent at Fort Harmar. He kept a diary, in which he describes the country west of the Ohio and the people who were then in it, and mentions many occurrences which, though apparently of small moment then, are now eagerly sought for as matters of history. In trying to reproduce some of the events of his life, we shall not dwell upon his ancestry or early youth. He was from Killingworth, Connecticut, where he was born February 16, 1760. His parents were David and Mary (Hurd) Buell, and he was the second of their twelve children. His first ancestor in America was William (1630), whose eldest son, Samuel, settled in Killingworth, now Clinton, Connecticut, in 1664.

At the age of 22, in September, 1785, Joseph Buell conducted a company of 94 recruits for the army from Hartford, Connecticut, to West Point, in the capacity of orderly sergeant. At West Point the men were assigned to Captain Strong's company of Colonel Harmar's regiment. November 20th the company was ordered to the western frontier. They marched across the mountains and arrived at Fort McIntosh, at the mouth of the Beaver River, on the Ohio, December 26, 1785, where they remained in barracks during the remainder of the winter. May 4, 1786, Captain Strong's company and that of Captain Zeigler embarked for the mouth of the Muskingum, where, on the west point, Fort Harmar had been built, though not completely finished, in the fall of 1785. They reached the fort on the 8th, but encamped outside at the edge of some woods until the 10th, when Captain Zeigler's company proceeded down the Ohio to the Miami, and Captain Strong's company moved into Fort Harmar.

On the 27th of May, 1787, Captain Strong's company was ordered to report at Post St. Vincent, now Vincennes. They descended the river in two keel-boats to Fort Finney, opposite Louisville, which they reached on the 31st. There they remained until July 8th, when they started for Post St. Vincent, arriving there on the 19th. After a very sickly summer, in which nearly half the men were unfit for duty, they were ordered to return to Fort Harmar, at which place they arrived November 21st.

The succeeding summer was spent at Fort Harmar. Early in November, Sergeant Buell obtained his discharge and returned to Connecticut.

In August, 1788, Sergeant Buell purchased 400 acres of land of Judge Symmes, at half a dollar an acre, paying one-half in cash, the other half to be paid in one year. It was his intention when he bought this to settle in the Miami country, of which he writes, "I think it exceeds any part of the Western world." Whatever may have been Mr. Buell's plans for ultimate settlement, he set his face toward home as soon as he had received his discharge from the army, and reached Killingworth November 27, 1788. After visiting his friends he taught school for three months, at the same time trying to perfect his plans for returning to the Western Country for settlement. February 15, 1789, he was married to Siba Hand. He seems to have felt much doubt about taking her into the new country, but finally decided to do so. He visited Joshua Shipman, of Saybrook, and bargained with him to furnish half the wagon and half the team which was to carry the two families to Ohio. By the first of May, however, Mr. Shipman had given up the plan, and this, with other difficulties, led Mr. Buell to leave his wife in New England for two years. In May, 1789, he set out for Marietta with his brother, Timothy, afterward sheriff of Washington County. Arriving safely at Marietta, Mr. Buell was joined by his friend, Levi Munsell, with whom he had been associated in the army, and they went to North Bend to join Judge Symmes' colony. Probably from fear of the Indians, they soon returned to Marietta, many others leaving North Bend for the same reason.

In 1790 Messrs. Buell and Munsell opened a tavern at "the Point," Marietta. This was a large frame building, and it was erected in 1789, on the lots at the corner of Front and Green streets. The frame of the building was made at the headwaters of the Ohio and floated down to Marietta. During the Indian war it was within the enclosure which formed "the Point" garrison. At this time Messrs. Buell and Munsell both lived there—Mrs. Buell having joined her husband in 1790, and Mr. Munsell having married a daughter of Col. Alexander Oliver, of Belpre.

In 1795, peace having been declared, life was once more infused into the plans of the colonists; men left the garrisons and went to their farms; others engaged in occupations in town. Mr. Buell remained in Marietta, and built for his own residence, in 1801, a brick house, on the corner of Green and Second streets. He also built, a year or two later, the brick house on "Boiler corner." The tavern business was continued under the charge of Mr. Munsell, and became about 1801 very remunerative to the proprietors. Owing to the activity in the business of ship-building many carpenters, calkers, and other artisans connected with the business came into Marietta and they largely patronized this tavern. In August, 1807, there were five ships on the stocks at Marietta. Soon after, in consequence of the embargo, the business was suddenly discontinued, and several prominent business men failed and left Marietta, and laborers connected with them were obliged to seek employment elsewhere. The tavern business suffered in consequence. Mr. Munsell left Marietta in a few years, and General Buell died in 1812; but the tavern was kept as a public house by other parties until about 1830. In 1832 Joseph Holden, who had bought the property, pulled down the old frame and erected brick buildings on the lots, in which he engaged in a mercantile business. About 30 years after, these buildings were remodeled (having escaped the great fire of 1859), and finally became the property of the First National Bank.

Mr. Buell became an adherent of Jefferson's administration. He was elected a member of the Ohio State Senate and served in the first, second, third and fourth assemblies—1803 to 1805. His military service had fitted him to take part in military affairs and he was appointed major general of militia, a position at that time a very responsible one. While he was major general the so-called "Burr conspiracy" arose, and Marietta became the scene of considerable military activity. In December, 1806, General Buell received an order from the Governor for the arrest of Blennerhassett and the prevention of certain "acts hostile to the tranquility and peace of the United States,"—i. e. the departure of the boats intended for the Burr expedition from the Muskingum. Acting under this authority, General Buell, with characteristic energy and method, took measures to arrest the bateaux, which had been building at Judge Joseph Barker's, on the Muskingum River. "These boats," writes one who saw them, "were very frail, built like a skiff, sharp at both ends, and sided up with thin weatherboarding and covered. There were 10 of them, of two or three tons each, and they were built under contract of Mr. Blennerhassett with Colonel Barker. They were called in derision 'Burr's flotilla.'"

One evening in December, 1806, the company of militia, from "the Point" (there were two companies in Marietta), passed up Front street to the Washington street landing. They entered a building there and prepared to remain for the night. Their purpose was not understood by those who saw them, and it was thought singular that the militia should be out at that hour. In the morning it became known that they had arrested nine of Burr's flotilla while attempting to pass down the river—one boat having gone on in the darkness.

A Marietta man, blind in one eye, named Clark Green, had sole charge of two of these boats to bring them down the river; two sons of Green, about 11 and 12 years old, managed another, and had one man each to work the balance—except one—and guide them. The boat which passed by had on it three young men from Belpre. The boats were taken by the militia down into the mouth of the run below Putnam street. They laid in the run until they began to decay, and in time men and boys broke them up and carried them off in pieces. A lot of parched corn taken from them was stored in General Buell's barn, and the academy boys used to go there and help themselves to it, filling their pockets. Mr. Blennerhassett made no effort to recover his property but was obliged to flee from his home.

After the arrest of the boats, General Buell proclaimed martial law, and the militia was ordered to be in readiness to appear, "armed and equipped as the law directs," immediately on the firing of the cannon. There was but one cannon in town. In the guard-house, a building which stood on Ohio street just above the "Boiler corner," a constant guard was kept. A gun was placed on the river bank, and all boats passing down the Ohio River were hailed and stopped; and as a further precaution all boats passing down the Muskingum were brought over to Marietta. These measures were taken in order to be prepared for any attempt to rescue the captured bateaux from the direction of Blennerhassett's Island, and to stop any men or supplies which might attempt to pass down to aid Burr's expedition. The whole country from Pittsburg to New Orleans was in a state of great excitement, and Burr made no attempt to resist but endeavored to conceal himself.

In carrying out the orders of the Governor, General Buell obeyed as a soldier, having no other idea than to do his duty. The position of major-general he held until his death. From 1803 to 1810 General Buell was associate judge in the Court of Common Pleas. The appointment to his office under the State Constitution was made by the Legislature.

General Buell died in Marietta, June 13, 1812. He is buried in Mound Cemetery. Mrs. Buell died in 1831. Of their eight children, those best known in Marietta were: Daniel Hand, Hiram Augustas, Joseph and Siba (Mrs. William Slocumb).

Daniel Hand Buell, the eldest child of General Joseph Buell, was born October 1, 1790. His early childhood was spent in the garrison at "the Point." When of a suitable age he was sent to New England to be educated, returning to Marietta when about 21 years of age, he spent the remainder of his life in that place. While he was still a young man his father died, and the management of the estate and the care of the family interests devolved chiefly upon him. In 1814 he was engaged in editing the newspaper called the American Friend, of which he was one of the owners. He was one of the founders of Marietta Library in 1829, which was for many years an institution highly prized by the reading public. As a public man he stood high in the estimation of his fellow citizens, and held several important offices. He was for many years justice of the peace, and was mayor of the city. June, 1817, to October, 1834, he was county recorder. From 1825 to 1829 he was postmaster. In 1830 he was County Commissioner. He was in the latter part of his life an earnest worker for the Episcopal Church in Marietta, of which he was a member, doing much to aid it financially, and performing the office of lay reader when the church was destitute of a pastor. After a long and painful illness he died, October 12, 1843. His second wife, Theodosia Hall Buell, survived him and died in 1875. His sons became citizens of Marietta. Charles Ferdinand, the eldest, died in June, 1881. He was a member of the Marietta bar. Edward W. and William H. Buell entered the drug business as partners when they were very young. They were also largely engaged as partners in the oil business for several years previous to 1869. Edward

W. Buell died in May, 1875, and William H. in 1891.

Hiram A. Buell, fourth son of Gen. Joseph Buell, was born in Marietta, May 29, 1801, and was well known in that place when a young man. He was for some years in the recorder's office as an assistant, and was also engaged in other business in connection with his brother, Daniel H. Buell. In 1833 he left Marietta and went to Holly, in Western New York, where he established himself in business as a merchant, with his brother, Joseph. This partnership, cemented by brotherly affection, was dissolved by the death of Hiram A. Buell, February 24, 1875.

Joseph Hand Buell, born February 22, 1809, the youngest child of Gen. Joseph Buell, left Marietta and engaged in business with his brother Hiram in Holly, New York.

REV. DANIEL STORY.

Dr. Cutler was happy in his selection of a chaplain for the Ohio Company. Dr. Story was well qualified for the place which he filled for about 15 years, first in the employ of the Ohio Company and then of the Congregational Church, or of the First Religious Society as it was known.

He was born in Boston in 1755. Judge Story, the eminent lawyer, was his uncle. He graduated at Dartmouth College. Dr. Story's connection with the religious history of the early settlement has been sufficiently sketched elsewhere. His services in the ministry before coming to Marietta gave promise of usefulness and the choice of Dr. Cutler was received with great satisfaction. His sermons were logical and scholarly, his conversation interesting and his manners agreeable. The last two circumstances were particularly fortunate, for his salary was extremely meagre and generous friends had to be depended upon for relief. He was compelled to mortgage his property in New England to support his contingent expenses, and after death his estate was found insolvent. He severed his connection with the church as pastor March 15, 1804, on account of poor health. His death occurred on the 15th of the following December.

JOHN MATTHEWS,

Son of Daniel Matthews and Huldah Putnam, was born in Brookfield, Massachusetts, the 18th of December, 1765. At the age of 15, he ran away from home and enlisted in the Revolutionary Army, serving under Gen. Rufus Putnam, his mother's brother. He served for three years and the fortitude and endurance displayed by one so young were remarkable. He was present at the surrender of Cornwallis.

When in his 21st year, John Matthews joined the party of pioneers sent out by the Ohio Company, and was one of that little band of 48 who first landed at the mouth of the Muskingum. Later he was appointed one of the surveyors of the Northwest Territory, together with Rufus Putnam, R. J. Meigs, Ebenezer Sproat and Anselm Tupper. In 1789 or 1790 while young Matthews was in charge of a surveying party, his party was attacked by the Indians and all were killed excepting himself and two others. They escaped only by the timely aid of some men who were making their way down the Ohio River in a flat-boat. They cautiously put for shore for Matthews and his companions and all reached Fort Washington in safety.

In 1791, John Matthews was associated in business with William Bull, a New York agent. In 1800, 1801 and 1802, he was engaged with Colonel Sproat in locating land-warrants. A little later he set up a store at Marietta in partnership with his brother, Increase Matthews. He was also concerned in a store at Lancaster in company with Elnathan Scofield.

In 1803 he was married to Sarah Woodbridge and settled upon a farm at Moxahala, in Muskingum County. During that same year he built the first sawmill on the Ohio and when the first plank was sawed, it was considered an event of such importance that it was carried from Moxahala to Zanesville on the shoulders of four men, accompanied by a band of music.

Mr. Matthews devoted much of his time to fancy gardening and brought to Ohio the first fancy fruits, such as peaches, pears and plums. He was also associated in business for some years with Ed. Buckingham. In 1820, he was elected Senator. Thomas Hammond speaks of John Matthews as "a man of fine principles, true to his convictions, faithful in every accepted trust, steadfast in friendship and unyielding in his opposition to what he believed to be wrong or of questionable utility, modest and retiring in disposition, and always an earnest and devout churchman, being an Episcopalian in belief."

—Thomas Hammond

EPHRAIM CUTLER,

Eldest son of Rev. Dr. Manasseh Cutler, was born in Martha's Vineyard, Massachusetts, April 13, 1767. At the age of three years he was placed with his grandfather, Hezekiah Cutler, in Killingly, Connecticut, and remained with his grandparents until their death, when, having lands in the Ohio Company's Purchase, he determined to remove to the Northwest Territory. He began this journey with his wife and four children on the 15th of June, 1795, and reached Marietta September 18th, having been three months on the way, and buried two of his children in the wilderness between Simrell's Ferry and Marietta.

The first location was at Waterford, where he engaged for a short time in mercantile business, but in 1799 he moved with his family to lands he owned in Ames township, now Athens County. In 1806 he located in Warren, and built the stone house which continued to be his residence until his death in 1853.

His life was one of great activity and usefulness. He contributed his full share to the work of laying the foundations of civil society and material prosperity in the section of country which he had chosen for a home.

He received, in 1796, the appointments from Governor St. Clair of captain of militia, justice of the peace and quarter sessions, and judge of the Court of Common Pleas. In 1801 he was elected a member of the Territorial Legislature, and subsequently, in 1802, a member of the convention that formed the first Constitution of Ohio. In the convention he took a prominent part in securing the adoption of the clauses that excluded slavery from the State, and made the encouragement of schools and education obligatory upon future legislatures.

In these matters of most vital importance to a new commonwealth he followed up, in practical application upon the soil of Ohio, the same principles or organic law that had been placed in the ordinance of 1787 by the efforts of his father, Dr. Manasseh Cutler, when he negotiated with Congress for the purchase of lands for the Ohio Company.

He also exerted himself successfully in introducing into the Constitution a judiciary system, which, in opposition to a proposed Virginia plan, brought the courts of justice within convenient reach of all the people, instead of compelling them to resort with their suits to the political center of the States.

He was appointed by the Territorial Legislature one of the commissioners to take charge of the school and ministerial lands in this part of the State, and to provide for their lease and improvement.

In 1819 he was elected to the Legislature where he devoted himself unceasingly to the accomplishment of two of the most important objects that ever engaged the attention of that body. One was an ad valorem system of taxation—the mother a system of common schools. Although the Constitution had imposed a positive obligation upon the law making power to encourage schools, nothing had been done or attempted until he introduced the first bill in 1819, providing for a school system. He was a member of either the lower House or the Senate until 1825, and had the satisfaction of seeing both of his favorite measures so far matured that it could be said that Ohio had systems of taxation and schools. These systems have both progressed in their application to growing wants, and have been perfected by subsequent legislation; but at no period of their progress was more ability, industry and energy required than was given to them in their incipient stage by Ephraim Cutler.

In presenting the unjust burden imposed upon this section of Ohio by the prevailing system of taxation, under which lands in Hamilton County worth $50 per acre paid no more tax than our land worth 50 cents per acre, Dr. Andrews in his "History of Washington County" thus alludes to Mr. Cutler's success:

In the winter of 1816-20 Judge Ephraim Cutler, a representative from this county, introduced into the Legislature a joint resolution that property should be taxed according to its true value, which passed the house of representatives. In the fall of 1823 he was elected to the Senate and again renewed his efforts to secure a reform in the revenue system. He was appointed the chairman of the committee on the revenue. The project of a canal between Lake Erie and the Ohio River had come up, and Judge Cutler had succeeded in convincing the friend of that measure that it must inevitably fail unless based upon a broad, judicious and equitable system of taxation. To him more than any other are we indebted for the law then enacted. The language of his contemporaries clearly shows that he was regarded as the author.

Hon. Samuel F. Vinton writes from Washington, December 21, 1824: "We ought to offer up our most unceasing prayers that your plan for the equalization of taxes may at the same time be adopted. Without it, inevitable ruin would await the sparse peopled and sterile parts of the State. In fact, those parts of the State will be virtually ruined under the present system of taxation in defraying the ordinary expenses of the government.

"Ingenuity, in my opinion, could not devise a system more unequal, unjust and offensive. I am decidedly in favor of improving the inland navigation of the State by canals, if possible, but I hope you will perseveringly press upon the Legislature your plan of taxation in conjunction with it."

Hon. Eleutheros Cooke, in a letter dated Sandusky, October 13, 1828, thus speaks of Mr. Cutler's services: "As the author and founder of our new and excellent system of revenue and taxation, I shall ever consider you as richly entitled to the gratitude of the State. In this part of the country you are known as the author."

Caleb Atwater, in a letter to Judge Cutler, dated Circleville, January 22, 1825, says: "You are doing nobly. Press forward with your equal taxation, the school system, the canals, and immortalize this Legislature. What must be your sensations on the prospect you now have of carrying into effect the greatest objects ever presented to our Legislature. Press forward I say in your career of doing good. Posterity will call you blessed."

Henry Dana Ward writes: Shrewsbury, Massachusetts, August 14, 1825. "I have heard from you and of you through my brother (Nahum Ward, Esq., of Marietta), and have felt with you and for you in wishing your revenue and school bills into legislative being, and now rejoice with you in the commencement of the grand Ohio and Lake Erie Canal, and pray that the school bill may go into as effectual operation as the revenue law. These are great works, long and ardently desired, and perseveringly labored for. You have borne a distinguished part in giving them life, and I hope they may long continue a source of satisfaction to you."

Nahum Ward, Esq., writes, Marietta, Ohio, January 12, 1825: "We are greatly indebted to you for your services in the Senate and all acknowledge it."

He was positive and earnest in his political views, and never swerved from his convictions upon questions of National policy. In his youth he adopted the principles that governed Washington, Adams, and their compeers, and thus incurred the stigma of Federalist. This, of course, was enough to shut his way to political promotion or success, but it is true that no man in Ohio, in 1825, stood higher as a statesman of integrity, ability, and comprehensive views of State policy than himself.

He was ever the active promoter of every useful public enterprise and accepted an appointment from the citizens of Marietta in 1837, and again in 1839, to visit Baltimore for the purpose of securing the examination of a railroad route to the Ohio River, with a view to making Marietta its crossing point.

In 1839, he represented the Whigs of this district at the national convention that nominated General Harrison for president.

In 1836 he was a member of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church which met in Pittsburg, and also in 1837 at their meeting in Philadelphia, at which time the separation of the church into "Old School" and "New School" took place.

He was early appointed a member of the Board of Trustees of the Ohio University at Athens, and gave the interests of that institution his constant and devoted attention for many years.

In all the private relations of life he was faithful and true to his personal obligations: as husband, father, neighbor, and friend. In 1828, he united with the Presbyterian Church in Warren, then in its infancy, and continued as a member, ruling elder and Sabbath-school teacher, to be during his life one of its main supports and ornaments. On the 8th of July, 1853, he was gathered to his fathers—a shock of corn fully ripe.

He was one of the busy workers, who at the right time, and in their appointed sphere, "dug deep and laid broad the foundations of many generations." Such labors may not be heeded, may even be desecrated and destroyed—but history must make their record "well done."

DAVID PUTNAM.

Third son of Col. Israel Putnam, and grandson of Gen. Israel Putnam, was born in Pomfret, Windham County, Connecticut, February 24, 1769. He was graduated at Yale College in the class of 1793. After his graduation, with the view to entering upon a mercantile life, he accepted a place on a vessel in a voyage to London in the winter of 1794. A journal kept at the time describes the seasickness and discomfort of the voyage, the abuse of an arbitrary and domineering captain, the disgusting association of an ignorant and wicked crew, and the utter distaste for the life on which he had entered. After a rough and dangerous passage, the vessel was wrecked on the coast of France, the officers and crew making a narrow escape to land. Here they were detained some months, mostly in the city of Nantes, with short rations and general distress, in the period of the French Revolution, and the attempt to improve the morals and prosperity of the country, by the substitution of a tenth, instead of a seventh portion of time for rest and relaxation. The journal is a graphic description of the prevailing wretchedness. It says, March 4, 1795:

Since we have been in Nantes, we have lived twenty of us in one chamber, have had two very scanty meals of victuals, one about 12 o'clock, the other at 8 in the evening, consisting of tripe, lights, a little veal, etc., all cooked after the French fashion, and a half pound bread per day, which we draw from the commissary store—for such fare the American consul pays 110 livres per day.

He availed himself of the first opportunity to return to the United States, and landed in New York July 2, 1795. On meeting an acquaintance, he was informed of the removal of his father's family (during his absence) from the home in Pomfret to the then distant Ohio, and says: "It was unexpected, it surprised, and in some respect agitated my mind—my plans were disconcerted. I returned on board, walked the deck, was pleased, disappointed and pleased again, was miserable, was alone, was happy."

Mr. Putnam's brief experience abroad proved an effectual cure for a desire of mercantile life or foreign travel.

He taught school in Brooklyn, Connecticut, during the winter of 1795, and during the following year made a brief visit to Ohio. He then, for about two years, pursued the study of law with Hon. Calvin Goddard, of Plainfield, Connecticut. On the 16th of September, 1798, he was married to Betsey Perkins, daughter of Dr. Elisha Perkins, of Plainfield. They came, immediately after, on horseback, to Marietta, where he commenced the practice of law. He became the teacher of the Muskingum Academy in Marietta, established about this time, the first institution of the kind in the Northwest Territory. He was postmaster in Marietta from 1800 to 1802. In 1805 he built the stone residence on Front street in Harmar (now occupied by a grandson), where he continued until his death in 1856. He became cashier of the Bank of Marietta at its organization in or about 1807 (Gen. Rufus Putnam, Benjamin Ives Gilman, Paul Fearling, William Skinner and others, directors or stockholders), the business being done at his residence in Harmar until about the year 1815, when the bank was transferred to Marietta, and a new cashier appointed.

He continued in the practice of law nearly 30 years, and then retired from it, to an extensive agency which had devolved on him in connection with the lands in the Ohio Company's Purchase. This he continued until the year 1845, when at the age of 75 he relinquished it to his son.

He was a faithful adherent, during his active life, of the First Religious Society of Marietta. He donated the lots now occupied by the Congregational Church and parsonage in Harmar, and was a liberal contributor to the erection of their meeting-house.

Mr. Putnam had no aspiration for public life or political distinction, but in his sphere of a private citizen, was known, recognized and honored as a firm, reliable and intelligent friend of order, morals, education and religion. He died at his homestead in Harmar, March 31, 1856, aged eighty-seven.

NATHAN WARD.

Although the subject of this sketch did not come to Marietta until 20 years after the beginning of the settlement, he has probably contributed as much as any other man who ever lived in the county to its agricultural development. Born at Shrewsbury, Massachusetts, October 23, 1785; he received such education as the schools of his town afforded and the higher training given at Leicester Academy. His commercial education he acquired as a clerk in the store of his uncle, a Mr. Brigham, and in a small store of his own, for which his father had furnished the capital. Mr. Ward was a grandson of Artemus Ward, the senior major-general of the Revolutionary Army. He came to Marietta in June, 1809, with letters of introduction to Gen. Rufus Putnam. He remained about six weeks visiting the different parts of the Ohio

Company's Purchase, then returned to Shrewsbury on horseback. In 1811 he returned to Marietta to become a citizen, and began making purchases of land belonging to shareholders of the Ohio Company or their successors. He thus secured more than 37,000 acres of land lying principally within the counties of Washington, Athens, Morgan, Gallia, Lawrence, and Meigs.

One of the first of his measures for the settlement and improvement of his great tracts of land fell short of its full effect through circumstances entirely beyond his knowledge. Conceiving the idea that the Scotch would make an industrious, frugal and intelligent element in the agricultural districts, he went to Scotland in the fall of 1822 for the purpose of bringing over a colony of the "canny people." He published in Edinburgh a small pamphlet giving descriptions of the country, derived principally from the pamphlet of Dr. Manasseh Cutler, printed at Salem, Massachusetts, in 1787; from the works of Thomas Hutchins, United States geographer, and from the Ohio press. A letter from Return Jonathan Meigs, Postmaster General of the United States and ex-Governor of Ohio, and a note from the United States consul in Edinburgh were published on the inner leaf of the cover and served as Mr. Ward's credentials. Mr. Ward was so far successful in his measure that he induced about 175 persons to emigrate to the United States and to the lands which he owned. But the season when they arrived—the summer of 1823—was one during which a terrible epidemic prevailed in Marietta and all the Ohio River region. Nearly all of the Scotch emigrants were stricken down with fever, and thus afflicted, and some of their number dying, these people began their life in a strange land. To the credit of Mr. Ward, be it said, that he was unremitting in his attentions to the unfortunate foreigners. He hired large public rooms for their comfortable lodging, and supplied them with medical attendance and nurses. Many of the descendants of these Scotch emigrants who settled on Mr. Ward's lands now live in Barlow and Wesley townships, and form one of the best elements of the population of Washington County.

Personal interest, a laudable pride and public spirit combined, led this great land owner to make the most thorough and systematic improvements. His farms throughout the southeastern part of the State—40 or 50 in Washington County—could be easily distinguished by their fine buildings, neat fences, well cultivated acres, and general appearance of thrift. Along many of the country roads Mr. Ward set out shade trees. Taste and utility were alike thought of. He lent aid to the building of many country school houses, and contributed liberally to every turnpike, bridge, or other improvement of value to the public.

The fact that nearly all of Mr. Ward's farms were improved before they were sold redounded to the advantage of the purchasers and the tenants by whose labor those improvements were made, having easy terms of rental, also prospered. In many cases the renters became the owners. It was the theory of Mr. Ward that the best condition of the country was attained when the greatest number of people possible secured homes, and so, becoming fixed, had a permanent interest in the welfare of the community. Most of his land was sold in small parcels, and to men of small means. Many of the purchasers were people who had absolutely no capital but their industry. In selling to hundreds, or perhaps thousands, of this class, it was only natural that many cases should occur in which the buyer was unable to fulfill his contract. And it is a notable fact that in no one of these cases did the proprietor foreclose the property. In every instance he made a settlement with the occupant of the farm forfeited by non-fulfillment of the contract, either refunding any payments already made, or making suitable compensation for improvements put upon it. Hundreds of well-to-do farmers in Southeastern Ohio, who bought their lands of Mr. Ward by paying annual installments, can attest the perfect equity of his business method and the liberality of his terms. And yet he did not escape entirely the obloquy which usually bears upon the large land-owner and dealer. While he never brought suit for foreclosure against those who were unable to pay for lands, Mr. Ward left no legal means unused in his dealings with other real estate owners, and would contest a title, when he believed justice was upon his side, as long as a vestige of hope remained. Becoming the owner of nearly all the shares of the Ohio Company, he obtained an amount of Georgia Revolutionary certificates, which, owing to an irregularity in their issue, had not been included in the partition of the Company's property, and remained as its only undivided assets.

Mr. Ward's home was the house on the north side of Putnam street, between Front and Second, built by Gen. Edward W. Tupper. When he purchased it, in 1817, it was the largest and most elegant residence in Marietta, and an appropriate dwelling for a man of Mr. Ward's tastes and hospitality. It stood in the rear of the lots now occupied by the Citizens National Bank, by Strecker Brothers, and others. Among other distinguished visitors whom he entertained here was General La Fayette, whom he had visited in Paris, and whose visit to this county, by the way, was largely the result of Mr. Ward's solicitation and his representations of the deep interest that the people of the United States felt in him.

The kindness of his nature was exhibited in the constant exercise of benevolence. Through various channels, religious and secular, private and public, he contributed aid to individuals and to causes. The greatest of his benevolent acts, however, was that which supplied the Unitarians of Marietta with a house of worship. He had been an adherent of the Unitarian faith from his early manhood, and in middle life began to labor zealously to establish a society of the denomination in Marietta. "At length," says a biographer, "as advancing years admonished him that whatever was to be done must be done quickly, he determined to build a church and organize a society, and leave the rest to this silent influence of the testimony of truth, and to the gradual softening of prejudice and increase of freedom." The church (upon the corner of Putnam and Third streets) was completed and dedicated with appropriate services June 4, 1857, at a cost to Mr. Ward of not less than $25,000. The edifice was donated to the First Unitarian Society, and Mr. Ward, not resting satisfied with what he had done, continued to promote, by every means in his power, the well-being of the society. Ever since his arrival in Marietta he had endeavored to further the growth of Unitarian sentiment by personal persuasion and by the distribution of tracts. Whenever he prepared for a journey through the country, he was accustomed to fill one of his saddle bags with tracts of the American Unitarian Association, which he gave to those with whom he came in contact during his travels.

He died April 6, 1860. His son, William S. Ward, died in 1871. William's daughter, Agnes, is the wife of Governor A. B. White, of West Virginia. Three daughters of Nahum Ward, Mrs. W. L. Ralston, Mrs. Charles B. Rhodes, and Mrs. Goodrich Barber, reside in Marietta.

GEN. RUFUS R. DAWES.

Representative Citizens

---

EN. RUFUS R. DAWES was born at Malta, Morgan County, Ohio, July 4, 1838. He was one of a family of six children, of whom he was the second son and fifth child. His father, Hon. Henry Dawes, was of good old Revolutionary stock, a grandson of the William Dawes who rode with Paul Revere on his momentous ride. His mother, Sarah (Cutler) Dawes, was the daughter of Judge Ephraim Cutler, and granddaughter of the famous Dr. Manasseh Cutler. Thus he came from distinguished ancestry on both sides, his forefathers having taken an important part in the establishment both of our nation and of our state. His prominence has but sustained the family tradition.

His youth was spent in Constitution, Ohio, near Marietta, and Malta, and although he began his collegiate course in the University of Wisconsin, he came back to Marietta College to finish the last two years, and was graduated there in the class of 1860. In that year, he accompanied his father to Wisconsin, where he engaged in business, but did not long continue. In April, 1861, Fort Sumter was fired upon. On the day after it fell, April 15, President Lincoln called for 75,000 volunteers to put down the Rebellion. The young man could not refuse his country's summons, and on April 25, only 10 days later, he began to gather volunteers. He was a good type of the splendid young manhood of the nation who rushed to the front in those first months of the war, and whose only fear was that they would be too late for any actual service in the conflict. Service enough they saw, but they did not flinch. The pledge which young Dawes drew up and signed was this: "We, the undersigned, agree to organize an independent military company, and to hold ourselves in readiness to respond to any call to defend our country and sustain our government."

A company was quickly raised and mustered in for three years, and Mr. Dawes was elected its captain, without opposition. It was soon accepted and became Company K, in the 6th Reg., Ohio Vol. Inf., which in turn was a part of the so-called "Iron Brigade."

Both were famous organizations and saw the hardest service. The "Iron Brigade" suffered a greater proportion of loss, in men killed, than any in the Union Army, and the Sixth Wisconsin, which General Dawes afterward commanded, stood, it is said, 10th in this respect, among the two thousand regiments which were actually under fire.

In the battle of Gettysburg, Colonel Dawes came out with only half his men, and in some other battles the proportion was almost as high. During the first year, he and his regiment were spared actual fighting, a time of respite which was well employed in drill; but from August, 1862, until the end of the war there was no lack of engagements. The regiment was in twenty or more pitched battles, and took part in all the great conflicts fought in the East.

"At Gettysburg this regiment took a most important part, and one which will ever make it and its commander historic. On the morning of July 1, Lieutenant-Colonel Dawes, commanding the Sixth Wisconsin, arrived on the scene of battle at a most critical juncture, when Cutler's brigade was being driven back near the Cashtown turnpike, by a Confederate brigade under command of Gen. Joseph R. Davis. Upon the issue of the engagement then in progress with the Confederates under Davis and Archer hung the possession of Cemetery Hill, and upon the holding of Cemetery Hill hung the issue of the battle of Gettysburg itself.

"In his official report, referring to the time when Cutler's regiments were overpowered and driven back, Gen. Abner Doubleday says: 'The moment was a critical one, involving the defeat, perhaps the utter rout, of our forces. I immediately sent for one of Meredith's regiments, the 6th Wisconsin, a gallant body of men, who I knew could be relied upon, and Lieutenant-Colonel Dawes, their commander, ordered a charge, which was gallantly executed.' The fire of Colonel Dawes' men checked the headlong advance of the Confederates, who halted in a railroad cut, 175 paces from the turnpike fence, where his men were in line.

"Colonel Dawes' horse had been shot from under him, and he was unmounted. Climbing the fence, under fire, with his regiment, the wonderful charge of the Sixth Wisconsin was made under his command. In the face of the awful fire delivered from the railroad cut, the only orders of the young commander were, 'Align on the color! Close up on that color! Close up on that color!' And by the side of the flag of the Union, as it fell and then was lifted and then fell and then was lifted once again, with 180 men dead or wounded, of the 420 who started at the fence, Colonel Dawes, with the remnant of his regiment, reached the railroad cut and received the surrender of the Second Mississippi Regiment.

"It was an awful, though glorious, day for the 'Iron Brigade.' On that bright morning 1,800 men had marched in its ranks. In the evening, of that heroic band but 700 were left.

How hard the service was, the muster-roll, as has been said, shows."

It was a magnificent regiment, magnificently led.

In August, 1864, at the close of his term of service, the subject of this sketch was honorably discharged. Grant then had Lee securely shut up in Petersburg, and the hard fighting was nearly over.

During the period of his service he had from time to time received well deserved promotion; he was major in 1862, and lieutenant-colonel in 1863, colonel in 1864, and finally, at the close of the war, brigadier-general by brevet, and by this well-won title he was henceforth known. The battle record of General Dawes is as follows: At Rappahannock, August 26, 1862, he served as major; Gainesville, August 26, 1862, as major; Bull Run (2nd), August 29, 30, 31, 1862, as major; South Mountain, September 14, 1862, as major; Antietam, September 16 and 17, as major commanding; Fredericksburg, December 13, 14 and 15, 1862, as major commanding; Fitz Hugh's Crossing, April 29 to May 3, 1863, as lieutenant-colonel; Gettysburg, July 1, 2, and 3, 1863, as lieutenant-colonel commanding; Mine Run, November 27, 1863, as lieutenant-colonel commanding; the Wilderness, May 5 and 6, 1864, as lieutenant-colonel; Spottsylvania Court House, May 8, 9 and 10, 1864, as lieutenant-colonel commanding; the Bloody Angle, May 12 and 13, 1864, as lieutenant-colonel commanding; North Anna, May 23 to 25, 1864, as lieutenant-colonel commanding; Tolopotomy, May 28 to 31, 1864, as lieutenant-colonel commanding; Bethesda Church, May 30, 31, 1864, as lieutenant-colonel commanding; Cold Harbor campaign, May 3 to June 9, 1864, as lieutenant-colonel commanding; Petersburg campaign, June 15 to July 30, 1864, as lieutenant-colonel commanding; and Mine Explosion, July 30, 1864, as colonel commanding. General Dawes was commissioned major, June 21, 1862. He was commissioned colonel July 5, 1864, and was honorably discharged by reason of expiration of term of service, August 10, 1864. On May 22, 1866, he was appointed brigadier-general by brevet, on account of meritorious service rendered in the foregoing list of battles.

What sort of a man and soldier he seemed to his comrades may be inferred from a few extracts of letters written by them at the time of his death. Thus: "I know I but voice the sentiments of the entire brigade and all the officers who had the pleasure of his acquaintance, when I say that he was one of the fairest, coolest, and bravest of commanders." Another writes: "As an officer he was vigilant and painstaking to the extreme, conscientious in the discharge of his duties, untiring in his efforts to perfect himself in the arts of war; a father to his men, but strict in his discipline. In battle he was coolness and bravery personified."

And this further, still higher praise, from the same source: "As a young man he was pure, chaste in his language and his conduct. I never heard him utter a word amongst men that could not be repeated before the most refined woman." Still another: "I have seen your father so many, many times in positions where it tried the souls of the bravest men, I never saw him quail or flinch. I have seen him bearing the flag of the regiment in more than one desperate fight until some of us would force it from his hands. I have seen him, in the heat of summer and the rain and snows of winter, on the march and in camp, always and ever a true soldier and gentleman. He never swore, drank or used coarse language when most of them around him were proficient in these traits." Again: "He was my ideal commander, ever ready, alert, and efficient in every startling emergency, doing the right thing on the spur of the moment, watchful for the safety of his men, while seemingly oblivious to his own danger. His heroic presence, clear, ringing voice and erect figure inspired his men—one and all—to do their whole duty. He was born a leader of men, and we of the rank and file appreciated him as such. He was the manliest man of a manly regiment. His personal character was not only without reproach, but he was also a shining example of chivalric gentleness. When occasion required, he was the stern officer and wise counsellor. Camp life and army surroundings never tainted his gentlemanly instincts. He was a noble man, and his hopeful words, in the darkest days of the rebellion, as to the successful outcome of the war, yet linger in my memory."

Such was his career in the great war. Naturally his interest in military matters continued unabated. The great events of the mighty struggle offered a field of research in which he delighted, and one of the fruits of this study was a book of most graphic and delightful personal reminiscences, entitled, "Service with the Sixth Wisconsin Volunteers."

He was a member of the Loyal Legion and of the G. A. R. Even as shortly before his death as Decoration Day, 1899, the boys of the cadet corps of the Marietta High School marched up to his house, and the general, putting on his old uniform and looking, broken veteran as he was, every inch a soldier still, addressed them on patriotism and duty—a message the boys will not soon forget. But, to take up the story again,—the war was over, and, he, still a young man, turned, like the thousands of his comrades, to the duties of peace. He settled at once in Marietta, close to his boyhood home, and entered upon a business career which continued, with little interruption, until his death. An important interruption, however, occurred, which constituted another chapter in his life. He had served his country on the battle-field, and it was destined that his work should be continued in legislative halls and political life. General Dawes had won a wide reputation as an orator. Clear, eloquent, effective, and popular, in the best sense of the word, it was inevitable that a political career should be his lot. He was a party man, but always in an honorable, open way; and as such, after conspicuous service, he was, in 1880, nominated by the Republicans, and elected to Congress. There his career was most honorable. Especially in all the debates of those years on military matters, his was an influential voice, and an important piece of legislation—the establishment of diplomatic relations with Persia—was wholly due to his initiative. It was, therefore, a most graceful act when President McKinley, in 1897, offered to him the position of minister to Persia, even though he could not accept it. General Dawes was renominated for Congress in 1882, but failed of election; and in 1889 he was one of the leading candidates for the nomination as Governor of Ohio. If less conspicuous, his services to his country have been no less honorable in his civil than in his military career, and but for failing health they doubtless would have gone much further.

General Dawes found time in his busy life for other public activities. He was a loyal citizen of Marietta, thoroughly and wisely interested in its welfare, and ready for any service. He was deeply interested in temperance reform. He did admirable practical work on this line in the army, and was subsequently known as a most earnest and effective platform speaker in this good cause.

The General's eloquent voice was often raised, and his powerful influence exerted, in behalf of good government and social reform: He was deeply interested in the Ohio institution for Deaf and Dumb, of which he was a trustee for four years. What Marietta College, his alma mater, was to him, all friends of the college know well. From 1871 until his death he served on its Board of Trustees, and gave to the institution that he loved his best thought and constant sympathy. After he was disabled, to secure his presence, the meetings of the Board were regularly held in his parlor, and his wise counsel and encouragement were felt to be of the greatest value. Marietta College owes an untold debt of gratitude to General Dawes. He was one of the original Board of Trustees of the First Presbyterian Church, of Marietta, having been chosen in 1865, and continued thus until the end of his life, being president of the Board during his latter years. To this work he was always ready to give his time, thought and interest, as well as generous support.

As a man, in all private relations, his character was admirable and lovable. He was a staunch friend, loyal to those he loved, through good and ill report, as many a letter received by his sorrowing family testified.

His sympathy with young men and his helpfulness to those struggling for a start in the world were notable characteristics of General Dawes. An extract or two from letters may be added to illustrate this statement. One letter narrates this incident: "After finishing a term of teaching at one time, I called at his office and said, 'General Dawes, I can never repay you for all your kindness to me, but I have some money and can repay you the amount you let me have when I was in college.' He said: 'Mr. ———, you don't owe me anything. If I was helpful to you I am glad. If you feel under any obligation, and are ever able to help a young man to get an education, I shall be glad to have you do so.'" Another writes: "To me, his death brings back my childhood's days, and the friend who used to think as much of our joys and pleasures as those of his own boys. Many times have I thought of his great kindness to us boys and his interest in us. I can not express how much I feel that I owe to him and his example of strength, vigor and courage, joined with patient and unselfish kindness."

"Such was the man and such his work, although these few pages furnish a very inadequate portrayal of both. A man richly endowed with talent, successful in winning well-deserved honor, possessing in a high degree those elemental qualities that make a true manhood, he was one who served well his day and generation, and left a multitude who not only admired his ability and achievements, but loved him for the lovable traits in his nature." The foregoing quotation is an extract from an address delivered by Rev. William E. Roe, D. D., at the funeral of Gen. Rufus R. Dawes, August 3, 1899.

Rufus R. Dawes was married to Mary B. Gates, and six children resulted from their union, as follows: Charles G.; Rufus C.; Benjamin G.; Mary Frances; Henry M.; and Betsy Gates.

CHARLES G. DAWES.

CHARLES G. DAWES was graduated from Marietta College in 1884, and from the Cincinnati Law School, in 1886. He went to Lincoln, Nebraska, where he practiced law for a time, and finally moved to Evanston, Illinois. He is president of the Central Trust Company of Illinois, at Chicago, which has a capital and surplus of $5,000,000. He is a strong supporter of the Republican party, and in 1896, was on the Republican National Executive Committee. The distinguished service which he rendered to his party in the campaign of that year was recognized by President McKinley, who, in 1898, appointed him Comptroller of the Currency. He filled this office acceptably and with honor, until the fall of 1901, when he resigned. He was married to Caro Blymyer, of Cincinnati, in 1889, by whom he has two children.

RUFUS C. DAWES, president of the Northwestern Gas Light & Coke Company, of Evanston, Illinois, was graduated from Marietta College in 1886, and was engaged in the lumber business with his father, until 1897, when he removed to Evanston, Illinois, where he has since resided. He married Miss Palmer, and has three children.

BEMAN G. DAWES, president of the Ohio River Bridge & Ferry Company, is also largely interested in the gas industry, and other enterprises. In 1894 he married Miss Burr, of Lincoln, Nebraska, by whom he has three children.

Mary Frances Dawes married Rev. A. G. Beach, pastor of the First Congregational Church of Ypsilanti, Michigan, and they have two children.

Henry M. Dawes is president, treasurer and manager of the Dawes Lumber Company, of Marietta.

Mr. Dawes entered upon his business career in 1889, as a civil engineer, a profession he followed for two years. From 1892 to 1896, he was located in Lincoln, Nebraska, where he was engaged in the wholesale and retail coal business. From 1896 to 1900, he resided at Newark, Ohio, where he was identified with the gas business and street railway interests. He then returned to Marietta, where he has since resided.

The Ohio River Bridge & Ferry Company, of which Mr. Dawes is president, was incorporated in 1900, and began actual operations February 1, 1901. A cantilever bridge 3,000 feet long, is being erected which will be of incalculable advantage to Marietta, as the means of connecting that city and Williamstown by street railway. One span of the bridge will be 650 long, the longest along the Ohio River, and the top of the bridge will be 180 feet above the low water mark. The width of the bridge will be 28 feet in the clear, with space for street car tracks, wagons and sidewalk. Its estimated cost is $600,000, furnished by local capitalists, and it will be a toll bridge. H. B. Hoyt is secretary of the company, and Capt. M. F. Noll is treasurer.

Mr. Dawes is also interested in several oil companies, including the South Petroleum Company and the Hastings Oil Company. He is also president of the Newark Gas Light & Coke Company, and the Pulaski Gas Light & Coke Company of Little Rock. The subject of this sketch was united in marriage with Bertie Burr, of Lincoln, Nebraska, and they have three children,—Burr Gates, Dorothy and Carlos Burr.

ENRY M. DAWES, president of the Dawes Lumber Company, of Marietta, Ohio, was born in Marietta in 1877, and is a son of Gen. Rufus R. and Mary B. (Gates) Dawes. He was graduated from Marietta College in 1896, after which he engaged in the lumber business. He was associated with his father until the latter's death, and then the Dawes Lumber Company was incorporated, in August, 1890) with the following officers: Henry M. Dawes, president, manager and treasurer; Rufus C. Dawes, vice-president; and G. W. Lansley, secretary.

EMAN G. DAWES, president of the Ohio River Bridge & Ferry Company, and a prominent business man of Marietta, Ohio, was born in that city in 1870, and is a son of Gen. Rufus R. and Mary B. (Gates) Dawes.

The business now conducted under the name of the Dawes Lumber Company was established in 1872 by Rufus R. Dawes, under the firm name of Dawes & Irish, Mr. Dawes later assuming the entire business. He engaged in jobbing extensively and was highly successful. His son, Rufus C., became his partner and they conducted the business until 1897. Henry M. Dawes then became associated with his father, and they conducted the business until the latter's death. The company has done a large business in oak and car timber, all classes of railroad and dimension lumber, and maintains offices in the new First National Bank Building.

Mr. Dawes is interested in the oil business and is president of the South Petroleum Company.

MARTIN R. ANDREWS, editor and compiler of the historical part of this book was born at Meigs, Morgan County, Ohio, April 6, 1842.

He received his first schooling in a little log school house, which stood by the roadside, about six miles east of McConnellsville. He afterward attended the graded school of that town, and was graduated from the High School, at the age of 16. For the next two years he spent the summers on the farm in the continuation of his studies and winters in teaching a district school.

In 1861 he enlisted in Company B, of the 62nd Reg., Ohio Vol. Inf., commanded by Col. F. B. Pond. He served in Maryland under General Lander; in the Shenandoah Valley, under Shields; on the Peninsula, under McClellan; and in North Carolina, under Foster. In the spring of 1863 he returned to Ohio and helped to enlist the 43rd Battalion, Ohio Vol. Inf., with which he served as adjutant in the bloodless campaign against Gen. John Morgan, in Washington and Morgan counties. Seeing no prospect of further active service in this organization, he resigned his commission and enlisted in the Signal Corps, and served with the 23rd Army Corps under General Schofield in Alabama, Tennessee, Georgia and North Carolina. He flagged his last message in the field from a tree-top in North Carolina in front of the headquarters of General Ruger.

Returning to Ohio in 1865, he arrived in time to enter the junior class of Bethany College, West Virginia. On account of weakness of the eyes he was compelled to withdraw before the end of the year. For about a year he taught a private school at Renrock, Noble County, Ohio.

In 1867 he was elected principal of the Harmar grammar schools, and a little later entered the junior class of Marietta College. In those days, college exercises began at seven o'clock, sun time, while the public schools opened at nine and the last class in college recited after four o'clock; so throughout the year 1868-69 he managed to do the work of both student and teacher. He was graduated from Marietta College in 1869. In 1870 he was elected superintendent of schools at Steubenville, Ohio, and filled that position until 1879 when he was elected principal of Marietta Academy, remaining in charge of the Academy until 1894. Since that time he has been first, instructor, and afterward Douglas Putnam Professor of History and Political Science in Marietta College.

He has taken an active part in educational meetings, paying particular attention to historical subjects. He served, successively, as president of the Jefferson County Teachers' Association; of the Washington County Teachers' Association; of the Ohio Superintendents' Section of the State Association; and of the County Examiners' Association of Ohio; he has also been Secretary of the department of Higher Instruction in the National Educational Association.

Has for many years contributed to different educational journals, especially to the Ohio Teacher, published by Dr. John McBurney, Cambridge, Ohio. This periodical was purchased in 1899, and for three years published at Marietta by Martin R. Andrews and Superintendent H. G. Williams. In 1902 Mr. Andrews sold his share in the paper to Mr. Williams, but continued to serve as assistant editor.

COL. JOHN MILLS. The city of Marietta has sent out into the great world many distinguished sons during her years of prosperous growth, but owes her development largely to others who have devoted their energies to the industries within her borders. Such an one was the late Col. John Mills, to whom his native city is much indebted.

The birth of Colonel Mills occurred on December 2, 1795, when Marietta was situated in what was then known as the Northwest Territory. His father, William Mills, with other survivors of the Revolutionary War, came here in 1792. The Indian war was then in progress and Capt. William Mills was made commandant of the little town which had been founded in 1788, at the mouth of the Muskingum River.

At that early date and in the prevailing unsettled conditions, educational advantages were meager, but young John Mills mastered enough of the essential branches to make him a desirable clerk in a mercantile establishment, at the age of eighteen years. Here he displayed such ability that he was placed in charge of a new store at the age of 21 years. Close application and provident saving enabled him to secure entire charge of this business some years later, and for the succeeding 40 years, Col. John Mills was a successful merchant in Marietta. He was much more. His public-spirit and liberality made him the promoter of every worthy enterprise started in his city. He was one of the founders of Marietta College, and served as a trustee of the institution from its establishment, in 1835. For 15 years he was its treasurer, never asking nor accepting remuneration for his services. The Congregational Church also profited largely by his generosity, and until his death, both of these institutions were dear to his heart. For over 40 years he occupied positions of responsibility in the various charitable institutions of the city, and for 15 years he was the president of the Washington County Bible Society.

As a capitalist and financier, Col. Mills was conspicuous. As early as 1824 he was chosen a director of the Marietta Bank, the first bank in the State, which was incorporated in 1808. In the next year, although then but 31 years of age, he was chosen president of this institution, and continued as such until 1843, when the charter expired. He was also a director, and part of the time president, of the Marietta branch of the State Bank, which was established in 1845. He continued in this connection until 1863, at which date the Marietta National Bank was organized. He served as a director in this institution during the period of its continuance. From 1877 until the time of his death, he served as a director in the First National Bank of Marietta. He was the largest stockholder in the Marietta Chair Company, and was its president for many years. He was also for a number of years president of the Marietta Gas Company.

It was largely due to the efforts of Col. Mills that the Marietta & Cincinnati Railroad was built, the first to connect the town by rail with the outside world, and not only an important factor in the development of the commerce of Marietta, but also of vast importance to the whole State.

Col. John Mills was twice married. In 1824 he was united to Deborah Selden Wilson, who died in 1842, leaving two daughters—Martha S., who married Rev. George M. Maxwell, D. D., and Sarah, who married Col. I. C. Elston, a banker, of Crawfordsville, Indiana. In 1845 Col. Mills married Dorothy Webster, of Newburyport, Massachusetts, and they had two sons—John, who is president of the Marietta Chair Company; and William Webster, who is president of the First National Bank of Marietta.

In personal appearance Col. Mills was of stately and dignified bearing, and his military title, which was earned by long and faithful service in the militia of the State, during his early manhood, seemed both natural and appropriate. He died full of years and crowned with honor, beloved and esteemed, in his own beautiful home, in his native city, on March 14, 1882, having almost rounded out 87 years.

EDWARD RICHARDSON DALE, deceased, was the eldest child of Rev. Hervey S. and Amanda (Dana) Dale. He was born May 31, 1844, at Newport, Washington County, Ohio, while his father was pastor of the Baptist Church at that place, one of the many Baptist churches which grew out of the work of his grandfather, Rev. Jeremiah Dale, a native of Danvers, Massachusetts, and for several years an evangelist in southeastern Ohio and adjacent regions of West Virginia. Through his mother he was the grandson of Stephen and Betsy (Foster) Dana, two of the first settlers at Newport, and the great-grandson of Capt. William Dana, who settled at Belpre in 1789, and of Judge Peregrine Foster, one of the 48 men who reached Marietta April 7, 1788, both of these men being veterans of the Revolutionary War.

Edward R. Dale's early life was spent at Newport, and, later, at Lebanon, Ohio, where he attended the State Normal School. At the death of his father at Cincinnati in 1857, the family removed to Marietta, where he continued his studies in the High School until he felt compelled to give all his time to work and to the support of his mother.

At 16 years of age he entered the employment of the Bank of Marietta, then a State bank, as individual bookkeeper, and steadily advanced in efficiency until he enlisted in the army in 1862, as private in the 77th Ohio Reg., Vol. Inf., and served with that regiment in its campaign in the Southwest. He was promoted to the position of quartermaster seargent and was stationed at Little Rock, Arkansas, and Alton, Illinois, and was finally transferred to the chief quartermaster department at Baltimore, Maryland.

The close of the war opened the question of a fresh field of work, and, bringing with him high endorsements from his superior officers, he found his new work immediately upon his return to Ohio. His equipment for it lay in his skill for expert accounting, together with those sterling and admirable personal qualities which distinguished him in all his business life.

At 21 years of age, he accepted a position in the First National Bank at Marietta, where he remained until 1885, consecutively filling all offices from that of clerk to cashier. As cashier, from 1869 to 1885, he became very generally known throughout the county and State, for his superior abilities and high integrity, and for a sincere courtesy, unflinching under the most irritating provocations.

When it is remembered that the 20 years from 1865 to 1885 cover the financial storm and stress period of our nation, when paper currency was being replaced by coin, to the dread confusion of all forms of business and to the utter disaster of many, especially all business bubbles, it will be apparent that at such a crucial time bank officers were daily confronted with perplexing difficulties. For the solution of these there was no precedent to guide. The Marietta bank which he served enjoyed no immunity from the general tension. Rather, it was assigned an especially trying ordeal, and to all those who are familiar with its record through the panic of 1873, and through other stringencies, and with its success in meeting those situations, it would be superfluous to emphasize the signal value of Edward R. Dale's services, important not only to those directly interested in the bank, but also deeply important to the welfare of the general community, which benefited in ways that never were made public, by his business foresight, his sense of responsibility to do always the best possible thing, and his untiring patience in doing it. Those who stood next to him in confidence were surprised and delighted to see a man, still young in years, successfully exercising the grasp and resourcefulness, properly the fruit of long training in finance. But however vital his share in meeting and solving the problems forced upon the bank, no one ever heard him utter the least hint of self-praise. He was content to know that his services had no counterpart in securing successful issues. Others were welcome to claim whatever credit for the work which seemed worth claiming.

MAJ. EPHRAIM CUTLER DAWES.

To enter into a sympathetic understanding of any man's business life it must be seen from the inside, but the rules of such life inexorably put the seal of silence upon many facts, essential to full sympathy, and prevent the illuminating testimonies which friends would eagerly give. Called upon to bear unusual burdens, Edward R. Dale's strength grew with the demand, and no higher record for business ability, for nobility of character, and for heroic self-control will ever be made than marked his entire business dealings while he was connected with the First National Bank of Marietta.

In 1885 he engaged in the oil producing business on a large scale and acquired interests in the Macksburg and Newell's Run fields of Ohio, and the Horseneck field in West Virginia, then in the early stages of their history as oil territory. In 1886 he purchased the Joy farm in Morgan County and organized the Midland Company. With this company, and as its president, Mr. Dale became in every sense the pioneer of the oil industry of Morgan County, and in the face of the greatest obstacles and discouragements prosecuted the business until he demonstrated the fact that there was an extensive and valuable oil field there, awaiting development. The best vindication of his judgment and energy lies in the fact that since 1895 millions of dollars have been taken from the properties which he purchased, and those lying adjacent within a radius of a very few miles, and that the district now is known and recognized as one of the most valuable in southeastern Ohio.

Mr. Dale constructed the first pipe line ever laid in Morgan County for the transportation of oil, and the improvements and facilities established by his foresight still exist.

He was connected with every important movement for the advancement of the commercial interests in Marietta, and his advice and judgment on all questions were highly valued. By natural taste and by training, he understood and sympathized with the influences which promote the higher interests of communities and individuals, and was always ready to help develop such interests. He illustrated in himself the first qualities of citizenship and manhood.

He was married September 14, 1871, to Sarah Vandiver Rolston, eldest daughter of W. L. Rolston, and granddaughter of Nahum Ward, and six children were born, Katharine Rolston, Laurence Ward, Winifred, Rachel Vandiver, Grace and Harold Dana, all of whom are living except Laurence. Mr. Dale's home life was an exceptionally happy one, his unselfish disposition endearing him by more than the ordinary ties of affection, and the heritage of a spotless name and noble deeds which he left to his wife and children is priceless in its value.

His death occurred while with his family on a trip arranged for their happiness, and brought to a sudden close a life devoted to the care and pleasure of others. He had accomplished success for himself in a business sense, but was not permitted to enjoy the fruits of it. He died August 12, 1899, and was buried in Oak Grove cemetery, Marietta, on August 15th. The expressions of grief from every one who had ever known him were sincere and outspoken.

MAJ. EPHRAIM CUTLER DAWES was born at Constitution, Washington County, Ohio, Ohio, May 27, 1840, and died in Cincinnati, April 23, 1895.

After graduating from Marietta College, in the summer of 1861, he was appointed 1st lieutenant and adjutant of the 53rd Reg., Ohio Vol. Inf. on the 26th of September, 1861; was promoted to major January 26, 1863; was discharged from the service October 25, 1864, on account of wounds received in battle; and was brevetted lieutenant-colonel, to rank from March 13, 1865, "for gallant and meritorious services during the war."

The Fifty-third was one of the untrained regiments which met the fierce assaults of the battle of Shiloh, and thereafter Adjutant and Major Dawes was associated with its hardships and combats through the sieges of Corinth and Vicksburg; in the operations about Jackson, Mississippi, in the summer of 1863, for the prevention of reinforcements to beleaguered Vicksburg; in the march to Chattanooga in October, 1863, for the relief of Thomas' army; in the battle of Mission Ridge and the rapid movement into East Tennessee for the rescue of Burnside shut up in Knoxville; and in the opening of Sherman's campaign against Atlanta in 1864.

In the series of severe battles of the latter part of May, 1864, about Dallas, Georgia, Major Dawes was twice wounded, the second wound being of such a desperate nature, involving the lower jaw, that it was at first deemed improbable that he could ever again speak intelligibly; but a highly skillful feat of surgery reconstructed the disfigured face and restored to comparatively comfortable utterance the vocal powers, in so much that one of the qualities in which Major Dawes was most distinguished as a presiding officer, was his graceful and effective speech. But thereafter to the end of his life he was a severe, though quiet sufferer, from this wound and its attendant strain upon his nervous structure.

Throughout the greater part of his active life there was scarcely an hour in which he was entirely free from pain. In 1866 he married Frances Bosworth, and soon after took up his residence in Cincinnati, where he remained until his death.

While engaging, immediately upon his retirement from war service, in active and absorbing business, Major Dawes maintained an especially intelligent interest in military studies, writing many papers for literary and army societies upon campaigns of the war, and gathering a large library of the records of the Rebellion, among its contents being many original reports and other written documents from Union and Confederate sources.

In one notable respect, that of the statistics of the opposing armies, Major Dawes came to be recognized by military historians as an expert authority, and his contributions to the Century Company's "Battles and Leaders of the Civil War," as well as to some of the official documents of the War Department, were deemed by intelligent students to sweep away many of the Southern traditions of the Confederacy, in important campaigns. In these articles he made it very clear that Lord Wolsely's estimates of the relative strength of Union and Confederate armies was very far from the truth, and the noble lord's reply utterly failed to break the force of the evidence which Major Dawes had carefully collected. Especially valuable were his examinations of the composition of Lee's armies, at Antietam and Gettysburg, which demonstrated that the two opposing armies of the Union and Confederacy were pretty equally matched in respect to numbers—a view of the case entirely opposed to that heretofore presented in even the most impartial stories of these great engagements.

Nor were Major Dawes' literary activities confined to military studies, for he was a corresponding and honorary member of State, local and European historical and folk lore societies, and edited several volumes relating to the early settlement of Ohio.

In 1867 he became engaged with William P. Cutler and others in extensive railroad construction and operation. The Springfield & Illinois Southeastern, the Chester & Tamaroa, and the Marion & Carbondale roads in Illinois, and the Logansport, Crawfordsville & Southwestern road in Indiana were built and operated by them.

In 1872 construction of a railroad in Missouri, called the Chester & Iron Mountain, was commenced. This enterprise promised highly profitable results, but the panic of 1873 came on. Major Dawes, after a gallant struggle against a hard commercial fate, was finally in 1874 forced into general bankruptcy of the times, and stripped of every dollar of property he had accumulated. But he was not idle for a day. He became again, in order, a contractor, builder, manager and president of different railroads. In his later years he became successfully interested in developing the coal fields in southern Illinois. No doubt his intense devotion to business hastened the end of a life which throughout its whole course was characterized by enthusiastic fidelity to duty. Such a life may fittingly be classed among those described in his own words: "It is by the lives of such men as these that future generations may estimate the priceless treasure committed to their charge. For if liberty is worth what liberty has cost, no words may express its value."

JEWETT PALMER, one of Marietta's most prominent public men, has been engaged in the practice of law in that city for many years, and has held numerous offices of public trust. He was born May 7, 1840, in Fearing township, Washington County, Ohio, and is the youngest child of Jewett and Rachel (Campbell) Palmer. The Palmers were among the early settlers in New England, the head of this branch having located in Rowley, Massachusetts, soon after the town was founded, in 1639. Maternally, Jewett Palmer is of Scotch ancestry. William Campbell, his great-grandfather, was a native of Scotland and came to America in 1766 after his marriage, settling in Mifflin County, Pennsylvania. His third child, William, was the mother of Rachel Campbell, who was the mother of the subject of this sketch.

Jewett Palmer, Sr., was born in Orford, New Hampshire, May 18, 1797, and was a son of John Pemberton and Abigail (Jewett) Palmer. At the age of 16 years he enlisted in the War of 1812, and was in the army two years. His union with Rachel Campbell resulted in the birth of eight children, all of whom grew to maturity and reared families.

Jewett Palmer, son of Jewett and Rachel

Palmer, remained on the farm with his parents until his twentieth year, and then went to Chicot Pass, Louisiana, where he engaged in lumbering during the winter of 1860-1861, in connection with a brother-in-law. The relations between the North and South grew more and more strained until he believed war to be inevitable, and therefore returned to his home in Ohio, in order to cast his lot with the defenders of the Union. He arrived at Salem on April 11, 1861, and enlisted at Marietta in Capt. Frank Buell's Company, on April 17. This company subsequently became Company B, 18th Reg., Ohio Vol. Inf., which was recruited for three-months' service. At the expiration of this term, the regiment returned from the field in the latter part of July, and was disbanded at Marietta. Mr. Palmer then began recruiting a company for the 36th Ohio Regiment, then being formed at Camp Putnam, Marietta, and was assisted in his task by James Stanley, of Salem, a comrade in the three-months' service. On August 12 they went into camp with a company of 98 men, which had been recruited in 11 days. On August 19, an election of officers was held and Mr. Palmer was unanimously elected captain of the company. The regiment left for the field via Parkersburg, August 29, 1861, to join Rosecrans' army on the Gawley River, in West Virginia. From this time on, his history and that of his company were substantially the same as that of the other officers and men of that gallant regiment, whose subsequent reputation for efficiency and valor was second to that of none in the Union Army. Captain Palmer was promoted to be major May 9, 1864, and on July 24, of the same year, he was severely wounded in the left thigh at Kernstown, Virginia. On his return to the field, he was in temporary command of the regiment, and while moving forward to repulse a reconnaissance of the enemy at Cedar Creek, his horse was shot from under him. He participated in the famous battle of Cedar Creek, on October 19, 1864, the last battle in which the regiment took part. On November 20, he resigned his commission as major and returned home. In 1865, he was elected clerk of the courts of Washington County, on the Republican ticket, and was re-elected in 1868, but declined to accept the nomination for a third term. During his second term as clerk, he entered upon the study of law with Messrs. Ewart, Gear & Ewart. He was admitted to the bar in April, 1872, and at once began to practice law in Marietta. He was elected mayor of the city in 1874, and was re-elected in 1876. He served as chairman of the Republican Central Committee of Washington County, in 1875-1876, and was a delegate to the National Republican Convention held at Cincinnati, Ohio, in May, 1876. He was one of the "Ohio 44 for Hayes," who stood by the Governor until he received the nomination for the presidency. In November, 1877, he resigned the office of mayor, to accept the position of collector of internal revenue for the Fifteenth District of Ohio, under appointment of President Hayes. After relinquishing the duties of that office, Mr. Palmer resumed the practice of law, in which he has met with high success. He has also been identified with many business enterprises of Marietta, and has done much to promote the interests of the city. He again served as mayor of Marietta from 1894 to 1896, having been elected on the Republican ticket. Since July, 1898, he has been a referee in bankruptcy, under the act of August, 1898.

September 19, 1866, Mr. Palmer was joined in the bonds of matrimony with Saida M. Scott, only child of Theodore Scott, of Marietta, and they have two daughters, both of whom are living at home. Fraternally, the subject of this sketch is a past officer of the several local Masonic societies, and is grand master of the Grand Council of Ohio. Religiously, he is a member of the Unitarian Church, in which he has been an officer many years.

R. JAMES MCCLURE, one of the oldest and most prominent physicians of Marietta, Ohio, was born in Meigs County, Ohio, in 1835, and is a son of James McClure.

James McClure was a boy when he removed from Maine to Ohio, and there he followed farming until his death in 1856. He married Jane Ogle, who was born in Washington County, Ohio, and died in Meigs county, at the age of 84 years. They reared five sons and five daughters, all of whom grew to maturity except one son, who died in infancy. The five sons participated in the Civil War as members of the Union Army. Dr. McClure is the only one of the children residing in Washington County.

Dr. James McClure attended the schools of Meigs County, and also spent two years in Ohio University, at Athens, returning to his home in 1857. He began the study of medicine during the winter of 1859-1860, and attended lectures at Starling Medical College, during 1860-1861. He then practiced at Albany, Athens County, for two years, after which he returned and was graduated from Starling Medical College, at Columbus, in 1864. He was at once commissioned as assistant surgeon of the 23rd Reg. Ohio Vol. Inf., under Colonel Hayes, and served until the close of the war. He then resumed his practice at Albany, and remained there until September, 1871, since which time he has practiced his profession at Marietta. He was alone until 1873, and on May 1, of that year, became associated with Dr. Samuel Hart. This partnership continued uninterruptedly until November 30, 1901, when it was dissolved. Socially, Dr. McClure is a member of the American, State, County and City medical societies.

In October, 1866, the Doctor was united in marriage with Sarah J. Greene, who was born at Newport, Washington County, and is a daughter of Richard Greene. Her father, a descendant of General Greene, of Revolutionary fame, came to Washington County at an early day. His only son is Hon. James B. Greene, of Newport, Ohio. Five children were born to bless this union, as follows: John B.; Ella; Harry; Charles Richard; and Frank Greene. Dr. John B., who is associated in practice with his father, went through the Marietta schools and for a time was a student of Marietta College, spent three years at the

HON. WILLIAM PARKER CUTLER.

Ohio Medical College, graduating in 1896, spent one and a half years as assistant physician at Athens State Hospital, and at present is serving his second term as county coroner and his second term as city health officer. Ella attended the grade schools and graduated from the Marietta High School, spent three years acquiring a musical education in New York City, and is a fine pianist and instructor in music. Harry, who attended the Marietta schools, and later spent two years in Marietta Academy and two years in college, was twice assessor of the Third Ward and spent a few years in railroading. Charles Richard, a graduate of the High School, Marietta College, and the Ohio Medical College, completed his course in the last named institution in 1901, and is now an interne at the Cincinnati Hospital. Frank Greene, who completed the high school course at Marietta, has for the past three years been in the offices of the Western Electric Company at Chicago. Politically, the subject of this sketch has always been a Republican, and was councilman from the Third Ward six years, serving as chairman of various committees. The last year he served in that body, he was its president. Dr. McClure erected his present fine home at No. 302 Second street, in the spring of 1880.

ON WILLIAM PARKER CUTLER.

IN the death of William Parker Cutler, Washington County and the State of Ohio lost a prominent citizen who, for very many years, was a leading figure in business and political life. Few men of his day were more intimately associated with public events, and few possessed more ability to meet the demands of every situation. Through his whole career he was devoted to the interests of Washington County, and his services were of the utmost importance on account of his business abilities, high sense of commercial integrity and pure statesmanship.

William Parker Cutler was born at the old homestead of the Cutler family in Warren township, Washington County, Ohio, July 12, 1812, and his death occurred on April 11, 1889, at Marietta, Ohio, where he had lived since 1872. He was the youngest son of Ephraim and Sally (Parker) Cutler. His father was a man of affairs and much engrossed in public duties. For this reason the early training and education of William P. Cutler were under the supervision of his mother, who was a woman of cultivated mind and literary tastes, and of earnest religious feeling. She left the impress of her strong character on the mind of her son. In 1829, he entered the Ohio University, at Athens, in the class of 1833, but at the close of the junior year, ill health obliged him to abandon his studies, and in the hope of regaining health he took a long horseback journey through the South. Upon his return he assisted his father in farming, his continued feebleness causing him to give up his cherished hope of a professional career.

In the great political campaign of 1840 he began to make public speeches, and his interest in politics, together with his ability, soon gained for him recognition from the leading men in the Whig party. In 1842 he was its nominee for Representative in the Legislature from Washington County, but he was defeated by George M. Woodbridge, who ran as an independent candidate and received the support of the Democrats. In 1844, he was again nominated, and was elected by a large majority. Notwithstanding his retiring disposition, Mr. Cutler soon acquired an influential position among his party friends in the Legislature, and before the close of the session was recognized as a leader on the floor. In 1845 he was re-elected, and during this year he became connected with a stirring event in the history of Washington County. In July, 1845, three citizens of Washington County, Creighton J. Loraine, Peter M. Garner and Mordecai Thomas, while engaged in assisting runaway slaves to escape, were captured by a party of Virginians on the banks of the Ohio River, within the limits of Washington County, being forcibly abducted, and confined in the jail at Parkersburg. No Virginian could be found to consent to bail them, although men like Nahum Ward, A. T. Nye, and William P. Cutler offered to indemnify their bondsmen in any sum. These men were tried and found guilty at the September term of court, at Parkersburg, but the question of the jurisdiction of the State of Virginia over the soil where they were captured was referred to the Virginia Court of Appeals. In December the Ohio legislature met. Immediately upon Mr. Cutler's arrival, Governor Mordecai Bartley sent for him and informed him that he had matured a plan for the rescue of the prisoners. This plan was to organize a company of about 100 men of the militia, at Columbus, place them under reliable officers, appoint a rendezvous near the Ohio River bank, where the men should quietly collect early on a given evening, secure boats, cross the river, take the three Ohio men out of jail and set them at liberty on Ohio soil. Although Mr. Cutler was willing to further any reasonable undertaking, his judgment was averse to this plan, and he boldly told the Governor that it would inevitably result in a border war, and ended the conference by urging him to delay action, at least, and await the trend of events. Governor Bartley was disposed to put his plan in action at once, feeling it his duty to secure possession of the men, but before this unwise and lamentable plan could be put into operation, Samuel F. Vinton made his famous argument before the Virginia Court of Appeals, and that court, at a special session held at Parkersburg, in January, 1846, admitted the prisoners to bail, each in the sum of $100, and each on his own recognizance. They were at once set at liberty, and the case never reached a final decision. In Chapter VI of this work the "Kidnaping Case" is discussed at length.

In the fall of 1846 Mr. Cutler was again nominated and elected to the state legislature. At that period the transportation facilities were so meager, that a journey from his home to Columbus, which is covered in five hours by rail, required a trip in a stagecoach consuming three days. On December 7th of this year Mr. Cutler assumed new responsibilities, and wrote his famous speech beginning as follows: "The Whigs with great cordiality and unanimity have placed me in the Speaker's chair." In 1848, Mr. Cutler was warmly supported for Governor, but the situation demanded a candidate from Northern Ohio, and Seabury Ford was chosen. Later in the year, Mr. Cutler received the Whig nomination for Congress, in the district composed of Washington, Morgan and Perry counties, and after an active campaign was defeated by William A. Whittlesey. In 1849 Mr. Cutler was chosen as a member, from Washington County, of the convention which formed the present Constitution of Ohio.

While a member of the Legislature, in 1845, Mr. Cutler was active in securing the charter of the Belpre & Cincinnati Railroad, and he was elected a director in the organization of the company in August, 1847. At a meeting of the Board, in September, he was appointed to prepare a concise statement of statistical facts and arguments favorable to the construction of the road. In 1849, at the request of a number of Marietta citizens, he visited Baltimore, to ascertain the prospect of the completion of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, and a satisfactory connection with it. He met with little encouragement, for while the officers of that company preferred to make the western terminus of the road at the mouth of Fishing Creek, or at Parkersburg, the citizens of Wheeling had secured the passage of a law compelling them to build to that city. At the annual meeting of the Belpre & Cincinnati Railroad Company, in August, 1850, Mr. Cutler was chosen president. Surveys of the line were at once commenced. After a vain effort to unite with the Hillsboro & Cincinnati Railroad, a line was located from Chillicothe west, via Blanchester, to Milford, on the Little Miami road, and east to Byers station. This part of the road was placed under contract in 1851, although but $550,000 had been subscribed. East of Byers, the only subscription was $100,000, from Athens County. Legislative authority having been obtained, subscriptions aggregating $350,000, were voted by Washington County, Harmar and Marietta, and these, with individual subscriptions, representing $50,000, were offered to the company, on the condition that its name should be changed to the Marietta & Cincinnati Railroad Company, and that the road should be built through Barlow township. Noah L. Wilson, a director of the company, had visited Philadelphia and obtained positive assurance of aid from the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, in case the proposition of Washington County was accepted. Equally positive assurance came through other channels, that no aid could be expected from the city of Baltimore, or the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company.

A committee consisting of Mr. Cutler, Col. John Madeira, Judge Rittenhouse, an attorney of the company, and Allen G. Thurman, was appointed to visit Marietta and confer with the authorities in regard to the proposition. This committee unanimously recommended its acceptance "upon the terms, conditions and restrictions therein specified." The report was adopted by the Board of Directors of the Belpre & Cincinnati Railroad Company, on August 12, 1851, the only dissenting vote being that of Allen Latham. The name of the line became the Marietta & Cincinnati Railroad. As the entire line to Wheeling was under contract to be completed December 1, 1854, over 6,000 men were at one time employed, and all the conditions of success seemed to be fulfilled when, without warning, came the news of the Crimean War. The work was stopped, and every workman discharged.

Mr. Cutler's health, which had long been feeble, failed entirely, and he was obliged to resign in September, 1854, continuing, however, to be a director. Later on, he was obliged, on account of the precarious condition of his health, to abandon all his business and seek recreation in travel through Iowa and Minnesota. Upon his return, about July 1, 1855, he was summoned to a Board meeting in Athens. The engineers who had been engaged for months in making surveys for a modified line, reported that $1,000,000 would be required for the completion of the road from Athens to Marietta. This put the matter entirely beyond the reach of the resources of the company, and under these circumstances Mr. Cutler felt obliged to again enter its service as a member of the committee on construction, the other members being Beman Gates and William S. Nye. In 1857 Mr. Cutler was elected vice-president of the company, and in the following May he was elected president, to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Mr. Wilson.

Notwithstanding the difficulties and perplexities which surrounded Mr. Cutler in the decade from 1850 to 1860, he did not relax his interest in public affairs. Always a "Free-Soil Whig," he hailed as the dawn of a new day the formation of the Republican party, whose organic idea was opposition to the extension of slavery. In 1856 at the request of the Republican Central Committee of Washington County, he held a series of joint discussions with Gen. T. C. H. Smith, the Democratic candidate for Congress. In 1857 Mr. Cutler was a delegate to the Presbyterian General Assembly, at Cleveland, when the absorbing topic before that body was slavery. In 1860 he was elected to the Thirty-seventh Congress from the district composed of Morgan, Washington and Muskingum counties. The session of this memorable Congress was half over at the time of the defeat of the Union Army at Bull Run. Immediately after the battle, a number of Ohio Congressmen met and each agreed to tender to the government a regiment of men from his own district, the secretary of war agreeing to accept the regiments if they could be raised without expense to the government. Mr. Cutler telegraphed to Melvin Clarke and Jesse Hildebrand, of Marietta, on July 23rd: "Government will probably accept an infantry regiment if ready in 15 days. Can you raise it? I will bear all incidental expenses of raising it." Following this loyal and patriotic action, the 36th Regiment Ohio Vol. Inf., was sent to the front in the month of August. When the extra session of Congress closed, on August 5th, Mr. Cutler came home, and was almost immediately taken violently ill with typhoid fever. For a considerable period it was feared he could not recover, and he was unable to return to Washington until some days after the convening of Congress, in December.

On April 23, 1862, Mr. Cutler made a memorable speech upon a bill then before the House, the preamble of which declared that slavery had caused the Rebellion, and that there could be no permanent peace while it existed. Mr. Cutler, in the summer of 1862, was again nominated for Congress, in the district composed of Washington, Athens, Meigs and Monroe counties. Through the absence of thousands of voters who were in the Union Army, and were not then permitted to vote, the opponent of the administration carried Ohio in the fall election, Mr. Cutler being defeated by James R. Morris, of Monroe County. He was never afterward a candidate for office, although he took an active part as a speaker in every subsequent campaign during the remaining years of his life. In the common acceptance of the term, he was not a successful politician, and whenever placed in nomination by his party it was because of a belief in his fitness for office, and in spite of his unwillingness to "make interest," as he used to express it. Except in 1842, he always received the full party vote in Washington County, and usually led the ticket.

In 1860 Mr. Cutler was elected a member of the first Board of Directors in the reorganized Marietta & Cincinnati Railroad Company, and was soon chosen its vice president; he terminated his connection with it in 1868. In the same year he was elected president of the newly organized Marietta & Pittsburgh Railroad Company, and continued in that position until 1872. From 1869 to 1873 he was principally engaged as a contractor, and built railroads in Illinois and Indiana. The panic of 1873, however, found him and his associates carrying heavy loans, and with much unfinished work, and, the value of their securities destroyed, many became bankrupt. In this situation, Mr. Cutler's character was shown by his action in giving up all his property, and at the age of 61 years, commencing life anew, without either money or credit. In 1878 the depreciation of value of real estate in Washington County, because of the stoppage of trains on the abandoned lines between Athens and the Ohio River at Moore's Junction, was estimated at $400,000.

A railroad company was organized of which Mr. Cutler was made president, and permission was sought to operate this abandoned road but for reasons impossible to understand, it was bitterly opposed by the management of the Marietta & Cincinnati Railroad Company, the attorneys of this company appearing before the committee to whom the bill was referred and opposing it. Mr. Cutler, Hon. Thomas W. Ewart and Judge Sibley appeared in behalf of the people of Washington County, in its favor. Mr. Cutler closed the discussion, supporting with great ability the proposition that the grant by the Legislature to a railroad company, of the right to condemn property, construct and operate its line, and take tolls, was in consideration of its continuous service to the public as a common carrier, and that the abandonment of the use of its line, or any part of it, should constitute a forfeiture of its right to it. He argued that the Legislature could and should exercise the right of eminent domain, in authorizing some other railroad company to condemn it. A new company known as the Cincinnati, Washington & Baltimore Railroad Company, acquired its property and rights and no further difficulties were encountered.

During the last 10 years of his life, Mr. Cutler gave much attention to the congenial work of compiling a history of the early settlement of Ohio. He became, in 1888, a corporate member of the Ohio Historical and Archaeological Society, and served as one of its trustees during the remainder of his life. It is not too much to say that to him and Dr. L. W. Andrews was due the great success which attended the Centennial celebration of the settlement of Ohio, which took place at Marietta, April 7, 1888.

B. F. Hart M.D.

Mr. Cutler was married, in 1849, to Elizabeth W. Voris, of Warren township, who, with one daughter, survives him. Three sons and two daughters died in early childhood. Their loss was a crushing blow to their parents, and from that grief neither ever fully recovered.

In summing up the character of Mr. Cutler, his sturdy integrity, his personal independence and adherence to convictions of right and justice, his manly honor and love of country, must not be overlooked. Combined with these were elements which made him a most companionable friend, and a devoted lover of home and family.

CAPT. M. F. NOLL is a large oil producer, and one of the most influential citizens of Marietta, Ohio. He is a native of Monroe County, where he was reared and educated.

He removed to Washington County in 1889, and up to that time had followed steam-boating on the Ohio River, serving as clerk and also as captain, for a number of years. He is still extensively interested in river business. In 1889 he became prominently identified with the Marietta and Williamstown ferries, and during the same year founded the Marietta Ice Company. The plant was built by Captain Noll, and conducted by him until within the last year, when he sold his interests in it. He has extensive interests in the oil fields of Washington, Wood and Pleasant counties, as well as across the river, and is mainly an individual producer. He is the originator of the Marietta and Williamstown bridge, now being erected over the Ohio River, the company being known as the Ohio River Bridge & Ferry Co., of which he is treasurer.

The subject of this sketch is a Republican, in politics. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church. His name appears in connection with many of the important commercial and financial enterprises of Marietta, and he is a business man of extraordinary ability.

DR. BENJAMIN FRANKLIN HART, fourth son of Deacon Benjamin Hart of Wooster (now Watertown) township, Washington County, Ohio, and Honor Deming, a daughter of Col. Simeon Deming, of Weathersfield, Connecticut, was born January 5, 1823.

Deacon Benjamin Hart was a son of Jehuda Hart and Abigail (Goodrich) Hart, of Kensington, grandson of Deacon Elijah Hart and Mary (Thompson) Hart of Kensington, great-grandson of Deacon Thomas Hart, great-great-grandson of Capt. Thomas Hart, and great-great-great-grandson of Deacon Stephen Hart. The last named came from Baintree, Essex County, England, to Massachusetts Bay in 1632, and located in Cambridge. Dr. B. F. Hart's father was a farmer and rope-maker by trade, and made the cable for the first ship built at Marietta. Dr. Hart's mother died in 1826, when he was two years and 11 months old, and this is his earliest recollection. He was less than four years old when his father was married a second time. As his father was about to depart on his white horse, named "Samp," with a blazed-faced mare, named "Kate," with a side-saddle on, by his side, the son asked to accompany him, but was instructed to go back and he would be brought a new mother. This mother lived but nine years, dying in 1833. In 1834, Deacon Benjamin Hart married Widow Lawrence, who brought with her three children,—a daughter older than the Doctor, a boy, and a younger daughter.

When eight years of age, Dr. Hart drove two yoke of oxen to the plow, and assisted in other chores about the farm. He hired out on a farm when 12 years of age, at $4 per month, and in the winter of 1835 went to school, working to pay his board. He was 14 years old when he came to Harmar, and his teacher was Lionel Tenney, in the old school house which stood on the north side of the campus. He sawed wood at 37 cents per cord, and also groomed horses, boardinig himself in the meantime, and doing his own washing and ironing. He made butter of a superior quality, and sold it at 12½ cents per pound, the market price being 10 cents. After his marriage and while living at Harmar, a lady told his wife that the best butter she ever bought was from her husband, when he was a boy attending school. At the age of 18 years, he went to the north part of the State, where he taught school one winter, and tended a saw and grist-mill, driving a team to log and deliver lumber and flour the next winter. He worked on a farm during two summers, and studied at odd times. In the fall of 1843 he gathered his earnings together and returned to Harmar. Putting one spider, one kettle, a little bedding and his clothes into an old chest, he shipped on the deck of a steamboat, for Cincinnati, paying $1 for his passage, and slept on deck so as to save funds. Reaching Cincinnati, he rented a garret-room on Vine street, bought a sheet-iron stove with one fire hole, and set up housekeeping, doing his own cooking, washing and ironing. He attended medical lectures until March, 1844, and as he was only able to pay for half of his tuition, he gave his note for the balance. He had but $1.50 left, and paid $1.00 for deck passage home, sleeping on deck, as before. The steamboat broke a shaft when about half way home. His $1 was refunded to him, and this he paid to the captain of the "Swift Sure." During this trip, he went for a period of 36 hours without eating, for want of money to buy food. On arriving at Harmar, he found Dr. Seth Hart very sick with pneumonia, and nursed him for three weeks. He was then hired by the latter to care for his practice, at $10 per month. November 20, 1844, he went to Reno, Ohio, and began to practice for himself. As his practice grew, it became necessary for him to go sometimes to Virginia. He had a flatboat built, eight feet wide and 26 feet long, on which he ferried himself and horse across the river, during high water or low, night or day, often making the trip when the river was full of floating ice. It was a very perilous proceeding, but the poor state of his finances made it necessary to take the risk. Looking from the present standpoint, he was very poorly fitted for practice, but by using great care and being a good nurse, he had good success. His first amputation was of the thigh of a Miss Alton, who lived about eight miles back of Waverly, West Virginia, on the northwest turnpike. Having no instruments, he took a file to a blacksmith, and got a knife forged, which he ground and sharpened. He took a carpenter's saw for a tenon saw, a tow-string for a tourniquet, put the patient to sleep with chloroform, amputated the thigh before she awakened, and in all his subsequent experience never had a case which did better. In 1863 he took a six-months' course at Bellevue Hospital Medical College in New York. He has been in constant practice for over 57 years.

On October 19, 1848, Dr. Hart married Sally Maria Alcock, a daughter of Thomas and Sally Holliday (Wells) Alcock, a granddaughter of William and Sarah (Brown) Alcock, the last named being a daughter of Thomas and Ellen Brown. Thomas and Ellen Brown, who lived in Twambly Green, Cheshire, England, had two children,—John and Sarah. Sarah Brown married William Alcock, who owned a cheese farm in Cheshire, where they lived until July, 1797, when they sailed for America, arriving at Marietta, Ohio, in November, 1797. They bought a farm four miles above Marietta, on the Ohio River. They brought with them to this country large quantities of fine cloth, velvets, etc., which, together with what money he had, Mr. Alcock entrusted to a relative under promise of a large interest, and lost all. This unfortunate occurrence left them in the wilderness, without money or friends. Mr. Alcock died before they had been in this country two years, leaving his widow with seven children.

Thomas Alcock, the eldest of the children, and the father of Mrs. Hart, was but 16 years of age when he took full charge of the farm. In 1813 he married Sally Holliday Wells, of Winchester, Virginia. He kept adding to his farm, as he could. He also engaged in the practice of loading boats (broad-horns) with produce, and taking them to market at New Orleans. The return trips were generally by vessel from New Orleans to Baltimore; from the latter city he walked across the country to Pittsburg, and from there returned home by canoe. Twice, however, he walked back home from New Orleans, carrying his gold in a leather girdle around his waist, his gun, blanket and skillet over his shoulder, killing what meat he needed, and often sleeping with red men, for whom he never had anything but kind words. He kept the first and only ferry across the mouth of the Little Muskingum, running it until the Marietta and Newport turnpike was built in 1839. He died in March, 1860. His wife died July 7, 1874, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Dr. B. F. Hart, in Marietta, where she had made her home after the death of her husband. Thomas Alcock's eldest son, Thomas, lived in the same house that his father had occupied, and died there April 12, 1878. His widow and her only child, George, with his family, still live at the old homestead, but in a modern house. His youngest son, Richard J., still lives on the same farm, making the fifth generation of the same name to occupy the same farm. Ten children composed the family of Thomas and Sally Holliday (Wells) Alcock, as follows: Margaret; William; Sarah; Thomas; Robert Wells; Mary Ann; Martha; Sally Maria; Richard J.; and Nannie Hillidoy. Margaret, William and Sarah died in infancy during the sickly season of 1822 and 1823. Thomas married Ann Racer, and they had one son, George, who married Easter Smith and had seven children, as follows: Bertha, who died April 29, 1895; Ada; George; Frank; Nannie; Grace; and Louise. Robert Wells, who never married, died in California in 1900. Mary Ann, whose death occurred in 1892, married Dudley Racer, and had three children.—Thomas, Horatio, and Benjamin. Martha died at the age of 13 years. Richard J. married Cynthia Middleswart, who died December 27, 1884, and they had three children, as follows: Nettie, who married Samuel M. Cary, and has two sons,—Granville and Kenneth; Robert B., who married Mary Rowland, and has a daughter, Annie; and Guy, who married Carrie Ladd. Nannie Holliday married Hon. Dwight Hollister, of California, and they have four children, namely: Charles, Katie, Frank, and Blanche.

To Dr. Hart and his wife were born three children: Mary Franklin, who lives at home; Nannie Holliday, who died in infancy; and Dr. Charles S., a practicing physician of Marietta, who married Julia Logan Holdren, and had two children,—Arthur Holdren, who died in infancy, and James Franklin.

While in Harmar, Dr. Hart served on the School Board, in the City Council, on the Board of Health, and was a member of the Republican Central Committee. He became a member of Lodge No. 115, I. O. O. F., in 1852, and the same year joined the Ohio Medical Society. He joined the American Medical Association in 1876. He was formerly a member of the Sons of Temperance. He joined the Congregational Church in Harmar, in March, 1840, and played the 'cello to lead the singing, for some years. His father was deacon of the church in Watertown township. After moving to Marietta, Dr. Hart served as trustee of the Congregational Church there. His forefathers were Congregationalists, four of them having served as deacons. In the face of much opposition, he assisted in the organization of the present Board of Health, and was health officer for two years.

In 1865 the Doctor had the misfortune of being swindled out of all the wealth he possessed, by trusting a man whom he thought to be honest. The 20 years following were trying ones, and in that time the Doctor and his faithful wife retrieved their losses. In addition to educating their children and contributing for religious purposes, they paid from 10 to 11 per cent interest on a few hundred dollars, and 20 per cent on another sum, in order to save their creditors,—the experience costing over $31,000. But thanks to a kind Providence, it was all paid, and by very close economy, and much hard work and privation, they have secured enough to meet their ordinary needs for the balance of their lives. During this period, Dr. Hart attended poor students at college, and those preparing for the ministry, free of charge. He took sick ones from the college to his home and attended them. In two cases, the patients, C. E. Walton and William Cooder, remained at his home for three weeks, each. He gave room to two students, free, for four years. During the Civil War, he was appointed by Governor Brough, military surgeon with the rank of major, and in 1862, went, under the direction of the Christian Sanitary Commission, without pay, to Pittsburg Landing, Tennessee, Corinth, Washington, Baltimore, Gettysburg, and other places taking care of the men sent from Washington County. After beginning practice at Reno, Dr. Hart taught singing school, to aid in getting funds to meet his indebtedness at Cincinnati for lectures. In September, 1901, he donated to Marietta College, three large cases, or cabinets, containing minerals, shells, and curiosities from many parts of the world, and also a full set of Chinese coins, covering every dynasty up to 1875.

WILLIAM H. EBINGER, a member of the large mercantile firm of Turner, Ebinger & Co., and president of the German National Bank, is one of the foremost business men of the thriving little city of Marietta, and is self-made in every sense the term implies. He was born in 1858, and is a son of Jacob Ebinger.

Jacob Ebinger was born in Heibran, Germany, and upon moving to this country, came directly to Marietta, where he had friends. He embarked in the saddlery, harness and carriage trimming business on Green street, and during the last 15 years of his active life, was located on Front street. He sold the business to his oldest son, Frederick, who still conducts it. He died in 1895, and his wife died in 1876. They had the following children: Frederick; H. J., who works in the store of Turner, Ebinger & Co.; Mrs. H. B. Theis, whose husband is a prominent hardware merchant of Marietta; David, who is in the furnace business at Columbus, Ohio; William H.; Alfred, who died in 1898; Mrs. Kate Heidrick, recently from Butte City, Montana, who resides in Marietta; and the wife of Rev. Paul Menzel, the pastor of the German Lutheran Church at Washington, D. C.

At the age of 14 years, William H. Ebinger entered business in the employ of the dry-goods house of Turner & Sons, with which he has since been continuously identified. Upon becoming a member of the firm, its name was changed to Turner, Ebinger & Company. He is also president of the German National Bank, which was organized in September, 1899, with a capitalization of $100,000. It does a general banking business, with domestic and foreign exchange. The other officers are as follows: J. S. H. Torner, vice-president; S. L. Angle, cashier; H. J. Hoffer, assistant cashier; William D. Loomis and Beaman Plumer are the bookkeepers. Following are the directors: William H. Ebinger; J. S. H. Torner; A. L. Gracey; Nelson Moore; William Wendell; William E. Detlor; John Kaiser; M. L. Travis; W. J. Speer; J. A. McCormick; William Harrington; W. H. Burns; Samuel H. Plumer; and S. L. Angle. Although Mr. Ebinger devotes his attention mainly to the dry-goods business, he is interested in and identified with various other enterprises of the city. He is at present serving as trustee of the water works, but has steadfastly refused to accept political offices.

The subject of this sketch married Rose Wehrs, a daughter of J. F. Wehrs, of Marietta, and they have two children, Lenschen and Frederick. Fraternally, Mr. Ebinger is a member of the Knights of Pythias and Order of Elks. He is a member of the German Lutheran Church, and his wife is a Unitarian.

HON. HIRAM LUTHER SIBLEY.

HON. HIRAM LUTHER SIBLEY, distinguished as a jurist, writer and lecturer, is circuit judge for the Fourth Circuit of Ohio, and a resident of Marietta. He was born in Trumbull County, Ohio, May 4, 1836. His father was a minister, and in later life a member of the Ohio Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

The ancestry of Judge Sibley is traceable directly to John Sibley, of England, who came to America in the "Fleet" in 1629, and settled in Salem, Massachusetts. He became a selectman of that town, and a member of the General Assembly of Massachusetts. On the maternal side his ancestors were from Colbrook, Connecticut. His maternal grandmother was a sister of Mrs. Joshua R. Giddings, and her husband was Luther Simons, a school teacher by profession, and a man of scholarly attainments. He frequently did the work of a pettifogger, and his brother-in-law, Mr. Giddings, an able lawyer, once remarked that Mr. Simons was the only man he ever feared to meet in a law suit. He was rendered a cripple by an injured spine, and died while in the prime of life.

Hiram Sibley was apprenticed to the shoemaker's trade at the early age of 13 years, and followed it until he was 24 years old. During this time he attended school two terms of six months each, and worked morning and night to defray his expenses. He was always a student, although deprived of school and college advantages, and in his 23rd year, entered upon the reading of law, rising at 4 o'clock in the morning, to study before his day's work began. He was elected clerk of the court for Meigs County, in 1860, and continued in that office until August, 1862. He then became lieutenant of Company B, 116th Reg., Ohio Vol. Inf., which went into the command of Maj. Gen. R. H. Milroy. That officer, in recommending Mr. Sibley for provost marshal of the 15th District of Ohio, in April, 1863, paid him the following tribute: "I have known Lieutenant Sibley for the last six months, while with his regiment in my command, and have observed that he is an able, energetic and efficient officer; always prompt and active in duty, a true gentleman of high moral character and excellent business talents and habits." June 15, 1863, in the Valley of Virginia, with nearly one half of the command to which he belonged, he was captured by General Lee's army. He was held a prisoner at Richmond, Virginia; Macon and Savannah, Georgia, and Charleston, and Camp Sorghum near Columbia, South Carolina. December 10, 1864, he was exchanged, but his health having become too much impaired for field service, he was honorably discharged, January 11, 1865. He was admitted to the bar April 14, 1865, at Pomeroy, Ohio, and in August of that year moved to Marietta, where, except from 1869 to 1874, he has since resided. He served as clerk in the United States Assessor's office one year, and in 1866, became a partner in the law firm of Ewart, Shaw & Sibley. The following year, he was nominated for prosecuting attorney, but with the remainder of the ticket, met defeat. He then formed a partnership with Hon. R. L. Nye, but owing to ill health was obliged to relinquish his practice for one year. During this period of recuperation, he wrote several newspaper articles respecting religious liberty under the Constitution of Ohio, which showed mature reflection and excited much comment, adding no little to his reputation. In 1870, he resumed the practice of law as a member of the firm of Paine & Sibley, at Pomeroy, Ohio. As a speaker, Judge Sibley stands high. He spoke before a teachers' institute in Meigs County, upon the nature and true end of education, and on Decoration Day, 1877, he delivered an address at Marietta, which was a notable effort, abounding in patriotism and paying a high tribute to the American soldier. During the Presidential campaign of 1880 he made a strong speech upon the question of State's Rights, which was afterward published, upon request of those who heard it.

While practicing law, Judge Sibley's firm was connected with many cases of great importance, some of them involving questions never before raised in the Supreme Court, and in nearly all of these it was successful. He wrote the briefs and framed most of the arguments of his firm, including an extended and able one in a case in the United States District and Circuit courts, wherein the question arose whether an assignee in bankruptcy could take title to assets subject to equitable liens, good only between creditor and bankrupt. The decision went against him, but the principle in an analogous case was afterward decided as he contended it should be, by the United States Supreme Court. In 1882, Mr. Sibley was elected to the Common Pleas bench in the Seventh District of Ohio, and was re-elected in 1887 and 1892. He was each time nominated by acclamation, and was elected for the third time without opposition. During his long service on that bench, his decisions were but twice reversed by the Supreme Court of Ohio, and he took the initiative in the establishment of some principles which are now recognized as law. The period of limitation, in the foreclosure of mortgages, under the Ohio civil code was for many years held to be 21 years, and it was not until Judge Sibley, after careful investigation, declared it to be 15 years, that the error was seen. His decision, on appeal, was reversed by the Circuit Court, but afterward affirmed by the Supreme Court. Two other important cases, wherein his decisions were affirmed, the doctrines in which had never before been declared by an Ohio court were: Brundred vs. Rice, 49 O. S. 640; and Pride vs. Andrew, 42 O. L. J. 248. On request of members of the bar, several other opinions of Judge Sibley were reported and carry great weight. In one of them he was called upon to define the right to, cause for, and locus of an action. This he did in an opinion so lucid and forcible as to prompt a Supreme Court justice to write him as follows: "The able manner in which you have applied elementary principles and your analytical distinction of an action, right of action and cause of action, will make the opinion of permanent value to the profession." In 1896 Mr. Sibley was nominated and elected circuit judge of the Fourth Circuit of Ohio, and began his duties as such in February, 1897. To accept this office, he was obliged to resign as judge of the Court of Common Pleas, after a term of service longer than that of any other judge in that district. He has since ably served as Circuit judge.

Judge Sibley has been a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church since 1856, and has always taken a prominent part in church work. In 1884 he was a lay delegate to the General Conference. That body, in 1888, provided for the appointment of a constitutional commission to consist of three bishops, seven ministers and seven laymen, and Mr. Sibley was one of those appointed. He was on a like commission selected in 1896. He was a delegate to the Second Ecumenical Methodist Conference held at Washington, D. C., in October, 1891, before which gathering he delivered an address upon the subject of "Marriage and Divorce Laws." The speech was published in full in the report of the proceedings of the conference. By request of the editor, he afterward wrote an article on "The Grounds for Divorce" for the Methodist Review, discussing the subject in some wholly new lights. He has been writing upon questions of church laws for many years, and in 1894, published a small volume on "The Organic Law of the Methodist Episcopal Church," which has been highly commended in critical notices. In the Methodist Review for July, 1895, the judge published an article, entitled "A Doctrine of Civil Liberty." He has also published a book on "The Right to, and Cause for, Action,"—a strictly professional work. His versatility is evidenced by his lecture on the violin, which has been delivered at Mountain Lake Park, Maryland, De Funiak Spring, Florida, Chautauqua, New York, and other places. He has lectured on the subject,—"How Civil Law Came to Be," and is often called upon for speeches and addresses. He has given time to the study of theology, history, philosophy, sociology, and economic problems, and takes a deep interest in all that pertains to the laboring classes, and the improvement of their condition. His opinions coincide with those of Professor Ely and other political economists of the new school, who advocate putting under government ownership "natural monopolies." His private and professional library is one of the best in the city.

Judge Sibley was united in marriage, April 22, 1858, with Esther A. Ellis, of Racine, Ohio, by whom he has three children. At its commencement in 1878, Marietta College conferred upon him the degree of M. A., and in 1895, Clafin University of Orangeburg, South Carolina, conferred upon him the honorary degree of LL. D. Both of these honors came without solicitation on his part, and were unexpected tributes to his qualities as a man and abilities as a lawyer. He is a Knight Templar, and belongs to the G. A. R. and Loyal Legion. Although an unswerving Republican, in politics, many Democrats have been among his warmest supporters in his judicial campaigns.

HARLES H. TURNER is a member of the largest dry-goods firm of Marietta,—Turner, Ebinger & Co., wholesale and retail dealers, their establishment being located at No. 165

Front street. This business was established by S. R. Turner, father of the subject of this sketch.

S. R. Turner moved from Connecticut to Marietta, Washington County, Ohio, in 1848, and purchased the store of Captain Wells, on the site now occupied by A. L. Richard's drug store. He operated a general store there under the name of S. R. Turner. Later, he moved to the corner of Front and Ohio streets, now occupied by the First National Bank Building, where he conducted his business until 1862, in which year the bank bought the property. The store was then moved to a building on the site of the one now occupied by the Zeitung newspaper office. In 1865, F. S. Turner, son of S. R. Turner, took an interest in the business, the firm name becoming S. R. Turner & Son. In 1871, the father purchased the building at No. 165 Front street, which now forms a part of the present large store. Charles H. Turner was taken into the partnership at that time, the firm name being changed to S. R. Turner & Sons. The building was then 90 feet deep and three stories in height; at the present time it is 150 feet deep, the front part of the building only, being three stories. In 1881, H. J. Ebinger took a partnership interest, and the firm name became S. R. Turner & Co. In 1893, W. H. Ebinger became a partner, and in 1901, J. E. McGee took an interest in the company. The firm name continued unchanged until the death of S. R. Turner, whose estate retained an interest. He died in 1897, at the age of 83 years. The present firm name of Turner, Ebinger & Company was then adopted and has since continued. Owing to the successful methods employed, and fair dealing, the business has gradually increased until now it is fully double that of any other store of its kind in the city. The store is excellently arranged and equipped, and is a model of completeness, with every facility for expeditiously caring for the extensive patronage. The office is located on one side and back about 100 feet from the front entrance, and in the rear of it is a stock room, 70 feet deep. Arc, incandescent and gas lights are all used in the store. The first floor is fully stocked with a strictly up-to-date line of general dry goods, the second floor is devoted to ladies' waists, wrappers, muslin, underwear, etc., and on the third floor is the cloak and ready-made-suit department, and also the duplicate stock and drapery department. There are 22 salesmen, including the members of the firm, two office girls, and two boys, as parcel carriers, delivering by bicycle.

Mrs. S. R. Turner, mother of Charles H., died a few months prior to the death of her husband in 1897. They were parents of the following children: F. S.; Edward A., of Chicago, president of the Link Belt Machinery Company; Charles H.; and Kate, of Marietta. Charles H. Turner married Miss Ramsey and has two daughters: Hope, and Mary, who is attending Smith College. Religiously, the subject of this sketch is a member of the Baptist Church, of which his father was a member for many years. For ten years Mr. Turner has been secretary of the Marietta Reading Club, and has been president of the Merchants' Association since its organization.

ON. WILLIAM H. LEEPER is a native of Anesville township, Athens County, Ohio, and was born March 9, 1850. His parents, Hezekiah and Catherine (Mowrey) Leeper, are now deceased.

Hezekiah Leeper was born May 22, 1824, in Guernsey County, Ohio, near Cambridge, and when he was a child his parents removed to Hocking County, where he was reared, and grew to manhood. He was a business man and farmer. After his marriage, he moved to Missouri, and from 1846 to 1850, conducted a saw and grist mill at Chillicothe, Missouri. In 1852, he removed to Morgan County, Ohio, where he carried on farming for two years, and then embarked in the mercantile pursuits. He sold his store, and was engaged in farming until his death, which occurred in 1888, at the age of 64 years. He married Catherine Mowrey, who was born in Athens County, Ohio, and their union resulted in the following offspring: James F., a physician of McConnelsville, Ohio; Caroline, the wife of John G. Carter, a farmer of Morgan County, Ohio; Jane, the wife of Neil McClenahan, of Albany, Athens County, Ohio; Ellen, wife of Harmon Dew, of Athens County, Ohio; and William H. Hezekiah Leeper was an active worker in the Republican party, and held various offices.

William H. Leeper was but two years old when his parents moved to Morgan County, Ohio, where they settled on a farm in Homer township. He received his education in the common and academic schools, and took a course in the business college at Zanesville, Ohio, from which he was graduated in 1869. He taught school three years, and in 1873, was elected clerk of the courts of Morgan County on the Republican ticket. This office he filled with acceptability for two terms, during which time he read law under William B. Crew, of McConnelsville, Ohio, now on the Supreme bench of Ohio. April 5, 1881, he was admitted to the bar, by the Supreme Court of Ohio, and in September of that year, he purchased an interest in a large mercantile concern at Waterford, Washington County, and moving to that place, where he took an active part in politics. In 1887 he was elected Probate Judge of Washington County, which office he filled very acceptably for two terms. At the expiration of this period, Judge Leeper entered into a law partnership with Ellenwood & Smith, one of the leading law firms of Marietta, and the business was then conducted under the firm name of Ellenwood, Smith & Leeper. At the November election in 1897, he was elected Representative to the 73rd General Assembly of Ohio.

While Judge Leeper's time, of late years, has been devoted to official and professional duties, he has given some attention to other matters. He assisted in the organization of the Citizens' National Bank, of Marietta, and was elected a member of its first Board of Directors. He has also been, for several years, a director of the Dime Savings Society of Marietta, and was a member of the Board of Education, and its president for a number of years. For several years, Judge Leeper has been a member of the City Board of School Examiners, and of the Board of Trade. In addition to this, he has always been extensively interested in farming, and is well informed on agricultural matters.

On December 26, 1872, Judge Leeper was united in marriage with Sarah Jane Carpenter, of Athens County, a daughter of Squire Carpenter, who was a member of the 62nd Reg., Ohio Vol. Inf., and was killed in the battle of Fort Wagner. Their children are as follows: Minnie C., the wife of George S. Alexander, who resides in Spencer, West Virginia, where Mr. Alexander is superintendent of the Carter Oil Company; Charles F., who is now taking a law course at the Ohio State University; Marie Blanche, who is studying art and literature at home under a private teacher; and William F., who attends the Marietta High School.

W. G. WAY.

Judge Leeper has always been an active working Republican since he became a voter, and has shown his loyalty to that party by financial contributions, and as a campaign speaker. He is a thirty-second degree Mason, a member of Alladin Temple, Mystic Shrine, of Columbus, Ohio; and also a member of the K. of P. and I. O. O. F. Religiously, he is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Probably no man is better known in Washington County than Judge Leeper, and his reputation as a lawyer is by no means confined to this county. He is an earnest speaker, is possessed of sound judgment and keen perception, and is ranked among the foremost citizens of Marietta.

G. WAY, one of the oldest and most prominent attorneys-at-law of Marietta, Ohio, is the senior member of the law firm of Way & Hancock, with office in the St.

Clair Building, Winfield Scott Hancock being the junior partner. Mr. Way was born at Marietta, July 22, 1842, and is a son of Joshua Way.

Joshua Way was born in Maryland in 1809, and was a boy when he removed with his parents to Belmont County, Ohio. He came to Marietta in 1828 or 1829, and was engaged in carriage manufacturing until 1852, when he removed to Monroe County, where he followed farming until his death, January 28, 1897. He married Lucinda Bishop, a daughter of Nathaniel Bishop. She was born in Marietta, August 30, 1814, and died April 20, 1882. They were the parents of six children as follows: C. B. and George A., deceased; W. G., the subject of this biography; Thomas A., residing in Monroe County, Ohio; J. E., an attorney, of Shelby County, Ohio; and Clara R. (Harmon), of Monroe County, Ohio.

W. G. Way was educated mainly in the schools of Monroe County, Ohio, and took up the study of law in 1867 with Wylie H. Oldham, a prominent attorney of that day. He was admitted to the bar in 1869, and continued in connection with his former preceptor, Mr. Oldham, until the latter's demise in 1875. He then practiced alone until June, 1900, when Mr. Hancock became his partner. They have a very large practice.

Mr. Way was united in marriage with Eleanor Patetson, of Columbus, Ohio, while he was a member of the Ohio State Legislature, to which he was elected in 1871. He is a Democrat, in politics, and served three terms as city solicitor. He was also trustee of the Washington County Children's Home. He was formerly active in various fraternal orders. Religiously, he is a member of the Congregational Church. He is also a member of the executive committee of the Marietta Reading Club. He has been the president of the Dime Savings Society for many years.

E. VAN DERVOORT is the proprietor of the "Colonial Book Store," and also vice-president of the Dime Savings Society, of Marietta, Ohio.

He was born in New York, and reared in New England. During the Civil War, Mr. Van Dervoort served in Company B, 14th Reg. Conn. Vol. Inf., participating in some of the hardest-fought battles. He received a severe wound in the left leg at the battle of Fredericksburg.

For several years, Mr. Van Dervoort was engaged in the manufacture of stamped ware, at Cambridge, Massachusetts, and upon coming to Marietta he engaged in the dry-goods business on Front street. He sold out and engaged in his present line of business, in November, 1896. He carries a large and full stock of books, periodicals, stationers' supplies, etc., and regularly employs five people to assist him in the store. This store is 100 feet deep, and the goods are displayed in a neat and artistic manner. Mr. Van Dervoort has a large number of patrons, and every one receives prompt and courteous attention. He is a man of good business methods, and is quite deserving of the success which has attended his efforts.

Mr. Van Dervoort resides in his home on Second street. He is a member of the Marietta Literary Club, and belongs to the First Congregational Church.

THE STRECKER BROTHERS COMPANY. The company, which is located in Marietta, Ohio, manufactures harness, saddles, etc., and does a jobbing trade in saddlery goods of every description. It is the largest concern of the kind between Pittsburg and Cincinnati. It occupies the four-story building at Nos. 117-119 Putnam street.

The Strecker Brothers Company was established in 1881, and incorporated in 1900, with a capital stock of $100,000, having the following officers: C. F. Strecker, president; B. F. Strecker, vice-president and treasurer; and W. S. Plumer, secretary. These gentlemen, together with A. H. Strecker and Charles S. Schaal, constitute Board or Directors. The business was begun in a small way, and has enjoyed a steady and rapid increase. The company now employs eight traveling representatives to cover the territory of Ohio, Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Maryland, Kentucky and Eastern Virginia.

The building, which is owned by the Strecker Brothers, is 48 by 100 feet in dimensions, consists of four stories and a basement, and has a floor space of about 25,000 square feet. About 60 men are employed in the building, many of these being skilled mechanics. The first floor is occupied mainly by saddlery, hardware, harness, sole leather and commodious offices, and each floor is connected with the office by a fine telephone system. The second floor is mainly used for the stock room for riding saddles, whips, horse blankets, robes and dusters. There is also a large room for collars on that floor. On the third floor, riding saddles are manufactured, and boxes for packing harness are made there. The harness stock-room is also on this floor. The fourth floor is lighted from all four sides, is equipped with machinery for the manufacture of harness, and contains also a harness store room.

The above firm contemplates the erection of a six-story building in the rear of their present quarters, as their room is not sufficient for the demands of their rapidly increasing business.

JOHN A. GALLAHER, a prominent member of the Washington County bar, is a well-known citizen of Marietta. He was born near Moundsville, in Marshall County, (West) Virginia, and is a son of Silas Gallaher, Silas Gallaher was a farmer, and died some years ago. His wife died in August, 1901, at the age of 80 years. With the exception of John A., all of the children live in West Virginia.

John A. Gallaher spent five years in Marietta College, and graduated in the class of 1869, with Professor Martin R. Andrews, T. B. Bosworth, and Seymour J. Hathaway, all of whom are residents of Marietta. Mr. Gallaher taught school in Marietta from 1869 until 1872, and then went to Cincinnati, where he spent several months in a law office, and took a partial course at the law school. He was admitted to the bar in 1873. He then went to Bellaire, Belmont County, Ohio, and there practiced until September, 1900. On removing to Marietta, he located in the St. Clair Building, where he devotes his time to a large general practice. He is a lawyer of fine ability, and much of his attention is given to corporation work. Mr. Gallaher has become very well known in legal circles, although he has been practicing but a comparatively short time in Marietta, and he is ranked among the leading citizens of that place.

The subject of this sketch was united in marriage with Laura Woodbridge, of Marietta, and they have two daughters,—Elizabeth, who has been teaching school in New York; and Maria W., who is attending Marietta College.

In politics Mr. Gallaher is a Democrat, and served as the first city solicitor of Bellaire. He is a trustee of Marietta College, and a member of St. Luke's Protestant Episcopal Church. He belongs to the Masonic order.

REV. J. R. NICHOLS, D. D., pastor of the First Congregational Church of Marietta, Washington County, Ohio, is a native of Watkins, Schuyler County, New York, where he was born in 1854, and is a son of John H. and Esther A. (Townsend) Nichols.

John H. Nichols was born in Schuyler County, New York, and came of sturdy New England stock, from the region of Lake Champlain. He was a farmer by occupation. His wife, whose parents were from Massachusetts, is still living in Schuyler County. Nine children blessed this union, as follows: A. H., who is engaged in the wholesale produce business in New York City; Martha (Goltry), who lives near the old home; Mrs. L. A. Randall, of Rochester, New York; Henry T., who is engaged in the wholesale produce business in New York, in partnership with his brother, A. H.; Charlotte, who lives with her mother; Mrs. Jeanette Robson, the widow of Rev. Seaward Robson; J. R., the subject of this sketch; Charles W., a contractor and builder, of Watkins, New York; and L. L., a physician and surgeon of New York City.

Rev. J. R. Nichols, whose name opens these lines, was educated at Starkey Seminary and Oberlin College, graduating from the latter institution in 1879. He was graduated from Oberlin Seminary in 1883, and during his stay there, was a special instructor in the academy. From 1883 to 1887, he held a pastorate at Garrettsville, Ohio, and for the following four years, he was pastor of a church in Cleveland, Ohio. From 1891 to 1897 he had charge of a church at Medina, Ohio, and in 1897 he removed to Marietta. During that year he received the degree of D. D. from Marietta College. He has since had charge of the Congregational Church in that city, and under his pastorate and supervision much good work has been done, and the congregation has increased greatly. Rev. Mr. Nichols is a man of dignity and scholarly attainments, and is possessed of many personal attributes which win for him the love and sympathy of those who are associated with him in his work.

In 1881 the subject of this sketch was united in marriage with Nellie E. Hawley, of Mankato, Minnesota, and they have had five children, namely: Ruth G.; Helen H.; John Herbert; Florence May; and Marian, who died in June, 1900.

Rev. Dr. Nichols is a trustee of Marietta College. He resides in the church parsonage, at No. 300 Fourth street, Marietta.

CURTIS CHAMBERLAIN is the well known auditor of Washington County, Ohio. He was born at Harmar, Washington County, in 1863, and is a son of Judge L. W. Chamberlain.

He was reared in Marietta, where he received an academic education, and began his business life in 1882. He became assistant postmaster under Postmaster S. L. Grosvenor, and served as such until April, 1884. On April 21, of that year, he went to Colorado, where he was engaged in mining and other pursuits until 1890. Then he returned to Marietta, and resumed his former duties, under Postmaster E. R. Alderman, and during one term of President Cleveland, under Henry Roeser. Mr. Chamberlain became a candidate for postmaster under President McKinley, but M. M. Rose received the appointment. He was elected county auditor on the Republican ticket, in 1890, and assumed the duties of that office, October 15, 1900, succeeding W. A. Patterson. He is now a candidate for renomination. Mr. Chamberlain has served most faithfully as county auditor, and much confidence is placed in his ability. He is conscientious and painstaking, and discharges his duties in a most creditable manner.

The subject of this sketch was united in marriage with Carolyn M. Pugh, a daughter of Thomas Pugh, of Marietta. The Pugh family is one of the well-known families of Washington County. Mr. and Mrs. Chamberlain have one daughter, Frances W. Politically Mr. Chamberlain is a Republican. Religiously he is an attendant of the Congregational Church, of which Mrs. Chamberlain is a member.

J. RICHARDS, the principal pharmacist and retail prescription druggist in Marietta, Washington County, Ohio, is a native of Marietta, and was born in 1850. He is a son of Thomas Richards, a native of England.

Thomas Richards was killed before Atlanta, during the Civil War. His widow lives in Marietta, and is 73 years old. She was born in Liverpool, England. Her children are as follows: A. J., the subject of this sketch; Ellen; Margaret; and Edward T., a retail druggist at 23rd street and Cottage Grove avenue, Chicago, Illinois, and a graduate of the Chicago College of Pharmacy, who was born in 1865, and was practically reared in A. J. Richards's store.

A. J. Richards commenced business life with Buell & Brother in 1870. Five years later he began business for himself and has continued in active duty ever since. He has been longer engaged in the retail drug business in Marietta than any other man, and was first located on Green street, near Second. In 1895 he removed to his present three-story building, where he utilizes all of the three floors and the basement. The store is 40 feet deep, and is supplied with an elevator and all modern conveniences. The first floor is provided with prescription accommodations, a full line of drugs and pharmaceutical supplies, and also a soda fountain. On the second floor is a laboratory, and the third floor and basement are used for storage. The building is located at No. 104 Front street, which is considered the best location in the city for a business of this kind. Mr. Richards's long experience in the drug business, and his knowledge of drugs and all their uses, place him at the head of those in his profession here, and he is considered one of the expert chemists in this section of the State.

Mr. Richards married Sadie Eggleston, who was born in Philadelphia, and was reared in Marietta. They have one daughter, Anna M. Richards, who is a graduate of Marietta College.

Mr. Richards was a member of the Board of Education for two terms, and is now treasurer of Marietta township, and of the township school funds. Socially he is a member of the Knights of Pythias and Royal Arcanum lodges. He prefers the Protestant Episcopal Church.

C. LORD, who is an extensive oil producer and one of the most enterprising business men of Marietta, Ohio, is general manager of the Cumberland Oil Company. Mr. Lord was born at Limerick, York County, Maine, in 1858, and there was schooled and grew to manhood.

He came to the oil country in 1876, and shortly afterward settled in Elk City, Clarion County, Pennsylvania, where he worked first as a driller and tool dresser. He followed this for several years, and then engaged in the grocery business at Dallas City, McKean County, Pennsylvania, also continuing in the oil business until 1884. He removed to Clarion, Pennsylvania, where he became largely interested in the oil business together with J. A. Cadwallader, of Titusville, Pennsylvania. Still retaining his oil interest, Mr. Lord returned to Maine, and remained there about eight years, during which time, he built several gas plants and waterworks in Maine cities, which he still owns. The corporation is known as the Mousam Water Company, and the concern is under the management of George F. West, of Portland, Maine. This company supplies three towns—Kennebunk, Kennebunk Port and Wells, and does a profitable and progressive business.

The Cumberland Oil Company, the offices of which are located in the St. Clair Building, in Marietta, is operating in Morgan County, where the company owns 225 wells. It owns about 25 wells in Lawrence and Liberty townships, in Washington County, and a number in Pleasant County, West Virginia, where several wells are now being drilled. In addition to his connection with the Cumberland Company, Mr. Lord has other large oil interests, and is a director in the new Trust Company, recently organized in Marietta. The subject of this sketch married a lady from Maine, and they have three sons—Philip, Charles S. and Henry C., Jr. Mr. Lord recently purchased a fine new home at No. 322 Fourth street. He and his wife attend the Congregational Church.

JOHN DANA.

JOHN DANA, one of the prominent and influential citizens of Belpre, Washington County, Ohio, and a pioneer in the canning industry, is extensively engaged in that line of business. He comes of one of the oldest and most highly respected families of the county, and is a son of George and Lucy (Byington) Dana. He was born on the old homestead,—one of the most beautiful farms in this section,—about a half mile from Belpre.

His great-grandfather was Capt. William Dana, a son of William Dana. Capt. William Dana was born at Little Cambridge, now Brighton, Massachusetts, in 1745, and was of French Huguenot ancestry. In 1770 he married Mary Bancroft, who was born in 1752 and died in 1831. After his marriage, he settled in Charlestown, Massachusetts, and just before the battle of Lexington moved to Worcester. He became a captain in the army and rendered valuable service, but, having sold his property for worthless Continental currency, was obliged to quit the army. For a time he worked on a farm near Amherst, New Hampshire, and labored, during the winter, at the carpenter's trade, that he might supply his family with the necessities of life. Leaving his family at Amherst, he came to Ohio with his two oldest sons in 1788. He made some money in Marietta by burning brick,—the first brick known to have been made in the Territory. In 1789 he brought his family to Marietta, and later proceeded down the river, where he erected what was known as a salt-box, in which his family lived for a time. Captain Dana settled upon and cleared an excellent tract of land, became influential in the county, and connected himself with many prominent enterprises tending to develop the community. He died in 1809.

George Dana, father of the subject of this sketch, first saw the light of day on the farm owned by his grandfather in Belpre township. He was reared on the farm, attended the common schools, and completed his education in Marietta and Athens colleges. He then returned to the farm, where he remained and looked after his farming interests, which were among the largest in the township. He was exceedingly successful, but withal was a quiet and unassuming man, who never sought public recognition. He served two terms as township trustee. He was well posted on all topics of the day, and in politics was a Republican. He was highly esteemed and in his death, which occurred June 21, 1892, the community lost one of its most enterprising and energetic citizens, who always had its interests at heart. He married Lucy Byington, whose father was the distinguished Rev. Cyrus Byington, author of the "Grammar of the Choctaw Languages." This eminent scholar and missionary, whose name is inseparably connected with the later history of the Choctaw Nation, was born at Stockbridge, Berkshire County, Massachusetts, March 11, 1793. He was one of nine children, and as his father was a small farmer and a tanner, his educational advantages were limited. When a well-grown lad, Mr. Byington received instruction in Greek and Latin from Joseph Woodbridge, with whom he afterward read law. He was admitted to the bar in 1814, but abandoned his practice for missionary work. With this object in view, he entered the theological seminary at Andover, Massachusetts, and was licensed to preach in September, 1816. He preached in various churches in his native state for about one year, and then upon the request of the American Board of Foreign Missions, Mr. Byington took charge of 25 persons and piloted them by land to the Choctaw Nation in Mississippi. Thus commenced his life among the Choctaws. He continued in this work for nearly fifty years, the result being that the tribe was practically redeemed from drunkenness and immorality. From the first he worked assiduously in learning their language, in order to render it available for the missionary student. The first draft of his grammar was completed in 1834, and was rewritten and rewritten until at the time of his death, which occurred in Belpre, Ohio, December 31, 1868, he was at work upon the seventh revision. Rev. Mr. Byington was united in marriage with Sophia Nye, the mother of Mrs. Dana.

John Dana was born February 10, 1856. He obtained his mental training in the schools of Belpre and at Marietta College, completing his education in 1878, and received his degree in 1885. Immediately thereafter he became interested in the canning business, together with his farming. He learned the business thoroughly, and in 1887, with his father and brothers established in Belpre township a large canning plant, having previously conducted the same business on a large scale in Milford, Delaware, whither he had gone to learn all the details in relation to the production of material, and the output of his industry. He also learned the trade of manufacturing cans, and in connection with the canning industry he was extensively engaged in making the cans, in which he had a large trade. New conditions having arisen, however, this branch of the business was sold. Mr. Dana is also interested in the real estate business, and has platted about 75 choice building lots, known as "Dana's 1st, 2nd and 3rd Additions."

Mr. Dana employs a force of 150 men, a larger number than are employed in any like business in Washington County. He is also well posted in the nursery business, having had considerable experience in that line in his younger days. He still has under his supervision the fine old farm of 150 acres, cleared and cultivated by his great-grandfather. His residence in Belpre is one of the most beautiful in the city.

Mr. Dana was joined in marriage with Anna E. Lockwood, a daughter of Jacob E. Lockwood, of Belmont County, her father being one of the old Ohio River men. This union was blessed by the birth of six children. The subject of this sketch and his wife are members of the Congregational Church. Mr. Dana is a Republican, in politics, but like his ancestors, has never sought public office.

JOHAN MILLS, president of the Marietta Chair Company, is one of the most influential business men of Marietta, Washington County, Ohio. The company of which he is president is the largest manufactory of Marietta and between four and five hundred men are there employed. Its lumber yards and buildings cover 11 acres of ground. The plant has a floor space of 168,500 square feet, and a capacity of 10,500 chairs per week.

This chair business was established in Marietta in 1820. The present organization was formed in 1866, the company being incorporated January 24, of that year. The officers were: Col. John Mills; J. F. and J. W. Stanley; William Finley; Thomas W. Ewart; J. M. Edls; S. A. Cooper; Aaron Fuller; Samuel Shipman; E. G. Toothaker and Anthony Garry. The first meeting of this company was held, February 24, 1866, and the following officers were chosen: Col. John Mills, president; and S. A. Cooper, secretary. Colonel Mills died March 14, 1882, having served up to that time, and was succeeded by John Mills, who was elected president March 18, 1882, and has filled the office up to the present time. The present officers of the company are: John Mills, president and treasurer; and S. M. Thurlow, secretary. The directors are as follows: M. D. Follett; A. D. Follett; George R. Grafton; W. W. Mills; and John Mills. The original five directors were chosen from the incorporators and were, Col. John Mills; Thomas W. Fawcett; J. M. Ellis; Aaron Fuller; and Samuel Shipman.

The concern has a record of "no strikes." The Marietta Chair Company, through its catalogue, does much to advertise the city, and the magnitude of its operations has been a great factor in the prosperity of the city. The company is excellently managed, its officers being men of progressive and up-to-date methods. In addition to the chair plant, a sawmill is owned and conducted by the company. It has besides a wholesale warehouse in Pittsburg and one in Cincinnati.

FRED TYLER PERRY, A. M., D. D., sixth president of Marietta College, has in the short space of two years risen to the foremost rank among the educators of Ohio. He has the qualities which combine to make a successful college president, and his administration of the affairs of Marietta College has been such as to inspire the greatest confidence in his ability, and in the future growth of the institution.

President Perry was born at Geneseo, Illinois, August 19, 1858, and was in his childhood when the family moved to North Adams, Massachusetts, where he received his preliminary education. He is a graduate of Williams College, class of 1880, and of Hartford Theological Seminary, class of 1885. In 1891 Williams College gave him the degree of A. M., and in 1901, that of D. D. Before taking his theological course, he had some experience in the lumber business, and spent a year in railroad surveying. He was assistant pastor of the Memorial Church, of Springfield, Massachusetts, during 1886, and held the pastorate of the East Congregational Church at Ware, Massachusetts, during the next four years. January 1, 1891, Professor Perry returned to Hartford Theological Seminary, as an instructor, and in 1899, was inaugurated as full professor of bibliology. He also served as librarian and instructor in ecclesiastical polity there.

President Perry was elected president of Marietta College in June, 1900, and assumed the duties of his position in September, 1900. The Marietta Daily Times, bearing date of June 15, 1900, paid the following tribute to his character and ability: "The new president is a scholar of high rank, a popular preacher, has unusual executive ability, knows college conditions, and is full of resources and new ideas. He is enthusiastic, devoted, persistent and tactful. He is an earnest, consecrated Christian man. President Perry is a clever speaker, and has ways that are very attractive. His experience will prove invaluable in the conduct of a college, and there seems to be no cause for doubt that he is just the man for the position to which he has been elected."

President Perry was married, in 1887, to a daughter of the late Jonathan F. Morris, of Hartford. Mrs. Perry is a lady of rare accomplishments, and is in full sympathy with her husband's work. They have two sons, aged 12 and five years, respectively.

RODNEY KEENE SHAW, one of Marietta's oldest and most successful lawyers, was born at Copenhagen in the town of Denmark, Lewis County, New York, December 13, 1829, and is a son of Zenas and Adelia (Keene) Shaw.

Zenas Shaw was a merchant for many years, and a prominent business man. He moved to Parkersburg, (West) Virginia, and there lived until a short time before his death, in 1859, when he returned to New York State. He married Adelia Keene, who was born at Chesterfield, Massachusetts, and died in 1873, at Parkersburg, West Virginia, at the age of 69 years. They were the parents of five children, as follows: The eldest, who died in infancy; Rodney Keene; Capt. Sydney F., of Parkersburg, who served throughout the Civil War, was major at the close, and was acting chief engineer of the Army of West Virginia; Lucy M.; and Fanny L.

Rodney Keene Shaw was reared and schooled in New York State, and remained there until he was 20 years of age, when he went south. During the winter of 1850-1851, he taught school at Belleville (West) Virginia, and in May, 1851, went to Carroll County, Mississippi, where he remained but one year. He then returned to New York and attended Union Academy at Belleville, and Lowville Academy, of Lewis County. In addition to pursuing his studies, he taught a part of each year until 1855, securing a life certificate for the State of New York. He began the study of law at the age of 20 years, continued until past 25 years, being examined by Joshua A. Spencer, chairman of a committee of five in Oneida County. He was admitted to the bar at the general term of the Supreme Court of New York, January 2, 1855, and was engaged in practice in Lewis County until the fall of 1858. He then went to (West) Virginia, intending to go from there to Nebraska. His plans were suddenly changed because of the illness of his father, whom he followed back to New York State, and remained with him until the latter's death, which occurred in October, 1859. Mr. Shaw then returned to (West) Virginia, where he remained during the winter of 1859-1860. He came to Marietta in the spring of 1860, and became a clerk in the office of Hon. Thomas W. Ewart, with whom he continued one and a half years. He then became captain of Company G, 63rd Reg., Ohio Vol. Inf., and served as such until discharged on account of disability in the fall of 1862. He resumed his law business in December, 1863, as a partner of Mr. Ewart, under the firm name of Ewart & Shaw. In 1867 Hon. Hiram L. Sibley became a partner, and the firm name was changed to Ewart, Shaw & Sibley, and continued as such until the junior partner retired. The title of Ewart & Shaw was once more resumed, and continued until 1870, when Mr. Shaw retired and was succeeded by Hiram L. Gear. Mr. Shaw has since continued alone, success attending his efforts on every hand. He has enjoyed a large general practice, doing a large amount of pension business, and also attending to office accounts. Although past 72 years of age, he is possessed of all his mental vigor, and has the strength of a man many years his junior. In private life he is a pleasant man to meet, and numbers his friends by the hundreds.

December 22, 1859, Mr. Shaw was joined in marriage with Lovina S. Clark, who was born in the town of Denmark, Lewis County, New York, and died March 22, 1893. They had four children, as follows: Charles Philip; Leonard Clark; Robert Anderson; and Emma Louise, who died at the age of five and a half years.

Charles P. Shaw was graduated from Marietta College in 1887, and is now located at Huntington, West Virginia, where he is a bookkeeper in the water works. He married a daughter of Dr. Edgerton, of Rockwood, West Virginia.

Dr. Leonard Clark Shaw was born at Marietta, April 14, 1869, and was graduated from Marietta College in 1889. He then accepted a position as clerk in the post office at Huntington, West Virginia. Later he became chief clerk, and remained there until the fall of 1894. He then entered the Ohio Dental College, from which he was graduated in 1897, with the degree of D. D. S. He practiced at Philadelphia and Lancaster, Pennsylvania, three years, and in August, 1900, came to Marietta, where he has established a nice practice. December 31, 1901, he married Caroline Stroud, of Wilmington, Delaware. He is a member of the dental fraternity of Phi Alpha Chi, and Marietta Chapter of Phi Gamma Delta. He won a prize in his first year in the Ohio Dental College, and was president of his class.

Robert Anderson Shaw was graduated from Marietta College in 1890, and immediately afterward read law with his father's former preceptor, Judge Eliada S. Merrill, being admitted to the bar, at Syracuse, in 1893. He is now with the strong legal combination of Phillips & Avery, of New York City, with offices in the Tribune Building.

Rodney Keene Shaw is a Republican in politics, although he has never been a politician in the true sense of the term. He served

SAMUEL H. PUTNAM.

Douglas Purman

is a member of the Soldiers' Relief Commission for three years, and then declined reappointment. He is a member of Buell Post, No. 178, G. A. R.; and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Religiously, he is a member of the Baptist Church, as were his father and grandfather before him.

AMUEL H. PUTNAM, a retired business man and extensive land-owner of Washington County, Ohio, lives in the old family residence, located at No. 519 Fort street, Marietta. He was born at Harmar, Washington County, Ohio, in 1835, and is a son of Douglas and Mary Ann (Hildreth) Putnam.

The Putnam family originally was from Buckinghamshire, England, and upon coming to America located in Salem, Massachusetts. Maj.-Gen. Israel Putnam was born at Salem village, near Danvers, January 7, 1718, and his son, Col. Israel Putnam was also born at Salem, January 28, 1740. The latter had a son, David Putnam, born February 24, 1769, who was the grandfather of Samuel H. Putnam, and was a native of Connecticut. David Putnam was a single man when he removed to Washington County, Ohio, in 1790, but six years later he returned to Connecticut, and was married. He was a clerk in the Ohio Company's Purchase office, and was one of the first employed by Gen. Rufus Putnam. He was a lawyer and also dealt extensively in real estate, leaving a large amount of property when he died. He also held the office of postmaster. He married Betsy Perkins, of Plainfield, Connecticut, September 16, 1798, and they had 12 children, of whom Douglas Putnam, father of Samuel H., was the last to die.

Douglas Putnam was born in Washington County, Ohio, April 7, 1806, and died in 1894, at the age of 88 years, eight months and 13 days. He was engaged in the real estate business and was also connected with the bucket factory for many years. He assisted in the construction of the first railroad between Marietta and Parkersburg, which was later sold to the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railway Company. He was a very prominent man in and about Marietta. On February 16, 1831, he married Mary Ann Hildreth, a sister of Dr. S. P. Hildreth. She died October 24, 1842, leaving five children, namely: Benjamin, deceased; Samuel H.; Douglas, president of the iron works at Ashton, Kentucky; and John Day and Harriet Day, both of whom died young. On May 16, 1844, Douglas Putnam married, as his second wife, Mrs. Ann Eliza Tucker, a daughter of Levi and Eliza Whipple. She died September 9, 1862, leaving two children,—Mary Hildreth, who married Dr. Frank H. Bosworth, of New York; and Eliza Whipple, wife of C. S. McCandlish, of Parkersburg, West Virginia. Douglas Putnam was married a third time, January 24, 1867, wedding Sarah C. Diamond, of Springfield, Massachusetts, who now lives in Wichita, Kansas.

Samuel H. Putnam was reared at Harmar, and was engaged as a clerk for some time. In 1856, his connection with the bucket factory began, and continued for many years. He was a member of the State militia, and in 1861 enlisted in Company L, 1st Reg., Ohio Vol. Cav., the first regiment of cavalry raised in the State. He rose to the rank of 1st lieutenant, and for a time was with the escort of Gen. George H. Thomas, commander of the 14th Army Corps. He served nearly three years, and then returned home to attend to his factory interests. He was identified with the bucket factory until 1885, and has since lived practically a retired life, although he still conducts a farm. He has three farms in Washington County, Ohio, 400 acres in Illinois, and other farms in Kansas, Arkansas and Colorado.

On October 18, 1866, Mr. Putnam married Abigail Fobes Mixer, who was born April 12, 1839, at Unionville, Lake County, Ohio, and they have three children, namely: Samuel Hildreth, Benjamin Barnes and Mary Dorcas. Samuel Hildreth was born January 10, 1869, he is identified with the Assets Realization Company, of Chicago. He was married March 31, 1902, to Clara Louise Mooney, of Rochester, New York. Benjamin Barnes, born November 5, 1871, is in the real estate business at Marietta. On September 18, 1894, he married Lucy Eleanor Hay, who was born in Fairfield, Illinois, July 12, 1872. They have three children, namely: Benjamin Hay, born July 6, 1895; George Hildreth, born May 1, 1897; and Samuel Torrence, who was born October 13, 1899, and died February 18, 1901. Mary Dorcas was born May 21, 1879. Fraternally, the subject of this sketch is a member of Buell Post, No. 178, G. A. R. He belongs to the Harmar Congregational Church. The family residence, at No. 519 Fort street, was built by David Putnam in 1798, and is now occupied by Samuel H. Putnam and his family.

R. VAN METRE, the subject of this sketch, was born at West Liberty, (West) Virginia, August 8, 1836, on the old Van Metre homestead, which has been in the family over 100 years, and on which the original orchard is still bearing fine fruit. He came to Ohio when a young man, and engaged in teaching school, steam-boating and clerking, and afterward in the dry goods business in Malta, Ohio, the firm being Palmer & Van Metre. In 1876 he removed to Marietta, Ohio, where he has ever since been successfully engaged in the clothing business.

In 1862 he married Josephine Johnson, daughter of Isaac Johnson, born in Elmira, New York, and Laura Johnson (nee Stanton), born in Massachusetts. To them were born three children—Laura, Mary and Wyllis Vincent. Mary Van Metre married Capt. O. J. Stowe (who built the steamers "S. R. Van Metre" and "Harry D. Knox.") Wyllis V. married Grace Applegate, of Beverly, Ohio. He was educated in the schools of Marietta and Oberlin, Ohio, and is now a partner with his father in business.

Besides his business interests in Marietta,

S. R. Van Metre owns a fine stock farm of 300 acres, five miles south of Beverly, Ohio, where he and his family spend considerable time every year enjoying country life. They are all members of the First Congregational Church of Marietta, Ohio.

S. R. Van Metre had one brother, Joseph W. Van Metre, who was associated with him in business for several years and died in 1895; and three sisters, two of whom, Henrietta and Margaret, are dead; the third, Sara (Van Metre) Walbridge, lives in Appleton City, Missouri.

Robert Van Metre, father of S. R. Van Metre, was born in 1803 and died in 1893. He had two brothers, Joseph W. and Vincent H. Van Metre, and one sister, Sara (Van Metre) Duncan. (Vincent H. Van Metre was born, lived and died on the old homestead.) Their father, Joseph Van Metre, grandfather of S. R. Van Metre, was the original owner of the Van Metre homestead. He had five brothers, Abisha, Josiah, Asahel, Abraham and Isaac, and three sisters, Ruth, Naomi and Elizabeth, all of whom settled in Kentucky and Ohio. Their father was Abraham Van Metre, son of John Van Metre, son of Abraham Van Metre, who with his brother Jan Van Metre, obtained from Governor Gooch, of Virginia, a grant of 40,000 acres of land in the valley of Opequan Creek and on the south branch of the Potomac, in 1730.

Their father was Jan Gysbesten Van Metre, son of Jan Gysbesten Van Metre, founder of the family in America, who emigrated to New York from Bommel, a city in Holland, in 1663.

The family was very patriotic, Abraham and 10 other Van Metres from Virginia, and as many more from New Jersey, having served in the Revolutionary War.

John Van Metre, great-great-uncle of S. R. Van Metre, took up 1,400 acres of land where West Liberty, Ohio County, West Virginia, now stands, and had a fort built, called "Black's Cabin." Joseph Van Metre, his brother, built Fort Van Metre on the south branch of Short Creek, eight miles from Wheeling, West Virginia. Abraham Van Metre afterward owned the land where West Liberty now stands, and sold two acres to Ohio County for £20, to be used for public buildings.

It is a curious fact that Elsie Van Metre, one of the daughters of Jacob Van Metre, grandson of Jan Van Metre, one of the grantees of Governor Gooch, married Walter Applegate, and their son was named Abraham Van Metre Applegate, and now after a period of over 100 years the Van Metres and Applegates again intermarry, Wyllis V. Van Metre marrying Grace Applegate.

The descendants of Jan Gysbesten Van Metre are now found in all parts of the United States.

GEORGE MORGAN COOKE, formerly editor and proprietor of the Marietta Leader, was born January 21, 1861, in one of the oldest houses of Marietta, Ohio, built about 80 years ago. He is a son of Jonathan Russell and Susanna Morgan (Dodge) Cooke, grandson of Rev. Pardon Cooke, and great-grandson of Joseph Cooke, who was born in Wood County, (West) Virginia, and came of Massachusetts stock.

Rev. Pardon Cooke was a Methodist minister, and was one of the early circuit riders of Southeastern Ohio. His son, Jonathan Russell Cooke, was born in Washington County, Ohio, June 15, 1821, and early in life was a merchant of Monroe County. Later he operated a planing mill on lower Third street, Marietta, in association with J. E. Hall and W. L. Rolston. His death occurred December 26, 1861. His wife, Susanna M. (Dodge) Cooke, was born August 13, 1821, and died December 2, 1900. Maternally she was descended from the Halls, who at an early day came to Washington County from Connecticut, the family being conveyed across the mountains by one horse, "Old Charlie," which made three journeys over and back again. The Dodge family came from Massachusetts. Jonathan Russell Cooke and his wife had the following children: John, who died in infancy; Russell D., of Marietta; Edward P., M. D., of Barlow, Ohio; Charles Foote, who died in infancy; Jessie, who died young; and George Morgan, the subject of this biography.

George Morgan Cooke was reared in his native city, and attended the Marietta public schools. He learned the trade of a job printer, and after a time opened a small job printing office on Front street, which he conducted until 1885. In that year he began to work for Theodore F. Davis, on the Marietta Leader, and continued thus until November, 1890, when he purchased the business. He changed it to a semi-weekly publication, and in 1894, issued it tri-weekly. It was published as such for a period of eight months, and its success warranted him in converting it into a daily. This he did April 1, 1895, and conducted it as sole owner and editor until August 1, 1900, when he sold it. He was the first to install a linotype in Southeastern Ohio.

Mr. Cooke was married December 30, 1890, to Alice Lovia Hodgkinson, a daughter of the late Matthew Hodgkinson, who was a native of Manchester, England. She was born in New Orleans, Louisiana, January 4, 1871. They have one daughter, Margaret Colman, who was born April 17, 1892. Politically the subject of this sketch is a Republican. He is a member of American Union Lodge, No. 1, F. & A. M., of Marietta. Religiously, his family are Episcopalians, and he is an attendant and supporter of that Church.

CAPT. WILLIAM T. BLAKE, who is the proprietor of the Muskingum Valley Mills at Beverly, Washington County, Ohio, was born at Stockport, Morgan County, Ohio, in 1859. He is a son of Thomas and Margaret (Callaghan) Blake.

Thomas Blake was born in Marshall County, Virginia, October 13, 1826, a son of James and Hannah Blake, and at the age of two years, his mother moved with him to Morgan County, Ohio. There she married Roswell Whipple, a farmer who has been dead a number of years. She died at the age of 86 years. Thomas Blake married Margaret Callaghan, a daughter of Thomas Callaghan. She was born in Brooke County, (West) Virginia, in 1824, and is now living at Swifts, Washington County, Ohio. Her father, Thomas Callaghan, was one of seven deserters from the British army of Canada. When he, in company with six others, plunged into the river, to swim for liberty, but one companion reached the shore with him, the others being either shot or drowned.

The two separated on the shore of freedom, and each struck out for himself. Callaghan, who was about 17 years old, reached Wheeling in safety and went to work in a woolen factory. He married a lady by the name of Rush. Thomas Callaghan died at the age of 65 years, in Windsor township, Morgan County, Ohio.

Thomas and Margaret (Callaghan) Blake had eight children, namely: Mary, who is living with her mother; James, also living with his mother; Charles, who died in infancy; Clara, who is at home; William T., the subject of this sketch; Laura, who married Charles E. Burrows, a retired merchant, of Marietta; Ella, who married James McConnell, and died in 1885; and Florence, who married John H. B. Danford, a merchant of Pleasant City. Thomas Blake enlisted in the Civil War, at the last call, enlisting from Marietta in Company C, 36th Reg., Ohio Vol. Inf., and serving until the end of the war. He was a saddler by trade, and later in life farmed. He was a member of the Universalist Church. He was a Democrat, in political views. His death occurred May 30, 1890.

Capt. William T. Blake received his mental training in the schools of Stockport, and after leaving school learned stone-cutting. He worked at that trade for 15 years, and in 1893 commenced steamboating, being one of three who built the steamer "H. D. Munson," at Marietta. This was the first compound engine boat built in Marietta, and was used for the Marietta and Zanesville trade. Captain Blake acted as clerk on the boat for three months, that being the length of time she plied on the Muskingum River. She was taken south, where she plied on the Tennessee and Mississippi rivers. The boat was sold, in 1895, at Evansville, Indiana, to the United States government, and is now running in government service under the name of "Search." In 1895 Captain Blake returned to Marietta, where he took contracts for brick work for some time, in company with Anthony Brown. They built the gas reservoir for the Marietta Gas Company. In 1896 Captain Blake bought a half interest in the packet boat "Sonoma," plying between Marietta and Beverly, and acted as clerk on that boat until February, 1900.

In the summer of 1900 he purchased the Muskingum Valley Mills at Beverly and is now running them to their full capacity, which is 50 barrels per day. He has a big trade in grist and feed, and his standard brand, which is called "Tip Top," is known throughout Washington, Muskingum and Morgan counties. Captain Blake has the happy faculty of making a success of anything to which he turns his hand. He holds a United States license as captain and pilot.

Captain Blake was married in 1884, to Samantha Mathews, a daughter of Jarvis and Samantha Mathews, of Morgan County. She died in 1886. He married, secondly, April 18, 1896, Laura Sheridan, a daughter of Thomas and Edith Sheridan, who was born at Muttonburg, Morgan County, Ohio, in 1859. She is a member of the Christian Church. Captain Blake is a member of Beverly Lodge, No. 84, I. O. O. F., and of the Encampment. In politics he is a Democrat.

BENJAMIN DANA SHAW, who is living on his farm a mile and a half northwest of Beverly, Washington County, Ohio, is one of the influential citizens of that section of the county. He was born near where Fort Fry stood, in Waterford township, August 19, 1838, and is a son of Augustus Warner and Lydia M. (Hayward) Shaw, grandson of Peter and Clarissa Warner (Parker) Shaw, great-grandson of Benjamin and Elizabeth (Cushing) Shaw, and great-great-grandson of Peter and Elizabeth Shaw.

It has never been definitely decided whether the Shaw family in Washington County is descended from the family that originally settled in Deham, or the one that settled in Plymouth, Massachusetts. Peter Shaw, the great-great-grandfather, was born in 1730, and died in 1823. The family of the subject of this sketch has in their possession a spoon marked thus: P. & E. S., which was presumably used by their ancestors, Peter and Elizabeth Shaw.

DR. OSCAR A. LAMBERT.

Benjamin Shaw, the great-grandfather, was born in 1753, and died in 1838. His wife's mother was a Sumner, from Beverly, Massachusetts. Benjamin Shaw was a Revolutionary soldier, and was one of the original 48 who landed at what is now Marietta, April 7, 1788. His wife's brother, Samuel Cushing, was also of this number. In the "History of Washington County," mention is made of Mr. Shaw's taking refuge in Fort Fry, with his wife and four children—Sarah, Elizabeth, Peter and Cushing—Boilston having been born at a later period.

Peter, the eldest son of Benjamin and Elizabeth (Cushing) Shaw, and grandfather of Benjamin Dana Shaw, was born in 1788, and died in 1825. He married Clarissa (Warner) Parker, a daughter of William Parker, of Meigs County, Ohio, and their only child was Augustus Warner Shaw.

Augustus Warner Shaw was born August 24, 1813, and when a boy he came to Washington County, where he was reared by Winchester and Sarah (Shaw) Dana, the latter his father's sister. As Augustus Warner's mother died at the early age of 21 years, the infant son was at first left in the care of her unmarried sister, but was afterward cared for as a foster son of Winchester Dana and his wife. Augustus Warner Shaw's mother's grandfather was an Upham, of New England. The late Mrs. Sarah (Cutler) Dawes, mother of Gen. Rufus R. Dawes, was a cousin of Augustus Warner Shaw. Their respective fathers, Ephraim Cutler and Peter Shaw, married daughters of William Parker, before mentioned. While Mrs. Sarah (Cutler) Dawes and Mrs. William (Parker) Cutler were Augustus Warner Shaw's maternal cousins, Mrs. Caroline (Dana) Dawes, Mrs. Eliza Fearing and Winchester Dana were his paternal cousins. Augustus Warner Shaw died in 1851, at the age of 38 years. He was a farmer, and also held stock in the Marietta Bucket Factory, where he worked for some time. He owned the farm on which Benjamin Dana Shaw was born. He was an old-time Whig and later a Republican. He was a member of the Harmar Congregational Church. June 12, 1838, Mr. Shaw married Lydia Minerva Hayward, who was born in Waterford township, June 12, 1816, and was an only daughter in the large family of Rotheus and Panthea (Nye) Hayward. She died February 6, 1875, leaving five children, namely: Benjamin Dana, the subject of this sketch; Rotheus Warner, deceased; Panthea Georgiana, who lives in Waterford township; Charlotte Virginia, deceased; and Caroline Augusta, who lives with Panthea Georgiana.

Benjamin Dana Shaw, whose name opens these lines, was married in 1860 to Elizabeth Ann McCollum, who was born in Washington County, Pennsylvania, in 1835, and is a daughter of Asa and Elizabeth (Drake) McCollum; she is descended from Sir Francis Drake.

Benjamin Dana Shaw went with the Home Guards in pursuit of the Morgan raiders, but his war experiences were very meager. On his farm of 146 acres of land, located on the Muskingum River, one and a half miles from Beverly, he carries on general farming, in which he is very successful. He is a well-informed man, interested in local and national advancement, and possesses excellent qualities. Mr. Shaw is a member of the Patrons of Husbandry. Politically he is independent.

DR. OSCAR A. LAMBERT, mayor of Marietta, and a physician of much prominence in the city, is a native of Morgan County, and was born near Plantsville, in 1867.

In Morgan County he received his primary education, and later, attended Bartlett Academy. He taught school in Morgan and other counties, during which time he read law. He also read law two years at McConnelsville preferring this as a profession, but owing to his parents' opposition, gave up the idea of becoming a lawyer. His parents were Quakers, and at their request he applied himself to the study of medicine. Previous to this, however, he went into merchandizing, in partnership with Mr. Fawcett, locating in Plantsville, Ohio. Later, his father bought Mr. Fawcett's interest, and for four years, they conducted the business together very successfully. Dr. Lambert began the study of medicine under the family physician, and in the spring of 1894 graduated from Starling Medical College with first honors and two prizes.

He practiced for two years in Chesterville, and then removed to Marietta, where he opened an office on the corner of Fourth and Green streets. He is now located at No. 196 Front street, where he has a fine suite of offices. Dr. Lambert has a large and lucrative practice, and being of a studious turn of mind and of a progressive nature, keeps well abreast of the advancement made in the science of medicine.

Dr. Lambert was united in marriage with Miss Lewis, of Lawrence County, Pennsylvania, and they have two sons,—Earnest, aged 12 years; and Harold, aged six years. The Doctor has received nominations for State Senator and also for State Representative. He is a Democrat, in politics, and is deeply interested in local and national political affairs. Early in 1902 a public meeting of the citizens of Marietta who favor good government, was called, and a little later a committee was appointed to select a suitable candidate for mayor. This committee, consisting of representative men, irrespective of party, recommended Dr. Lambert as the candidate of the Good Government League, and their choice was ratified by two-thirds of the voters at the spring election.

Dr. Lambert contemplates the erection of a fine new home on the corner of Second and Sacra Via streets. He is a member of the American Medical Association; Ohio State Medical Society; Washington County Medical Society; and the Marietta Medical Society. He is a member of the K. of P.; and I. O. O. F.

and is examining physician of the M. W. of A. organization. Religiously, he is a member of the Methodist Church. He stands very high in Marietta, both in a business and social way.

THOMAS GREENLEES, one of the farmers and land owners of Watertown township, Washington County, Ohio, is now pursuing his chosen calling on his native place, a farm of 428 acres, located about a mile from the little village of Watertown. There he was born June 11, 1846. He is a son of David and Agnes (Breckenridge) Greenlees, and a grandson of Robert and Sarah (Templeton) Greenlees, his ancestors being natives of Scotland.

David Greenlees was a native of Argyle-shire, Scotland, where he was born March 16, 1808. His life continued until October 4, 1892. On June 3, 1832, he came from his native country, landed in the United States and went to Watertown, making his home there a short time after the arrival of the Breckenridges and Wolcotts. His occupation was that of a farmer, and he chose for his wife, Agnes Breckenridge, born October 13, 1815, in Campbelltown, Scotland. She was the mother of six children, as follows: Sarah, a resident of Watertown; Andrew, living in Barlow township; Jane, who became the wife of William Andrew, of Dunham township; Robert, who is deceased; Thomas; and Agnes, who married Joseph Arnold, of Barlow township. The family attend religious worship in the Presbyterian Church. Mr. Greenlees was a Republican, of strong, firm opinions. His beloved wife departed this life July 7, 1890.

The subject of this sketch was united in marriage with Adelaide H. Arnold in 1888. She is a daughter of Albert and Harriet (Dunham) Arnold, and a granddaughter of Joseph Arnold, who was a native of Rhode Island and became a resident of Washington County at an early day. He was a millwright by occupation, and lived to a good old age. He built the first mill on the south branch of Wolf Creek. Albert Arnold was born in 1820, in Watertown township, and is a cabinet maker by trade, although he also taught school in Marietta, where he still resides. He married Harriet Dunham, a daughter of Thomas and Margaret Dunham, born in 1822, in the State of Pennsylvania. They had nine children, namely: Frank; Margaret; Mary Ann; Adelaide; Emma; Albert; Edward; Ida; and William.

Mrs. Greenlees is a native of Marietta, where she was born in 1850. She and her husband have one child, Albert, who was born in 1889. The family attend the Congregational Church, of which Mrs. Greenlees is an active member. The subject of this sketch is a Republican in political opinion. He is kept constantly busy in the work of farming, and his place is a model of neatness and productiveness.

WILLIAM HILLIS UNDERWOOD, conspicuous among the leading farmers of Wesley township, Washington County, Ohio, has been for many years past a hard worker, directing his energies in a manner superior to the ordinary farmer. He was born December 27, 1839, in Columbiana County, Ohio, and his parents were Israel and Sarah (Hillis) Underwood, of whom further mention is made in the sketch of his brother, Horace G. Underwood, which appears in this volume.

William Hillis Underwood enlisted as a private September 10, 1861, in Company D, 19th Reg., Ohio Vet. Vol. Inf., at Alliance, Ohio. He was promoted to be orderly sergeant, and was later commissioned as a lieutenant. After serving about two years and three months, he re-enlisted in the same company and regiment, and served until November 24, 1865, when he received an honorable discharge, at San Antonio, Texas. During the war Mr. Underwood participated in about 30 battles and engagements—many of which were the hardest fought in the Southwest. With the exception of a very few days, he never missed a roll-call. His parents having moved to Washington County, Ohio, while he was in the army, he joined them in Wesley township. There he made his home, purchased his fine farm, and followed agricultural pursuits. He owns 125 acres of very productive land, which is located two and a half miles southeast of Bartlett. He has labored zealously, and is now reaping his just reward. In his work for the Republican party he is scarcely less energetic. He has served his township as trustee for some time, and is now holding the offices of justice of the peace and school director.

On June 21, 1868, Mr. Underwood was joined in marriage with Mary A. Quinn, a daughter of Samuel and Margaret (Black) Quinn. She was born in Augusta County, Virginia, September 17, 1836, and departed this life July 11, 1900, leaving her sorrowing husband and two children—Rufus A. and Sarah Margaret. The former was born November 3, 1869, and is now practicing law at the Marietta bar, while the latter, born April 26, 1873, was united in matrimony with George G. Phipps, and makes her home in Wesley township.

Mr. Underwood is a member of the Patrons of Husbandry, and socially, he affiliates with the G. A. R. Post at Cutler. In township and county affairs, there is no more earnest worker or more devoted citizen than the subject of this sketch.

PHILIP MATTERN, one of the most worthy citizens of Lowell, Ohio, is now retired from active business life. He was born in Mannheim, Rheinpfalz, Bavaria, Germany, July 10, 1828. His father, Henry Mattern, was born in the same place, in 1790, and died in 1861, when 71 years old. Henry Mattern and his family left their home in Germany in 1836, traveled in France, passing through Forbach, Metz and Paris to Place de Grace, where they embarked for New York, arriving there in June, after being on the water for 42 days. From New York City they went to Buffalo, and thence to Erie, Pennsylvania. After remaining there six weeks they engaged a team to convey them to Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, whence they intended to go by boat to Marietta, but found the stage of water so low, that they were obliged to go by land to Wheeling, West Virginia. From Wheeling they came to Marietta by water in September, 1836, after journeying for about five months.

Henry Mattern married Kathrine Breohm, who was born in 1792, and departed this life in 1870. She was the mother of four children, namely: George; Christina; Magdalena; and Philip. Magdalena died in Germany; Christina is the widow of Peter Rice, and lives in Lowell; and George lives in Salem township, on the old farm. Both parents were members of the Evangelical Protestant Church. Mr. Mattern was a Democrat, in political affairs, until 1852, when he joined what is now the Republican party. He was a farmer all his days, and after his arrival in the United States, in September, 1830, he was located on his farm in Salem township, two miles from Lowell.

Philip Mattern was united in marriage with Mary T. Chandler, in 1856. She died in 1871, leaving two children—John H., living in Lowell; and Philip F., deceased. Mr. Mattern married a second time, June 19, 1873, having chosen Christina M. Minch, a daughter of Adam and Margaret Minch, for his wife. She was born in Adams township March 10, 1851, and they had two children,—Clarence W., a railroader; and Maria Josephine, who is at home.

Mr. Mattern was a very prominent business man from 1856 to 1890. He was a merchant and was extensively engaged in packing wool, as well as pork. In 1890 he retired from active pursuits, and at the present time is building a handsome new residence on his home place in Lowell, Ohio, facing the Muskingum River.

Politically, the subject of this sketch is a Republican, of prominence. He was elected county commissioner and served six years as such, during which period he instituted many improvements, among them the building of three large bridges across the Muskingum River at Marietta, Lowell and Beverly. The Washington County Infirmary was also built during his term of service. During the administrations of Lincoln, Grant and Hayes, he efficiently as postmaster of Lowell. He has also served his town several years as mayor and councilman. He is a member of the Evangelical Protestant Church. Fraternally he is a member of the Masonic order, having joined American Union Lodge, No. 1, F. & A. M., at Marietta, Ohio, in 1852, and being a charter member of Lowell Lodge, No. 436.

LEWIS NICKOLAUS, the present efficient postmaster of New Matamoras, Washington County, Ohio, is now filling his third term in this capacity, and is among the most esteemed residents of the town.

Mr. Nickolaus was born in New York City June 27, 1817, and is a son of Fred and Rachel (Peffer) Nickolaus, both natives of Germany. They came from the parent country, and settled in New York, where their marriage took place. The elder Nickolaus followed the shoemaker's trade, in which he was an adept. His closing years were passed in Monroe County, Ohio, whither the family had moved. He and his wife reared eight children, as follows: Fred, deceased; Henry; Lewis; Valentine; John; Louisa, now Mrs. Schnegg; Catherine, now Mrs. Zink; and George.

Lewis Nickolaus grew to manhood in Monroe County, Ohio, and after finishing school learned the shoemaker's trade with John Burge, at Powhattan Point, Ohio. Subsequently he was engaged in clerking for some time. He first located in New Matamoras in 1874, and remained there one year. His marriage took place in 1875. Ella Richardson, a native of Monroe County, became his wife, and they have reared four children, namely: Clara, widow of F. Kirkbird, who is employed in the post office at New Matamoras, Ohio; Forrest C., who is in the employ of the Mountain State Gas Company; Buena V., who, for three years, served as assistant postmaster in the home post office with her father, and on June 17, 1901, secured a position in the post office at

D. B. TORPY.

New Martinsville, West Virginia; and Adella F. In 1883 Mr. Nickolaus returned to New Matamoras and conducted a grocery business until 1884, when he was appointed postmaster. He was first appointed to that office during Harrison's administration, and was reappointed under McKinley, in 1897. He is a Republican, as may be inferred from his position, and has proved to be a most capable public servant. He has also served as clerk of New Matamoras for two terms. Fraternally he affiliates with the Knights of Pythias and the Masons, and his preference in religious matters is given to the Presbyterian Church.

D. B. TORPY, president of the Phoenix Mill Company has been a life-long resident of Marietta, Ohio. He was born April 22, 1846, and is a son of Michael and Elizabeth (Burke)

Torpy.

Michael Torpy, immediately after his marriage, on April 7, 1841, moved to Marietta, from Zanesville, Ohio, having previously come from Ireland in 1839. He died in Marietta February 14, 1882, and his wife died here February 10, 1896. They reared three children, as follows: D. B.; Mary E.; and John B. Mary E., who died in 1880, was the wife of Dr. William P. Russell, for many years a physician of Marietta, who died at Covington, Ohio. John B. was born August 22, 1851, and died July 21, 1899.

D. B. Torpy attended the public schools of Marietta until he was 11 years old, and then attended a parochial school one year. On October 31, 1858, he went to work in the store of John M. Woodbridge, with whom he remained for six years. He was next with the firm of Best & Brother for four and a half years. Prior to 1871, he served three years as city clerk, and on September 10, 1870, established a retail grocery on Greene and Second streets, which he conducted until October, 1871. On October 11, 1871, he was elected clerk of the courts, was re-elected in 1874, and served until 1877. He was then deputy clerk for one year, assisting C. A. Etz. He resigned his position, and in 1878 resumed his grocery business. In October, 1880, he was elected sheriff of Washington County, and was re-elected in 1882. Prior to the expiration of the latter term, he purchased an interest in the Phoenix Mills.

The Phoenix Mills were established in 1838, by John O. Cram, and were known for many years as Cram's Mills. They have always been located on the present site, on the bank of the Muskingum River, at the foot of Butler street. The plant was originally conducted as a custom mill. It was destroyed by fire in 1856, 1860, and 1900, but each time was rebuilt on a more extensive scale, and provided with better equipment. When Mr. Torpy became identified with it in 1884, the officers of the concern were: W. L. Ralston, president; D. B. Torpy, vice-president; and D. R. Greene, secretary and treasurer. The Board of Directors included T. W. Moore and C. B. Hall, in addition to the officers named. The present officers are: D. B. Torpy, president; C. C. Torpy, treasurer; and O. C. Wilson, secretary. These officers are directors, together with Charles Krigbaum, H. Eberle, and Charles Groves. Mr. Krigbaum is mill-manager. The capacity of the mills is 150 barrels per day, and nine men are employed, including Mr. Torpy as president and general manager. It is a water-power mill, and cheapness of power and exceptional railroad facilities are factors in the splendid success achieved. "Guiding Star" and "Phoenix Patent" are the leading brands, and are extensively sold in Ohio, West Virginia, and, to some extent, as far distant as Boston, where the product is well known. Five hundred thousand bushels of wheat are raised in Washington County, and the Phoenix Mills are the only ones operated continuously.

Mr. Torpy married Kate McGinty, who was born at Syracuse, New York, and came to Marietta when a child. They have one son, C. C. Torpy. The family are members of the Roman Catholic Church. Mr. Torpy is a Democrat, in politics, and in 1888 was a presidential elector. He was a member of the City School Board three years. He is vice-president of the Citizens National Bank, a trustee of the Public Library, and is engaged in the oil business in Ohio and West Virginia.

The subject of this sketch was treasurer of the Royal Glass Works until that concern was sold to the National Glass Company. He is now president of the Stevens Organ Company, and is interested in companies and corporations at different points in Ohio and other states.

WILLIS H. THORNILEY, one of the most progressive farmers and business men of Marietta township, Washington County, Ohio, was born October 29, 1841, and is a son of Philip Van, grandson of William, and great-grandson of Caleb Thorniley.

Caleb Thorniley came from England to America in 1795, landing at the port of New York, and in July of the same year, came to Marietta township, Washington County, Ohio. He married Mary Alcock, and both died in August, 1807. They reared a family of seven children, namely: William; Samuel; Caleb; Mary; Harriet; John and Thomas.

William Thorniley was born in England, and after coming to America, farmed during the remainder of his life, in Marietta township, where he died April 20, 1827. He resided on Sand Hill, Marietta township. He married Elizabeth Markham, a native of England, and they reared the following children: Philip Van; Caleb; Augusta E. (Beswick); William; and Thomas.

Philip Van Thorniley was born December 14, 1799, in New York City, and was reared in Marietta township, where he followed farming all his life. He was a very successful man and became an extensive land owner. Politically he was a Democrat. He died April 26, 1881. His wife, Nancy C. Martin, was born in Tyler County, Virginia, May 6, 1811, and died September 5, 1883. They reared the following children: William, a resident of Marietta township; Walter Stanley, who resides in Wayne County, West Virginia, and Augusta E., deceased, who were twins; Thomas W., deceased; George W., who died at an early age; Philip V., who also died young; Samantha M., wife of Samuel H. Dorman, of Wood County, West Virginia; Willis H.; Irene B., who died young; and Joseph W. and Willard, of Marietta township.

Willis H. Thorniley was born in Marietta township, where he received his preliminary education, and afterward entered the Marietta High School, in 1861. He left school to enlist in Company B, 77th Reg., Ohio Vol. Inf., November 5, 1861. He served in the Army of the West under General Grant, and was in numerous engagements, being wounded in the battle of Shiloh. He served until December 12, 1864, when he was mustered out as a corporal. Mr. Thorniley then returned to Marietta township, where he resided and farmed until 1882, and then moved to Van Buren County, Iowa, where he resided for a period of 10 years. In the spring of 1892, he returned to Marietta township, where he has since been located. In Iowa he was engaged in stock raising, but is now occupied in general farming. He was one of the promoters of the Mutual Assurance Association of Washington County, organized April 9, 1897, and has since been one of its directors. He was one of the first subscribers of the local telephone company, and was among those who agitated the building of the electric railway from Marietta City to the town of Newport.

On September 12, 1869, Mr. Thorniley married Minerva Beswick, who was born December 22, 1846, and is a daughter of James Beswick of Marietta township. They had the following issue: Paul Van, born August 13, 1870, and now in Dominion Creek, Klondike, who on January 12, 1892, married Allie J. Keck, a daughter of Joseph A. Keck, of Van Buren County, Iowa; Thomas B., born December 25, 1871, who on April 14, 1898, married Mary J. Olds, a daughter of William Olds, and has two children: William Olds, born January 30, 1899; Philip Van, born July 16, 1901; Willis T., born September 14, 1873, who died March 10, 1884; Willard J., born October 11, 1875; Myrtle Augusta, born October 21, 1877, deceased July 31, 1897; Frances P., born December 6, 1879; and John A. Logan, born September 18, 1886. The subject of this sketch is a Republican in politics, and while a resident of Iowa, represented his county in the 22nd General Assembly. He is a member of Perry Newell Post, G. A. R., of Birmingham, Iowa.

THE CORNER FAMILY.—George Corner, with his wife, Martha (Dumville) Corner, their three sons, Matthew, William and George, and a son-in-law, Samuel Mellor, together with their respective families, numbering altogether about 30 persons, came from England to America in 1795.

They left their homes in Eastern Cheshire, in March, of that year, their purposed destination being the Green River country in Kentucky, where they had purchased a large tract of land. They spent nine weeks on the ocean, and the journey from Baltimore to "Fort Pitt," (Pittsburg), occupied about the same length of time. The greater part of the month of August was spent in Pittsburg, from which point they floated down the Ohio River in keel-boats, reaching Marietta in the fall.

They were well pleased with the country, and warmly welcomed by the people; and as they were worn out by long travel, and doubtless discouraged by the certain prospects of greater hardships to come, they decided to go no further, and accepted the liberal offer made by the Ohio Company to all male settlers of the age of 18 years and upwards.

Accordingly, George Corner, his sons, Matthew and George (William having died on the way), and Mr. Mellor, settled on lands extending along Wolf Creek Valley, in what is now Waterford township, and in that part of Washington County afterward set off into Morgan County. Here they were soon joined by another son-in-law, John Bacon, and his family, who had followed the others from England.

The little colony thus formed proceeded with quiet, sober industry, to convert the wilderness into homes for themselves and their children. They prospered and multiplied, and their descendants are numerous throughout Morgan County and the western half of Washington County, and are found in many parts of the Union.

The family are mainly Methodists and have given several ministers to that denomination. The elders of the emigrant party were converts and followers of John Wesley and soon formed a Wesleyan Church on Wolf Creek. About 1820, this became a Methodist Episcopal Church. George Corner, the father, who died in 1804, gave 40 acres of land for church, cemetery and school purposes, and his body, with those of his wife and many of their descendants, rests in the beautiful country graveyard that he had established.

George Corner was a son of William Corner and was born July 9, 1734, in England; he died October 5, 1804. His wife, Martha (Dumville) Corner, died October 6, 1803, aged 72 years. Their children were as follows: Mary; Ellen; Matthew; William; George; Martha; Elizabeth; and Sarah—all born in England.

Mary, who was born November 26, 1755, and died in Waterford, Ohio, May 24, 1835, was the wife of Samuel Mellor, who died in Waterford, July 30, 1825, aged 76 years. They had seven sons and five daughters, namely: Ellen, born February 12, 1757, married John Brentnell, and remained in England. Her son, John Brentnell, Jr., came to America and married his cousin, Maria Bacon. Matthew was born October 16, 1759, and died in Indiana, about the year 1836. His first wife was Hannah Horsman, to whom he was married in 1780, and who died in London, England, leaving three children. On July 4, 1805, he married Ann Ashcroft, in Waterford, Ohio. She died January 31, 1831, at the age of 55 years, leaving three sons and three daughters. George married Ann Clark, in England, and settled in Morgan County, Ohio; he had a son and a daughter, born in England, and other children, born in this country. Martha died in 1795, in Baltimore; her husband was a Mr. Percy, who remained in England. Sarah was born September 8, 1775, and died in Waterford, Ohio, February 25, 1852. She was the wife of John Bacon, who was born April 22, 1764, and died in Waterford September 9, 1854. They were married November 9, 1794, and had five sons and eight daughters, all born in this country.

William Corner, second son of George and Martha (Dumville) Corner, was born October 23, 1761, in Cheshire, England. He died of a fever, July 16, 1795, in the mountains of Pennsylvania, before the family had reached Pittsburgh. His widow, Mary (Broadhurst) Corner, was the daughter of Thomas and Mary (Percival) Broadhurst, of Bosley, Cheshire, England, where she was born October 10, 1764. She continued the journey to Marietta, with the rest of the party. There she remained, although the eldest of the children was under 12 years of age, and mother and all were debarred, by sex or age, from profiting by the Ohio Company's offer. In 1796 the mother married Capt. Israel Stone, of Rainbow, Ohio, a widower with a large family. He was born at Rutland, Massachusetts, July 15, 1749, and died July 13, 1808, at Rainbow. She afterward made her home with her son, George Corner, of Cornerville, where she died July 8, 1825. In 1799 she united with the First Congregational Church, of Marietta, and most of her descendants have been Congregationalists, while the other branches of the family were Methodists. The children resulting from the two marriages of Mrs. Stone were as follows: George, Sarah, Mary, William, Ann Maria, Edwin and Emma, Corner (the last of whom was born on the voyage, and died at the age of two weeks); and John Broadhurst Stone.

George Corner, son of William and Mary (Broadhurst) Corner, was born in Cheshire, England, December 12, 1783, and died December 29, 1844, in Cornerville, Ohio. In 1795 he was placed in the family of Gen. Rufus Putnam, where he remained until his marriage, in 1807. From General Putnam he learned surveying and made considerable use of such knowledge in after life. In 1809 he moved his family from Marietta to lands on the Little Muskingum River, which he had purchased before his marriage, and for the next 20 years devoted himself to the development of his farm, making two visits to England in the meantime. He was early joined in his location by his brother, William Corner, his brother-in-law, James Flagg, and later, by his cousins, Thomas J. H. Sandford and John Broadhurst, from England. The place, from the first, was known as "Corner's Settlement," in accordance with the usage of the times. After the erection of the mills, in 1830, the place assumed the name of "Corner's Mills," which was also according to custom. Since the death of its founder, in 1844, it has been known as "Cornerville." In connection with Richard and Stephen Alcock, his neighbors in America, as in England, he built, in 1829-1830, the "Clay Bank Mills," on the Little Muskingum River. These consisted of a gristmill and sawmill, and for a number of years were operated quite successfully, supplying the needs of an extensive territory.

On November 29, 1807, George Corner was married, at Marietta, Ohio, to Susanna Burlingame, daughter of Christopher and Susanna (Putnam) Burlingame. She was born June 5, 1790, at Rutland, Massachusetts, and died April 4, 1864, at Cornerville, Ohio. Their children were as follows: Henry Hurst; Rebecca Burlingame; Ann Maria; Persis Rice; Sarah Flagg; George Sandford; John Broadhurst; Melville Rufus; Mary Stone; Edwin Locke; Susan Burlingame; and Elizabeth Putnam. Henry Hurst Corner, born February 17, 1809, and Rebecca Burlingame Corner, born October 22, 1810, died in childhood. Ann Maria Corner was born November 3, 1812, and died November 18, 1845. She was married September 6, 1836, to David Chestnor Racer, who was born December 19, 1805, and died August 9, 1891. Persis Rice Corner was born October 27, 1814, and died December 27, 1881, at York, Nebraska. She was married April 13, 1838, to Albert Barstow and removed to Iowa, where her husband died. Sarah Flagg Corner was born November 20, 1816, and died April 29, 1865. She was married April 6, 1836, to Thomas Percival Flagg, and moved to Delaware County, Ohio. George Sanford Corner was born January 26, 1819, and died April 11, 1902. His whole life was spent upon the farm where he was born. For nearly a score of years, it was his annual custom to make a trip to the New Orleans markets, with flatboats loaded with the products of the farm, as river traffic was then conducted. He also built, in the old "boat yard" on his place, a great many flatboats for himself and for others, and old boatmen still remember many improvements which he made in their construction, which were widely adopted by river men. On March 12, 1848, he married Emeline Putnam Blancett, who was born December 22, 1829, and died April 19, 1878. John Broadhurst Corner, son of George and Susanna (Burlingame) Corner, was born July 7, 1821, and resides in Petersburg, Virginia. On November 26, 1843, he married Mary Maria Miner, who was born November 7, 1825, and died August 1, 1847. On December 16, 1849, he married Mary Eliza Flagg, who was born October 17, 1829. Melville Rufus Corner was born August 30, 1823, and died November 18, 1876, at Lincoln, Nebraska. On October 17, 1844, he married Lydia Rood, who was born June 25, 1825. She married, for her second husband, Dr. S. D. Hart, of Marietta, Ohio. Mary Stone Corner was born November 27, 1825, and is living at Eddyville, Iowa. On November 1, 1849, she was married to John Legett, who was born March 9, 1827, in Waterford, Ohio, and died at Eddyville, Iowa. Edwin Locke Corner was born December 22, 1827, married Mary Ann Wood, September 6, 1858, and moved to Oregon, where he now lives at Portland. Susan Burlingame Corner was born January 8, 1830, and died September 12, 1891. She was married April 17, 1851, to James Mackey, who was born December 12, 1814, and is deceased. For many years Mr. Mackey was a deacon and trustee of the Little Muskingum Congregational Church, and his wife was a devoted worker in church and Sunday-school. Elizabeth Putnam Corner was born February 27, 1832, and was married, March 4, 1855, to Mariner Rood, who was born March 10, 1821, and lives at Cornerville.

Capt. James Flagg, a blacksmith and farmer, was born May 17, 1779, in Springfield, Massachusetts, and died August 21, 1854, at Cornerville, Ohio. In 1843 he was instrumental in organizing the Little Muskingum Congregational Church, at Cornerville, of which he was a deacon until his death. On December 4, 1863, he married Sarah Corner, who was born May 15, 1785, in Cheshire, England, and died January 21, 1868, at the home of her son Thomas, in Delaware County, Ohio. Their children were as follows: Edna Partington; William Corner; Gershom James; Thomas Percival; Susan Corner; Catherine Putnam; Emma and Edwin; Sarah Maria; and Mary Eliza. Edna Partington Flagg was born in 1805, and died in 1868, in Delaware County, Ohio. She married Silas Richardson. William Corner Flagg was born in 1806, and died near Lowell, Ohio, at an advanced age. In 1830 he married Valeria Hays, of Newport, Ohio; his second wife was Elizabeth Sherfick. Gershom James Flagg was born in 1808, and died in 1865, in Paulding County, Ohio. His first wife was Margaret Cisler; his second, Elizabeth Ann Cisler; and his third, Mary Wright. Thomas Percival Flagg was born in 1812, and died in Clayton, Illinois. He first married Sarah Flagg Corner, and his second wife was Mrs. Carrie J. Jones. He lived in Delaware County, Ohio. Susan Corner Flagg was born August 18, 1818, and died January 29, 1877. She married David C. Racer, January 30, 1848, as his second wife. The next daughter, Catherine Putnam Flagg, who was born in 1819, and died in 1854, was the wife of James Rood, and left one daughter, Charlotte, who married Rufus Rowland, and lives at Hutchinson, Kansas. Emma and Edwin, twins, were born in 1822, and died in infancy. Sarah Maria Flagg was born in 1826, and died in 1853. She was the first wife of Mariner Rood. Mary Eliza Flagg was born October 17, 1820, and lives in Petersburg, Virginia. Her marriage to John Broadhurst Corner occurred December 16, 1849.

Mary Corner, daughter of William and Mary (Broadhurst) Corner was born February 5, 1787, and died at Yankeebug, Ohio, September 27, 1852. On February 23, 1806, at Marietta, Ohio, she married Whittington Williams Whitney McGrath, who was born May 3, 1779, in Maryland, and died November 22, 1813, at Marietta. On January 26, 1816, she married, for her second husband, Oliver Woodward, Jr., of Yankeebug, Ohio, who was born September 30, 1780, in Vermont, and died at his home February 20, 1853. Her children were as follows: Mary Broadhurst McGrath, born February 5, 1807, who married John Broadhurst August 16, 1824, and died in Barlow township; William McGrath, born April 19, 1811, who married Mary Ann Howe, and moved to McConnelsville, where both died; Harriet Corner McGrath, who was born October 8, 1813, and died in Barlow township; Caroline Amelia Woodward, born in 1816, who married Henry Barstow; Emma Maria Woodward, born August 25, 1819, who, on October 18, 1849, married Benjamin Patterson Roach, and died in 1894; Vesta Elizabeth Woodward, born in 1821, who married Merit Byard; Persis Clarinda Woodward, born in 1824, who married Jacob Cooper; John Broadhurst Stone Woodward, born in 1827, who married Mary Ann Cain; and Edwin Corner Woodward, born in 1830, who married Lucy Carver.

William, second son of William and Mary (Broadhurst) Corner, was born February 3, 1780, in Cheshire, England, came with his parents to America, in 1795, and died August 17, 1878, at Cornerville, Ohio. On November 21, 1811, he married Sallie Maxson, who was born March 4, 1792, and died December 16, 1854. On July 7, 1857, he married Mrs. Lucinda (Minot) Wright, a native of New England. Their children were as follows: Henry William; Erwin Sallust; Lucy; Julia; Celinda; and Mary Elizabeth. Henry William Corner was born October 26, 1812. On February 9, 1837, he married Lucinda Rob. He lived many years at McConnelsville, later, at Cornerville, and removed to Kansas about 1879, where he and his wife died. Erwin Sallust Corner was born in 1814, and died the following year. Lucy Corner was born March 19, 1816, was married to James Franklin Anderson, moved to Cheshire, Meigs County, Ohio, and died there. Julia Corner was born in 1817, and died in 1819. Celinda Corner was born January 17, 1822, and married John Percival Sandford, February 7, 1844. They live in Cornerville, at the old Sandford home. Mary Elizabeth Corner was born December 20, 1864. She was married, November 15, 1852, to Benjamin Posey, and moved to Williams County, Ohio, where Mr. Posey is a prosperous farmer.

Ann Maria Corner, daughter of William and Mary (Broadhurst) Corner, was born January 8, 1791. In 1810, she married Richard Miner, and died the following year.

Edwin Corner, son of William and Mary (Broadhurst) Corner, was born in Cheshire, England, June 16, 1793, and died March 11, 1881, at Columbus, Ohio. On November 19, 1820, he married Rachel Howe, who was born March 10, 1803, and died March 10, 1835. Her children were as follows: William Merrill, who was born in 1822, at McConnelsville, and died in 1900, at Cleveland; and Elizabeth and Eliza, both of whom died in infancy. On October 7, 1835, Edwin Corner married, for his second wife, at McConnelsville, Belinda Convers Devo, who was born December 31, 1806, and died February 20, 1874, at Columbus, Ohio. The offspring of the second marriage was as follows: Edwin Cook, born in 1837, and Charles Benjamin, born in 1842, both of whom died in childhood; Alice Belinda, born in 1839, who, in 1862, married Louis William Brown, of Athens, Ohio; and Cassius Clay, born in 1845, who married Sarah Carlisle, and and resides in Columbus.

John Broadhurst Stone, son of Capt. Israel and Mary (Broadhurst) (Corner) Stone, was born September 16, 1797, at Rainbow, Ohio, and died April 13, 1880, at McConnelsville, where he had made his home. He married, first, Selina Bosworth, and his second wife was Sarah Taylor.

WILLIAM A. DEVOL, a well-known, prosperous and respected farmer of Adams township, Washington County, Ohio, was born on his present farm February 23, 1834. The Devol family originally belonged to Tiverton, Rhode Island, and there Daniel Devol, the great-grandfather of William A., was born. In 1795, a marriage license was issued at that place, by Justice Tillinghast Atly, to Allen Devol and Ruth, daughter of John Bennett, of Tiverton. This document is a valued possession of William A. Devol.

Soon after his marriage, in 1795, Allen Devol brought his young wife to Washington County, Ohio, and they first located in Waterford township, but later removed to Adams township, where Simeon, the father of William A., was born, in 1800. Simeon was a farmer and also ran a flatboat on the river. He supported the Democratic party, and was a leader in agricultural movements. He belonged to the Christian Church. He married Ruby Sprague, daughter of William and Experience (Buck) Sprague, who was born in the old block-house in Waterford township, in 1795. They reared a large family, as follows: Emeline, who married John C. Farnsworth, Silas, who was drowned in the Muskingum River, when a baby of two years; Ruth, who married Pierson Jaquett, of Adams township, and whose second husband was A. Gorrrell; Lucena, who married Benjamin O. Sprague, and whose second husband was William A. Howell; Rhoda and Simeon, deceased; William A.; Experience, deceased; Betsey, deceased, who was the wife of Marshall Coffey; and Adelia, who married Irvin Hall, and resides at Coal Run.

William A. Devol has followed farming all his life and his property of 90 acres, located within five miles of Lowell, is one of the best cultivated farms in Washington County. For a number of years, he was prominent in Grange movements. In politics, he has been a lifelong Democrat. On September 25, 1859, he married Catharine Angle, a daughter of Peter and Mary C. (Perkins) Angle, who was born June 3, 1840, in Watertown township. They are the parents of three children, namely: Eva E., born August 2, 1860, who married Russell A. Humiston, and resides in Waterford township; Roscoe G., born October 19, 1863, who married Carrie Hagerman, a daughter of George W. Hagerman, and resides on the home farm; and Howell S., born December 17, 1868, who is the popular postmaster of Equity, Ohio, having been appointed by the late President Harrison.

Peter Angle, the father of Mrs. Devol, was born in 1817, and died in 1897. He was a native of Pennsylvania, and came to Washington County when 18 years of age. He married the widow of James Woodmansee, of New London, Connecticut, where she was born, on August 26, 1812; she died in January, 1877. They had the following children: Catharine, who became Mrs. Devol; Joseph W., born October 16, 1841; George W., born April 30, 1843; Louisa J., born September 13, 1845; Nancy A., born November 15, 1846; Charles, born June 20, 1848, who died in infancy; Ermina Ellen, born October 23, 1849, who died in infancy; John H., born in February, 1851; Peter R., born May 18, 1853; and Isabel, born August 15, 1856.

These families represent some of the best, most reliable and substantial people of Washington County.

WILLIAM MITCHELL, M. D., a successful physician and surgeon, of Marietta, Ohio, with office at No. 128 Front street, was born March 9, 1851, in Monroe County, Ohio, and is a son of John Julius and Lydia (Wilkerson) Mitchell.

Dr. William Mitchell was but one year old when his parents moved to Washington County, Ohio, and here he has since lived. After completing his preliminary schooling, he took a course in the Eclectic Medical Institute, from which he was graduated June 7, 1881. Since then he has been engaged in the practice of medicine with marked success, and his son, Dr. Frank G. Mitchell, is now associated with him.

May 21, 1876. Dr. Mitchell was united in marriage with Belle Moore, they had the following children: Frank G., born May 26, 1877; Fred W., born October 12, 1878; Forrest M., born June 22, 1880; James H., born March 18, 1884; and Raymond, who was born May 27, 1888, and died at the age of six weeks. Mrs. Mitchell died October 21, 1890. The Doctor was married December 10, 1891, to Mary A. Miller, and they have one son, Robert Taylor, who was born April 20, 1893, and named Taylor, after his great-grandfather, Colonel Taylor, the first soldier buried in Mound Cemetery. William Mitchell has one grandchild, Lloyd William Mitchell, who was born August 28, 1901, and is a son of Frank G. and Ida (Fitch) Mitchell. Previous to her marriage, Mrs. F. G. Mitchell resided in Cincinnati, Ohio. In politics, the subject of this sketch is a Republican. Socially, he belongs to American Union Lodge, No. 1, F. & A. M. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church, while his wife is a Baptist.

JOSEPH C. BRENNAN, now serving his second term as prosecuting attorney of Marietta, is law partner of Hon. C. C. Middleswart, the firm being one of the strongest legal combinations of the county. He was born at Marietta and is a son of J. J. Brennan.

J. J. Brennan came to this country from Ireland in 1841. He was a Republican in politics. He died in the summer of 1900, at the age of 71 years. He married Eliza J. Richards, who was of English parentage. Her father, John Richards, an early merchant of Marietta, died in 1885. Six children blessed this union, namely: Joseph C.; Rev. Edward H., pastor of the Unitarian Church at Warwick, Massachusetts; Frederick F., who is identified with the Standard Oil Company, at Charleston, West Virginia; Carl L., a druggist, of Cambridge, Ohio; Bayard R., assistant cashier in the freight offices of the "Big Four" Railroad, at Columbus, Ohio; and Laura E., who is attending Marietta College.

Joseph C. Brennan pursued academic and collegiate courses at Marietta, graduated from the Cincinnati Law School in 1891, and was admitted to the bar of Washington County the same year. He then began the active practice of law and has since continued with great success. He was city solicitor during 1894 and 1895, and is now serving his second term as prosecuting attorney. He is a Republican in politics. In November, 1900, he formed a partnership with Hon. C. C. Middleswart, and the firm commands a large practice. Socially, Mr. Brennan is a member and past master of American Union Lodge, No. 1, F. & A. M., of Marietta; a member of Marietta Commandery, No. 50, K. T.; and of Syrian Shrine, A. A. O. N. M. S., of Cincinnati, Ohio. In religious attachment, he is a member of the Unitarian Church. Mr. Brennan was married in 1898 to Stella H. Harper, of Marietta, Ohio, and has one child Francis V.

Hon. C. C. Middleswart was born September 11, 1870, in Warren township, Washington County, Ohio, and is a son of A. A. and Sarah (Dye) Middleswart. He was educated in the common schools of Warren township, Harnar Grammar School, Marietta Academy, and in Marietta College, from which he was graduated in 1894, with the degree of A. B. He was superintendent of schools of New Matamoras, Ohio, from 1894 to 1896. He attended the law department of the University of Michigan, at Ann Arbor, during 1897, and afterward spent one year in Ohio State University, where he graduated in 1898, with the degree of LL. B. Since then he has practiced law at Marietta. He first formed a partnership with Hon. W. E. Sykes, which continued from August, 1898, to November, 1900, when he became associated with the subject of this sketch. He was elected to the Ohio Legislature in 1899, and was re-elected in 1901, serving with honor and credit, and to the satisfaction of the most exacting of his constituents. Mr. Middleswart was married, September 10, 1900, to Bell L. Otis, of Ann Arbor, Michigan, who graduated from the University of Michigan with the class of 1897. They have a daughter, Helen May, born January 30, 1902. They reside at No.

A. T. NYE.

410 Sixth street. Fraternally, the subject of this sketch is a member of American Union Lodge, No. 1, F. & A. M.; Knights of Pythias; Odd Fellows; and Sons of Veterans. Religiously, he is a member of the First Presbyterian Church.

T. NYE is general manager of the A. T. Nye & Son Company, which operates a large foundry and stove manufacturing plant at the corner of Ohio and Muskingum streets, Marietta, Ohio.

The business now conducted by this company was established more than 75 years ago by A. T. Nye, grandfather of the subject of this sketch. It was managed by A. T. Nye (2), his son, from 1854 until his death in 1899, when the present company was formed and incorporated with the following officers: G. L. Nye, of St. Paul, Minnesota, president; H. B. Nye, of Cleveland, treasurer; M. C. Nye, of Marietta, secretary; and A. T. Nye (3rd), general manager, in active charge of the business. The first site of the original foundry and machine shop was on the west side in Marietta, where a few Franklin stoves were manufactured. In 1867 A. T. Nye (2nd) bought a woolen-mill plant, which forms a part of the present plant at the corner of Ohio and Muskingum streets, where, with the exception of three small lots, they now own an entire city block. The office building contains three stories, and is of brick, the dimensions being 40 by 120 feet. The first floor is devoted to mounting cast-iron stoves and ranges; the second floor is equipped with modern appliances for manufacturing steel stoves and ranges, and the offices are also located on this floor. The third floor is used for storage and an iron-pattern shop. The central building is 125 by 60 feet in dimensions, and five stories high. The first floor is the shipping department, the second floor the nickel-plating and wood-pattern shop, and the third, fourth and fifth floors are for storage of manufactured stock. The foundry building is partially of two stories, its dimensions being 60 by 140 feet, and is used entirely by stove moulders, and for the storage of flasks. Two sheet-iron buildings, of two stories each, contain the shipping clerk's office, and storage room for patterns and stove trimmings. The plant is located near the Ohio River, and within convenient distance of the depot. This is the only exclusive stove factory in the city, besides being the pioneer foundry. Traveling representatives cover a territory reaching from the Atlantic coast to the Mississippi River, and from 60 to 75 skilled laborers are employed in the plant.

A. T. Nye, the subject of this biography, was born at Marietta, as was also his father, who died in 1899. He was reared at Marietta, and until he was 21 years old was associated with his father in the business. He then accepted a position with the Perry Stove Company, at South Pittsburg, Tennessee, and remained there until 1892, when he returned to Marietta. He was then a traveling salesman for a number of years, and in 1899 became general manager of the A. T. Nye & Son Company. He possesses unusual ability, and has had wide experience in this industry. He has given his entire time to the success of the enterprise, and the amount of the company's business has increased fully 75 per cent in the past five years.

A. T. Nye married a daughter of Capt. S. B. Hempstead, who owned the Excelsior Stove Works at Hanging Rock, Ohio, and they have three sons—Walker H.; Allen T.; and Dudley D. Fraternally Mr. Nye is a member of the B. P. O. E.

WILLIAM JOHNSON CRAM. The family of Cram is an early one in Marietta, the first, Jonathan Cram, having settled in Marietta with his family in 1816. The American Crams descend from European family of Von Cramm, through Hans Von Cramm, a younger son, who went from Germany to England in 1528. The family records in Europe are verified to 1246. The baronial standing of the family in Europe has been recognized from an early date. The tombstone of Hans Von Cramm, the head of the English branch, is built into the side of the entrance of the south porch of the old church at Jarrow, England. His birth is recorded in 1504.

John Cram came from England to Boston in 1635. In 1638 he joined the adherents of the "Independent Old Puritan," Rev. John Wheelwright, and with him and his followers went to Exeter, New Hampshire, where the colony adopted a code of laws styled a "Combination," now historic. John Cram was one of the signers of the "Combination." He was a selectman at Exeter, but afterwards he purchased land at Hampton Falls, near Exeter, which he many years resided on and cultivated and where several succeeding generations of his family lived. He is styled in historic annals, "a judicious and honest man." The record of his death on the "town book" at Hampton Falls is as follows,—"5 March, 1681-2" "Good old John Cram, one just in his generation."

Jonathan Cram was the great-grandson of John Cram, of Exeter and Hampton Falls. He inherited the homestead at Hampton Falls and resided there after his marriage to Sally Dodge, in 1804, until 1816, when he came to Marietta. The old Cram dwelling at Hampton Falls, erected by John Cram over 250 years ago, is still standing. It is a fine specimen of early New England architecture, with the large chimney in the center of the building, spacious rooms, wainscoted to the ceilings with handsome panels, and containing many other interesting features of the dwellings of that period.

The father of Jonathan Cram was Col. Jonathan Cram, of the Revolutionary Army, a resident of Hampton Falls. Jonathan Cram was one of the early merchants of Marietta, where, upon his arrival, he engaged in the general mercantile business with his brother-in-law N. Dodge. The location was on Ohio street, then the business part of Marietta. His father-in-law, Nathaniel Dodge, a pioneer settler of Marietta, in 1804, owned the ferry privileges between Marietta and Harmar on the Muskingum River, and Mr. Cram moved his business near to the eastern landing of the ferry. In these stores every merchantable article, from a needle to a plow, was kept. Early pictures of Marietta show his store building, located near where the United States government lock-building now stands on the commons below Putnam street. While yet a young man and in the full tide of a successful business life, Mr. Cram, who was born in 1779, died in Marietta in January, 1821, aged 42 years. He left a widow and four children. The children who survived him were,—Jonathan Augustus, John Oliver, Jacob, and one daughter, Rebecca Dodge, who became the wife of Anselm Tupper Nye, of Marietta.

Jonathan Augustus Cram was reared in Marietta, and received the most of his education at Ohio University at Athens. At a suitable age, he engaged in mercantile pursuits in Marietta and elsewhere. Later in life he moved to California, where he died at the advanced age of 82 years. He was married three times, but left no children.

John Oliver Cram, like his brother, was reared in Marietta and obtained his education chiefly at Ohio University at Athens. Arriving at manhood, he engaged in business at Zanesville, but returned to Marietta in 1836, for permanent residence. He became one of the active business men of the town, and "to him, probably, more than to any other citizen, Marietta owed its public improvements up to the time of his death." The "Cram Surveys" of the city are still the standard surveys and occasional attempts at deviations from the lines then laid down have always ended in errors, troublesome to the city. Mr. Cram established and operated the flouring and sawmills now known as the "Phoenix Mills," and rebuilt them twice after they were destroyed by incendiary fires. He was one of the promoters, and a director, of the old "Plank Road," and was also a promoter and director of the Marietta & Cincinnati Railroad. He rendered financial assistance to Marietta College. "To an uncommon degree, he impressed his views and his personality on the community in which he lived." He died November 2, 1860, at the early age of 48 years. His wife and five daughters survived him, and the latter have married and settled away from Marietta.

Jacob Cram, the father of William Johnson Cram, was born August 3, 1820, in Marietta where he was reared and educated. His father, Jonathan Cram, died when Jacob was but six months of age. From the time that he arrived at manhood, Jacob Cram was actively engaged in business affairs, a part of the time in the milling business with his brother, John Oliver Cram. He was also interested in a commission shipping concern and in ship-building. In 1847, the brig "Walhonding" was built by a company at Marietta. Upon the completion the vessel carried a cargo of pork to New York, Capt. Jacob Cram going as supercargo. After a second trip from New Orleans, the vessel was sold in New York. Jacob Cram was a man of standing and influence in Marietta, and was always alive to the interests of his native town. Through his business connections, he had a large acquaintance in the South. In the years preceding the Civil War, he had a keen foresight of the dreadful conflict which was imminent, and although he was in every way opposed to war, when it at last came, his patriotism and loyalty allowed no question as to where he stood. He was a true patriot. The whole country was his country, and the United States government was the one to which his allegiance held firm. Unable, because of ill health, to go with others to the front, he took an active part at home in the support of military operations. A military hospital was established in Marietta on Second street, above Montgomery street. Soon, sick and disabled soldiers were gathered there, and there in his care for them Mr. Cram contracted typhoid pneumonia, which nearly cost him his life, and left him with permanent ill health. In 1863, the Rebel general Morgan, entered the State of Ohio with hostile troops. A call was made for troops to repel this invasion. Mr. Cram, although entirely unfit for hardship, raised a company of cavalry and called them the "Putnam Guards," in honor of Col. William R. Putnam, commandant of the post. On July 16, 1863, they left Marietta and were assigned to Captain Wood's command. On the night of July 17, they went to the fords at Buffington Island, where Morgan, hotly pursued by Hobson, was aiming to cross the river. Captain Cram's company was there assigned to duty as a scouting force. On the morning of July 19, while thus engaged, Captain Cram was taken prisoner by Morgan's men. His horse and arms were taken from him and he was paroled. After the battle with Morgan, Captain Cram was acting as aid to a Union Army officer. His duties required him to pass between two Union posts, a mile, or less apart. At this time he happened to wear a suit of butternut brown, the coat being made in what was called a "hunting-shirt" style. This suit he wore when he left home. It was a costume often seen in Ohio, in the days before the war. At the time of the war, however, it was distinctly the dress of the Southern bushwacker. While in discharge of duty, on the morning of July 20, he was challenged by some Union soldiers of the 8th Reg., Mich. Vol. Cav. From his dress, they mistook him for a Southern cavalryman. As he made no reply to their challenge, but rode on, they cruelly shot him, and he died instantly. He was buried near the spot where he fell, by the kindly hands of strangers. His brother, J. A. Cram, and his nephew, B. T. Nye, went to his resting place, recovered his remains, and brought them home for burial. On August 2, 1863, his funeral was held from his old home on Putnam street, which had been his father's house, and where his sister, Rebecca (Mrs. Nye), resided. He was buried by the side of his parents in Mound Cemetery. His wife and three young children survived him. His age was 43 years.

William Johnson Cram, whose name heads these lines, is the only living male descendant bearing the name of Cram, of the family of Jonathan Cram, the early settler of Marietta. William J. Cram was born February 2, 1863, and was but six months old at the time of his father's death. Under the tender and wise care of a devoted mother, he and his brother, the late Oliver Dodge Cram, and his only sister, Grace Blockson Cram, were reared and educated in Marietta. While still a youth, in 1880, Mr. Cram entered the employ of the Argand Refining Company, of Marietta. He and his brother, Oliver, became holders of a large block of stock in this company. In 1897, the business, having been eminently successful for a number of years, was sold to the Standard Oil Company. For 12 years previous to this sale, Mr. Cram had been manager of the business.

Since 1897, Mr. Cram has been actively engaged in business operations, chiefly in Marietta. He is the chief stockholder in the St. Clair Building, on Putnam street, which he projected and erected, and where his office may be found. He was an active promoter of the People's Banking & Trust Company, in which he is a stockholder and director. This company occupies a part of the St. Clair Building, for business purposes. Other business matters also engage Mr. Cram's attention.

On May 9, 1901, the subject of this sketch was united in marriage with Emma Safford Cole, daughter of Reese N. Cole, whose residence is at "Highland Farm," Warren township, in Washington County.

The residence of Mr. Cram is at his country place, "Hemlock-on-Muskingum," three miles, or more, above Marietta.

The mother of Mr. Cram, who is still living, was Caroline Virginia Blocksom, daughter of Judge William Blocksom, of Zanesville, Ohio.

NATHANIEL ELDRED KIDD, a well-known attorney and justice of the peace located in Marietta, Washington County, Ohio, is a native of that county, and was born in 1870. He is a son of Nathaniel and Harriet A. (Barstow) Kidd.

Nathaniel Kidd, the great-grandfather of Nathaniel Eldred Kidd, had the following sons: John; William; Thomas; Isaac; Joseph and Nathaniel. The last named was the youngest. They settled near Waterford hut, on account of fever and ague in the lowlands, removed to a branch of Duck Creek, which is still known as Whipple Run. There they took up a tract of land, settling there in the summer of 1807.

Nathaniel Kidd, father of the subject of this sketch, was born there in 1833; he now resides less than a mile from the old homestead, and owns a part of the original settlement. Nathaniel Kidd married Harriet A. Barstow, a daughter of Henry E. Barstow; she was born in Newport township, January 3, 1840. Her father was also born there but removed to Williams County, Ohio, in 1869, his death occurring there in 1880. Nine children were born to Nathaniel Kidd and his wife, of whom two sons and one daughter are deceased. The others are—Mrs. Mary L. Cunningham, of Eva, West Virginia; Clark E., a farmer; Fremont; Carrie A.; and Addie.

Nathaniel Eldred Kidd, the subject of this biography, attended the common schools of his native county, and was afterward a pupil in the grammar and high school of Harmar. He prepared for college in Marietta, and read law with the well-known attorney, W. G. Way. He was admitted to the bar, March 11, 1898, and has since practiced in Marietta. He is also a justice of the peace in that city, and enjoys a large and increasing practice. Previous to taking up the practice of law, Mr. Kidd taught school in Washington County. He has always been of a studious turn of mind, and is constantly seeking knowledge which tends to advance him in his profession. September 7, 1893, Mr. Kidd was married to Mrs. Bessie (Carroll) McVay, of New London, Ohio.

From the formation of that party the Kidds have always been Republicans. Methodism has always been the family religion.

WILLIAM H. GURLEY, who has been a resident of Marietta, Ohio, for more than half a century, has followed the occupations of a merchant, steamboater, lumberman and oil prospector during his long and useful life. He was born in Portland, Maine, in 1824, is a son of Royal and Nancy (Hull) Gurley, and grandson of Rev. Ebenezer Gurley, who graduated from Dartmouth College in 1772, and died four years later at the early age of 29 years.

Royal Gurley was born at Portland, Maine, in 1776, and served as a lieutenant in the United States Navy. He, too, was a graduate of Dartmouth College, having completed the course in 1794. His death took place in 1824, when he was 48 years old. He was joined in marriage with Nancy Hull, a daughter of Capt. Samuel Hull, a cousin of Isaac Hull, and a niece of Gen. William Hull. Eleven children were born to Royal Gurley and his wife, two of whom are living,—Helen G. and William H. The former is now the wife of a Mr. Burlingame, of Springfield, Ohio.

In company with his mother, William H. Gurley left Portland and located in New Haven, Connecticut, where a part of his youth was spent. At the early age of 12 years, he began work as a clerk in a store. In 1846 he went to Marietta, Ohio, and opened the first book store ever established in that city. It was located at Front street, at the present location of the H. P. Theis hardware store. After several years of successful business, Mr. Gurley sold his bookstore to Charles E. Glines, and turned his attention to steamboating.

For three years he followed this occupation on the Ohio River, between Cincinnati and Charleston. Prior to the erection of a bridge across the Muskingum River, he ran the ferry boat "Two Sisters," between Marietta and Harmar. He brought from Wheeling, on flatboats, the first railroad iron, locomotive and cars to equip the Marietta end of the Marietta & Cincinnati Railroad. The engine was called the "Highland."

In the course of his career on the water Mr. Gurley has met with various disasters, has sustained heavy losses, and in some instances, has barely escaped with his life. His steamer "Virginia Home" was wrecked and lost in a tornado on the Ohio river. Later, Mr. Gurley was engaged in the lumber business in Michigan, and while there, the steamer "Morning Star," on which he took passage, was wrecked on Lake Erie, and he was adrift on a loose cabin door from 10 p. m. to 8 a. m., when he was rescued.

In 1873 Mr. Gurley was called to New York by some friends who had invested from $20,000 to $25,000 in a lumber operation in Virginia, near Gordonsville. The plan, as represented to them by a Captain Harris, "the promoter," was for the New York parties to obtain contracts from the various lumber dealers for all kinds of sawed lumber, and for ties from the railroad companies. Large contracts were made and orders were forwarded to Harris, and the company was wanting and expecting shipments that never came. Mr. Gurley was asked to go to Gordonsville and investigate the situation. On arriving there he found a very remarkable state of affairs. The Captain gave a very confused account of the business, and threatened to shoot Mr. Gurley if he interfered with him. Mr. Gurley, however, brought him to terms, but found little had been done toward producing lumber. Mr. Gurley was asked what he would take for the business, and replied that he would close it out on the refunding, by Harris, of the money the company had furnished.

Harris said he would bring a party from Washington and buy Mr. Gurley out. The party came and Mr. Gurley was introduced to a "Colonel Ryan," who was a long-haired man of foreign appearance. He said he had over a thousand men on his pay-roll, and was very busy with Cuban affairs, but would close up the purchase in a few days, on the terms proposed. He then left, but failed to return. Mr. Gurley found that the money had been mostly expended for arms and outfit for a Cuban filibustering expedition. Ryan and Harris sailed from New York for Cuba on the "Virginus," and were captured by the Spaniards, carried to Havana and shot.

Mr. Gurley chose for his wife, Nancy A. Chamberlain, a daughter of Lawrence and Laura (Clark) Chamberlain, and a granddaughter of John Clark, who at one time was sheriff of Washington County. Lawrence Chamberlain was formerly a resident of Cooperstown, New York, but afterward removed to Ohio. He was a ship carpenter by trade, and followed that occupation for a number of years in Marietta, but finally engaged in the drug business. His marriage with Laura Clark took place in 1823.

One son, W. C., blessed the union of William H. Gurley and his worthy wife. This son grew to manhood, and married. In the spring of 1882 he organized an association known as the Marietta Observatory Company. In November of that year the present observatory was completed, of which W. C. Gurley was chosen director. In 1890 it passed into the possession of Marietta College, still remaining under Mr. Gurley's direction. In June, 1898, his useful career was cut short by death. He is still survived by his widow, whose maiden name was Catherine Russell, and by three children.—Edwin, Laura and Norman.

For more than 30 years Mr. and Mrs. Gurley resided on the west side, but about seven years ago they removed to their present home at No. 500 Fifth street. While living on the west side, they united in worship at the Congregational Church. In politics, Mr. Gurley is a Republican.

WILLIAM A. DAY, a prominent farmer of Wingett Run, Ludlow township, Washington County, Ohio, was born in Mead township, Belmont County, Ohio, September 29, 1845, and is a son of Samuel L. Day.

Samuel L. Day was born August 31, 1820, in Pennsylvania, from which State he later moved to Belmont County, Ohio. He subsequently moved to Wingett Run, where he settled on the farm now occupied by the subject of this biography. He followed farming, and was quite extensively engaged in dealing in live stock. August 1, 1846, he married Drucilla Johnston, who was born January 23, 1825, and lived in Belmont County. They were members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. In politics, Mr. Day was a Democrat. Four children blessed their union, namely: William A.; Rachel E., who married Benjamin Scott, and lives in Council Grove, Kansas; Lavinia, wife of Elzy Ridgeway, who lives in Pittsburg, Kansas; and Thomas Z., who died at the age of 14 years. Mr. Day died August 11, 1853.

William A. Day has always lived on the farm, and his business career has been attended by success. He has 367 acres of land in Ludlow township, and is engaged in general farming and stock raising. He has 18 oil wells on the farm, which produce 24 barrels per day.

Mr. Day was 1st sergeant of Company G, 77th Reg., Ohio Vol. Inf., during the Civil War, having enlisted November 21, 1861. In May, 1865, he was commissioned as 2nd lieutenant of Company E, of the same regiment. He was in the engagements at Pittsburg Landing and the Fallen Timber, and was taken prisoner at Marks Mills, Arkansas, and imprisoned for a period of 10 months at Tyler, Texas. He was discharged at Brownsville, Texas, April 8, 1866.

The subject of this sketch married Joanna Hendershot, a daughter of Harvey M. Hendershot, a farmer of Ludlow township. The following children were born to bless this union: Samuel L., who married Maggie Mulinex, and lives on Little Muskingum River, in Ludlow township; Clara B., wife of J. N. Dent, a prominent merchant of Wingett Run; George E., who married Edna Grudier, and lives in Wingett Run; Minnie D., who married J. F. Graham, of Bloomfield, Ohio; Charles F., who is still unmarried and two children, who died in infancy. Mr. Day is a Republican, in politics, and, in religious belief, a Baptist.

WILLIAM L. ROLSTON. After a long, honorable and successful business career, William L. Rolston died, at his home in Marietta, Ohio, on June 22, 1895. He was born in Wood County, (West) Virginia, December 10, 1820, and was a son of Ephraim and Rachel (Vandiver) Rolston, natives of Rockingham County, Virginia.

William Rolston, grandfather of the late William L., purchased an extensive tract of land in Wood County, Virginia, in 1804, and this was the family home during the life of Ephraim Rolston, who died in 1823. The latter married Rachel Vandiver, and she survived him, with her son, William L., who was then three years of age. In October, 1826, she married James Dunn, who was a well-known hatter, in Marietta, and also a leading member of the Methodist Church. He was a prominent citizen and served as mayor. His death occurred in April, 1874.

After his mother's second marriage, William L. Rolston accompanied her to Marietta, and there attended private schools. He was engaged in the shoe and tanning business for some years, selling his tannery in 1866. The succeeding year was spent in Cincinnati, and upon his return to Marietta, he engaged in the milling business as a partner in the great Phoenix Mills. A few years after the Phoenix Mills company was formed, he retired from business activity. On August 31, 1847, he married Sarah Catherine Ward, a daughter of Nahum Ward, one of the most prominent of the early settlers of Marietta. Three children were born to them, namely: Sarah Vandiver, who is the widow of E. R. Dale, and resides at No. 318 Fourth street, in Marietta; Alice Lovell, who is the wife of Cambridge C. Clark, of Ironton, Ohio; and Grace, of Marietta. In religious matters, Mr. Rolston was identified with the Protestant Episcopal Church, to which his family belonged, but never lost his interest in the Methodist Church. His fraternal association was with the I. O. O. F. order, and in politics he was in accord with the Republican party.

Mr. Rolston built up a large and important business enterprise. He was animated by high ideals, was interested in educational matters, and took an active part in promoting the growth and development of Marietta.

GEORGE BRUCE QUINN, a representative agriculturist of Palmer township, Washington County, Ohio, and proprietor of Willow Roe Stock Farm, is well known as a busy, industrious man, who is thoroughly attention to his work. He is a son of George and Jane (Bruce) Quinn, is of Scotch-Irish descent,—his mother being of the historical Bruce stock,—and was born July 28, 1844. His paternal grandfather is believed to have come from Ireland, and was a soldier in the Revolutionary War.

George Quinn was born in October, 1805, in Columbiana County, Ohio. He moved to Washington County in the spring of 1838, and his daughter, Lizzie, now owns and occupies the old homestead. He married Jane Bruce, of Beaver County, Pennsylvania, who was born February 29, 1816, and the following children composed his family: two daughters,—Hannah and Lizzie E., and four sons,—Charles; David; G. Bruce, the subject of this sketch; and William. Of these Charles, William and Hannah are dead.

George Quinn was a farmer by occupation, and was quite successful in his labors, having owned nearly 800 acres of land at one time. In politics he was a Democrat. He was a member of the Methodist Church, in his younger days. His death occurred January 26, 1889. Mrs. Quinn died April 27, 1895.

G. Bruce Quinn was married, November 14, 1867, to Rowena Malster, a daughter of William and Sarah (Baker) Malster. William Malster was born December 11, 1795, and was a son of Christopher Malster, the first settler within the limits of what is now Palmer township.

Mr. Quinn's farm has good outbuildings, is very well improved, and is finely adapted to general farming. He takes great pride in his Merino sheep, and has met with good results in all he has undertaken. On February 22, 1882, Mr. Quinn met, at the United States hotel in Columbus, Ohio, a number of prominent sheep breeders, of Ohio, to consult as to the propriety of organizing the Ohio Spanish-Merino Sheep Breeders' Association, and to discuss the benefit that could be gained from such an organization. The result of this meeting was the forming of a register association of the Spanish-Merino sheep breeders of Ohio. G. Bruce Quinn, of Washington County, was chosen its first president, and held the position for eight years when, on his earnest request, the association consented to his relinquishment of the office. This association is still in a flourishing condition. It has been the means of uniting the best breeders of Ohio, and of placing the blood and breedings of their stock beyond doubt and cavil. Mr. Quinn's life has been devoted to his chosen work,—the breeding of American-Merino sheep and, lately, of some Shorthorn cattle. Mr. Quinn's family consists of himself and Mrs. Quinn, and Annie Kidd, a little girl taken from a benevolent institution about five years ago, who is a bright, promising child, now 15 years old, and is the pride and joy of his home.

In politics, Mr. Quinn is an ardent Democrat. He is a man of great information, a sincere, earnest thinker, and a fine conversationalist.

B. SMITH, one of the most prominent merchants and progressive citizens of Ludlow township, Washington County, Ohio, was born in Belmont County, Ohio, July 9, 1848, and is a son of Samuel Smith.

Samuel Smith was born in 1822, and is a farmer by occupation, now living in Kansas. He is a Republican, in politics, and in religious belief, a member of the M. E. Church. He married Adeline McKnight, and they reared the following seven children: James W., who married Sarah Johnston, and lives in Tennessee; J. B., the subject of this biography; A. M., who married Arie Steves and lives in Galena, Kansas; Francis Marion, who lives in Kansas; Samuel A., who married Miss Long, and lives in Kansas; Mary, a resident of Oregon; and Thomas Jefferson, deceased.

J. B. Smith was educated in Monroe county, Ohio, where he lived until 1863, when he enlisted in the Union army for three years' service. He participated in numerous engagements, among them those at Little Rock, Fort Morgan and Fort Blakely. He was captured at Marks Mills, Arkansas, April 25, 1864, together with the rest of Company C, 77th Reg., Ohio Vol. Inf., and was incarcerated at Tyler, Texas, for a period of ten months. He was exchanged at the mouth of Red River, February 25, 1865, and upon his return home, was engaged in farming at Rin-ard Mills, Monroe County, Ohio, for two years. He then went to Kansas, but, three years later, returned to Ohio and has since lived in Ludlow township, Washington County. In 1900 he engaged in merchandising at Pool, Ohio, and carries a very complete line of goods. He stands well among the citizens of the township, and has received a liberal patronage. He is also postmaster of Pool.

April 23, 1867, Mr. Smith was joined in marriage with Amanda McVey, who was born July 23, 1850, and is a daughter of John McVey. They have six children, namely: Sarah, wife of I. Mendenhall; Ardella, wife of W. F. Brandon, of Jeannette, Pennsylvania; Mary, deceased; Martha; S. L.; and E. W., who married Myrtle Griffin, and lives at Bloomfield, Ohio. Politically, the subject of this sketch is a Republican, and served as township trustee and assessor for three years. In religious attachment, he and his family belong to the United Brethren Church.

DANIEL F. MOREY, a progressive farmer of Fairfield township, Washington County, Ohio, was born in 1848, in Washington County, Penn.

He is a son of Thomas T. and Rachel (Forbes) Morey, who moved to Washington County, Ohio, in 1856, and located on a farm in Warren township, where the father died in 1890, aged 80 years. He was followed to the grave two years later, by his companion, who was then 70 years old. This couple reared four children, namely: Harriet, wife of Joseph Perdew, of Barlow township; Daniel F.; Walter F., of Muskingum township, who is foreman at Paine's pumping station, north of Marietta; and Hattie, who resides near Fleming, Ohio.

Daniel F. Morey, when eight years old, accompanied his parents to Warren township, where he was practically reared and schooled. He remained at home, assisting in farm work until he attained the age of 22 years. About that time, his marriage with Jane Moffett took place. Mrs. Morey is a native of Woodfield, Ohio, and is a daughter of William and Ann (Cozzens) Moffett. Her mother is still living in Fairfield township, at the advanced age of 85 years. Besides Mrs. Morey, she has two other daughters,—Mrs. Elizabeth Robinson, of Fairfield township, and Mrs. Mary Morris of Constitution, Warren township.

REV. HERMAN HERZER.

After his marriage, Mr. Morey and his wife located on a farm in Warren township, three miles north of the tunnel at Half Way Run. This farm contains 124 acres and is still owned by Mr. Morey, who subsequently purchased the Simeon Meek farm of 164 acres, in Fairfield township, on which he now resides, and where he carries on general farming. He has remodelled the house; built barns, and added many other improvements to the farm, a part of which is leased to oil prospectors.

Mr. and Mrs. Morey have three children,—Clancie May, who was born in 1871, and who married David Mindling; Minnie, who was born in April, 1874, and is now known as Mrs. Root, of Decatur township; and Frank G., who was born in June, 1881. Politically, Mr. Morey is a Republican, like his father, and he has served as trustee of Warren township. Both he and his wife are members of the United Brethren Church, and occupy a high social position in their community.

---

REV. HERMAN HERZER, pastor of the German Methodist Episcopal Church at Marietta, Washington County, Ohio, was born in Saxony, Germany, in 1833, and is a son of Christopher Herzer.

Christopher Herzer was a tanner by trade, and was also born in Saxony. He married Christina Goetz, and with his family moved to Detroit, Michigan, in 1848, where he was engaged in business for some time. He then bought a farm near that city, where he lived until his death.

Rev. Herman Herzer obtained his education partly in Germany, and partly in America. He taught school for some time, and entered the ministry 46 years ago. He was pastor of churches at Louisville, Kentucky, and Cleveland and Columbus, Ohio, and in 1899 located in Marietta, where he assumed charge of the German Methodist Church of that city. He was presiding elder of Northern Ohio for six years, and has also been a member of the Ohio Academy of Science for the past eight years. He has made a life study of geology, in which he became interested in it more as a matter of recreation, and has gone through many scientific studies during his pastorates. He is a profound student, and in the summer of 1877 was engaged in Kentucky under Prof. Shaler, of Harvard, in some particular geological work. He was employed by the State of Ohio in the geological surveys under Dr. Newberry, for five seasons. He has a fine collection of specimens which he has secured from various parts of the country, and has found several new specimens around Marietta, to which he has given names. As a minister of the Gospel he is highly regarded, and has won much praise for his manly discourses.

Rev. Mr. Herzer was united in marriage with Pauline Seiberlich, and they reared nine children, namely: Edward, a physician, of Louisville, Kentucky; Albert, who is connected with the U. S. Loan & Building Association, having headquarters at Akron, Ohio; Bruno, deceased, who was a soldier, and an officer in the army at Porto Rico; Milton, deceased; Annie, the wife of Rev. Emil Boch, of Dayton, Ohio; Clarence, a moulder, of Louisville, Kentucky; Novalis, a clerk in Columbus, Ohio; Sheffel, who is engaged in the drug business in Marietta; and Cornelia V.

Rev. Mr. Herzer lives with his family at the church parsonage, No. 432 Third street.

---

LUTHER EDGERTON, deceased, was a native of Norwich, Connecticut, where he was born October 1, 1804, and was the son of Luther Edgerton, Sr., and Lydia Lord Waterman Edgerton. He came of worthy and distinguished ancestry. Seventh in descent from Gov. William Bradford on his father's side, he inherited many of the traits that distinguished the famous Governor of Plymouth Colony. On his mother's side he was sixth in descent from Lieut. Thomas Tracy, of Tewksbury Manor, of Stanway, England, and one of the original proprietors and incorporators of Norwich. He was also seventh in descent from Maj. John Mason, of colonial fame. He was a lineal descendant of Rev. Peter Hobart, and ever proved himself a worthy representative of his noble Christian ancestry.

When a lad, Mr. Edgerton with his father's family made a long overland journey of six weeks to Marietta, which was then the far West. His early life was spent in the new community and in the course of time, while still young, he engaged in mercantile pursuits, in which he continued until near the close of the Civil War, when he retired from active business.

Early in his career he was engaged in business for a few years in Parkersburg, (West) Virginia, later in Newport, Ohio, and still later in Pittsburg. He spent, however, almost all of his long life in Marietta, where he passed away at the family residence, December 30, 1891, at the age of 87 years.

After returning to Marietta from his residence in Pittsburg, and upon his retirement from active business, Mr. Edgerton filled the office of treasurer of Marietta College for a time, as his early business habits made him reluctant to become wholly inactive.

In Mr. Edgerton a refined nature was combined with positive qualities and strong convictions. His most notable characteristic was the singularly strong moral sense which inspired and dominated his actions. His perception of truth was certain and clear. He was distinguished for the courage and persistence with which he adhered to what he believed to be right, and for the fidelity with which he discharged every known duty, in his family, in his business, and in the church. During his long career as a business man, it is safe to say no one ever gainsaid the fairness and integrity of his transactions. He had no ambition for public place, but always took the interest of a good citizen in the welfare of the community, state and nation. While living in Parkersburg, he erected, at his own expense, the first building used in that vicinity for the public worship of God, and with Rev. Dr. Addison Kingsbury, was instrumental in organizing the first Presbyterian Church in that part of the State. He united with the Presbyterian Church in his early manhood, and for nearly half a century was an honored elder in that denomination.

On December 15, 1830, Mr. Edgerton was united in marriage with Elizabeth McKennan Morgan, daughter of George Morgan, of Pittsburg, and of their eight children,—six sons and two daughters,—but one, Mrs. Lydia Edgerton Putnam, has retained her residence in Marietta.

In connection with the early history of this country, it is pertinent to state here that Mrs. Edgerton was the granddaughter of Col. George Morgan, a native of Philadelphia, later a resident of Princeton, New Jersey, and the junior member of the firm of Morgan, Baynton & Wharton, one of the first and leading mercantile houses in Philadelphia, or the colonies. Colonel Morgan was appointed president of the first court of judicature in the Northwest Territory, November, 1765. He was also the first Indian Commissioner, having been sent out by Congress to Pittsburg, in April, 1775, as agent for Indian Affairs for the Middle Department. He was the first English-speaking person to make the trip from the mouth of the Ohio down the Mississippi to New Orleans, having organized an expedition which, besides himself and one or two white men who accompanied him from Philadelphia, consisted mainly of Indians. Few things are of greater interest in the history of early explorations, than Colonel Morgan's journal. He was a patriotic and distinguished citizen, and the records of Congress bear the fullest testimonials as to his ability and integrity.

In 1777, George Morgan received his commission of colonel in the army of the United States, and was offered an important command in the North. This he was induced to relinquish at the request of Congress that he would direct his exertions toward the arduous task of preserving tranquility on the Indian frontier. He was regarded as preeminently qualified for that important trust, and in the latter part of 1777 he accepted the commission of commissary general of the armies of the United States for the Western District. These facts are of interest to students of early Western history.

BENJAMIN PERKINS PUTNAM, deceased, eldest son of Douglas Putnam, of Marietta, was born May 4, 1832, and died July 15, 1870. He was a lineal descendant of Gen. Israel Putnam. His middle name was derived from his paternal grandmother, Elizabeth Perkins, a daughter of Dr. Elisha Perkins, who was a Douglas, on her mother's side, and a descendant of the Scotch family of that name, famous in history.

Mr. Putnam grew to manhood in his father's house, and graduated at Marietta College, in the class of 1852. Shortly afterward he visited the West and purchased a section of land in Iowa, where he spent a number of years in making agricultural experiments. In the winter of 1862, he returned to Marietta, where throughout his later life he was associated with his father in manufacturing interests, and resided on the old homestead,—the stone house, still standing on the west bank of the Muskingum River.

In early manhood Mr. Putnam united with the Congregational Church on the west side, and was a leading and influential member of that church, in which he held the offices of trustee and treasurer, and was also superintendent of the Sunday-school at the time of his death.

Mr. Putnam was a man of cultivated, refined tastes, with a keen sense of humor. A lover of books, he was a charter member of the Marietta Reading Club, and to the last retained an active interest in the organization.

On February 14, 1860, Mr. Putnam was united in marriage with Lydia Waterman Edgerton, daughter of Luther and Elizabeth Morgan Edgerton. Their two children, Douglas and Elizabeth Edgerton, are both living. The former, soon after his graduation from Marietta College, in the class of 1881, moved to St. Paul, where he was made secretary of the Bankers' Life Association, now the Minnesota Mutual Life Insurance Company, which position he occupies at the present time.

R. EDWARD PARDON COOKE, a prominent physician and surgeon of Barlow, Washington County, Ohio, was born at Marietta, May 24, 1855, and is a son of Jonathan Russell and Susanna Morgan (Dodge) Cooke. He is a grandson of Rev. Pardon Cooke, who for many years preached in Methodist churches in Washington County and counties adjoining. Rev. Pardon Cooke was born in Belpre, Ohio, and was a son of Joseph Cooke.

Jonathan Russell Cooke was born June 15, 1821, and during his early career in business, was engaged in merchandising in Marietta. Subsequently he was engaged in the planing mill business in partnership with J. E. Hall and W. L. Rolston, at Marietta, and continued thus until his death, December 26, 1861. He married Susanna Morgan Dodge, who was born August 13, 1821, and died December 3, 1900, at the age of 79 years. She was descended from the Hall and Dodge families, both prominent among the early families of the county. The Halls came from Connecticut, on horseback, three trips over the mountains being made in moving to their new home. The Dodge family came to Washington County from Massachusetts. Six children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Cooke, namely: John, who died in infancy; Russell D., who lives in Marietta; Charles Foote, who died in infancy; Jessie, who died at an early age; Edward P.; and George M., a well known journalist of Marietta.

Dr. Cooke attended the public schools of Marietta, and in 1876, was graduated from Marietta College. He then studied medicine with Dr. J. D. Cotton, and in 1878 completed a course in the Medical College of Ohio, at Cincinnati, graduating with the degree of M. D. He practiced for one year at Portsmouth, Ohio, after which he became identified with the Athens State Hospital, as assistant superintendent. He served two terms in this capacity covering a period of 10 years. Between these terms he practiced at Barlow six years, and finally located permanently in that village, in 1897. For about five years he has served on the United States Board of Pension Examiners for Washington County. His practice is not confined to the village of Barlow, but extends far out into the surrounding country. He has made a great success in his profession, and is one of the substantial men of the community.

Dr. Cooke was united in marriage with Adelaide M. Cook, who comes of a West Virginia family. Fraternally, he is a member of American Union Lodge, No. 1, A. F. & A. M., of Marietta. He also belongs to the Washington County Medical Society. Religiously, he was reared in the Episcopal faith.

JOHAN HUCK, a substantial farmer of Washington County, Ohio, who owns and operates a fine farm of 220 acres in Adams township, located within three miles of the village of Lowell, is one of the most highly esteemed citizens of his locality.

The birth of Mr. Huck occurred in Union (now Adams) township, Washington County, Ohio, on May 18, 1856. He is a son of Theodore and Bernhardina (Rauch) Huck, both natives of Baden Baden, Germany. Theodore Huck was born in 1822, and came to the United States in 1846, locating first in Pennsylvania. In February, 1856, he came to Washington County, Ohio, and settled in what was then known as Union township. He is still residing on his farm, now in Adams township. He is a man of means and reliability, and has been township trustee. His political sympathy is with the Democratic party. The religious connection of the family is with the Catholic Church.

John Huck's mother, who was born April 23, 1830, passed from this life in December, 1897, at the age of 67 years. She was a good Christian, and was devoted throughout her life to the welfare of her family. The children born to these parents were as follows: Mary, who lives at home; Elizabeth, the wife Henry Toma, of Watertown; Caroline, deceased; John; Philomena, the wife of John Fisher, of Adams township; Joseph, a resident of Adams township; Christina, the wife of Landelin Strahler, of Watertown; and Andrew, of Adams township.

On October 29, 1885, John Huck was married to Justina Strahler, a daughter of Joseph and Katherine Strahler, who was born in Pennsylvania on May 10, 1864. They have had the following children: Emma; Mary; Loretta; Joseph; Clarence; Frank D., deceased; Raymond; Eleanora; and Caroline.

Mr. Huck is an extensive farmer in Adams township and also owns and operates a saw-mill, and, in season, a thrasher. He is a man of ability and business enterprise, and is justly regarded as one of the substantial citizens of the township, of which he is a very efficient trustee. He is identified with the Democratic party, and actively upholds its candidates and methods. He and his wife belong to the Catholic Church, and have carefully reared their children in its teachings.

OTIS A. TRUE, who is a successful farmer and an enterprising citizen of Salem township, Washington County, Ohio, was born in Urbana, Illinois, in 1870, and is a son of Wilbur L. and Sarah (White) True.

Mr. True, although born out of the State, belongs to one of the old families of Washington County, his great-grandfather, Ephraim True, having moved there from New Hampshire, in 1792, but four years after the colonization of Washington County began. By trade he was a carpenter, and he found work in the growing village of Marietta. After his marriage he settled on the farm in Salem township which is now owned and operated by Otis A. True. Here he died, and here his descendants have passed away. Wilbur L. True was born in this old home, and was a son of Moses and Mehitabel True, who also passed their lives on this farm. Wilbur L. was a carpenter by trade, but carried on farming for some years. After the close of the Civil War, about 1869, he went to Champaign, Illinois, and there engaged in farming. He married Sarah White, who was a daughter of Joseph White, both natives of Pennsylvania. She died in Illinois, in 1872, at the early age of 26 years, leaving three children, namely: Alfred J., who resides at Bonn, Ohio; Otis A., who is the subject of this record; and Ada E., who is the widow of Joseph Williams, and resides in Kilmer, Ohio. After the death of his wife, Mr. True with his little children returned to Salem township, and there followed his trade until a short time prior to his death in 1894, at the age of 52 years. He enlisted in the Union army, in Company H, 92nd Reg., Ohio Vol. Inf., and served about two years, being discharged on account of disability. He was a member of the G. A. R., and a supporter of the Republican party. His wife was a member of the Methodist Church. For his second wife, he married Mary O. Warwick, and one child was born to their union, Russell H., who is in the U. S. Navy.

SEYMOUR J. HATHAWAY.

Otis A. True was reared and educated in Salem township, and after completing his education, was engaged, for eight years, in teaching in the district schools, meeting with much success. After giving up his profession he took charge of the home farm, and has lived upon and successfully operated it ever since.

In 1896, Mr. True was united in marriage with Lottie J. Whetstone, daughter of Isaac and Hannah Whetstone, who was born in Salem township, in 1875. Two children have been born to this union, namely: Orpha A. and Wilbur L. Mrs. True is a member of the Methodist Church, and is active in its various charitable and missionary enterprises. Mr. True is fraternally connected with Aurelius Masonic Lodge, and Elba Lodge, Knights of Pythias. He is also an officer in the National Guards. In 1898 he was second lieutenant of Company D, 7th Reg., Ohio Vol. Inf., while in camp at Camp Alger, Virginia, and was afterward promoted to be first lieutenant in the same company. Both he and his wife have a large social acquaintance, and are among the most highly esteemed residents of Salem township.

SEYMOUR J. HATHAWAY, a prominent attorney-at-law of Marietta, and president of the Board of Trade, was born in Macedon, Wayne County,

New York, and is a son of Luther and Clarissa Louise (Ripley) Hathaway.

Mr. Hathaway attended the public schools of Marietta, whither he moved a short time prior to the Civil War, and was graduated from Marietta College in 1869. He then entered upon the study of law and was admitted to the bar in 1871, having been under the preceptorship of M. D. Follett. He served as clerk of the Probate Court about two years, under Judge McCormick, and in 1874 served as city solicitor. He has been a trustee of the Washington County Children's Home since 1887, and took an active part in the organization of the Ohio Conference of Charities and Correction, of which he was president in 1894. In 1891 he was elected to represent the Third Ward of Marietta in the Council, and in 1896 was chosen president of that body. He is a firm friend of the working man, and has taken considerable interest in the movement in behalf of organized labor. As a councilman, he served six years, and in that time substantially all the streets of the city were paved and most of the sewers constructed. Mr. Hathaway, during the whole period, served as chairman of the paving committee. He is now serving his third term as president of the Board of Trade, an organization which has proved of great value to the city. Ever since his admission to the bar, Mr. Hathaway has been engaged in the active practice of the law.

Seymour J. Hathaway was united in marriage with Mary C. Means, a daughter of William Chase and Louise (Cummings) Means, of Portland, Maine, and they have two children, —William Luther; and Louise Claire, who graduated from Marietta College with the class of 1901. The subject of this sketch is a member of the Masonic fraternity, belonging to the blue lodge, chapter and council. Religiously, he and his family are Baptists. They reside at No. 319 Third street.

AS A D. HALLETT, a well-known farmer and highly respected citizen of Salem township, Washington County, Ohio, and an honored survivor of the Civil War, was born in this township in 1843. His parents were Zenas and Maria (Whetstone) Hallett.

Zenas Hallett was born in Adams township, Washington County, in 1820, and was a farmer by occupation. During the Civil War, when the loyal sons of the state were called upon to protect her property and people from the raider Morgan, Mr. Hallett was one of the first to leave his plow and go to assist. Returning then to his peaceful avocation, he continued in active labor until near the close of his life, in 1891. He married Maria Whetstone, who was born in 1819, in Guernsey County, Ohio, and was a daughter of Daniel and Mary Whetstone. She died in 1890. Mr. and Mrs. Hallett were consistent members of the Methodist Church, and were honored and respected through life. They had three children, namely: Asa D.; Lucy J., deceased; and John C., of Pike County, Ohio.

Asa D. Hallett, the subject of this sketch, was reared on his father's farm in Salem township, and attended the public school. He was a lad of but 18 years when he offered his services in defense of his country. In 1861 he enrolled his name in Company D, 42nd Reg., Ohio, Vol. Inf., under Captain Riggs, and remained in the service until September, 1864, when he was mustered out at Columbus, Ohio. He participated in many of the important engagements of the war, and took part in the siege of Vicksburg, the battles of Chickasaw Bluffs, Thompson's Hill, Black River Bridge, and Champion Hill, and the battle of Middle Creek, under Col. James A. Garfield. He was 4th corporal, and his record shows the valor of a true soldier. Mr. Hallett is a member of Stanley Post, G. A. R., at Lower Salem.

After the close of the war, Mr. Hallett returned to Salem township and resumed farming. He now owns a very valuable and well-improved farm, located within three miles of Salem, comprising 52 acres of productive land. In 1870 Mr. Hallett was united in marriage with Mary E. Moreland, who was born in Wesley township, in 1852, and is a daughter of William and Winnifred Moreland. A family of ten children has been born to Mr. and Mrs. Hallett, whose names are as follows: Clyde; Noma M., deceased; Claude; Winnefred; Anna, who married Clarence Powell, in Coshocton county, Ohio; Mary, deceased; Augustus K.; Corwin and Chester R., deceased; and Goldie. Mrs. Hallett and the children are members of the Methodist Church, of which Mr. Hallett is a liberal supporter. He has long served as school director and takes an active interest in the progress and development of the township. In politics he is identified with the Republican party. Mr. Hallett is one of the leading and representative farmers of the township, and enjoys the esteem of his fellow-citizens.

MRS. LINNIE THORNBERRY, widow of the late Levi M. Thornberry, is the possessor of a farm of 200 acres, all excellent, well-improved land, and in a state of high cultivation. She is a daughter of Harvey and Mary (Smith) Morris, the former, born September 9, 1815, and the latter, born October 15, of the same year. They were married in Watertown township and Mrs. Thornberry was born there December 4, 1874.

The subject of this sketch was united in marriage with Levi M. Thornberry on July 11, 1899, the ceremony being performed by "Squire" Kidd, of Marietta, Ohio. They had one child, Levi Gordon by name, whose birth took place April 14, 1900. Mr. Thornberry was a son of Jesse Thornberry, who was born February 3, 1853, and lived and died in Watertown township. For five years he served in the regular army faithfully and well, and participated in the Indian wars, being in General Terry's command during the Custer massacre.

Fraternally, Mr. Thornberry was a member of Barlow Lodge, Knights of Pythias, and when his death took place, May 27, 1902, that organization had charge of the funeral. In politics, his vote and influence were cast in favor of the Republican party, and he was accounted a first-class citizen by all in the community.

Mrs. Thornberry is a woman of good judgment and common sense, who thoroughly understands her position as overseer of the farm work. She has many friends, and enjoys their highest respect and esteem.

JAMES J. McDERMOTT, deceased, was one of the prominent farmers of Watertown township, formerly known as Union township, until his death, which occurred in 1899, when he was fifty-one years of age.

Mr. McDermott spent his entire life in his native place. He was a son of Philip McDermott, who was born in Ireland, came to the United States in 1837, and purchased the farm, later owned by his son, James J., in 1844. He was one of the first to settle in that township, in which but one or two families lived at that period.

In 1877 the ceremony was performed which made James McDermott and Margaret Crane husband and wife. Mrs. McDermott was a daughter of Martin and Mary Crane, and was born in 1852, in Fearing township. She was the mother of five children, as follows: Frank, who makes his home in Marietta, Ohio, and is an efficient bookkeeper, holding a position with the American Bridge Co.;

James, who lives at home; Mary; Philip; and Annie.

Mr. McDermott was a faithful member of the Catholic Church. In politics he was a valued member of the Democratic party and served creditably as justice of the peace. The farm which he owned consisted of 160 acres, located six miles south of Lowell, and is chiefly under the control of James McDermott, who makes his home there.

JACOB BROOKER, deceased, who was formerly a prosperous tiller of the soil in Watertown township, Washington County, Ohio, was a man of integrity, and was well worthy of the consideration and respect of his fellowmen. He was born in the Keystone State, in 1821, and died in 1898. He was a resident of his native state until his removal to Michigan in the early "fifties" and in 1858, he moved to Washington County, Ohio, purchased the farm now owned by his son, four miles from the city of Lowell, and lived comfortably there until his demise. He chose for his wife a lady whose name was Mary Ann Becher, who was also a native of Pennsylvania, and whose parents were David and Ellen Becher. Her birth occurred in 1835, and she still survives her husband and makes her home with her sons, on the old farm. She and her husband were devout members of the Catholic Church. They reared a family of eight children; namely, Lizzie, who is a resident of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania; Daniel and Andrew, who make their home in Watertown; John, also of Pittsburg; Martha, who was united in matrimony with Patrick Dyar, of Watertown township; Joseph, who is still at home; and David and Jacob, who own and operate the farm.

Mr. Brooker was always interested in political affairs, following the lead of the Democratic party, and served, with credit, as assessor and school director. After his death, the two youngest sons, Jacob and David Brooker, purchased the shares of the other children in the homestead, and have since controlled the 150 acres, showing in many ways their ability and knowledge in that direction. Jacob is married, having been united with Magdalena Singer, a daughter of Anthony Singer, and a native of McKees Rocks, Pennsylvania. His two children are named Alice and Francis. The brothers are progressive in their methods, and keep the home place in the best condition possible, receiving the commendation and good wishes of all who know them.

RED S. MCGEE, M. D., a prominent physician of Belpre, Ohio, and a representative of one of Washington County's most respected families, was born at Moss Run, Washington County, Ohio, October 8, 1869. He is a son of Samuel S. and Susan E. (Dye) McGee.

Samuel S. McGee was born in Noble County, Ohio, and obtained his mental training in the common schools. For many years he was an extensive oil operator, and was afterward engaged in mercantile pursuits, in which he accumulated considerable wealth. He was a very successful farmer, and now, in his declining years, is leading a retired life, in the full enjoyment of the fruits of his early toil. The only official position he ever accepted was that of commissioner of Washington County, in which capacity he served seven years. His wife departed this life February 26, 1894.

Dr. Fred S. McGee attended the common schools of his native county, and later was a pupil in Marietta Academy. He read medicine under the preceptorship of Dr. E. W. Hill, and later entered Starling Medical College, at Columbus, Ohio. He was graduated from that institution with the class of 1891.

In August, 1894, Dr. McGee was united in marriage with Mary Stone, a daughter of A. D. Stone, one of the most prominent and wealthy residents of Belpre. Since his graduation he has followed his profession in Bel-pre, and has established an enviable reputation as a physician, and a remunerative practice.

Dr. McGee and his wife are parents of two children,—Lawrence S. and M. Cornelia. The Doctor is a strong supporter of Republican principles. He is a member of Parkersburg Lodge, No. 198, B. P. O. E.; Harmar Lodge, No. 390, F. & A. M.; Belpre Lodge, No. 619, I. O. O. F.; of which he is past grand; the Knights of Pythias of Belpre, of which he is past chancellor, and the Sr. O. U. A. M., of which he is past counselor, and has also served as treasurer for the last five years. Dr. McGee is a member of the Washington County Medical Society, and the Ohio State Medical Society. He is a public-spirited citizen, and evinces a deep interest in all that pertains to the good of the county.

HARLES F. SHANKLAND, a driller by trade, and an expert workman, is an esteemed resident of Reno, Washington County, Ohio. He was born at Masterton, Ohio, in 1876, and is a son of James and Annie (Bull) Shankland.

James Shankland is now sixty-four years of age, and is successfully conducting a grocery store in Marietta, Ohio. He was united in marriage with Annie Bull, a daughter of Rease Bull, a prominent farmer of Jackson County, West Virginia.

Five children resulted from this union, as follows: B. W., an oil pumper by trade; Charles F., the subject of this writing; James, a clerk in his father's store in Marietta; Lulu, a tailoress by occupation; and an infant, as yet unnamed.

Charles F. Shankland was united in marriage with Lulu Hyler, a daughter of James and Betsy (Hook) Hyler, the former a prominent grocer at Reno, Marietta township. The latter was a daughter of Captain I. N. Hook, who for many years ran a boat on the Ohio River, but is now living a retired life. The mother of Mrs. Shankland was reared at Hooksburg, Morgan County, Ohio.

A. L. GRACEY.

One little daughter named Edith, now three years old, brightens the home of Mr. Shankland and his worthy wife, and in her sweet life their fondest hopes are centered. In his political opinions Mr. Shankland is a decided Republican, and exerts all his influence for the success of that party. He has followed his present occupation for a period of eight years, and is considered an excellent workman.

L. GRACEY has been closely identified with many of the most prominent business concerns in Marietta, and has done much to advance and develop the interests of the city. He is a native of Washington County, having been born 10 miles east of Marietta, and is a son of William Gracey.

William Gracey, his father, moved from Jefferson County to Washington County, Ohio, in 1840, and here resided until his death. His wife, Sarah Andrews, was born in Somersetshire, England, and came to this country when six years of age, her family locating in Belmont County, Ohio. There she was married, and then moved with her husband to Washington County. They reared four sons and three daughters, as follows: Joseph, who is engaged in mercantile pursuits at Quayley, Ohio; A. L., the subject of this biography; George W., a merchant at Gracey, Ohio; William, who died in July, 1901, was in the oil business; and Elizabeth (Root), Martha (Scott), and Jestina (Moreland), all of Gracey, Ohio.

A. L. Gracey was reared on the farm, and obtained his mental training in the public schools. He was then engaged in teaching for some 10 or 12 years, and came to Marietta in 1884. He next engaged in the oil business, and finally made his headquarters in Marietta, where he has his office at No. 302 Front street, in the building in which are located the offices of the Marietta Electric Company, of which he was president until May, 1902, when the company was merged into the Parkersburg, Marietta & Interurban Railway Company. The Marietta Electric Company was established in 1896 by Mr. Gracey, Nelson Moore and John Kaiser, the officers being A. L. Gracey, president; Nelson Moore, vice-president; J. S. H. Torner, secretary; W. H. H. Jett, general manager; and I. O. Alcorn, electrician. These officials, with John Kaiser, John Simpson, E. Clark, Jr., and D. S. Doyle, were the directors. They succeeded the old horse-car company, which had about two miles of track. This they increased to nine miles, reaching practically all the main portions of the city, before the company was merged into the Parkersburg, Marietta & Interurban Railway Company. The power house is located at Norwood. The main engine and dynamo room is 90 by 100 feet, the boiler room 55 by 90 feet, and the car barns are 55 by 155 feet, in dimensions; the barns have a capacity for 35 cars. All are brick buildings, with truss roofs. At the power house are employed two engineers, two firemen, one helper, two night hostlers, and a first-class machinist. Connected with the plant is a fine machine shop, 26 by 40 feet, in dimensions, supplied with lathes, drill-presses and other machines necessary for repair work. Twenty-one men are employed regularly on the cars, besides six extras and a general book-keeper. The power is generated by three dynamos—two 250-K. W. and one 100-K. W. The company also does commercial lighting, for which are required three dynamos,—one 360-K. W., one 150-K. W., and one 75-K. W.—each dynamo having a separate engine to run it, and the three engines having an aggregate strength of 1,500 horse power. The Marietta Electric Company was one of the main spokes in the wheel of progress of Marietta during its few years of operation.

Mr. Gracey is still a large oil producer, and, in addition, does an extensive real estate business in connection with the Union Investment Company, of which he is president and treasurer. I. O. Alcorn is secretary of this company, and its directors are as follows: A.

L. Gracey, I. O. Alcorn, W. H. H. Jett, J. S. H. Torner, John Kaiser, William H. Ebinger, and Nelson Moore. Mr. Gracey is also a director of the German National Bank. He is a director of the Acme Brick Company, of which W. H. H. Jett is general manager, the plant having been established in Norwood, in 1899, for the manufacture of ornamental, pressed and common bricks. The subject of this sketch is also a director of the Crystal Ice Company, and president of the Marietta Telephone Company, which was incorporated in 1900, with J. S. H. Torner as vice-president, and A. C. Davis as general manager. He is also a director and charter member of the Pioneer City Building & Loan Association.

LOUIS E. MILLER, an influential farmer of Marietta township, Washington County, Ohio, was born February 17, 1860, on the farm on which he now lives. His father, Robert T. Miller, was born in Fearing township, Washington County, Ohio, June 18, 1810, and was a son of John Miller, a native of New York State, who settled at an early date in Fearing township. John Miller moved to Marietta township in 1826, with his family, and located on the farm now owned and occupied by his grandchildren. Robert T. Miller inherited a part of the old homestead and purchased the rights of the other heirs, and at the time of his death, left to his children 200 acres of rich land. He married Marietta Fuller, born in 1814, a native of Massachusetts, and a daughter of Charles Fuller, who with his family, came to Fearing township, Washington County, driving an ox team, when his daughter was about nine years old. Mr. and Mrs. Robert T. Miller had nine children, of whom five are now living, namely: Charles; Robert T., Jr.; Lucy E., wife of J. W. Thorniley; Mary A., wife of Dr. William Mitchell; and Louis E., all of Marietta township.

Robert T. Miller died August 25, 1896. Mrs. Miller died September 26, 1886. She was a member of the Baptist Church.

Louis E. Miller was the youngest son of the Miller family. He received his primary education in Marietta township, and later attended Marietta College, for one year. He has always lived on the old homestead, and is now devoting his time and attention to agricultural affairs.

He married Josephine Racer, a daughter of O. E. Racer, who was a son of Benjamin J. Racer, an old settler of Marietta township. E. O. Racer had two children,—Josephine, the wife of Louis E. Miller, and Valmar, who married Lucy Miller, a daughter of C. A. Miller, and has an infant son,—Maurice.

Louis E. Miller and wife have been blessed with two children, namely: Mary Caroline, born September 3, 1887, who attends the township high school; and Ezra Racer, who was born December 9, 1893. Mr. Miller is a Republican, in politics. The family are Methodists. Mr. Miller has spent all his life in Marietta township, where he is well known, and is generally admired for his many good traits of character, and his energetic spirit.

John Miller and his son, Robert T., in an early day, followed flatboating to New Orleans, in addition to farming.

JOSEPH SCHILLING, a worthy citizen of Union township, Washington County, is a farmer by vocation, and owns 115 acres of good land four miles southwest of Lowell, where his skill and experience are manifested by the manner in which he conducts his work.

Mr. Schilling was born in 1860, on the farm on which he lives, and is a son of Philip and Elizabeth (Hopp) Schilling, natives of Germany, where Joseph's birth took place in 1811. The father emigrated to this country when a young man, scarcely twenty-two years of age, and was located first in New York, and later, in Florida, during the first years of his residence here. He came to Washington County, Ohio, during the latter part of 1836, and settled near Bear Creek, where he remained a number of years. In 1851, however, he went to Union township, and worked at his trade, as wagon-maker, for the greater part of the time. He chose for his wife, Elizabeth Hopp, daughter of John and Margaret Hopp, who died in 1881, at the age of sixty-four years. They had eleven children, namely: John; Elizabeth, the wife of Thomas Reck, of Kansas; Philip; Peter, deceased; William; George; Mary and Edward, deceased; Jacob; Caroline, the deceased wife of Philip Trapp; and Joseph.

Philip Schilling and his family were members of the Catholic Church. In politics, he was ever faithful to the Democratic party, and served well as trustee of his township for many years, and also as school director. His death took place April 20, 1902, and he was mourned by all as an upright, conscientious citizen.

Joseph Schilling was united in marriage September 9, 1885, with Margaret Quinn, a daughter of James and Julia Quinn, who was born in Union township, June 25, 1867, and bore him seven children as follows. Mary; Leo; Joseph; Elizabeth; Anna; Eulalia; and Aloysius. The family attend divine service at the Catholic Church, of which they are members. In politics, Mr. Schilling is a Democrat, of true and honest type. He has gained the good will and best wishes of all in his community, and takes an active part in all enterprises which tend toward the betterment of his township and county.

MILES ALLISON STACY, a prosperous farmer of Muskingum township, Washington County, Ohio, was born March 14, 1829, at Rainbow settlement. He is a son of John and Louisiana (Frost) Stacy, and grandson of Joseph Stacy.

Joseph Stacy was one of the pioneer settlers of Muskingum township. He was a native of Salem, Massachusetts, came to this county about 1789, located at Rainbow settlement and there spent his last years. His wife was Martha Perry, and she was the mother of three children,—Joseph, Mary, and John. John Stacy was born in Rainbow, and there lived and died, having followed farming all of his life. He married Louisiana Frost, and they had four children, namely: Miles Allison; Osmer A.; Lucebe; and Sophia.

Miles A. Stacy's grandmother, Mrs. Nancy Allison Frost, lived to the advanced age of 107 years, and retained her faculties until the last. She lived in the block-house at Marietta, having been one of the original settlers of this county. She was noted for her remarkable memory, and remembered events of recent date as well as occurrences during her early life. She possessed an immense collection of facts pertaining to the early history of Ohio, which she graphically related. She was born October 22, 1784, and died February 10, 1892.

Joseph B. Dyar, the father of Mrs. Miles A. Stacy, was a native of Nova Scotia, born in 1800. He came to this country in 1815, and settled in Muskingum township, where he remained the rest of his life, carrying on farming. His wife, Abigail Proctor, was the daughter of Sir Nathan Proctor, who was born in Barlow township, Washington County, Ohio, in 1802, and was one of the pioneer settlers of this section. Joseph B. Dyar's death occurred in 1890; his wife survived until 1896, and died, aged 94 years.

Miles A. Stacy, the subject of this sketch, received his mental training at Rainbow settlement, and followed trading until 1861, when he enlisted in the 36th Reg., Ohio Vol. Inf., and served for a period of three and a half years. He went out as a private, was shortly afterward promoted to be orderly sergeant, and later, was made captain of his company. He was mustered out of service at Columbus, Ohio, in 1864, after having participated in the following engagements: That at Lewisburg, Virginia, Second Bull Run, and those of South Mountain, Antietam, and Cloyd's Farm, in the last of which he was slightly wounded in the arm. He was in command of his company at that time, and, refusing to enter the hospital, continued in active service. He took part in the battles of Kernstown, and Berryville, Virginia, and participated in other important engagements and skirmishes.

Mr. Stacy was united in marriage with Harriet A. Dyar, a daughter of Joseph B. and Abigail (Proctor) Dyar, and to them were born six children, namely: Adelaide, who lives at home; Amelia; Ella; Grace and Joseph Maxwell, deceased; and M. Edwin, a graduate of the Marietta High School, who is living with his parents at home.

Mr. Stacy's farm is on the banks of the Muskingum River, and is one of the finest in Washington County. He keeps it under a state of high cultivation, and takes great pride in its care and management.

ACOB A. SCHWENDEMAN, who lives on his fine farm of 270 acres, one mile south of Lowell, Washington County, Ohio, is a native of Salem township, and was born in 1846. He is a son of Andrew and Elizabeth (Brooker) Schwendeman.

Andrew Schwendeman first saw the light of day in the Grand Duchy of Baden, in 1818, and lived in his native country until 1837, the year of his coming to the United States. Upon his arrival here he located in Allegheny County, Pennsylvania, and remained there until 1845. He then settled in Salem township, Washington County, Ohio, where many years of his life were spent in comfort. His occupation was that of a farmer, and, in this he was busily engaged until his death, in 1890, while in Watertown township. His wife was Elizabeth Brooker, a daughter of Joseph and Elizabeth (Frick) Brooker, who was born in Mifflin County, Pennsylvania, in 1822. Her grandfather Frick was a surgeon of note in the German army. To Mr. and Mrs. Schwendeman were born nine children, as follows: Jacob A.; Mary, who married August Weber, and lives at Marietta; Caroline, the widow of John Fondreau, of Waterford; Joseph, who lives in Watertown township; Elizabeth, deceased; Peter and Frank, residents of Watertown; Andrew, of Marietta; and a child, also called Andrew, who died at the age of nine months. The parents of these children were Catholics, in religious faith. Mrs. Schwendeman's death took place in 1893. The father was a Democrat, in politics, and was quite active in the service of his chosen party, having served at one time as trustee of old Union township.

In 1870 the subject of this sketch was united in marriage with Caroline Kern, a daughter of John and Elizabeth Kern. She was born in Allegheny county, Pennsylvania, in 1851, and departed this life in 1897, leaving nine children to mourn her loss. Their names are as follows: Edward; Sophia; Maximilian; John; Frank; Mary; Ida; and Peter and Paul, twins. The family were reared in the Catholic faith, and are active members of that church. In politics, Mr. Schwendeman is an influential Democrat, working for the good of his party. Previous to entering upon a farmer's life, he taught school for five years, giving satisfaction in all his engagements. He is well educated and keeps posted on all current topics, while superintending his farm and fulfilling his obligations as a good citizen.

ILLIAM BERNHARD PAPE is engaged in agricultural pursuits in Marietta township, Washington County, Ohio. He was born in 1860, in Fearing township, and is a son of John D. and Christina (Fitchin) Pape, who moved to Marietta township in 1867.

John D. Pape was a native of Germany, and came to this country with his parents, when quite young. They settled in Fearing township, where his father engaged in farming. John D. Pape is now living a retired life in Marietta, his wife having died four years ago.

MRS. LYDIA R. HART.

William Bernhard Pape, the subject of this sketch, attended school at Sand Hill, Marietta township, and worked on his father's farm for a few years, before he began farming for himself. He purchased the homestead farm in 1901, but has owned land in this section of the county for the past eighteen years. Mr. Pape is a man of good principles, and a citizen of which any county might well be proud. He is always interested in any enterprise which is undertaken for the good of the people of Washington County, and readily gives it his support. He is a thrifty farmer, and the general appearance of his farm speaks well for his ability as a manager.

On January 10, 1884, Mr. Pape was married to Marilla Florence Hoffman, a daughter of Henry Hoffman, who was a farmer and stock raiser, of Marietta township. They have had nine children, namely: Kasper E., who was born January 17, 1885, and is attending the Marietta Township High School; Bertha Columbia, who was born November 12, 1886, and is attending High School; Jennie Gertrude, born February 17, 1888, a pupil in the High School; Herbert Hoffman, born November 10, 1889, who attends the grammar school; Eldon Orville, born January 10, 1892, who is in school; Mandes Lewis, born February 27, 1894; Harold McKinley, who was born November 3, 1896, and died October 31, 1898; Clara Sophia, born April 7, 1899; and Christina Alice, born March 15, 1901.

Mr. Pape is a Republican in politics. His family attend the Methodist Church.

three times, our subject's mother, who was Honor Deming, being his first wife. She was a native of Massachusetts, and they reared seven children, as follows: Austin, born in 1808, who followed farming until his death; Columbus, born in 1810, a carpenter by trade, now deceased; Mary Ann, born in 1812, deceased; Lucy W., deceased; Simeon D., born August 13, 1818, the subject of this personal history; Sallie Emeline, born in 1820, who died at the age of eight years; and B. F., a physician, born in 1822, a history of whose life is given elsewhere in this book.

The second wife of Benjamin Hart was Mrs. Esther Wilson, a daughter of Deacon David Wilson, of Washington County. One of their children is Henry C. Hart, who now resides at Yankeeburg, Newport township. Some time after her death, Mr. Hart was united in marriage with Mrs. Rebecca Lawrence, who was formerly Rebecca White, a daughter of David White, of Windsor township. They had one daughter, Frances A. (Plumer), who is now living in Marietta.

The subject of this sketch attended the schools of Marietta, and afterward took a course in the Academy. He began the practice of medicine with his brother, Dr. B. F. Hart, in 1844, and diligently kept at work at his profession until a few years ago. He was united in marriage with Lydia Minerva Lawrence, a daughter of Rufus and Rebecca Lawrence, also early residents of Washington County. Dr. Hart was called upon to mourn her loss in 1884, the same year in which his father was laid to rest. At that time the Doctor was superintendent of the Washington County Children's Home, having assumed the duties of that position on April 1, 1869. His wife assisted in every way she could, to help her husband in the work, and served as matron in the institution. In 1881, owing to ill health, Dr. Hart resigned, in January, but the board declined to accept his resignation, and he held the position until 1888.

For four years, Dr. Hart spent two or three months yearly among the mountains of West Virginia, and in 1882 he went to the R. SIMEON D. HART is one of the oldest residents of Washington County living, as well as a pioneer settler of that county. He is a son of Benjamin and Honor (Deming) Hart.

The former came to Marietta in 1800, from his home in Connecticut. He spent five years in that city, but on account of sickness removed to the valley of Waterford, and applied himself to agricultural pursuits. He was married sanitarium at Battle Creek, Michigan, where he remained nearly four and a half months. After his wife's death, Miss E. A. Nixon, a most faithful teacher under the doctor and his wife, served as matron in the Children's Home, from 1884 to 1888. Over 700 children passed through the Doctor's hands, and the institution was very prosperous and widely known during his management.

1890 Dr. Hart was united in marriage with Mrs. Lydia Corner (nee Rood), a daughter of David and Cyrena Rood, and a native of Washington County. They are members of the Congregational Church and contribute liberally to its support. In politics, the subject of this sketch was first a Whig, and later a Republican. Fraternally, he has been a valued member of the I. O. O. F. for 49 years.

HENRY H. MINCH, who is engaged in farming in Adams township, Washington County, is also a very active business man, being president of the Lowell Steam Mill Company, and also a director in the First National Bank of that city. He is a son of Adam and Anna M. (Rice) Minch, and was born in January, 1856, in Adams township. His father and mother were born in Bavaria, Germany, the former, January 24, 1824, and the latter, in 1828. Mr. Minch, died in 1886, when sixty-one years old and his widow is still residing with her son, Henry H. In 1838 Adam Minch came from the land of his birth to the United States, and made his home in Marietta until 1852, when he removed to Adams township, and started work on his farm there. In this occupation he continued successfully, living in comfort and happiness with his wife and family, until his death. Mrs. Minch was a daughter of Frank W. and Susan (Wendell) Rice, and is the mother of nine children, those reared being as follows: Phoebe B., who became the wife of George E. Bower, and is now deceased; Christina M., who married Philip Mattern, and lives in Lowell; Henry H., the subject of this personal writing; Mary E., who united in marriage with Jacob Snyder, of Zanesville, Ohio; Caroline R., the wife of Daniel Snyder, also of Zanesville; Sarah K., who married John J. Rice, and lives in Zanesville; Emma E., now Mrs. Eli Wilson, of Glendale, Oregon; and Peter R., a resident of Marietta, Ohio. The parents of these children were German Lutherans in their religious faith. In political affairs Mr. Minch was a straight Republican, and as a citizen was honored by all who knew him.

In 1887 Henry H. Minch was united in marriage with Rosie Ann O'Conner, a daughter of Thomas and Mary (Cunningham) O'Conner, and a native of Roseville, Ohio, where her birth took place in January, 1863. They have four children, namely: Statie M.; Henrietta J.; Ernest L.; and Ara G. The family attend the German Lutheran Church, in the faith of which they have been reared.

The duties of a farmer do not occupy all the attention and time of Mr. Minch, for he is also extensively interested in the oil industry. For the past four years he has been contracting in the oil fields of Washington County, and he is also a producer, of note. He is a millwright by trade, but has not given his attention to that work for some years. In politics he is a member of the Republican party, and in social circles he affiliates with the I. O. O. F., the Encampment and Rebekahs, auxiliary lodges, and the Marietta Lodge of Elks, in all of which he proves a valued member.

AMUEL L. DAY, a valued citizen of Washington County, Ohio, has followed farming all his busy life, and is now looked upon as one of Ludlow township's most progressive agriculturists.

Mr. Day was born October 26, 1868, and is a son of William A. Day, a highly respected farmer now residing in Ludlow township, who was born in Belmont County, Ohio, and was united in marriage with Joanna Hendershot, a daughter of Harvey M. Hendershot, a farmer of Ludlow township. This union was blessed with seven children, two of whom died in infancy. The others are as follows: Samuel L., the subject of this sketch; Clara B.; George E.; Minnie D.; and Charles F.

Samuel L. Day was reared on a farm, received his mental training in the schools of Ludlow township, and has since given all his attention to general farming. His farm consists of 160 acres of the best of land, on a part of which are 23 oil wells, 18 of which are producing. These wells make the land doubly valuable, and in addition to operating them, Mr. Day raises Durham and Shorthorn cattle quite extensively.

The subject of this sketch was united in matrimony with Maggie Mulinex, a daughter of David Mulinex, and they reared two children, namely: Annie Mary, whose birth took place in 1899; and Drucilla B.

The family of Mr. Day are Protestants in religious faith. In politics, Mr. Day is active in the interests of the Republican party.

◆◆◆◆◆

DAVID B. MULINEX, who buys and sells stock, in addition to carrying on general farming, in Ludlow township, Washington County, Ohio, was born August 27, 1844, in Guernsey County, Ohio. He is a son of Robert Mulinex.

Robert Mulinex was born January 5, 1820, in Guernsey County, Ohio, and removed to Washington county, in 1845. He bought 80 acres of land from Alexander Bell, 80 acres from Bailey Keys, of Baltimore, Maryland; 40 acres of the Olds estate, 120 acres from Oliver Reese, in 1867, and 40 and 56 acres, still later. This he deeded to his son, David B., the subject of this sketch. Robert Mulinex was married in Guernsey County, to Margaret Brill, a daughter of Samuel and Margaret Brill, and they reared two children.—David B., the subject of this sketch; and Priscilla Jane, who died at the age of twenty-two years.

After the death of his first wife, Mr. Mulinex married Nancy Brill, her sister. Robert Mulinex was a Whig, and served as county commissioner for some time. He attended the United Brethren Church.

The farm of David B. Mulinex consists of 515 acres of finely improved land, some of which he rents. He carries on general farming and also buys and sells stock, extensively. He served in Company H, 92nd Reg., Ohio Vol. Inf., and was discharged after eleven months' service, on account of disability.

Mr. Mulinex married Mary M. Mosey, a daughter of John Mosey, a farmer of Liberty township, Washington County. She was born October 5, 1847, and has borne him the following children, namely: Ettie I.; Maggie, who married Samuel L. Day; Robert T., deceased; Lala M.; Nellie P., deceased; Cadie, deceased; and Byron B.

The subject of this sketch favors the Republican party. The family attend the United Brethren Church. Mr. Mulinex is a member of the F. & A. M. lodge, and also of the G. A. R. lodge. He is prominent in all public enterprises and undertakings which tend toward the advancement of the people of Washington County, and is well known throughout the county as a man of high principles and firm resolution.

◆◆◆◆◆

WILLIAM L. RECKARD, one of the many prominent agriculturists living on the west side of the Muskingum River, has a farm about two and a half miles from Marietta, Washington County, Ohio, his native city, and carries on general farming to a great extent. He has a valuable sand bank on his farm, of a depth of at least 60 feet, and supplies most of the sand used in the trades at Marietta.

Mr. Reckard is a son of Alvin and Esther (Brown) Reckard, and grandson of Joseph Leonard Reckard, who was in the livery business, and also worked as a blacksmith in Marietta, for a number of years. The maternal grandfather of the subject hereof was James Brown, formerly of New York State, who went to Washington County and settled on Wolf Creek, where the mother of William L. was born. He afterward went back to New York on account of sickness, but later returned to this county, where he settled about three miles out on Duck Creek. Alvin Reckard and his wife had eight children, as follows: May Elizabeth, wife of George Davenport, residing in Norfolk, Nebraska; Frank B., who resides in Chicago, and is a bridge builder; James L., who resides in Sioux City, Iowa, and conducts a livery business; William L.; George W., of Norfolk, Nebraska, a carpenter; Margaret Ella, wife of Rev. S. S. Sharpless, of Norfolk, Nebraska; Joseph Alvin, of Los Angeles, California, who is in a railroad office; and Nathan F., of Omaha, Nebraska, teller in the Union Stockyards National Bank, of South Omaha. Alvin Reckard died in 1882, aged 65 years. Mrs. Reckard still survives, and lives with her daughter, Mrs. Davenport, in Norfolk, Nebraska.

The subject of this sketch was born March 15, 1846, in Marietta. He chose for his wife, Martha S. Mathews, a daughter of George Mathews. She was born and reared on the farm on which she still lives, which was the property of her father. Mr. Mathews' father-in-law, Peter Fernley, who came to this country from England, and who was one of the pioneer settlers of Washington County, left it to his care. Mr. Reckard and his worthy wife have two children, namely: Margaret Ella, who married George P. Wilking, of Marietta, a foreman in Becker's Mill; and C. W., a young gentleman of 20 years, who is still at home.

Mr. Reckard is a believer in the principles of the Republican party, and does his part to promote the success of that organization.

VAUGHN, a prominent and substantial farmer and successful oil operator, of Washington county, was born in Aurelius township, in 1858, and is a son of Adroyal and Sally A. (Wharff) Vaughn.

Adroyal Vaughn was born in 1819, in Aurelius township, on the same farm which later became the birthplace of his son. His death occurred on October 26, 1894. He was a son of Ely Vaughn, a native of New York, who came to Washington County, as one of its earliest settlers, in 1789, and one year afterward, his permanent settlement was made at Marietta, and in Aurelius township. Adroyal Vaughn was a farmer all his life. In politics he was identified with the Republican party. His religious connection was with the Baptist Church. He married Sally A. Wharff, who was a daughter of Oliver and Nancy Wharff. She was born in Salem township, Washington County, in 1823, and died on January 10, 1899. She also was a consistent member of the Baptist Church. They had a family of 12 children, as follows: Ira; Mary; Margaret Ann; Caroline; Andrew; Miles; Amanda; Ai; Warren, Emma, Bertha, and Arletha. Ira died in the services of his country, having enlisted in 1861, in Marietta he died at Fortress Monroe, in 1864. Mary married Herman Henninger, of Marietta. Margaret Ann first married James Stacy, and next Newhall Wilson, and resides on the old home farm. Caroline married Isaac Wilson, and resides in Noble County. Andrew resides in Salem township. Miles is a farmer in Adams township. Amanda is deceased. Warren lives in Cleveland. Emma married Adolph Schulheiz, of Aurelius township. Bertha married Clarence Haga, of Aurelius township, and Arletha, who is deceased.

In April, 1881, Mr. Vaughn was united in marriage with Almira Schuster, a daughter of Isaac and Margaret Schuster, who was born in Jackson township, Noble County, Ohio, in 1856. They have a family of five children, namely: Charles; Mina; Effie; Carrie; and Gertrude. Mrs. Vaughn and her children belong to the Methodist Church. Mr. Vaughn is fraternally connected with the Odd Fellows, of Salem; the K. of P., of Macksburg; and the Marietta lodge of Elks. In politics, he is a staunch Republican.

Mr. Vaughn is one of the very substantial men of Lowell. He is a large oil operator in the Macksburg district, and owns not only a fine farm of 350 acres of producing land, in Adams township, on the Muskingum River, but also the old family homestead, consisting of 70 acres in Aurelius township.

HON. FREDERICK J. CUTTER.

HON. FREDERICK J. CUTTER, a gentleman who has been highly successful in the practice of law, is one of the most prominent and energetic citizens of Marietta, Ohio. He was born in Watertown, Washington County, Ohio, October 5, 1839, and is the fourth son of Lewis J. and Eve Eleanor (Wagner) Cutter, of Dürkheim, Bavaria, Germany.

Lewis J. Cutter, with his wife, came to America in 1838, and settled in Watertown, Ohio, in the spring of 1839. In 1841 they purchased the Cutter homestead at Churchtown, Ohio. Until 1900 this property remained in the possession of the family, which originally consisted of the father, mother and 12 children.

Frederick J. Cutter was reared on the Cutter homestead, and at the age of 16 years engaged with the late Hon. William P. Cutler, grandson of Manasseh Cutler, on his farm at Constitution, Ohio, where he remained four years. He then went to Cincinnati and took a course in Grundy's Commercial College. In January, 1861, ambitious to obtain a liberal education, he secured a route on the Cincinnati Daily Gazette, which he held until June, 1865, and which enabled him to pay his expenses while attending school at Herron's & Professor Clive's seminaries. In September, 1865, he entered Marietta College, on the advice of Hon. William P. Cutler, a trustee of that institution, from which he was graduated in 1868. While at college, he taught school during the winter vacations, and in summer worked on the farm. During the two years following his graduation, he taught school and assisted his father on the homestead. In 1870 he took charge of the Cutter homestead and continued in its management until 1891. In 1872 he commenced the study of law under Hon. Thomas W. Ewart, and was admitted to the bar in April, 1875. He remained in the law office of Ewart & Sibley until December, 1876, and then engaged in practice for himself. From 1876 to 1878 he was deputy United States marshal for Washington County. In 1879, he was elected secretary of the Muskingum Bridge movement. In 1881 he was elected Probate judge of Washington County, and was re-elected in 1884, serving six years. In February, 1888, at the close of his second term, he resumed the practice of law, and in 1891 was admitted, at Columbus, to practice in the United States Courts. In 1889 he was elected to the 69th General Assembly of Ohio, and served with credit. In April, 1902, he was elected city solicitor of Marietta, for a term of two years. He has always taken an active part in matters of public interest. For 14 years he was connected with the Washington County Fair Association as a director, eight years of which time he was president of that body. In 1881 he led in organizing the Washington County Farmers' Association, under the auspices of which the annual Farmers' Institutes were held, and of this organization he was president eight years. During his presidency, more addresses and essays prepared by local talent were delivered at the Institutes and published in the annual agricultural reports of the State, and in the local newspapers, than during any other equal period in the history of the county. In politics, Judge Cutter has always been a staunch and faithful supporter of the Republican party, casting his first vote in 1860, for President Abraham Lincoln. He has been an active Republican worker as well, having served several years as secretary of the county executive committee, and having taken an active part as a campaign speaker.

Judge Cutter is a member of the First Congregational Church, of Marietta, and has served as a trustee of the First Religious Society. He took a leading part in the Marietta Centennial Celebration, being chairman of the entertainment committee for April 7, 1888.

Socially and fraternally, Judge Cutter is a member of the Marietta Reading Club and the Knights of Pythias.

On March 23, 1887, Judge Cutter was united in marriage to Marguerite Henton Carter, at the home of the bride's parents, No. 305 West 55th street, New York City, by Rev. William M. Taylor, D. D., LL.D., pastor of the Broadway Tabernacle Church. Mrs. Cutter is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John H. Carter, and a great-granddaughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Henton, of No. 93 Oldhall street, Liverpool, England.

Judge and Mrs. Cutter came at once to their new home, No. 227 Putnam street, Marietta, where they have since resided and where their son, Frederick Carter Cutter, was born, September 10, 1888.

RS. MARY J. HOON. One of the fine homes of Watertown township, Washington county, Ohio, is the property of Mrs. Mary J. Hoon, who is not only a most estimable and universally esteemed lady, but is also a member of one of the old and leading families of Waterford township.

The birth of Mrs. Hoon occurred in Waterford township, on August 13, 1842, and she is a daughter of John B. and Flora (Bingham) Hagerman. Her mother was a daughter of David and Hannah (Chandler) Bingham, the family having originated in Vermont. The ten children of Mr. and Mrs. Hagerman were as follows: Aaron, who was born April 11, 1834, and lives in Morgan county, Ohio; Seth C., who was born on February 25, 1836, and died in Kentucky, in 1880; Adelia, who was born June 27, 1838, married Jesse Smith, and lives in Nebraska; Hannah J., born October 7, 1840, who married Lieut. O. P. Hill, and lives in Viroqua, Wisconsin; Mary J., who is the subject of this sketch; Daniel B., who was born in September, 1844, and died when six years old; John H., who was born September 16, 1846, and died in September, 1864, from the effects of exposure during his service in the Civil War; Frank, who was born August 11, 1848, and died November 16, 1899, leaving eight children: Flora B., who was born February 3, 1850, married Lewis Dolan, and lives at Dell, Wisconsin, having seven children; and Hiram C., who was born July 13, 1853, and died March 23, 1896.

Mrs. Hoon grew to womanhood in Watertown township, and obtained her mental training in the public schools. On November 23, 1862, she was united in marriage with Samuel A. Hoon, who was a son of John B. and Jane (Patterson) Hoon. One son resulted from this union, namely: S. Bennett, born on July 4, 1863. On September 23, 1896, S. Bennett Hoon married Estella J. Pryor, who was a daughter of Amos and Lizzie Pryor, residents of Barlow township.

In 1861 Mr. Hoon enlisted in Company D, 63rd Reg., Ohio Vol. Inf., under Capt. G. B. Bartlett, of Waterford. He was a brave soldier, participated in many battles, and was so severely wounded at Atlanta, Georgia, that it was necessary to amputate his leg. His record as a soldier was a fine one, and his pension was richly deserved. He died October 11, 1867.

UNCAN DRAIN, one of the well-known and energetic land-owners of Palmer township, Washington County, Ohio, is the possessor of 245 acres of land and like many of his neighbors and friends, is engaged in general farming and the raising of stock. He was born in October, 1817, and is a native of Argyleshire, Scotland. His parents were Daniel and Jeanette (Templeton) Drain, the latter being a daughter of John Templeton, and a native of the same place as Duncan Drain. Daniel Drain departed this life in 1864, in Scotland, where he farmed, and two years later his widow followed him.

Duncan Drain came to this country in his 19th year, making the voyage in a sailing vessel, which took six weeks to cross the ocean. He and his two brothers, John and Daniel, landed in New York, and by means of the railroad, canal and wagon conveyance, arrived at length in Ohio. It took several days to make the trip down the river, from Pittsburg to Marietta. They landed in May, 1838, and proceeded to the farm of his brother, Thomas, who had come to the United States in 1831, and purchased a farm in Barlow township. Here these boys remained until the fall of that year, when the subject of this sketch went to Cincinnati, and plied his trade of harness making, which he had learned in Scotland. Removing from Cincinnati, Mr. Drain went to Charleston, (West) Virginia, and worked at his trade for nine months, but his health failed him and he was compelled to stop work and go to Washington County, Ohio, where his brother Daniel was located. He went into partnership with Daniel on his farm in Dunham township. Another brother, Thomas, who had, as already stated, come to this country in 1831, located first in Barlow, now Palmer, township. Thomas finally bought a part of Blennerhassett's Island, and settled on his purchase, on the opposite end of the island from the site of the old Blennerhassett home. Later, he moved to Long Bottom, Ohio, and still later to Warren township, where he died.

Duncan Drain purchased his present home of James Hunter. It then consisted of 160 acres, and he has added to this from time to time until he is now the possessor of 345 acres of valuable land.

Mr. Drain chose for his wife Catherine Greenlees, a sister of Thomas Greenlees, whose personal history appears elsewhere in this book. The ceremony was performed May 29, 1845. Catherine Greenlees was a daughter of Hugh and Ann (Harvey) Greenlees. Their union resulted in nine children, namely: Hugh; Jeanette; Ann Harvey; Nancy; Daniel; Mary; Elizabeth; Margaret; and Rosa. Hugh still resides at home. Jeanette became the wife of C. C. Curtis, of Athens County, Ohio. Ann Harvey was united in matrimony with Orlando Trotter, who was afterward clerk of courts at Marietta. Nancy, who married Edward Glen of Roxbury, Ohio, is deceased. Daniel was united in marriage with Mina Arnold, of Watertown. Mary married Marcus Lawton, of Barlow. Elizabeth lives at home. Margaret married James M. Proctor, of Barlow. Rosa married Walter S. Proctor, of Barlow.

In religious belief, Duncan Drain, like his father, is of the United Presbyterian faith. He is a member of the Republican party, and has stood for its principles during his entire life. His farm is well kept; the house is of brick, and the other buildings are convenient and up-to-date. He is a representative citizen in many respects, and is a very useful man in his township.

M. GRAHAM, a prosperous farmer, of Ludlow township, Washington County, Ohio, was born February 8, 1847, in Belmont County, Ohio, and is a son of Hamilton Graham.

Hamilton Graham was born in Pennsylvania, and came to Ohio when a mere boy, settling in Belmont County. Later, in 1849, he removed to Ludlow township, Washington County, where he engaged in general farming, having entered 120 acres of land in section 7, range 6. He married Mahala Baker, a daughter of James S. Baker, who lived near Wheeling, West Virginia, and they reared nine children, namely: A. M., the subject of this sketch; Hulda, who married John McCormick, and lives in Southern West Virginia; Philip, who married Rachael Devol, and lives in Grandview township, Washington County; Americus, who married Margaret Devol, of Grandview township; Jane, who married Luther Thomas, of Ludlow township; Jerry, who married Belle Wostle, of Grandview township; Isaac, who married Mary Wostle, and lives in the same township; Anna M., who married Alex Lisk, of Ludlow township; and John, who lives at home. Hamilton Graham was a Democrat, in politics; in religious belief he was a Methodist.

A. M. Graham, whose name heads these lines, was united in marriage with Eunice Adamson, who was born June 28, 1850, in Monroe County, and is a daughter of John Adamson. They have reared eight children, of whom the names of those living are as follows: William R., of Ludlow township, who married Laura Rinard; Annie E., of Ludlow township; Maurice, who married Mary Miller; Bessie, who married John L. Hall; and J. F., who married Minnie Day, and is living in Pool, Ohio.

Mr. Graham formerly had a farm of 240 acres, but at present he is the owner of but 100 acres, on which he carries on general farming, most successfully. He has oil wells on his land, which are producers. He is an enterprising citizen, and has served as township trustee. He also served as justice of the peace for a period of six years, and as treasurer of the township ten years. His name is identified with all the charitable and public enterprises of his vicinity. He is a man of good judgment and correct principles, and is greatly esteemed by all who come in contact with him. He belongs to the Democratic party. Religiously, he is a Baptist.

GEORGE HESS, a prominent citizen of Washington County, Ohio, who has long been identified with oil interests in this county, both as owner and operator, was born in Aurelius township, in this county, on February 22, 1857.

Mr. Hess is of German ancestry, his parents being William and Mena (Henniman) Hess, both of whom were natives of that country. The father was born in 1815, and the mother in 1818. In 1852, they came to America, and made their first home in Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, where Mr. Hess followed his trade of stonemason. Later he removed to Ohio, settling on a farm in Aurelius township, in Washington county, where he died on April 20, 1883, his wife having passed away on September 10, 1876. They were both consistent members of the German Lutheran church. In political action, Mr. Hess was a Democrat. They had a family of three children, as follows: Charles, who is engaged in the meat business in Marietta; George, who is the subject of this sketch; and John, who is deceased. By a previous marriage, to Jacob Grosskloss, the mother of George Hess had four children, three of whom grew to maturity, namely: Jacob, who served in the Civil War, was wounded, and died in Adams township, Washington County, in 1890; Minnie, who married Louis Shau, and resides in Wheeling, West Virginia; and Lizzie, who married Adam Miller, and resides in Aurelius township. By a previous marriage to a Miss Baker, the father of George Hess had a family of four children, as follows: Christian, who, during the Civil War, enlisted at Marietta in a cavalry regiment, and was killed; Jacob, who enlisted at Marietta, in an infantry regiment, in the Civil War, and was afterward a butcher in Chicago, where he died in 1900; William, who was a mill man, and died in Wheeling, in 1900; and Lizzie, who married a Mr. Baker, and resides in Wheeling.

George Hess, the subject of this sketch, was reared on his father's farm in Aurelius township, and attended the public schools. His fine farm is located one and a half miles northwest of Warner, and consists of 105 acres of excellent land. For the past 14 years, Mr. Hess has been interested very extensively in the oil business. On the old homestead farm, which he once owned, 12 producing wells were located. His present attention is more particularly given to the rich oil sections of Jackson, Aurelius and Salem townships, where he leases and operates, and where his efforts have been very successful. Mr. Hess is a member of the Crossley Oil Company, of Aurelius township; and of the firms of Hess, Hall & H. H. Longfellow, of Salem township; and Longfellow Bros., at Macksburg, contractors and producers of oil, gas and artesian wells.

On July 22, 1878, Mr. Hess was married to Calla Augustine, a daughter of Matthew and Christina (Baisch) Augustine, who was born in Adams township, Washington County, on June 17, 1862. They have three children, as follows: Charles, born September 10, 1880; George, born March 1, 1883; and Stella, born October 29, 1890. Both Mr. and Mrs. Hess belong to the German Lutheran Church. The father's fraternal relations are with the Salem lodge of Odd Fellows, and the Encampment, and Charles belongs to the Maccabees. In politics, the subject of this sketch is a Democrat, although not an active politician. For a considerable length of time he has served on the school board, and always lends his influence in the direction of those enterprises which promise to be of benefit to this section. As a citizen and business man, Mr. Hess is regarded with esteem in Washington County, where his large business interests have made him well known.

CHARLES H. NEWTON.

JOHAN LIGHTNER, a prosperous merchant, oil producer and farmer, of Wolf Creek, Washington County, Ohio, was born September 5, 1854, and is a son of John and Eliza J. (Dickinson) Lightner, natives of Harrison County, Ohio.

John Lightner, the father of the subject of this sketch, was a farmer by occupation. He moved from Harrison County, Ohio, to Morgan County, Ohio, and died, when comparatively a young man, in Harrison County, while on a business trip. Unto him and his wife were born six children, as follows: Levi; Mary J.; Alex.; Maggie; John; and Amanda. In religious belief, John Lightner, Sr., was a Methodist. His widow died when her son, John, was but 11 years of age.

The subject of this sketch received his mental training in the common schools of Morgan County. He engaged in farming and sawmill work when a young man. He moved to Washington County in 1884, and engaged in farming upon a tract of 102 acres on Wolf Creek. This he cultivates very successfully, and in connection with farming, he also conducts a store. He carries a full supply of choice family groceries and provisions, boots and shoes, clothing, dry-goods, etc., etc.

Mr. Lightner was married, in 1883, to Matie Murdock, a daughter of G. W. Murdock, of Morgan County, Ohio. They have had four children, namely: Nellie; Mary V.; Lucy E.; and Charley B. Mrs. Lightner is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. In politics, Mr. Lightner is a Republican, and has been treasurer of Palmer township for 12 years. He is postmaster of Wolf Creek, having held the office even since the post office was established here.

CHARLES H. NEWTON, a prominent citizen of Marietta, Ohio, and treasurer of the Dime Savings Society, was born at Harnar, Ohio, July 13, 1842, and is a son of Stephen Newton.

The Newton family is one of the oldest families of the county. Ellis Newton, great-grandfather of Charles H., was a silversmith. He was born in Norwich, Connecticut, came to Washington County, Ohio, about 1801, and a few years later erected a home in Warren township. He was a Revolutionary soldier, and after the war engaged in farming. His son, Oren Newton, grandfather of Charles H., was born at Norwich, Connecticut, and came here with his father. He bought a farm on which he lived the remainder of his life.

Stephen Newton was born in Washington County April 25, 1813, and until recently was actively engaged in business, but is now retired. He is past 89 years of age, in full possession of all his faculties, and has the appearance of a man many years his junior. He came to Marietta at the age of 16 years, and engaged as clerk in a store. About 1836 he went into business on his own account, and continued this until 1843, when he was elected county recorder, and served in that capacity until 1855. From 1857 to 1859 he was county treasurer, after which he was actively and successfully engaged in the life and fire insurance and real estate business until recent years. In the latter line of transaction he was one of the pioneers.

Charles H. Newton received a recruiting commission from Governor David Tod, and recruited 33 men for the 2nd Reg., Ohio Heavy Artillery, which was regularly organized at Camp Dennison, in 1863. He was commissioned second lieutenant, and July 19, 1864, first lieutenant while on duty at Fort Saunders, Kentucky. Returning from the army, he was engaged in the real estate and fire insurance business with his father for a time. In October, 1865, he became a partner in the general store of Turner, Bosworth & Company, in Harmar, Ohio; but one year later he sold his interest to Moffit Dye. In the fall of 1868 he moved to Iowa City, Iowa, and remained there until June, 1870, when he returned to Marietta, and became teller of the Union Bank. In 1874 he purchased the business of Johnston & Beck, general insurance agents, which he conducted until July 12, 1877, when he was elected treasurer of the Dime Savings Society, to succeed W. H. Johnston.

The Dime Savings Society of Marietta was incorporated December 6, 1871, by John L. Mills, C. K. Leonard, H. B. Shipman, R. P. Iams, E. B. Read, C. C. Warner and J. C. Blauvelt. The primary object of the incorporators was to induce the saving of small amounts, and this has been lived up to. Ten cents and upwards are received at the institution, upon which semi-annual, compound interest is figured. The depositors are the only stockholders and deposits now aggregate over $750,000. Money can be loaned only on first mortgage security, and government, State and county bonds. The past five or six years have been years of especially rapid development in the banking business, and this bank has flourished with the rest. The original home of the bank was in the building now occupied by Fuller's undertaking establishment. After one or two changes, it was permanently located at No. 114 Front street, in 1886. In November, 1886, the bank purchased the property, which has a frontage of 40 feet, and was formerly occupied by the Bank of Marietta. In April, 1901, the institution was temporarily moved, and the erection of the present fine, modern structure was commenced. The new building was occupied February 13, 1902. It consists of four stories and a basement, and is built of brick, with stone front. There are two store-rooms on the first floor; the elegantly decorated and commodious offices of the bank, and the offices of the Ohio Dental Company are on the second floor, and the other two stories are devoted to offices. The building is a model of completeness in arrangement and conveniences, and is well lighted and equipped with a good elevator service. The officers of the bank are: W. G. Way, president; J. E. Van Dervoort, vice-president; Charles H. Newton, treasurer; and Rufus H. Steele and Pressly M. White, tellers. The directors are as follows: M. F. Noll, Charles W. Otto, M. R. Andrews, William H. Lord, A. W. Tompkins, Jacob Seyler, A. J. Richards, C. L. Flanders, Henry Wendelken, and G. B. Sunderland. The bank has been of great benefit and importance to Marietta, and the officers are deserving of much praise for the able manner in which they have handled the affairs of the institution.

March 6, 1865, Mr. Newton married Mary Elizabeth Dana, who was born November 21, 1843, and is a daughter of William P. Dana, who died in 1858. They had two sons, namely: Stephen D., who died September 8, 1869, while residing with his parents at Iowa City; and Charles William, who was born November 29, 1867, at Marietta, and is now a prominent physician of Toledo, Ohio. Charles William Newton was assistant surgeon of the 10th Reg., Ohio Vol. Inf., in the Spanish-American War. He is a graduate of Marietta College, and of the Ohio Medical College at Cincinnati. The subject of this sketch is a member of Buell Post, No. 178, G. A. R., and was vice-department commander of Ohio for the term expiring in 1901.

AIMAN R. WARREN, M. D., who has been a practicing physician in Germantown, Washington County, Ohio, since 1874, traces his ancestry to a Warren who reached America on the Mayflower. The name has been one of honor and renown in the United States for many generations.

The birth of Dr. Warren occurred in 1852, in Liberty township, Washington County, Ohio, and his parents were Dr. Justus M. and Belinda (Kidd) Warren. Justus M. Warren was born in 1829, near Caldwell, Noble County, Ohio, and died in Germantown, in 1868. His father was James S. Warren, who was one of the early pioneers from Sterling, Massachusetts, who came to settle at Marietta, but permanently located in Noble County. From there in 1849, Dr. Justus M. Warren removed to Liberty township, in Washington County, where he was engaged in medical practice for 18 years. He was a man of prominence, was held in high esteem in the Baptist Church, and was a captain in the township militia. For a number of years he served as justice of the peace, and was considered a leader in all matters of public importance. Politically, he was a Democrat, and fraternally, he belonged to the Masonic lodge at Macksburg. His captain's commission was signed by Governor Tod. The mother of the subject of this sketch was a daughter of Amos and Keziah Kidd, and was born in Fearing township. Her present residence is in Monroe County, at the age of 72 years. A family of seven children was born to Dr. Justus M. Warren and wife, namely: Raiman R.; Justus J.; and Charles W., of Liberty township; Eugene and Ida, deceased; Jennie, the wife of Charles Pearce, of Monroe County; and Don U., of Liberty township.

Dr. Warren attended the common schools, prepared with his father for a medical course, and later attended the Baltimore Medical College. In 1874 he located in Germantown, and has conducted a lucrative practice in this vicinity ever since. In 1875 he married Jane M. Dearth, daughter of John and Elizabeth (Lemley) Dearth, residents of West Virginia. Mrs. Warren was born in 1856, in Monroe County, Ohio. Dr. Warren and his wife have six children, as follows: Mary E., who married Peter F. Stickrath, and resides in Liberty township; Justus M., who is preparing himself for the practice of dentistry; Erma B., who married David Dutton, and resides in Liberty township; and Lola, Jane, and John, who are still at home. Mrs. Warren is active in the work of the Methodist Church, of which she is a devoted member.

Dr. Warren is a Democrat, and takes an active interest in political matters. Both he and his son, Justus M., belong to Masterton Lodge, No. 429, of Masons. The family is well known and universally esteemed in Liberty township, where for so many years both father and son have enjoyed the confidence of the community, through their faithful and efficient professional labors.

FREDERICK WILLIAM BODE, a general merchant at Germantown, Washington County, Ohio, and postmaster there, was born at the old family homestead in Bethel township, Monroe County, Ohio, in 1859. His parents were Henry F. and Phoebe (Kinnach) Bode, both of whom were born in Germany.

Henry F. Bode came to America, from Germany, when he was a lad of 16 years, and for a long period he has been an extensive farmer and tobacco and wool merchant in Bethel township, Monroe County, Ohio. Both he and his wife have reached the age of 68 years. They are among the most respected residents of the township, and are leading members of the German Lutheran Church. Mr. Bode is identified with the Democratic party. Of the 12 children born to them, they reared nine, viz: Lizzie, who married Frederick Ullman, of Monroe County; Henry P., who is treasurer of Washington County, Ohio; Frederick W., the subject of this sketch; Jacob, who lives at Rinard Mills, in Monroe County; Caroline, who married Charles Groeschner, and lives in Scotts Landing, Washington County; George E., who resides at Rinard Mills; Charles J., who resides at Sycamore Valley, Monroe County; Herman O., of Germantown, who is in partnership with his brother, Frederick W.; and Erwin R., who resides in Monroe County.

In 1887, the subject of this sketch was united in marriage with Mary Ullman, who is a daughter of Jacob and Maria Ullman, and was born in 1863, in Noble County. Four children were born to this union, namely: Annie, who died in 1890; Nora, who died in infancy; Freda P., who was born March 18, 1892; and Clarence E., who was born January 8, 1895. On April 6, 1898, Mr. Bode was appointed postmaster and still retains the office. He is identified with the Republican party, and with the Masonic fraternity, belonging to the Masterton Lodge, No. 429, of Masterton, Ohio.

HERMAN O. BODE, deputy-postmaster at Germantown, and associated with his brother in business, was born in 1872, in Bethel township, Monroe County, Ohio, and has been a resident of Germantown for the past five years. On May 20, 1899, he married Maggie Fleming, a daughter of Thomas and Polly Fleming. Mrs. Bode was born in Bethel township, in 1876. Two children have resulted from this union, the one surviving being a little daughter, Gertrude B., who was born June 28, 1901. Mr. Bode has interests in the Rindard Mills and Graysville oil lands, and is one of the substantial business men of this vicinity. Like his brother, he is identified with the Republican party. The Bode family has been connected with the German Lutheran Church since its establishment in Ohio, and has liberally contributed to its support.

IRORACE G. UNDERWOOD, one of the well-known farmers of Wesley township, Washington County, Ohio, was born in 1851, in Columbiana County, Ohio, and came to Washington county with his parents, in 1863. They located in Wesley township and there Mr. Underwood resides upon a fine farm of 150 acres.

Israel Underwood, his father, was born in 1814, in Columbiana County, Ohio, and died in 1881. Although he was a plain, sensible farmer, he possessed a legal mind, and had he turned his attention to the law, would doubtless have succeeded in that profession. His judgment was considered so good, and his reliability and honesty were so great, that he was constantly called upon by his neighbors to attend to their legal matters. His superior mind could grasp a situation and see the unraveling of a tangle, while many others would feel discouraged and incapable. He had been reared by a Quaker mother, and he adopted many of the simple ways of the Society of Friends. From the organization of the Republican party, he was one of its most earnest supporters and most active workers. Although he never sought office, he was shown the appreciation in which he was held by his fellow-citizens, by election as trustee and school director in his township, and through many years he held the office of justice of the peace. His mother was Sarah, a daughter of William and Mary (Hays) Hillis, and she was born in Columbiana County, on July 8, 1818. Her father was a native of Harrison County, Ohio, her mother of Loudoun County, Virginia, and her mother's father of Fauquier County, Virginia. The seven children born to Israel Underwood and his wife were as follows: William H.; Mary, the wife of George Whaley, deceased; Phoebe, deceased; John Wesley Taylor; Hannah, deceased, who was the wife of Wilders D. Jones; Elizabeth, deceased; Horace Greeley; and Newton. The last named resides in Missouri, and is an agent for the Missouri Pacific Railway Company.

The subject of this sketch celebrated Christmas Day, 1878, by his marriage with Emily C. Alger, who was born in Decatur township, Washington County, in 1858, and is a daughter of James and Harriet (Thomas) Alger. Two children resulted from this union, namely: Frances L., born in 1889, who died at the age of six years; and Molly, who was born in 1895, and died at the age of nine months. Mrs. Underwood is a valued member of the Methodist Church. By trade Mr. Underwood is a harness maker, and has a shop on his farm, but he is much interested in the cultivation of his land. Few of his possessions are as highly valued as is his noted horse, "Pontiac," whose sire was imported. Its fine breeding is shown in its magnificent appearance, its mane being eight feet long and its tail dragging on the ground.

RUFUS A. UNDERWOOD.

Mr. Underwood is one of the most intelligent and up-to-date farmers of this section. In his earlier days, he taught school, and has always been interested in educational matters. Fraternally he belongs to Cutler lodge of Odd Fellows, while politically he is an ardent Republican.

STEPHEN NEEDHAM, a prominent farmer in Dunham township, who has gained a strong position in his locality on account of his ability and industry, was born in Washington County, Ohio, November 29, 1833, and is a son of Stephen and Margaret (Hawkins) Needham.

Stephen Needham, the father, was a native of Massachusetts, in which State the name of Needham is an old and honored one. The family trace their ancestry through Jasper Needham, who was born in 1708, in Peabody, Massachusetts, and died in 1794, at the age of 86 years. In 1731, he was united to his wife Mary, who died February 16, 1788, aged 81 years. They had three sons, namely: Stephen, Daniel and Benjamin. The eldest married Elizabeth Moulton; he died December 28 1801, and his wife died December 4, 1827. Their children were,—Daniel; Jasper; Stephen; Mary and David. On October 22, 1783, Daniel, of this family, married Ede Flint, who was born April 18, 1764. Their children were three daughters,—Betsey, Sally and Polly.

Jasper Needham, grandfather of the subject of this sketch, was born in 1763, and in 1793, was married to Mary Twiss, who was born in 1773, in Massachusetts. Their children were,—Stephen; Jasper; Elias; Elizabeth and Mary. The mother of the subject hereof was a native of Virginia, and was born July 26, 1805. Her husband was born March 8, 1794. They had the following children: Mary A., born June 29, 1829; Barton, born May 11, 1831; Stephen, born November 29, 1833; and John, born September 8, 1839.

The subject of this sketch has devoted his life to agricultural pursuits, developing the property which was settled upon him by his father. Through constant application, he has made steady progress in the accumulation of the fruits of his toil, and in every way deserves the great measure of success which he has attained. On November 12, 1862, Mr. Needham was married to Caroline Schooner, who was born January 15, 1840, and is the daughter of Henry and Eunice (Hopkins) Schoonover, of whom the former was born in Pennsylvania, and the latter in Connecticut. Three sons have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Needham, namely: Adolphus H., William J., and Dana R. Mr. Needham is an excellent farmer, who thoroughly understands the practical side of his business, and who is also one of the upright men and useful citizens of his neighborhood.

RUFUS A. UNDERWOOD, a successful lawyer, and senior member of the well-known law firm of Underwood & Ludey, of Marietta, Ohio, was born in Wesley township, Washington County, Ohio, November 3, 1869. He is a son of William H. Underwood, and comes of a very prominent old Ohio family.

The first of the family to come to this country was William Underwood, who, it is said, came over with William Penn. Jesse, his youngest son, was the father of William Underwood, Rufus A.'s great-grandfather, who was born in York County, Pennsylvania, and removed to Lisbon, Columbiana County, Ohio. Among his oldest sons was Israel Underwood, grandfather of Rufus A. Israel Underwood moved to Washington County, Ohio, in 1863, and bought a large farm in Wesley township. He was also an attorney-at-law, and served as justice of the peace until his death in August, 1883, at the age of 67 years. He married Sarah Hillis, after whom one of the children of Rufus A. is named.

William H. Underwood was born in Columbiana County, Ohio, December 27, 1839. He served more than three years, during the Civil War, as first lieutenant in Company D, 19th Reg., Ohio Vol. Inf., in the Army of the Cumberland. He was a staunch Republican, in politics and succeeded his father as justice of the peace. He married Mary Ann Guinn, who was born in Augusta County, (West) Virginia, September 16, 1841, and died in July, 1900, at the home of her son, in Marietta. Two children blessed this union,—Rufus A., whose name heads this sketch; and Maggie, wife of George G. Phipps, of Wesley township.

Rufus A. Underwood attended the public schools and Bartlett Academy, and completed Latin and scientific courses at the National Normal University, from which he was graduated in 1891. He then taught grade schools in Ohio and Tennessee, was superintendent of schools at Alexandria, Tennessee, and finally became principal of the high schools of Wesley township and Vincent. During school vacations, he attended Vanderbilt University at Nashville, Tennessee, and was admitted to the bar in June, 1896, having read law with Judge W. B. Loomis, deceased. He then began the practice of law at Marietta, in partnership with Charles A. Ludey.

Charles A. Ludey was born in Bellaire, Belmont County, Ohio, in 1874, and was graduated from the high school at Woodfield. He then attended Marietta College and the University of Ohio, graduating from the law department of the latter institution, in 1895. He was admitted to the bar the same year, and in June, 1896, formed a partnership with Mr. Underwood under the firm name of Underwood & Ludey. The firm represents some of the strongest independent oil companies, and has been most successful in practice. Mr. Ludey married Miss Mooney, of Woodfield, Ohio. Socially, he is a member and president of the Marietta Club, and is a member of the Elks, Knights of Pythias, and Odd Fellows. Religiously, he is a member of, the Christian Church.

Rufus A. Underwood married Florence Cross, of Marietta, a daughter of James M. and Eliza Cross, who moved here from Maryland. They have two sons—Arthur Kent and Hillis. Politically, Mr. Underwood is a Republican, and takes an active part in political affairs. He is past chancellor of the Knights of Pythias; and a member of the Odd Fellows; Elks; Sons of Veterans; Knights of the Maccabees; Marietta Club and Board of Trade. Religiously, he favors the Methodist Episcopal Church, although he is of Quaker descent.

EPHRAIM HARRIS PALMER, a worthy representative of one of the oldest families of Palmer township, Washington County, Ohio, was born June 22, 1847, in this township, and is a son of Harris and Annie (Houghland), Palmer. It is 100 years since Joseph Palmer, the great-grandfather of the subject of this sketch, settled in Palmer township and gave it its name, and a centennial anniversary celebration of this event by his descendants will take place, at Brown's Mills. The family has been identified with the progress, growth and material development of this section, its members have founded and fostered its institutions, and it is very meet that such a public demonstration should be held.

Joseph Palmer, above mentioned, was born on January 13, 1761, at Scotland, Windham County, Connecticut, and seems to have been a man of excellent judgment and business instincts. He was engaged for a time in mercantile pursuits at Poultney, Rutland County, Vermont, but returned to Windham County for a wife, and there married Hannah Fox, on February 7, 1785. They had the following children: Joseph, born November 24, 1785; Jabish Fox, who was born August 31, 1788, and taught the second term of school ever taught in Palmer township; Benjamin Franklin, born November 10, 1791; Jerusha Perkins, born August 12, 1795; Isaac Lazel, born January 11, 1797; Ephraim, born August 4, 1799; and Betsy, born February 4, 1803, at Brown's Mill, Palmer township, who never married. All but Betsy were born in Poultney, Vermont.

Joseph Palmer (2), grandfather of the subject hereof, was born in Vermont, and married Sarah Martin, in the fall of 1808. Their children were as follows: Harris, who was the father of Ephraim Harris Palmer; James Martin, whose children were,—David, Mary, Lydia, Dudley, Hiram and Laura; Sheldon, whose children were,—Alfred, Hannah, Daniel and Ellen; and Elizabeth, whose children were,—Sarah, Jane, Nancy, Lydia and Mary.

Harris Palmer was born on the old, original farm of his grandfather (now owned by John Stollar), located north of the present farm of A. F. Breckenridge, on July 16, 1809. On April 3, 1834, he married Annie Houghland, whose birth took place on February 5, 1817. Harris Palmer died November 8, 1855, and his widow passed away on January 11, 1897. Their children were as follows: Sarah Houghland, born February 27, 1835, deceased December 9, 1861; Edward Rowe, born January 8, 1837, deceased February 17, 1901; Joseph Franklin, born August 13, 1839, deceased October 9, 1840; Ruth Annie, who was born April 24, 1842, married E. A. Chapman, and had two children,—Merrill, and Anna M., who died January 31, 1902; Ephraim Harris, born June 22, 1847; and John Edwin, who was born May 8, 1850, and died November 25, 1861. Sarah married George Camp, on October 25, 1855 and her two children were Alice and Elmer. Edward Rowe married Mary Jane Thornberry, on August 12, 1858, and their children were,—James Abner, Emma and May. Ruth Annie lives near her brother, Ephraim.

On December 28, 1870, Ephraim Harris Palmer was married to Sarah Jane Stollar, and the children born to their union were as follows: Nancy Annie, born January 22, 1873; Ruth Adella, born January 27, 1876; John Leslie, born April 18, 1880, deceased May 21, 1895; and Lucy Arena, born June 18, 1883.

The birth of Mrs. Palmer occurred on March 4, 1847, in Washington County, Pennsylvania. She is a daughter of Daniel and Nancy Stollar, who had the following children: Isaac; Katie; Margaret; Jemima; Sarah Jane; John; Phebe; Aden and Mary. This family, also, has had a numerous progeny. Isaac's children are Wilma, Clair and Floyd. The children of Katie (Wood), are Charlie, Omer, Lester and May. Those of Margaret (Aikens), are Nellie, Annie and William. The children of Jemima (Daugherty) were,—Dora; Dennis; Frederick M.; Alice; Jesse Dot; Bertha; and Landen. John's children were: James, Jennie, and Lizzie. Those of Phebe (Breckenridge) were,—Flora Ethel; Harvey Brooks; William D.; and Clarence. Aden's children were,—Vernie; Grace; Charm; Mabel; Letha; and Paul Stewart. Those of Mary Blind (Zumbro) were,—Fred Knapp; John Leonard; and Alva D.

The subject of this sketch owns one of the well-improved and productive farms of Palmer township, and his 127 acres yield large returns. His handsome and substantial buildings testify to his ample means and excellent management, and show plainly that an agricultural life in this locality brings with it many pleasures and advantages. In political action, Mr. Palmer is a Republican, and has acceptably filled the offices of school director and township supervisor. For many years he has been a leading member of the Methodist Church.

CLAY WEST, a respected and esteemed citizen of Reno, Washington County, Ohio, is regarded as one of the most progressive farmers in Marietta township, which is his native place. He was born in 1843, and is a son of John A. and Cynthia B. (Racer) West.

John A. West was a native of West Virginia, and followed agricultural pursuits for a livelihood during his entire life. His death took place in 1892. His wife was a daughter of Benjamin Racer, and was born and reared in Marietta township.

Mr. West grew to manhood in the locality where he still lives, and received his scholastic training in the public schools. In 1861, he enlisted in the 30th Reg., Ohio Vol. Inf., and served three years in that famous regiment. He participated in the battles of Lewisburg, South Mountain and Antietam, and was color guard in the last-named engagement. He was mustered out of service in 1864, having made an honorable record.

Mr. West was joined in matrimony with Phoebe A. McKibbin, who was born in 1844, and passed to her final rest in 1894. She was a daughter of Henry McKibbin, a farmer by occupation, and was one of a family of six children. Several are now deceased. The names of other members of the family are,—Edward, a farmer in Kansas; Susan, a widow, residing in Colorado; and William, deceased.

Mr. West has two children: Mary Z. and Elizabeth C. The former is the wife of Joseph Greene, a business man of Newport, Ohio. The latter still resides with her father on the home farm. In politics, Mr. West is a pronounced Republican, strictly adhering to party principles. He stands well in his community, and has hosts of friends.

ORACE D. GAGE, a prominent farmer and successful stock raiser of Washington County, Ohio, owns, occupies and operates a fine farm in Wesley township, comprising 193 acres. His birth occurred in 1843, in what was then Wesley, but is now Fairfield, township, Washington County, and he was the third of nine children born to James H. and Mary A. (Cook) Gage.

James H. Gage was born in 1815, in Rockingham County, New Hampshire, and died in Washington County, Ohio, in 1895. He was just 18 years of age when he came to this locality and secured land in Fairfield, then Wesley, township. Here his life was spent in extensive farming and stock-breeding. He made a specialty of growing fine sheep, as long as that industry was profitable in the East. In his political belief, he was a sound Democrat, and served the township in many of the local offices, being trustee and treasurer for a long period. His wife was a daughter of Salmon and Polly (Drew) Cook. She was born in Vermont in 1813, and died in Ohio, in 1897. In former years, she was a member of the Methodist Church, but later united with her husband in the Universalist belief. They had a family of nine children, viz.: Caroline and Lucius, deceased; Horace D., of this sketch; John, of Fairfield township, former county commissioner; Mary Ann, Mrs. Waldo Smith, of Columbus, Ohio; Polly, deceased; Flora, Mrs. J. T. Dunbar, of Watertown, whose husband was formerly a merchant there; George, of Bartlett, Ohio; and Myron, a farmer in Fairfield township.

Mr. Gage was reared in his native place, and attended the district schools. In early manhood, he learned the milling business and during several years worked in a flouring mill at Stockport, Ohio. For five years he operated the Pattin Mills, in Wesley township. Later, he began farming and stock raising on a well situated tract three miles north of Bartlett. In his business ventures, Mr. Gage has always used good judgment, and has been eminently successful.

In 1861 the subject of this sketch was united in marriage with Margaret J. Cody, who was born in 1844, in Fairfield township, Washington County, and is a daughter of Ansel and Lydia (Nixon) Cody. Eight children have been born to this union, namely: Ransom, who is a physician located at Carroll, Fairfield County, Ohio; Alice, who married Jordan Burfield, of Palmer township; Alva, who resides at Bartlett; May, who married Saul Metzger, and resides in Chesterfield; Jay, a licensed engineer, who lives in the State of Washington; Lucy, who married Alvin Pugh, and resides in Stockport, Ohio; and Lena and James, who are at home. In politics, Mr. Gage maintains an independent attitude. His family belongs to the Methodist Church, in which they are highly valued. He is liberal in religious views. For a long period he has been connected with the Masonic fraternity, as a member of Webb Lodge at Stockport. Mr. Gage has been prominent in township affairs, has served as assessor of Fairfield, and has always performed the duties of an honorable and law-abiding citizen. The family and its connections belong to what is known as the best social circles of this locality, and are universally esteemed.

DR. SIMEON D. HART.

CAPT. AND MRS. GEORGE B. BARTLETT.

APT. GEORGE B. BARTLETT, a representative farmer of Waterford township, Washington County, Ohio, was born on the farm where he now resides, one mile and a half southwest of Waterford, in 1842. He is the youngest son of Wyrum Bartlett, and a grandson of Benjamin D. Bartlett.

Benjamin D. Bartlett and his wife came from New York and settled on the farm now owned by George B. Bartlett. He was a soldier of the Revolutionary War. Wyrum Bartlett was born June 29, 1793, in St. Lawrence County, New York, and died in 1855. At an early day he ran keel-boats, and later operated a flouring mill on his farm, selling the product in New Orleans. He owned 120 acres of land and also followed farming. He was an old-line Whig, and later, a Republican, and, it is supposed, interested himself in the "Underground railroad." Religiously, he was a member of the Universalist Church. He married Sarah Kinney, who was born in the block-house at Lowell, Ohio, May 12, 1798, and died in 1854. Her father was born in London, England, went to Nova Scotia, and came to Lowell, Washington County, Ohio, at an early day, where he located near the mouth of Wolf Creek. He and a son met death by drowning in this creek. Wyrum Bartlett and his wife had eleven children, as follows: William, deceased; Oscar, who was a member of an Illinois regiment, and was killed during the Civil War; Rosina, Mary and Miles, deceased; James, a wagon maker of Coal Run, Waterford township; Frank; Sarah Prudentia, who married Andrew J. Hart, a florist and gardener at McConnelville, Ohio; Almira, deceased; Marion, who died in infancy; and George B.

George B. Bartlett enlisted October 1, 1861, at Beverly, Ohio, in Company D, 63rd Reg. Ohio Vol. Inf., under Col. John W. Sprague. His regiment was in the first advance down the Mississippi River, and had engagements at New Madrid and Corinth. In the Battle of Corinth, the regiment sustained a loss of 62 per cent. of its men. After this battle, Mr. Bartlett was detached as assistant in the quartermaster's department of the engineering corps, and all of the materials used in the construction of the canal at Vicksburg passed through his hands. He enlisted as a private, and was made a corporal upon the organization of his company. He then was advanced to be sergeant, second lieutenant, and first lieutenant, and then became captain of Company A, of the same regiment. He was in Sherman's "March to the Sea," and at the grand review at Washington. He was mustered out at Louisville, Kentucky, July 8, 1865. The day before the disbandment of the regiment, his comrades in arms presented him with a handsome gold-mounted sword, sash and belt. On the scabbard of the sword is the following inscription: "Presented to Capt. G. B. Bartlett, Company A, 63rd Regt., O. V. I., by the members of his company." The sword is still in his possession and is most highly prized.

Captain Bartlett was married January 20, 1866, to Vesta Wolcott, who was born in Watertown, Washington County, Ohio, in 1843, and is a daughter of Alanson and Caroline (McClure) Wolcott. Her father was also born in Watertown, in 1804, and died in 1873. He was a farmer by occupation. Politically he was originally a Whig, and became a Republican upon the organization of that party. Her mother was born in Lawrence County, Ohio, in 1813, and died in 1886. She was a member of the Universalist Church. Mr. and Mrs. Wolcott had thirteen children, namely: Oscar, deceased; Wallace, deceased, who was in the three-months service as a member of the 14th Reg. Ohio Vol. Inf.; Lewis, who was a member of the 36th Reg. Ohio Vol. Inf., and died of fever, three months after his enlistment;

Amanda; Salome; Vestal; Edwin; Rollin, who served first in the 4th Reg. Va. Cav., and later in the United States Army until the close of the war; Corwin; Helen; Mary; Katie; and Ida. Captain Bartlett and his wife have four children, namely: Minnie, wife of Edgar Grant Baldwin, a farmer near Swifts, Waterford township; Stanley Oscar, who lives in Waterford township; Harvey L., overseer of the farm at the Children's Home, Marietta; and Katie, a graduate of Waterford Township High School, and now a teacher in the district schools of that township. Captain Bartlett is a member of the Patrons of Husbandry, and of Dick Cheatham Post, G. A. R., of Beverly, of which he was commander two years. He is independent in politics and has served as justice of the peace of the township.

EMMOR BOWMAN, a leading citizen and representative business man of Chester Hill, Washington County, Ohio, is well known through the eastern part of the State, as the general superintendent for the Ohio Consolidated Oil Company, 3,600 acres of their land being located in this section, and in Marion and Windsor townships, in Morgan County.

The Bowman family is of English origin. Isaac Bowman, the grandfather of Emmor, was a son of Richard and Mary Bowman, and was born at Lake Place, Parish of Aske, Westmoreland County, England, December 22, 1774, and was educated at Earlham College. It was here that he formed his life-long friendship with the noted Elihu Burritt, with whom he corresponded for many years. In college, both were interested together in astronomy and geography, subjects which always claimed Grandfather Isaac's attention. He was a man of great learning, and became closely associated with many of the notable men of his time. Thomas Clarkson, the great philanthropist, being counted among his friends. On November 26, 1807, Isaac Bowman located in Jefferson County, Ohio. Later, he removed to the vicinity of Kendall, Jackson township, Stark County, where, after a pioneer life of hard work and sturdy endurance, he passed out of life, leaving to his family one of the most valuable farms of that locality. Prior to coming to America he had been a cabinetmaker, but agriculture claimed his attention through all his later years. On November 26, 1807, Isaac Bowman was married to Ann Hobson, a daughter of Joseph and Ann Hobson, natives of England, but then residents of Jefferson County, Ohio. She died September 25, 1823. At Bright Falls, England, in the Friends' Meeting House, March 27, 1828, Isaac Bowman married as his second wife, Elizabeth Greenwood, who died September 18, 1862, aged 85 years and three months. Mr. Bowman died April 20, 1858, aged 83 years, three months and 28 days. Both were interred in the Friends' burying-ground at Kendall, Ohio. Isaac Bowman was the father of the following children: Mary; Joseph H.; Ann; Thomas; Richard and William. Mary was born February 14, 1809, and died March 10, 1810. Joseph H. was born October 15, 1810, died May 22, 1877, and was buried at St. Paul, Minnesota, to which city he had moved from Cedar County, Iowa; he left seven children. Ann was born March 25, 1812, and married Isaac H. Elliott, March 26, 1830. Mr. Elliott was born August 16, 1805, and died December 28, 1829. They had the following children: Jane Amanda; Clarissa; James Bowman; and William Watson. Thomas was born August 4, 1813, and married Elizabeth L. Lupton, daughter of Henry and Achsah Lupton, May 2, 1838, at the Friends' Meeting House at Mount Pleasant, Jefferson County, Ohio. Mrs. Thomas Bowman was born October 24, 1814, died May 4, 1860, and was buried at Bartlett, Ohio. They had one child, who died at the age of nine years. Thomas married, secondly, Ann Test, daughter of Samuel and Mary Test, at the Friends' Meeting House, on February 27, 1862. He died March 22, 1887, and was buried at Plymouth, Ohio. Richard was born March 3, 1815; he lived at home, never married, and died January 18, 1850. William, who was born February 2, 1817, had the following children: Helen, born January 9, 1841; Emily Elizabeth, born December 27, 1843; William H., born August 27, 1845, who served in the Civil War from the first call to the end, and lives at Etna Green, Indiana; Charles C., born in 1849, who served in the Civil War, and also lives at Etna Green, Indiana; James M., who was born August 7, 1850, and died September 27, 1862; Mary Alice, born July 2, 1853; Clara Ida, born April 30, 1856; and Florence Eva, born September 16, 1858; all of them survive.

James M. Bowman, the youngest son of Isaac Bowman, was born December 15, 1818, and on May 25, 1842, was married at the Friends' Meeting House at Cross Creek, Jefferson County, Ohio, to Elizabeth Baily, a daughter of Henry and Mary (Folk) Baily, of Somerton, Ohio. In 1843, they moved to Washington County, and located near Plymouth, where James M. Bowman bought 160 acres of land for which he paid $5 an acres. At the time of his death on July 14th, 1880, he owned 250 acres. Mr. Bowman was one of the road viewers who established the road from Hill's Landing to McConnelsville. James M. Bowman had few educational advantages, as he grew up in a pioneer locality, but he inherited a good mind, and took every opportunity to improve it. His staid demeanor and exemplary life caused his appointment as one of the overseers of the Friends' Meeting, when only 25 years of age, which honor he held through life. He was one of the founders of the Friends' Boarding School, in Belmont County, and was always liberal in his benefactions to it. A man of equable temper, one who commanded respect from every one with whom he came in contact, he was a peacemaker in his neighborhood, and faithfully showed to the world the practical teachings of the religion he professed. No office could tempt him, although he sometimes consented to accept some position which his judgment assured him would benefit his locality. The children born to James M. Bowman were as follows:

Phebe, who was born June 20, 1843, and died July 16, 1843; Isaac, who was born August 22, 1844, and died February 16, 1863; Henry, born May 11, 1847; Emmor, the subject of this biography; and Thomas I.

On December 31, 1868, near Malta, Morgan County, Ohio, Henry, of the above family, married Rachel Crew, a daughter of Henry Crew, born October 21, 1845. They had the following children: Joseph, born in 1869; Elizabeth J., born in 1872; Edith Anna, born January 22, 1878; Martha C., who was born in November, 1879, and died April 9, 1881; and Howard, born October 10, 1885.

Emmor Bowman was born July 18, 1849, near Bartlett, Ohio, and remained at home until he was almost 30 years of age. For a period of 10 years, he taught school throughout Morgan and Washington counties. For seven years, he operated a store at Potter's Mills, Pennsylvania, but after his marriage he spent one year at the home of his father-in-law, and then bought his present fine farm of 200 acres. This farm Mr. Bowman devoted principally to the raising of Merino sheep, in which he succeeded very well, giving close and careful attention to the business. In time, he became an expert shearer himself his limit being 50 sheep a day. His wool always brought the highest market price. For many years Mr. Bowman continued in profitable sheep raising, his knowledge of which made him very valuable in the offices of secretary, vice-president and president of the Wool Growers' Association, to which offices he was elected. For 15 years, he has been connected with the Eastern Ohio Agricultural Society, of Chester Hill. His time has also been devoted to the raising of fine poultry and Poland-China hogs, and he served for years as vice-president of the Muskingum Valley Poultry Association, until that organization ceased to exist.

On March 10, 1879, Emmor Bowman was married to Elizabeth L. Van Law, who was born April 30 1851, and is a daughter of John and Hannah Van Law, of Chester Hill, Ohio. The paternal ancestors of Mrs. Emmor Bowman were French, while her maternal ancestry was German and English. Her great-grandfather Dennis, lived in Maryland, but was a great Abolitionist, and assisted many slaves to escape by the "Underground Railroad." He spent one summer with the Indians, and was always a sympathizer with the oppressed. Her grandfather, John Van Law, was born in Jefferson County, Ohio, but at the time of his death, lived in Morgan County. Her father was born in Flushing, Belmont County, and came at an early day to Washington County. The mother of Mrs. Bowman was Hannah Ann (Lerke) Van Law, and her grandmother was Elizabeth Dennis. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Bowman were as follows: John V., born December 28, 1880, who is at home, unmarried; James Arthur, who was born in October, 1882, and died September 28, 1898; William T., born February 10, 1885; Charles P., born February 26, 1888; and Harvey E., born August 12, 1892.

In politics, the subject of this sketch is a Republican, and in principle, a Prohibitionist. Reared a Quaker, he is temperate in all things, and subscribes to the rules of the religious body in which his parents were such shining examples. His attendance on meeting is regular, on Sundays and Thursdays, and no press of business or outside care is permitted to disturb these times of quiet reflection. Mr. Bowman has given little attention to political matters, but has served for three terms as justice of the peace, having been nominated by acclamation.

Mr. Bowman was one of the incorporators of the First National Bank of Chester Hill, in 1900. He is its heaviest stockholder, and has served as director and vice-president. This bank has over $102,000 in deposits, with $94,000 in loans, and is continually growing stronger. The town of Chester Hill has a population of about 800, and is very proud of this thriving financial institution.

Mr. Bowman has been interested in oil development ever since 1894, when he and Judge Chamberlain, of Marietta, took a number of leases for oil in Wesley township, in the name of Emmor Bowman. Later, Mr. Bowman sold his interests and leases to Mr. Reader, and with his own sons, leased the Wagoner farm, with four producing wells. In addition to these, Mr. Bowman owns five producing wells on the Elizabeth L. Bowman farm, and 31 on the Emmor Bowman farm, operated by Eachel, Ritchie & Company.

Mr. Bowman has a justifiable respect for his ancestors and treasures some interesting mementoes of them. One of these is a poem which was written and printed by Mrs. Bowman's uncle, Jesse Van Law, entitled "Life was a Beautiful Poem," which is both poetic and lofty in sentiment. Another is the will of his grandmother, which was dated October 9, 1782, prior to her marriage with Henry Hobson, in 1784. Still another is the will of his great-grandfather, Richard Bowman, dated March 8, 1777, in which he bequeaths to Thomas, £100; to Eleanor Nobel, £100; to Joseph, £30; to his grandson, Richard, £5; to his grandson, Joseph, £20; to his grandson, Isaac, £20, and to his daughters, Rachel and Sarah, each £10; his wife receiving the rest of the estate. Mr. Bowman also owns a field glass which was made in 1777, for his grandfather, Isaac Bowman, by Harris & Son, in London.

ILLIAM R. SHANER, who stands among the leading citizens of Washington County, has made a success of agricultural pursuits to some extent and is now profitably employed in the nursery business. He has a farm of 105 acres of the most fertile and productive land. He is a son of Alfred W. and Rebecca J. (Squibb) Shaner, and his birthplace, Westmoreland County, Pennsylvania, is also the native county of his parents.

Alfred W. Shaner has reached the advanced age of seventy-six years, and is at present, residing near Bartlett, Washington County. His entire life has been most diligently spent in the pursuit of his chosen occupation, that of a saddler and harness maker. He led Rebecca J. Squibb to the hymeneal altar, and their union was blessed with three children, as follows: William R.; Deborah, who became the worthy wife of Charles Johnson, of Wesley township, Washington County; and Caleb S., also a resident of Wesley township. Mrs. Shaner is also living at this writing and she has reached her seventieth mile stone. Both she and her husband are still active and clear-minded. They have long been members of the Baptist Church. Mr. Shaner voted the Republican ticket all his life until 1896, when his vote was cast for Mr. Bryan. He enjoys the esteem and confidence of his community, and has always been an active, influential citizen.

HON. CHARLES H. NIXON.

William R. Shaner was born September 6, 1850, and lived with his father and mother in Westmoreland County until 1865, the date of their removal to Wesley township, Washington County, Ohio. The mental training of Mr. Shaner was obtained from the common schools, but he applied himself industriously, and at the close of his school career, obtained a teacher's certificate and taught school in Wesley township for fifteen years. He met with unqualified success during that time. He left this occupation, however, to enter the nursery business, in 1870, and that, in connection with a small amount of farming, has been his chief occupation since. His farm is located about two and a half miles south of Bartlett, and the manner in which he handles his business and attends to the other work on the farm, speaks well for his knowledge and experience in this line.

In 1873, the subject of this sketch was united in marriage with Sarah J. Dickson, a daughter of Thomas and Eliza Dickson, who are well-known citizens. Mrs. Shaner was born in 1850 and is a native of Mercer County, Pennsylvania. She and her husband are comfortably situated in their home on the farm, where everything is modern and convenient. Mr. Shaner has a well-paying business, and is a man of excellent judgment and fine characteristics, to whom many give their patronage. Socially, he is a member of Cutler Lodge, No. 784, I. O. O. F.. For many years, he was faithful to the Republican party, until "Free Silver" became a party issue, when he supported Bryan.

ON. CHARLES H. NIXON, who has held the office of Probate judge since February 9, 1900, is a resident of Marietta, Washington County, Ohio, and is one of the influential citizens of the county. He was born in Washington County, in 1870, and is a son of James Nixon.

James Nixon was also born in Washington County, Ohio, in October, 1839. He died here in 1888. He served in the army during the Civil War, losing a limb at the Battle of Stone River. From 1867 until 1882, he was recorder of Washington County. Mr. Nixon has a sister—Flora Malster—who lives in Waterford township.

The subject of this sketch attended the grammar schools of Marietta, and entered Marietta College in 1886. In 1889, he began his active career, and for some time read law. He was appointed deputy clerk in the Probate judge's office, in 1891 and in 1900, was made Probate judge. He fills this office with dignity and with credit to himself and the community. Judge Nixon is much interested in the advancement of Washington County, and liberally lends his support to any enterprises which tend to promote it.

In politics the Judge is a Republican, and takes an active interest in the affairs of that party. Socially he is a member of the Masons and a member of the I. O. O. F.; and K. of P. He attends the Baptist Church.

JAMES M. BELL, who is superintendent of the Washington County Infirmary, was born in Salem township, Washington County, Ohio, in 1852, and is a son of James Bell, and grandson of John Bell, both natives of Scotland.

James Bell was but nine years old when his parents came to America and settled in Aurelius township, Washington County, Ohio. James Bell married Mary Carlon, a daughter of Thomas Carlon. She was born in 1825, and is now living in Marietta township. After their marriage, they settled in Salem township. Later, they removed to Fearing township, and again to Marietta township, where James bought a farm, which is still owned by his wife. James Bell was born in 1808, and died in 1883, after a life spent in farming and other useful occupations. Politically, he was a Republican. Both he and his wife were members of the Baptist Church. They reared the following offspring: John, a resident of Marietta township; Ellen, deceased; A. Emma (Brown), deceased; Margaret, the wife of Charles Miller, of Marietta township; James M., the subject of this sketch; William, a resident of Westphalia, Kansas; and Amos, deceased.

James M. Bell spent his early days in Marietta township, in which he also received his schooling. He has devoted much of his time to farming, and has been very successful in all his undertakings. In 1882, he was appointed superintendent of the county infirmary, and served until 1884. In 1888, he received the appointment again, and served until 1891. In 1890, he took the office for the third time, and filled it most acceptably. Much confidence is placed in his ability and trustworthiness, and he commands the respect of all who come in contact with him.

Mr. Bell was married in 1880 to Maggie Wagner, a daughter of Jacob Wagner, of Marietta township. Politically, he is a Republican.

CHARLES A. MILLER, who resides near the Ohio River, at the mouth of the Little Muskingum River, in Marietta township, Washington County, Ohio, is extensively engaged in the manufacture of fruit baskets, crates, and egg cases. He was born in Marietta township, July 16, 1842, and is a son of Robert T. and Marietta Miller.

The subject of this sketch was born on the farm now owned and occupied by L. E. Miller, and attended the common schools of his district, and also the Marietta High School, which he entered in September, 1859. There he continued until the war excitement of 1861, when he enlisted in Company H, 7th Reg., Ohio Vol. Cav., and was mustered into service September 2, 1862. His regiment became a part of the Army of the Cumberland, serving under Gen. Burnside in East Tennessee. He was with Sherman's army on its march to Atlanta, Georgia, and returned to Nashville with the command of General Thomas. He was in Gen. Wilson's cavalry corps during the raid through the Southern States, and was mustered out of service at Nashville, June 2, 1865. Since the War he has served in the Ohio National Guard, and was captain of Battery G, from 1884 to 1889. After the close of the war, Mr. Miller worked on the farm for two years, in the meantime teaching school during the winter months. In 1867, together with his brother John W., he purchased a lot at the mouth of the Little Muskingum River, and erected a sawmill. They were extensively engaged in the lumber business under the firm name of Miller Brothers, until February, 1878, when the death of John W. Miller occurred. Charles A. Miller then purchased the interest of his deceased brother, and conducted the business until 1890, when he began the manufacture of baskets, crates, fruit packages and egg cases. He has since continued in this field of business, and finds sale for his product in the southern, central and eastern sections of Ohio and in West Virginia. His annual output is about one million berry baskets, eight thousand dozen fruit baskets, and fifty thousand egg cases.

November 18, 1868, Mr. Miller married Margaret Bell, a daughter of James Bell, of Marietta township, and they became the parents of seven children, as follows: George M., who died June 3, 1893, at the age of twenty years; Etta M., wife of Clayton B. Smith, of Marietta township, by whom she has four children,—Mildred Glen, and Clayton and Clara, twins; Emma D., wife of F. A. West, of Marietta township, by whom she has a daughter, Margaret; Clara, who married Dr. Eugene Hemmeger, of Adelphi, Ohio, and has two children,—Mary and Frances; Lucy, who married V. E. Racer, of Marietta township, and has one child, Maurice; Olive, who married Zenas B. Hildreth of Marietta township; and Carlin Fuller, the youngest of the family, who is at home and attending school. Mr. Miller is a Republican, in politics, and was the candidate of his party for the state legislature, in 1883, going down to defeat with the rest of the ticket.

ANSEL W. MAGEE, a prominent farmer in the vicinity of Reno, Washington County, Ohio, ranks among the foremost and most enterprising farmers of Marietta township. Mr. Magee was born January 4, 1845, on the same farm which is now his home, and which has been the scenes of his labors for many years. He is the third son born to Abner and Elizabeth (Riley) Magee, and is a grandson of Robert Magee.

Abner Magee was also a native of Marietta township, where he was born in 1822. The early part of his life was spent as pilot of a flatboat on the Ohio River. In 1875, he moved west, to Lancaster County, Nebraska, and followed farming until cut off by death, April 2, 1889.

Ansel W. Magee's mother was born in 1818, and died in 1895. They reared seven children, as follows: George, now a resident of Chicago; Hiram, a farmer of Lancaster County, Nebraska; Ansel W., the subject of this biography; John, deceased; Anna, now Mrs. Lacy, of Lancaster County, Nebraska; Cornelia, now Mrs. Fulton, of Nebraska; and Martha, now Mrs. Forrest, of Lancaster County, Nebraska.

Ansel W. Magee received his mental training in the public schools. In 1863, he enlisted in Company L, 1st Reg., Ohio Vol. Cav., and served under General Thomas until the successful termination of the Civil War. He saw active service in the campaign from Chattanooga to Atlanta, and back to Nashville, and was mustered out September 15, 1865. He subsequently returned to his native place, and at once engaged in farming, which has occupied his attention ever since.

In 1869, Mr. Magee was joined in matrimony with Emily Lackey, a daughter of Carlos Lackey, of Newport township, Washington County, Ohio. One son, Charles E., blessed their union, and he is now successfully engaged in farming near the home place. His marriage with Ida Perkins, a daughter of F. T. Perkins, of Marietta township, has resulted in one child, Gladys May.

In politics, Mr. Magee is a staunch Republican, and served his party as township assessor in 1900. He is a valued member of G. A. R. Post, No. 178.

JOSIAH O. BARTLETT, a prominent farmer of Washington County, Ohio, located on a fine farm of 131 acres in Wesley township, is a descendant of one of the old and honorable families of New England. The name of Josiah Bartlett appears as one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence.

The birth of Mr. Bartlett occurred in Morgan County, Ohio, on April 12, 1856, and he was brought to Washington County when his parents came here in 1858, and located in Wesley township. Asa Otis Bartlett, his father, was born in Chester Hill, Morgan County, and died in 1864, at the age of 37 years. At the time of his death he was a member of Company D, 148th Reg. Ohio Vol. Inf., and was on board a United States transport vessel. Prior to the Civil War, he was both a farmer and merchant and taught several terms in the district school. In religious belief he was a Methodist, and belonged, fraternally, to Bartlett Masonic Lodge, No. 274. His wife was Ellen, daughter of Josiah and Letitia Atkinson. She was born on June 16, 1822, in Bucks County, Pennsylvania, and died in 1892. She, also, was a consistent member of the Methodist Church. The four children born to Asa Otis Bartlett and his wife were as follows: Mary and Samuel A., deceased; Isaiah O.; and Daniel, of Beverly, Ohio.

The subject of this sketch obtained a good common-school education, and has followed farming through life. His large and valuable farm, within one mile of Bartlett, is one of the best in the locality. Here may be enjoyed the benefits of both urban and rural life. Mr. Bartlett is an excellent farmer, and has developed his land and continually improved it, both in appearance and real value. In 1878 he was married to Adeline Edgerton, a daughter of John and Margaret Edgerton, who was born in Morgan County, on February 29, 1860. The children born to this union were: Mary, deceased; Daisy and Gertrude, teachers; and Ethel and Ida, who are at home. Mr. Bartlett has reared his family in the Methodist Church, where they are much esteemed and are active members. Fraternally, Mr. Bartlett is associated with the Bartlett lodge of Masons, and the Chester Hill lodge of Odd Fellows. In politics he chooses to be independent, and votes for the candidate who comes the nearest to his idea of fitness.

PHILIP C. FISCHER, who has been a dealer in shoes, continuously, in Marietta, for more than half a century, conducts an establishment at No. 246 Front street, and enjoys the patronage of the leading citizens of this vicinity.

Mr. Fischer was born near Coblenz, Prussia, and is a son of John and Sophia Fischer, who came to Marietta about 1858. Both died in 1873, the father at the age of eighty-eight years, and the mother at the age of seventy-eight years. They were parents of the following children: Christ, a farmer, who died at Williamstown, West Virginia, in 1862; John;

George, who was engaged in the shoe business, and died in Parkersburg, West Virginia, in 1887; Katherine; Peter C.; Henry, the oldest shoe dealer of Parkersburg; and Elizabeth, who died in 1893. The last-named was the wife of Jacob Volkwein, by whom she had nine children, as follows: Charles and Henry, who are in the shoestore of Mr. Fischer, in Marietta; George, a bookkeeper, of Columbus, Ohio; Lizzie (Haberling), of Columbus; Emma (Mendenhall), of Wheeling, West Virginia; Rosa (Bolte), of West Marietta; Katie; Anna; and Tillie (Donahue), who died in Pittsburg.

Philip C. Fischer was nineteen years of age when he came to Marietta, in 1850, and immediately thereafter started in the shoe business with his brother, John, who had located in Marietta in 1848. They established the business on Front street, and in the time that has since elapsed, have moved but once. During the Civil War, they were engaged in both wholesale and retail business, manufacturing boots and shoes. They dropped the manufacture of shoes in 1870, but the brothers continued together until 1879,—in all 29 years. John Fischer is now eighty years of age, and resides in Williamstown, West Virginia, in vicinity he owns a farm. Since 1879, Philip C. Fischer has conducted the store alone, and has met with great success in every way.

Mr. Fischer was first married to Elizabeth Feik, who was born in Germany, and was a baby when brought to Washington County. Three children were born to them, two of whom died in infancy. The third, Emma, married Dr. F. W. Fishbach, of Newport, Kentucky, by whom she has two sons,—Howard, aged sixteen years; and Victor, aged seven years. The subject of this sketch formed a second matrimonial alliance, wedding Anna A. Wendelken, whose father, Martin, first came to Marietta in 1851. The latter died in April, 1902, at the age of seventy-nine years. This union was blessed by the birth of five children, namely: Nellie, wife of J. W. Dysle, a druggist of Marietta; Dr. F. W., of Newport, Kentucky; Flora, wife of L. D. Strecker;

J. S. H. TORNER.

Harry, a member of the firm of Fischer & Graesle, photographers; and Selma, who died, aged seven months. The subject of this sketch is a Republican in politics. Religiously, he has been a member of the German M. E. Church for the past forty-five years. He is an efficient officer of the church, and has served as local minister for over twenty years.

J S. H. TORNER, superintendent of the city water works, and an oil producer, of Marietta, Ohio, is one of the ablest business men of the city. He was born January 6, 1853, at Stockholm, Sweden, and is a son of Victor Torner.

Victor Torner was born at Stockholm, Sweden, and his wife, whose maiden name was Weiss, was born at Gothenburg, Sweden. She was of a prominent Swedish family, and her brother, D. W. Weiss, who came to America, when a young man, was one of the first presidents of the Lincoln Society, of New York. He was identified with the Ulster Iron Company, of New York, with offices at the corner of Broadway and Wall streets. Victor Torner was educated for the ministry, his father being a minister of the Lutheran Church, but instead of occupying the pulpit he became superintendent of the estate of the King of Sweden. He brought his family to New York in 1855, but soon removed to Lewis County, (West) Virginia, where he purchased a large tract of land and farmed for two seasons. Not finding his farm as profitable as he anticipated, he moved to Parkersburg, (West) Virginia, and one year later, in 1861, located in Belpre, Washington County, Ohio. He retained his West Virginia interests until 1884, when he disposed of them. At Belpre he engaged in the oil business, which he followed until near the time of his death, December 29, 1891. He was also engaged in the milling business at Newport, Ohio, for some years. Politically he was an active Republican, having filed his declaration to become a citizen of the United States as soon as he arrived in this country. His wife died June 15, 1890. They reared three children, as follows: Elvira; J. S. Hugo, the subject of this sketch; and William V. Elvira Torner, who was born in January, 1850, married J. R. Dye, of Marietta, and died in July, 1890, leaving three children, viz.: Lulu E., who was born in Washington County in 1872, and is the wife of R. J. Mechling, an oil producer, of Newport, Ohio; Victor Hugo, who attended Marietta College, is a graduate of the Baltimore Medical College, and is now practicing his profession; and Hilda E., aged 13 years, who is at school. William V. Torner was born in January, 1859, and is in the milling business at Newport, Ohio. His sketch and portrait appear elsewhere in this work.

J. S. H. Torner attended the Washington County schools, Martha Institute and Hasbrook's Classical and Commercial Institute, in Jersey City, from 1868 to the fall of 1871. He then returned home, and within a few days went into the oil business, operating in the Cow Run field. He has since been a constant operator and successful producer, and now has extensive oil interests. His father-in-law, Moffit Dye, together with John Newton, drilled the first well in the Cow Run field. Mr. Torner spent about 10 years with the Standard Oil Company, and was also six years with the West Virginia Transportation Company, with headquarters at Marietta, which has been his home for some years past. He now has large interests both in Washington County and in West Virginia. He is vice-president of the Pioneer City Building & Loan Association, which was organized July 25, 1893, the incorporators being as follows: Thomas Ewart; A. L. Gracey; George Worrell; Willis Morris; and John Kaiser. The first officers were J. S. Simpson, president; Willis Morris, vice-president; George Worrell, secretary; D. T. McEvoy, treasurer; and Thomas Ewart, attorney. The present officers are—J. S. Simpson, president; J. S. H. Torner, vice-president; O. P. Hyde, secretary and treasurer; and J. C. Brenan, attorney. The Board of Directors consists of the following gentlemen: A. L. Gracey; N. Moore; J. S. Simpson; J. S. H. Torner; W. H. H. Jett; S. J. Hathaway; J. W. Williams; H. E. Smith; D. S. Boyle; I. O. Alcorn; W. S. Dye; and S. H. Plummer.

The authorized capital stock is $2,000,000 and more than $400,000 is loaned. The corporation has been most successful, never having had a foreclosure, and its mission, to assist poor people in building homes and husbanding savings—has been fulfilled. Mr. Torner is vice-president of the German National Bank, secretary of the Marietta Electric Company, was formerly president of the Union Investment Company, and is interested in the Crystal Ice Company, the Ohio Valley Wagon Company and other business enterprises. He has probably had as full and varied an experience in the oil business as any man of his age in the oil region. He served as clerk of Lawrence township two terms, and as treasurer three terms, without soliciting the offices, and was a member of the School Board for ten years. In July, 1890, he accepted his present position as superintendent of the Marietta City Water Works, which was also unsolicited.

January 12, 1875, Mr. Torner was married in Washington County, to Lucy J. Dye, who was born and reared in Marietta, and is a daughter of Moffit Dye, formerly of the firm of Turner, Dye & Company. Mr. and Mrs. Torner have five children, as follows: Fred W., who was born June 21, 1879, graduated from Marietta College at the age of 19 years, took a business course in Eastmen's Business College at Poughkeepsie, New York, and is now bookkeeper for the Marietta Electric Company; Mabel, born April 11, 1881, who is a graduate of the High School, and is in the junior year at Marietta College; Ada E., born December 14, 1883, also a graduate of the High School, who is in the freshman year at Marietta College; Howard T., born May 17, 1886, who is a freshman in the High School; and W. Raymond, born October 8, 1888, who completed the grammar school course in 1902. Fraternally, the subject of this sketch is a Scottish Rite Mason, belonging to American Union Lodge, No. 1, F. & A. M.; American Union Chapter, No. 1, R. A. M.; Marietta Commandery, No. 50, K. T.; Marietta Council, No. 78, R. & S. M.; Cincinnati Consistory, S. P. R. S., 32nd degree; and the Eastern Star Chapter, No. 59, of which Mrs. Torner is also a member. Mrs. Torner is a member of the Congregational Church. The family residence is at No. 420 Fifth street.

AMUEL KIRBY STEELE, who is the leading merchant of Bartlett, Ohio, successfully carries on a business which was established here by his maternal grandfather more than a half century ago. He was born in Wesley township, Washington County, Ohio, in 1872.

John W. Steele, his father, was born in 1849, in Amanda, Ohio, and was the son of Rev. John W. Steele, a minister in the Methodist Church, who was born at Newtown, Virginia, in 1813, and died in 1900. At the time of his death he was the oldest laborer in the field of the Ohio Conference, having been in the ministry for 64 years. His faithful work brought many into the church and he was admired and revered by his brethren, as well as by the members of the different churches where he served as pastor.

John W. Steele was one of the youngest soldiers of the Civil War. He enlisted at the age of 14 years, first in the 129th Reg. Ohio Vol. Inf., and later in the 2nd Reg. Ohio Vol. Cavalry. Realizing that he could not secure his parents' permission to enlist, he left home without it, and served for three years, making an excellent record. Upon his return he learned the carpenter trade, and in 1868 came to Washington County, located in Bartlett, and engaged with the produce firm of S. B. Kirby & Co. In politics Mr. Steele has always been an ardent Republican, and in 1888 he was elected recorder of Washington County, and was re-elected in 1891. His term of service covered six years. He has also been a justice of the peace in Wesley township, is a well-known member of the Bartlett Masonic lodge, and is a leading supporter of the Methodist Church. Mr. Steele was married to Lucinda Holloway, who was born in Flushing, Belmont County, Ohio, in 1849, and is a daughter of Elisha and Lydia Holloway, the former of whom died in 1884, at the age of 65 years. The maternal grandmother of Samuel Kirby Steele was a woman of more than ordinary force of character and business ability. She was born in Belmont County, Ohio, in 1820, and died in 1898. In 1840, she married Elisha Holloway, and some years later, they moved to Chester Hill, in Morgan County, where they opened up a general store. In 1859, they moved the business to Bartlett, where she ably assisted her husband by her good judgment and business sense. She and her husband were mutual owners of the business, and she remained active in it until her death, when her son, Samuel, took her place. Few residents of this locality did more earnest or effective work in promoting the objects of the "Underground Railroad." They made no concealment of their true sentiments. They were most highly esteemed, and are still remembered with respect and affection.

Although Mrs. John W. Steele was reared in the principles of the Society of Friends, in which she had a birthright membership, she later in life joined her husband in the membership in the Methodist Church. They had three children, namely: Horatio, Samuel Kirby and Rufus. The last named is the head bookkeeper for the Dime Savings Bank, of Marietta, while the eldest brother is associated with the subject of this sketch in business.

Samuel Kirby Steele obtained his mental training in the public schools, and spent the five subsequent years in a general store in Flushing, Belmont County. In 1892, he came back to Bartlett and entered the general store of S. B. Kirby & Co. In the spring of 1898 he bought a half interest in the business, and upon the death of Mr. Kirby, in 1901, purchased the interest of his heirs, and is now in full control. Mr. Steele carries a large and complete stock of all goods usually found in village stores, selected with careful discrimination which assures ready sales. To the shrewd tutelage of his grandmother, Mr. Steele attributes much of his success, as it was under her good management that he gained his knowledge of business.

In August, 1898, Mr. Steele was united in marriage with Elma Leota Morrow, who was born in Bartlett, in 1872, and is a daughter of Capt. J. C. and Lucy (Swayne) (Van Law) Morrow. The latter was formerly the widow of Dr. Samuel Van Law. To this union was born a daughter, Lucy Melva, in 1901. Mr. Steele and his wife belong to the Methodist Church. In politics, the former adheres to the Republican party. The subject of this sketch is a young man of excellent business ability, of pleasant and winning manners, and most successfully conducts an old business house, which has always been conducted with integrity.

H. McCONNELL, general manager of the Marietta Manufacturing Company, was born October 31, 1848, at Marietta, and is a son of James and Hannah McConnell, the mother being originally from western Virginia, where the Ogden oil fields are now located.

James McConnell, the father of J. H., was a cooper by trade, and was born in Ohio. He also followed the river, handling produce and commodities as far as New Orleans, until 1856, and was then employed by Captain Gurley, on the ferry across the Muskingum River. He died in 1860. Previous to their arrival in Marietta, the family lived about four years at Williamstown. Mr. McConnell's only brother, W. H. McConnell, was born at Williamstown, and is now superintendent of the Covington Machine Company.

J. H. McConnell attended the public schools of Marietta in his early youth, but at the age of 12 years began to be a wage-earner, having entered the machine shop of Putnam Sons & Co., on Fort street, where, during the war, he was employed in the bucket shop. For two years he worked in the foundry and machine shop of A. T. Nye. He then went to the oil fields of Pleasants County, West Virginia, where he followed engineering for several years, and then worked on the steamboat "Argo," on the Ohio River, for one year.

After the death of his father, T. J. Pattin was appointed his guardian, and by his advice he attended school during the following year at Marietta.

In 1869, Mr. McConnell engaged in business for himself, forming a partnership with Austin Alcock, in a machine shop at Harmar. In 1871 he bought Mr. Alcock's interest, and conducted the business alone until 1879 when he consolidated with J. M. Blair, and also took in J. G. Hall and Frank Barnes. This strong combination of practical young men bought the Knox foundry, and made it the Harmar Foundry & Machine shop. Hard work and too close application, broke down Mr. McConnell's health, and in 1881 he sold his interest in this business, and in 1882 went as far west as North Dakota, locating above Grand Forks, near the Canadian line, and in that neighborhood, was engaged in farming for a year.

Home ties are strong, however, and in 1883, Mr. McConnell found himself back in Marietta. Here he was employed by W. F. Robertson & Co., as draftsman and pattern-maker, and later, as foreman, a position which he filled until 1890, when he bought Mr. Preston's interest. Later, another combination was formed, Mr. McConnell, with Messrs. Lashley and Robertson, buying out Mr. McAtee, and the new firm continued to prosper. Then Alla Winsor bought Mr. Robertson's interest, and the concern became the Marietta Manufacturing Company. In January, 1900, W. S. Dye bought Mr. Lashley's interest, the business being carried on under the same name. The officers of this concern are: Alla Winsor, president; W. S. Dye, secretary and treasurer; and J. H. McConnell, general manager. The output is stoves and machinery of all kinds, machinery for steamboats being a specialty. This house has equipped some of the best tow-boats on the rivers, for parties in Cincinnati and Pittsburg, as well as other places, the excellence of its work taking the trade from the larger cities. The company employs about 65 men. This is one of the leading industries of Marietta, and it is interesting to note how it has grown, through the enterprise of one strong, persistent, persevering man.

Mr. McConnell married Sarah Smith, who was born at Marietta, and is a daughter of William Smith, who formerly conducted a sawmill in this county. He resides with his son-in-law, and has reached the age of 84 years. Six children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. McConnell, three of whom are living, namely: J. P., foreman of the Marietta Manufacturing plant, who married Mary Johnson, and has one daughter, Faye; Edna, an accomplished young lady, who assists her father in his drafting; and Clarence A., who is employed in the company shops.

Mr. McConnell has served several years as Water Works trustee, being president of the board during the greater part of the time. He has also served as a member of the School Board and has been a member of the Council, at Harmar. In a fraternal connection, he belongs to Harmar Blue Lodge, No. 390, F. & A. M.; Union Chapter No. 1; Marietta Commandery, No. 50; and Syrian Temple, at Cincinnati. He is a Shriner; and also a member of the Eastern Star, and was instrumental in the up-building of the lodge and chapter. His religious membership is in the Congregational Church.

WILLIAM M. STILWELL, secretary, treasurer, and general manager of the Ohio Valley Wagon Company, of Marietta, Ohio, is a man of good judgment and practical ability, and possesses the kindly regard of the people of his adopted home. He was born in Franklinville, Cattaraugus County, New York, and is a son of Lewis E. Stilwell, who carried on a manufacturing plant at that place, making carriages, buggies, and surries, so that the subject of this sketch learned thoroughly every detail of the business which he afterward made his own.

William M. Stilwell has traveled all over the United States, picking up ideas here and there and utilizing them in his business. He has been employed at Jacksonville, Florida; Chattanooga, Tennessee; Cincinnati, Ohio; and in different cities in Kentucky, etc. When still a young man, he was interested a short time in the oil fields at Bradford, Pennsylvania, but entered business in his own name at Marietta, about four years ago, at Church and 4th streets, where he occupied the building used by the Ohio Valley Wagon Company as a repository, that company having been the outcome of the business first started.

CAPT. JAMES B. SHOOP.

The subject of this sketch was united in marriage with Miss Martin, of Clarion County, Pennsylvania, and they have two children,—Garnett, now a stenographer for the Ohio Valley Wagon Co., and Isabelle, attending school. They reside at their beautiful residence at No. 431 Third street. The Presbyterian is the favorite religious denomination of the family.

In politics, Mr. Stilwell is a Democrat of the truest type. In social circles, he is a member of the Masonic Order, affiliating with the Harmar Blue Lodge, No. 390, American Union Chapter No. 1, and Marietta Council, No. 78. For the past twenty years, he has also affiliated with the A. O. U. W. fraternity. He is a practical man, and uses his common sense in all departments of his business, which is rapidly increasing.

CAPT. JAMES B. SHOOP was born in Marietta, February 2, 1842. About the year 1850 his parents removed to McConnelsville, and in that village, or vicinity, continued to reside until the beginning of the Civil War.

Mr. Shoop had such opportunities of education as were afforded by the public schools, but early in life he began work in the cabinet shop with his father. When the Civil War began Mr. Shoop, at the age of 19 years, responded to the first call for volunteers. He enlisted in the first company which went from Morgan County, commanded by Capt. F. B. Pond, and assigned as Company H, to the 17th

Reg. Ohio Vol. Inf., at Camp Anderson, near Lancaster, Ohio. With this company he served in what is now West Virginia, during a campaign of nearly four months, distinguishing himself by his cheerful, soldierly conduct, which gave assurance of his success.

Returning to his home he promptly re-enlisted for three years or during the war, in Company B, 62nd Reg. Ohio Vol. Inf., then forming at Camp Goddard, near Zanesville, under Col. F. B. Pond. His reputation as a soldier was such that ere the regiment left Ohio he had been made a sergeant. His subsequent history was so identified with that of his company and regiment, that their history is his. Without influential friends, on his merit alone, evinced on many a field of battle, he passed through the different grades of non-commissioned officers, to the command of a company with the rank of captain.

As early as August, 1863, while first lieutenant, he was in command of Company B, in which he enlisted. He participated in the arduous campaign in the Shenandoah Valley, in the first battle at Kernstown, or Winchester, and in many skirmishes in other parts of the valley. With his regiment, he helped to cover the rear of McClellan's retreating army before Richmond, and was in many skirmishes in front of Harrison's Landing. From the Peninsula he went to Suffolk, and was engaged in at least four skirmishes along the Black Water. Thence he went with his regiment to Newbern, and a little later, in 1863, to the coast of South Carolina, where, on Folly and Morris islands, he was engaged in the siege of Charleston. In the bloody charge on Fort Wagner, on Morris Island, he received a severe wound which, however, did not deter him from rejoining his command, after a short experience in the hospital; yet from the results of that wound he has ever been a sufferer, and for the last twelve years, he has been paralyzed in his lower limbs, and confined to his rolling chair. He rejoined his company in time to take an active part in the long and arduous campaign (which might almost be called one continuous battle) for five or six months, in front of Petersburg and Richmond.

At this distance of time it is hard to realize that day after day and week after week, there was almost continuous firing in the trenches and on the picket posts before Richmond and that here the soldierly qualities of men were more severely tried perhaps than in some of the bloodiest battles. Within this time the subject of this sketch also took part in some battles that have come down in history as distinct engagements, namely: Those at Chapin's Farm, the Darbytown Roads, Strawberry Plains and Deep Bottom Run.

Captain Shoop received many assurances and testimonials of the respect and esteem in which he was held in his command. One of the most cherished of these was an elegant sword, sash and belt, presented to him by his old company, B, at Christmas, 1863, at Hilton Head Island, South Carolina.

At the close of his term of enlistment the Captain returned to his home in Morgan County, and on July 18, 1865, he married Lizzie Koons, of McConnelville. Eight children were born to this union, of whom seven are still living.

In 1866 Captain Shoop began business as a cabinetmaker, in Amesville, Ohio, and followed that occupation assiduously until stricken down by paralysis. While engaged in this business he was singularly unfortunate through losses occasioned by fires. The first fire, in 1870, destroyed his home. In 1873, a building, in which he had stored furniture, was burned; and in 1875 his entire shop and tools were consumed. Yet, all these disasters did not deter him from again starting in business, and he was actively engaged as long as his physical strength would permit. He has been an office bearer in the Presbyterian Church, and in the Masonic bodies, of which he is still an honored member. In politics he is a Republican; but although he takes an active interest in the questions of the day, that interest has been manifested as a patriotic citizen, and not as an office seeker. Of him, says his friend, Martin R. Andrews: "He now lives a quiet and retired life in his pleasant home at Beverly, beloved by all his surviving comrades, and honored by the whole community.

"Among these comrades, it was my fortune to be numbered, and the name of Captain Shoop recalls many a pleasant memory of times long past. He was my first teacher in the school of a soldier; my companion on picket post, through a long winter night, amid the snows of a Virginia mountain. In field or camp, in line of battle or in the deadly trench, as we marched by day or night, through snow or mud or scorching dust, he was ever the same dear, cheerful comrade, ready to help the sick and weary, and to encourage them by word or deed. It is no wonder that he is held in loving remembrance by his comrades, for, in all the scenes of arduous campaigns he was ever a model in the cheerful performance of all that belongs to a soldier's duty."

E. SNODGRASS, one of Newport's busy men, is quite profitably engaged in the livery business, and has a wide circle of friends and acquaintances. He is a son of Beniah and Melvina (Chase) Snodgrass, and was born September 20, 1849, at Marietta, Ohio.

Beniah Snodgrass was a farmer by occupation, and lived until 1892, when his death took place in Kansas. He and his worthy wife had a family of four children, viz: Eliza, who married Selden Garrison, and is deceased; J. E., the subject of this brief biography; Virginia, who married Mr. Clough, of Laclede, Missouri; and Thomas, who was married and removed to California where he still resides. In politics Mr. Snodgrass was a Republican; he was a member of the M. E. Church.

The subject of this sketch received his primary teaching in the schools of his native place, and carefully prepared himself for the struggle of life. Since then he has followed a business career. First, he was in the grocery business for three years, and met some success. He abandoned that for the general produce business, which occupied his attention for the next nine years. For the past twelve years he has been in the livery business and now has a good patronage. The oil excitement in West Virginia claimed the attention of Mr. Snodgrass as of many others, and he is at present interested in some of the producing wells in that region.

The subject of this sketch married Clara C. Reynolds, of St. Mary's, West Virginia, a daughter of G. W. Reynolds, and they have five children, now living, as follows. Georgia, the wife of Lewis Neibert, living in Parkersburg; Richard C.; Sylva, who married J. F. Harris, and now makes her home in Newport; Kenneth A., a resident of New York City; and John E.: an infant, unnamed, is deceased. The family are faithful to the doctrines of the M. E. Church. Politically the subject of this sketch is a Republican, and has been of service to his party whenever it was possible.

EORGE H. HOLDREN is one of the most extensive agriculturists in Newport township, Washington County, Ohio. He cultivates 184½ acres of fertile land, and is a prosperous, careful and worthy representative of his calling. He is a son of Thomas and Mary A. (Riggs) Holdren, and was born June 5, 1847.

Thomas Holdren was born in 1812, and died in 1885. He was engaged in farming on a tract of 1,000 acres, excellently adapted for that purpose. He was united in marriage with Mary A. Riggs, and they had eight children, namely: J. Calvin, who married Miss Bell, and lives in Wood County, West Virginia; J. L., who married Mary Martin, and now resides in Grandview township; Edmond, who chose Mary Browne for his wife, and now resides in Pleasants County, West Virginia; George H.; Allan; Josiah, who was united in marriage with Miss Morgan, now deceased; Mary C., the wife of L. D. Ellis, living in Grandview township; and Eliza, who married James Moore, and also resides in Grandview township.

George H. Holdren was united in marriage with Harriet E. Webber, and they were blessed with ten children, as follows: Herbert T., who married Bertha Irwin; Mazie; Stella; Rose; Clifford; Clyde; Gertrude; Lorena; Vere; and Alice.

Mr. Holdren is a Democrat and has served his party faithfully for six years as trustee of Grandview township, and six years in the same capacity in Newport township. In fraternal circles, he affiliates with I. O. O. F. organization. In the work of the farm he uses good judgment and plenty of exertion, and makes a specialty of keeping good road horses. As a dutiful citizen, he enjoys the respect of all around him.

THOMAS I. BOWMAN, one of the most substantial farmers and wool dealers of Washington County, Ohio, was born in 1852, in Wesley township, and is a son of James and Elizabeth (Baily) Bowman, both of whom were born in Ohio.

James Bowman was born in 1818, in Stark County, Ohio, and died in Washington County, on July 14, 1880. He followed an agricultural life and came to this county in 1832, locating in Wesley township. In politics, he supported the Republican party, although he never accepted any public office. He married Elizabeth Baily, a daughter of Henry and Mary Baily, who was born in Belmont County, in 1820. She resides in Wesley township, with her son, Emmor. Both she and her husband belonged, from youth, to the Society of Friends. Five children were born to them, namely: Phoebe and Isaac, both of whom are deceased; Henry, who lives in Morgan County; Emmor, who is State superintendent of the Standard Oil Company, and resides in Wesley township; and Thomas I.

The subject of this sketch was reared on the home farm in Wesley township, and attended the district schools. He was reared by careful, pious parents, and was taught morality and frugal habits. Mr. Bowman has devoted his life to farming and wool dealing, and owns one of the best properties in Wesley township, comprising 676 acres. He has been identified with public matters in the township, and has most efficiently filled a number of the local offices, among them, that of trustee. For the past ten years he has been a member of the school board.

In 1873, Mr. Bowman was united in marriage with Melissa Emmons, who was born in Columbiana County in 1850, and is a daughter of Isaac and Mary Emmons. Isaac Emmons was born in Columbiana County and died in 1902, at the age of 77 years. His wife was born in Westmoreland County, Pennsylvania, and died in 1888, at the age of 60 years. A family of nine children was born to Mr. and Mrs. Bowman, as follows: May Marie; James, who married Data Place, and lives in Wesley township; George, who married Mate Yarnell, and lives in Wesley township; Charles F., who is a student in the Methodist Theological Seminary at Delaware, Ohio; and Oswald, Thomas, Daniel, Mary and Alva, who are at home. The religious membership of the family is in the Methodist Church. In politics, Mr. Bowman has been a lifelong Republican, and exerts considerable influence in his party in this locality. Mr. Bowman is one of the honorable and trustworthy citizens of Wesley township and has always taken a great interest in the development of the county, particularly in the line of agricultural progress.

RANK P. MORSE, superintendent and active manager of the Acme Brick Plant, located in Norwood, is a prominent business man of Marietta, Ohio. He was born and reared in Marietta, and is a son of William M. and Charlotte A. (Palmer) Morse, and grandson of Marcellus Morse, at one time sheriff of Washington County.

William M. Morse was born at Marietta, January 14, 1843, and when a young man, began railroading. For more than twenty years he was a locomotive engineer on the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, and then spent fourteen years in the service of the Toledo & Ohio Central Railway Company, serving as general superintendent of the road for several years prior to 1900. He is now extensively engaged in mining pursuits in North Carolina. As a result of his union with Charlotte A. Palmer, he had the following children: Jennie, who married Charles T. McIllyar, one of the partners in the Star Clothing House, of Marietta, by whom she has two sons,—Kent, and Glenn; Laura, who is an art student, and is living at home; and Frank P., the subject of this biography.

Frank P. Morse was educated at Marietta, attending the Academy, under Professor M. R. Andrews. He then spent seven years with the Toledo & Ohio Central Railway Company, two or three years of which time was in the auditor's office. Later, he was agent of the road, in Marietta, until 1897, when he began the manufacture of brick. His plant was located on Montgomery and Seventh streets, and was succeeded by the Sterling Brick Company, which was organized in 1899, largely through the efforts of Mr. Morse and F. L. Alexander. The officers of this company are F. L. Alexander, president; D. R. Rood, vice-president and secretary; H. P. Bode, treasurer; and Charles Sugden, manager. The board of directors is made up of the above named officers, and F. P. Morse, T. H. Sugden, and W. S. Patten. The plant is located on a tract of thirteen acres, gives employment to thirty men, and has a capacity of 30,000 bricks per day. Early in the spring of 1902, Mr. Morse became superintendent and active manager of the Acme Brick Plant, of Norwood, which gives employment to forty men, and has a capacity of 40,000 bricks in ten hours. Mr. Morse is an active, progressive and practical business man, and is well deserving of the success with which he is meeting.

The subject of this sketch was united in marriage with Cora Sugden, a daughter of T. H. Sugden, and they have one son, W. R. Palmer, who was born in Marietta. The family residence is at No. 324 Gilmore avenue. Mr. Morse is a Republican, in politics. He belongs to the Masonic Order, being past master of Harnar Lodge, No. 390, and a member of American Union Chapter. Religiously he is a member of the Congregational Church.

JACOB FOX.

MRS. ROSA R. FOX.

JACOB FOX, one of the representative citizens of Grand View township, Washington County, Ohio, was born in Bavaria, Germany, August 8, 1846, and is a son of Nicholas and Elizabeth (Snyder) Fox.

Nicholas Fox was born in Germany in 1810, and was a farmer by occupation. He came to the United States with his family in 1847, landing at New York. He went from there to Wheeling, West Virginia, where he followed mining for two years, and then went to Bellaire, Ohio. After residing there for three years, he went to Monroe County, Ohio, where he bought land and farmed near Clarington. He next moved to Grand View township, Washington County, and located upon the farm now owned and occupied by his son, Jacob. He lived there until his death, May 4, 1889. His wife, Elizabeth Snyder, who was born in Germany, August 3, 1809, died August 17, 1888. They reared two children, namely: Jacob; and Margaret, who was born in Germany October 31, 1835, and married Henry Ressieger. The father was a Democrat in politics. Religiously, he was a member of the German Lutheran Church.

Jacob Fox received his mental training in the schools of Monroe County, after which he engaged in teaching in that county, and in Grand View township, Washington County. He began teaching at the age of 17 and continued until he was 40 years old. From 1878 until 1882, he was successfully engaged in the general merchandise business in Grand View. He has since been engaged in general farming, and has 135 acres of land, all under a high state of cultivation.

In 1870 Mr. Fox married Rosa Roth, who was born in Monroe County, Ohio, May 23, 1851, and is a daughter of John W. Roth. Her father was born in Switzerland, in 1825, and came to the United States in 1834. He spent most of his life in Monroe County, Ohio, engaged in agricultural pursuits. He died April 1, 1878, aged 53 years, one month and 17 days, having been born in 1825. He married Rosena R. Rabel, who was born in Wurtemberg, Germany, in 1827, and died May 9, 1889. They reared the following children: Mary (Kocher), of Monroe County; Rosa, wife of Mr. Fox; Lizzie (Zink), of Monroe County; Caroline, wife of Isaac Kocher, of Monroe County; Edward, of Monroe County; and Matilda, who married George Berentz, of Washington County. Mr. and Mrs. Fox became the parents of 14 children, as follows: Mary I., who was born November 13, 1870, and married F. J. Lantz, of Grand View township; Charles W., born April 27, 1872, who lives in Pittsburg; George E., of Pittsburg, who was born November 21, 1873, and married Minnie Adamson; Cora A., born March 25, 1876; Arthur, born July 1, 1877, at St. Louis, Missouri; Rosa S., who was born April 7, 1879, and died August 3, 1880; Edward E., born October 16, 1880; Clara V., born April 29, 1883; Jacob W., born March 12, 1885; Clarence E., born February 25, 1887; Buna V., born March 28, 1889; Truman B., who was born June 19, 1891, and died January 18, 1892; Raymond T., born June 19, 1891; and Chester U. R., born February 26, 1894. Truman B. and Raymond T. were twins. The subject of this sketch is a Democrat in politics, and served as township clerk four terms, as assessor 12 terms, as land appraiser two terms, as road supervisor, and is now a member of the School Board. Mr. Fox and his family are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

DLIVER TUCKER, one of Beverly's most prominent and progressive business men, is engaged in mercantile pursuits, and is also president of the Citizens' Bank. He was born in Washington County, Pennsylvania, in May, 1832, and is a son of Alexander and Delilah (Hughes) Tucker.

Alexander Tucker was born in Washington County, Pennsylvania, and died in 1850, at the age of forty-three years. He was a hatter by trade but after coming to Waterford township, Washington County, Ohio, engaged in farming owning a tract of 81 acres of land. He was a Whig in politics. He married Delilah Hughes, who was born in Jefferson County, Ohio, in 1813, and died in 1898. She was a member of the Presbyterian Church. They had eight children, as follows: Oliver; Thomas S., deceased, who was adjutant general in the army and was located eight years at Santa Fe, New Mexico, where he died; Lycurgus, who died in 1869; John, a manufacturer of steel-sheet goods, at Newark, Ohio; Julia E., who married Dr. L. P. Culver, of Unionville, Morgan county, Ohio; Lily, widow of W. C. Townsend, of Zanesville; William Rufus, a merchant at Beverly; and Alice, who died in 1899.

Oliver Tucker was seven years of age when he accompanied his parents to Waterford township, Washington County, Ohio, two miles north of Beverly. He received his mental training in the district schools and Beverly High School, after which he worked for two years in the store of J. B. Bane, as clerk. Then, in connection with Andrew Denny, he bought out Mr. Bane, and he has since continued as a merchant. He also owns a tract of 375 acres one half mile south of Waterford, and is extensively engaged in farming. He has, besides, a valuable farm of 240 acres in Wayne County, Illinois, and owns, in all, about twelve acres in the town of Beverly, all of which is valuable land. Mr. Tucker was in the Home militia during the Civil War, and was mustered out fifteen days after the Morgan raid. He has served as president of the Citizens' Bank for a number of years, and has been identified with other enterprises of the city.

In October, 1857, Mr. Tucker was joined in matrimony with Jane Buck, who was born in Washington County, Ohio, in 1841, and is a daughter of James and Esther Buck. They have two children—Alice R., who is at home; and Mary J., who married Edwin O. Townsend, of Mansfield, Ohio, at present a wholesale merchant in New York City. The subject is a member of the Presbyterian Church. He belongs to Mount Moriah Lodge, A. F. & A. M.; Rufus Putnam Chapter, R. A. M., in which he has served a number of years as high priest; and Marietta Commandery, No. 150. In politics he is a strong supporter of Democratic principles.

RANK B. LEONARD, proprietor of a general store at Newell's Run, Ohio, for the past six months, is rapidly making his way toward the front as one of that city's hustling business men. He is a son of Augustus and Margaret A. (Clark) Leonard, the former born June 27, 1830, in Dresden, Ohio.

Augustus Leonard is now retired from the pursuits of active life, and has been postmaster of Newell's Run since 1898. He is the owner of ten acres of fine land in Newport township, which will some day be very valuable. In the Civil War he enlisted in the 100-day service, in Company G, 148th Reg. Ohio Vol. Inf., and was an efficient soldier, ranking as first lieutenant.

Augustus Leonard was united in marriage with Margaret A. Clark, who was born in McKeesport, Pennsylvania, June 6, 1831. They had a family consisting of nine children namely: Eliza D., who married Alfred C. Seiwerts, and lives in Cincinnati, Ohio; Ella L., who is the wife of A. Schnauffer, of Marietta, Ohio; Margaret, born October 15, 1857, who is deceased; Mary Augusta, born December 19, 1859; Frank B., the subject of this brief sketch; Fannie E., who became the wife of Dr. Cline, and lives in Williamstown, West Virginia; Sarah, deceased; Samuel C., who married Kate Rymer, and lives in Williams-town, West Virginia; and W. B., who was born October 6, 1871, and married Minnie Gano.

Mr. Leonard and his family are Presbyterians, in religious belief. Politically the former was first a Whig, and later took sides with the Republican party, to which he has since been faithful. He has the good wishes of all in the community, as the result of his useful citizenship.

The subject of this sketch gained the rudiments of an education in the common school of Newport township. Later, he took a two years course in Marietta Academy, and still later attended Marietta College for two years. He was of a studious nature, and made rapid progress in acquiring knowledge. In the general merchandise business he has a good patronage, which is daily increasing.

Mr. Leonard chose for his wife Alice Bond, a daughter of Thomas Bond, and they have reared four children, namely: Ethel, Enid, Paul, and Eliza. Politically, the subject of this sketch has ever been a Republican, and he is ready at any time to defend his chosen party. He is still young in years, his birth having occurred December 17, 1861, and a bright future awaits him.

RS. RUTH B. DEVOL, who is living on the homestead farm about five miles from Marietta, in Washington County, Ohio, is the widow of the late Benjamin Frank Devol. She was born in Marietta township, in 1823, and is a daughter of Basil and Worthy (Broom) Cross.

Benjamin Frank Devol, the deceased husband of Mrs. Ruth B. Devol, was born in 1818, and died in July, 1876. He was a most worthy gentleman and was highly esteemed in Washington County, where he was well known for his many admirable traits of character. He was an ardent member of the Republican party. Fourteen children blessed his union with Ruth B. Cross Devol, namely: Cynthia, deceased; Charles Henry, a farmer of Muskingum township, who married Josie Lewis; William, of Marietta, who married Clara Jett; George, deceased; Benjamin, a farmer, of Muskingum township, who married Carrie Spindler; Mary, who married Frank Lancaster, a carpenter, of Marietta; Charlotte, deceased, who was the wife of J. P. Ridge; Kate, who married Henry Faulkner; Ruth, who married Charles Griffin, and is living in Marietta; Clara and Lorenzo, deceased; Emery, who lives with his mother; Elmer, a farmer of Muskingum township, who married Clara Cline; and Wing, who is farming at home.

Mrs. Devol is a woman of many lovable traits of character, and she is a kind and helpful neighbor, always lending assistance to those who are in distress.

LTON H. DEVOL is one of the respective farmers of Muskingum township, Washington County, Ohio. He is a son of Theodore and Jane (Clark) Devol, and grandson of Stephen Devol.

His paternal great-grandfather, Stephen Devol, came from Rhode Island in the year 1800, and with his family, settled in Waterford township, Washington County, Ohio, where he lived and died. He was a ship carpenter by trade. His son, Stephen Devol, was a farmer of that township, and was three times married. He reared five children, namely: Theodore, the father of Milton H.; Emily; Hiram; Betsy; and Louisa.

Theodore Devol married Jane Clark, a daughter of Seneca Clark, of Waterford township. Seneca Clark reared three children, namely: A. S. Clark, of Beverly, a physician; Jane F., mother of Milton H.; and Henry, deceased. Theodore Devol and his wife reared five children, as follow: Frances, who married Captain J. G. Barker; Stephen, who married Kate O'Donnel, and is living in Zanesville; Augusta Jane, who died February 5, 1902; Milton H., the subject of this sketch; and Lewis A., who married Nettie Stagg, and is living in Wisconsin.

Milton H. Devol, whose name opens these lines, was united in marriage with Lizzie Keeler, a daughter of Philip Keeler, of Washington County, Ohio, and they have four children, namely: Clark, aged sixteen years; Hattie, aged fifteen years; Gertrude, aged thirteen years; and Marjorie, aged six years.

Mr. Devol is deeply interested in the welfare of the people in the community in which he lives, and is a man of high standing.

EDWIN W. DEVOL, a highly successful truck farmer of Washington County, is located on his farm in Muskingum township. He was born in 1858, and is a son of J. H. and Katherine (West) Devol.

The farm on which Mr. Devol lives was recently purchased. It had been owned by his father for a number of years, having come to that gentleman by division of estate. There Mr. Devol conducts a garden or truck farm, and being but four miles from the city of Marietta, finds a ready market for the products which he takes so much pride in raising. He is thoroughly conversant with gardening methods, and truck raising, and he ranks among the leading and influential farmers of the county.

Mr. Devol is a Republican, in politics. Religiously, he attends the Congregational Church.

DR. FRANCIS RIDLEY SPARLING. The subject of this sketch was born in Noble County, Ohio, May 19, 1853, of Irish parents, and is the eldest of a family of six children. His father and mother were born near Tullamore, Ireland. His father studied medicine in Dublin, served as surgeon on board of one of Her Majesty, Queen Victoria's ships, and made two trips to Sierra Leone, on the coast of Africa. He came to America in 1851, and settled in Noble County, Ohio, where he practiced medicine until April, 1861. Then he moved with his family to Washington County, Ohio, where F. R. Sparling grew to manhood, and studied medicine under his father. He graduated from Starling Medical College, of Columbus, Ohio, in the spring of 1880, and located on the old homestead in Liberty township, Washington County, Ohio, in 1881.

Dr. Francis Ridley Sparling was united in marriage with Carrie C. Perkins, a daughter of Ezra Perkins, of Salem township, Washington County, Ohio. To this union were born six children, all of whom are living.

Dr. Sparling acquired a large practice, which he conducted successfully for nearly 18 years in Liberty and adjoining townships. Feeling unable, however, to endure the strain and exposure of country practice, and in order to secure better educational facilities for his children, he moved with his family, in the fall of 1897, to Devol's Dam, near Marietta. He also took an active part in the development of oil and gas interests in Liberty and Lawrence townships, and the betterment of roads and postal service in Liberty township.

JAMES LINTNER BRECKENRIDGE, gauger for the Buckeye Pipe Line Company at Elba, Washington County, Ohio, has been a faithful employee of that company since 1877, and has been located at Elba since 1885. Mr. Breckenridge is a Pennsylvanian by birth, having been born in Meadville, that state, July 6, 1845. He is a son of William B. and Nancy (Andrews) Breckenridge, both natives of Crawford County, Pennsylvania, and grandson of David and Sarah (Lintner) Breckenridge. David Breckenridge settled in Crawford County, Pennsylvania, in 1802, cleared a farm in Vernon township and built the first frame barn in Crawford County. He was of Scotch-Irish stock; his death took place in 1863.

The maternal grandfather of the subject hereof was Robert Andrews, a native of the north of Ireland, and also of Scotch-Irish stock. He, too, was among the pioneer settlers in Vernon township, and after farming for many years in Crawford County, he died there. He married Sarah Chidester.

DR. JAMES M. HARDY.

William B. Breckenridge followed agricultural pursuits near Meadville, Vernon township, for many years. After his retirement, he moved to Meadville, Pennsylvania, where he died, in 1893. The subject of these lines received his mental training in the public schools of Crawford County, Pennsylvania. He served as an apprentice at the jeweler's trade, and followed that line of work for fifteen years, with M. P. Jenks, in Meadville. In 1877, he entered the employ of the United Pipe Line Co., at Edinburg, Lawrence County, Pennsylvania, and has continued in the service ever since, being now ganger for Washington County, Ohio, with location at Elba.

Mr. Breckenridge has been twice married. September 3, 1879, he was united in marriage with Emma Colt, a daughter of Sydney and Charlotte (Whitman) Colt, of Meadville. Three sons blessed this union,—John C., Harry W. and Lawrence B. In 1887, the mother of these children crossed the river of death, and after many years, Mr. Breckenridge formed a second matrimonial alliance. This event took place October 7, 1897, and Mrs. Clara (McNamara) Cady, of Meadville, was the lady of his choice. In politics, the subject of this sketch is a Republican. He affiliates with Elba Lodge, No. 420, Knights of Pythias.

 R. JAMES M. HARDY, a competent and reliable practitioner of medicine in Salem township, Washington County, Ohio, is a native of Sharon, Noble County, Ohio, where he was born July 7, 1844, his parents being Dr. John R. and Julia A. (Robinson) Hardy, natives of Maine and New York, respectively. His paternal grandfather was Jesse Hardy, a pioneer of Bedford, Cuyahoga County, Ohio, who, some years later, removed from Bedford to one of the towns in Noble County, and resided there until his death. The maternal grandfather of James M. Hardy was William Robinson, a resident of Salem township, where he was engaged in farming until his demise.

Dr. John R. Hardy arrived in Ohio with his parents in 1820, and prepared to fit himself for the study of medicine, as he had chosen for his life work the profession of a physician. In 1835 he located in Noble County, and, until 1848, actively pursued his practice in Sharon; afterward he moved to Salem township, Washington County. Until his death, May 3, 1875, at the age of 63 years, he was kept very busy attending to the work always awaiting him. He was twice married, first to a Miss Goodrich, who was the mother of his first three children, namely: Martin V., who for 46 years was a prominent physician of Salem township; Susan, the wife of Pemberton Palmer; and Andrew J., of Missouri. The mother of these children died, and subsequently John R. Hardy married again, being united with Julia A. Robinson, who had two children by this marriage: James M.; and Josephine, deceased.

James M. Hardy was reared in Washington County, Ohio, and received a part of his education in the high school of Lebanon, Ohio. When he, like his father, determined to practice medicine, he became a student at the medical college at Columbus, Ohio, and graduated with the class of 1876. Since obtaining his degree he has had great success, and now enjoys to a high degree, the regard and esteem of the people of his township and county.

Dr. Hardy was united in marriage with Mary E. Miller, a daughter of George Miller, of Salem township, and they have two sons, namely: Maurice L., who was a soldier in the Spanish-American War, and served 22 months in the Philippine Islands; and Arthur G., who is fitting himself for civil engineering.

During the Civil War, Dr. Hardy served for 27 months in the army. He enlisted as a private in Company H, 7th Reg. Ohio Vol. Cav., in August, 1862, and took active part in opposing Morgan's raid. The last year he spent in the service he was on detached duty at Camp Nelson, Kentucky, where he was honorably discharged with the rank of corporal, in November, 1864. Dr. and Mrs. Hardy are members of the Universalist Church.

Fraternally the doctor affiliates with American Union Lodge, No. 1, F. & A. M., of Marietta, Ohio; Palmer Lodge, No. 351, I. O. O. F., of Salem; William Thomas Encampment, No. 266, I. O. O. F.; and G. J. Stanley Post, G. A. R. In politics he is at all times a Republican, and takes great interest in city, township and county affairs. He is a member of the Washington County Medical Society, and also of the Ohio State Medical Association.

ROBERT EMMET SMITHSON, deceased, lately a prominent citizen of Macksburg, Ohio, where his death took place April 25, 1901, will ever be remembered as one of the substantial citizens of that place. Mr. Smithson was born in Aurelius township, Washington County, Ohio, May 4, 1831, and was a son of John and Jane (Campbell) Smithson. His paternal grandfather was Thomas Smithson, of England, who came to America in 1804, and settled in Otsego County New York. He became a naturalized citizen of the United States in 1814 and about two years later, removed to Ohio, and settled in Aurelius township, Washington County.

Robert E. Smithson obtained his mental training in the public schools of his native township. He learned the carpenter's trade, which he followed previous to the Civil War, and also assisted his father, at times, in his store at Macksburg. During the great conflict between the north and the south, like a true American citizen, he responded to our country's call for volunteers and became a member of Company G, 77th Reg. Ohio Vol. Infantry. He took an active part in the great battle of Shiloh, but was engaged in skirmishing most of the time previous to the evacuation of Corinth. He was taken prisoner at Marks Mills, Arkansas, April 25, 1864, and was sent to Tyler, Texas. In July, of the same year, he succeeded in making his escape, but was recaptured on August 12, and returned to prison. After ten months' imprisonment he was exchanged February 25, 1865. While on his way home, he received his commission as captain from Governor Brough. He returned to his regiment, and March 8, 1866, fifteen days later, was mustered out of service. He went into the army as a private, and filled every position up to that of brevet major, having been discharged as such after serving nearly four years and a half.

After his return from the war, Major Smithson was engaged, for several years, in general merchandizing in Ringgold, Morgan County, and subsequently, in Marietta. In 1876, he retired from mercantile life and removed to Macksburg, where he became connected with the oil industry, in which he was largely interested up to the time of his death. He was the first mayor of the village of Macksburg, and both as a public and private citizen, he enjoyed the esteem of the public in general. He was a member of the Masonic order for nearly half a century, and also affiliated with the I. O. O. F. He was vice-president of the association of the 77th regiment and also of the branch association of prisoners of war, for southeastern Ohio.

Mr. Smithson was twice married. In 1863, he was joined in matrimony with Ara A. Harris, who, after a brief wedded life, passed to her final rest in 1866. On August 19, 1867, Mr. Smithson contracted a second marriage, being this time united with Julia M. Collins, who still survives him. Five children blessed this union, namely, Jennie B., wife of Wilbur Atherton; Margaret; Mary G.; Mabel I., wife of Osmer Parker; and Donald R.

Mrs. Julia E. Smithson, widow of the subject of this sketch, is a daughter of Captain William R. and Margaret Lee (Hutchison) Collins, at one time prominent residents of Loudoun County, Virginia, who later moved to Ohio. Her father, Captain Collins, was a soldier in the War of 1812, with the rank of captain. He enlisted in the army at Leesburg, Virginia, when but eighteen years old, and served until the successful termination of that conflict. He was a son of Horatio and Abigail (Richison) Collins. His father, an Englishman by birth, was a soldier in the Revolutionary War, and his mother was a lady of Irish birth.

Captain Collins settled in Cambridge, Ohio, in 1822, and engaged in merchandizing, milling and other pursuits. In 1839, he located in Macksburg, and followed similar pursuits for ten years. He then removed to Bonn, Ohio, where he remained for several years, after which he moved to Albany, Athens County, Ohio. Some time later he went to Pomeroy, Ohio, where the closing years of his life were spent. He died in 1859. During the "forties," he was captain of a militia company at Macksburg.

Mrs. Smithson is one of a family of the following children, seven girls and two boys. Their names are Elizabeth; Nancy; Mary E.; William A.; Margaret L.; Enoch A.; Julia M.; Sallie M.; and Abigail. Elizabeth married James Mace; Nancy, who married Robert P. Dille, is deceased; Abigail married Albert S. Perkins, and is deceased; Mary E. is the widow of Henry Ewing; and William A. and Enoch A. are deceased. Sallie is the widow of John T. Matthews, and Margaret L. was the wife of Hiram D. Davis, but is now deceased. Julia M. is the widow of the subject of this sketch, and is a highly respected resident of Macksburg, where she has hosts of friends.

MRS. BETTY WASHINGTON (LEWIS) LOVELL, born in Richmond, Virginia, in 1796, eldest child of Howell Lewis and Ellen Hackley Pollard. Howell Lewis was the son of Fielding Lewis and Betty Washington, only sister of George Washington. Mrs. Lovell's father, Howell Lewis, in 1811, removed to land on the Big Kanawha below Charleston inherited from his uncle, General Washington; the family, including slaves, numbered fifty.

In 1818, Mrs. Lovell was married to Col. Joseph Lovell, of Charleston, Virginia. Mr. Lovell was born in England, came in early life to Virginia, and became prominent as a lawyer and legislator; he died in Charleston, Virginia, and his widow, with five sons, removed to Marietta Ohio, in 1838, chiefly for the education of her children. Mrs. Lovell took a long lease of the Governor Meigs home on Muskingum avenue, and was identified with Marietta till her death in 1866. Her mother, Mrs. Ellen H. Lewis, and two sons lie beside her in Mound Cemetery. Her fourth son, Joseph, born in 1827, was reared to manhood in Marietta, graduated from Marietta College in 1850, read law in Marietta, but removed to Nashville, Tennessee, going into the commission business.

November 15, 1852, Mr. Lowell married Sarah Sophia Nye, eldest daughter of A. T. Nye (grandson of General Benjamin Tupper, one of the founders of the Ohio Company). During the Civil War Mr. Lovell and family returned to Marietta, where he died in 1865. The one daughter of this marriage is Betty Washington, married, in 1876, to Francis Fox Oldham. With their three children they reside (1902) in Cincinnati, Ohio.

JAMES N. CASSIDY, a leading farmer of Washington County, Ohio, occupies one of the well-improved and finely-cultivated farms which make Fairfield township a most desirable part of the county.

Mr. Cassidy was born in Union township, Carroll County, Ohio, on November 29, 1844, and is a son of John and Mary (Russell) Cassidy. John Cassidy died on September 15, 1891, aged 71 years, two months and 20 days. His wife died on November 28, 1888, when more than 60 years old. They had a family of eight children, James N. being the second in order of birth. The others were as follows: William, who operates a farm in Augusta township, Carroll County; Samuel Russell, who died in August, 1877, in early manhood; Robert George, who resides at Atwater Center, Portage County, Ohio; Margaret Jane, who died in 1859, at the age of seven years; Matthew, who resides in Union township, Carroll County; John Patterson, who is a resident of Carroll County; and one who died in infancy.

The subject of this sketch was reared and schooled in Carroll county. In early life he became interested in agricultural pursuits, which have claimed the most of his attention through life. In March, 1880, he sold his farm in Carroll County, and located in his present place in Washington County, where he has made most of the excellent improvements. He bought the farm which was known as the Laughlin Devine farm. Mr. Cassidy is a practical farmer, and carefully manages to make every part of his property remunerative. He has a particularly thrifty orchard, and carries on a general line of farming.

In February, 1867, Mr. Cassidy married Margaret Isabel Dager, who was born in Washington County, Ohio, on July 8, 1846, and is a daughter of John and Margaret (Means) Dager, who became residents of Ohio when she was but two years of age. They located in Augusta township, where they resided through life. The father of Mrs. Cassidy died in 1868, aged 70 years, and her mother, in December, 1870, aged about 74 years. They had a family of eight children, the youngest member being the wife of Mr. Cassidy. The others were as follows: Jacob, who died in April, 1862; Martha Ann, who resides at East Rochester, Columbiana County, Ohio; John and Catherine, both of whom died young, from scarlet fever; Wesley, who also succumbed, in youth, to the same malady; Mary Elizabeth, who still resides in Augusta township, Carroll County; and Isaac, who is deceased.

Six children have been born to Mr. Cassidy and his wife, as follows: John Dager; Margaret Jane; Mary Martha; Jacob Clement; Viola Bell; and Brady Neel. John Dager, who was born January 13, 1868, resides near Qualey Station. He married Bertha Barnhart, of Center Belpre, and has one daughter,—Pauline Bell. Margaret Jane and Mary Martha are twins, and were born on November 7, 1869. The former lives in Marietta. The latter married Stephen B. Freese, and they reside on the Israel Devol farm, near Marietta. They have three children,—James D.; Stephen Paul; and Mildred Margaret. Jacob Clement was born June 3, 1870, is unmarried, and is the engineer employed at Haas' family laundry at Marietta. Viola Bell, who was born April 11, 1876, died February 2, 1900. Brady Neel, the youngest, born December 17, 1880, resides in Western Virginia and is engaged in the sawmill business.

Mr. Cassidy has been a lifelong Democrat. In the spring of 1901, he was elected justice of the peace for a term of three years, and it speaks well for the law-abiding citizens of Fairfield township, that he has not yet had any serious cases in which to adjust differences. In connection with his farming, Mr. Cassidy has acted as agent for several first-class fertilizers, representing the Cleveland Drier Co., the Western Union, and the Jarucki Chemical Co., of Sandusky, Ohio. In former years, he was active in the Masonic fraternity. His religious connection is with the Centenary Methodist Church. Mr. Cassidy is well known in this community, and is recognized as a prominent and useful citizen.

H. WELCH, a prominent and substantial farmer, as well as a representative citizen, of Fairfield township, Washington County, Ohio, was born on his present farm on February 12, 1851, and is a son of Henry and Barbara (Smith) Welch.

The Welch family is of German ancestry. Henry Welch was born in Pennsylvania, in October, 1805, and died on this farm in May, 1882. The mother was born on the shores of the Susquehanna River, in Pennsylvania, in 1806, and died in Ohio, on November 20, 1884. In 1843, they came to Washington County, Ohio, and Mr. Welch purchased this farm from the court. It was formerly the property of James Campbell, and consists of 169 acres of most valuable and productive land.

HON. THEO. F. DAVIS.

The following children were born to Henry and Barbara Welch: Peter, who resides in Decatur township; Susan, who is Mrs. Remley, and lives in Fairfield township; Martin, who resides at Davenport, Nebraska; John, who lives in Decatur township; James, who is a resident of Parkersburg, West Virginia; and G. H.

Mr. Welch has passed much of his life in Fairfield township, where he was reared and schooled. He has business interests in other parts of the county and in West Virginia, but his attention has been most closely given to the development of his farm and the breeding of blooded stock and standard horses, in which he has been eminently successful. The products of his farm command very high prices, and give great satisfaction over a large extent of country. He has the reputation of being an excellent farmer, and a first-class judge of stock, as well as a reliable authority.

Mr. Welch was married to E. A. Root, who was born in Fairfield township, and was a daughter of T. C. Root, a native of Vermont, now deceased. Like his father, the subject of this sketch is identified with the Democratic party, and for a number of years served as township clerk, having resigned the office but lately. His fraternal connections are with Bartlett Lodge, No. 283, A. F. & A. M.; and Cutler Lodge, No. 784, I. O. O. F. He is a member of the Decatur Presbyterian Church. The family is one of prominence in this locality, and Mr. Welch sustains a reputation for integrity as a man of business, and is a very useful and estimable citizen.

coln issued his first three-months call for volunteers to defend the Union. Notwithstanding his youth, Mr. Davis eagerly offered his services, and subsequently, when his term had expired, enlisted in the 83rd Reg. Ind. Vol. Inf., and served valiantly until the termination of the conflict.

After the war, Mr. Davis took up the study of civil engineering, and became a civil engineer in railroad construction. He accepted a position as engineer to assist in making surveys and locating locks and dams in the improvements of the Little Kanawha River, in West Virginia. In 1869 he came to Marietta, where he had made the first surveys for the Marietta & Cleveland Railroad, and was placed in charge of its construction. This having been successfully completed, he was elected city engineer, and served two terms as such, thereby doing credit to himself, and benefiting his city to no little degree.

Mr. Davis was elected to the State Senate from the 14th Senatorial District in the 68th General Assembly, and served as president pro tem of that body. While Senator, he presented the first municipal ownership bill ever brought before the Senate, and by his persistent efforts secured the passage of the measure, although many opposed it. The beneficent results of the act were so manifest that a large number of similar bills has been passed since that time, and in every instance municipal ownership of water-works, lighting systems, etc., has been the means of saving a great amount of money to the people. Mr. Davis is an enthusiastic exponent of municipal ownership, and through his advocacy of it has rendered good service to the people of Marietta.

Mr. Davis is mainly occupied in real estate transactions, and is the owner of a large amount of property. He is also identified with the development of extensive interests, in which he employs many men. The citizens of Marietta are grateful to Mr. Davis for his services, and they unite in expressing esteem and friendship for him.

Mr. Davis is a member of the following fraternal bodies: American Union Lodge, No. 1, F. & A. M.; American Union Chapter, No.

ON. THEODORE F. DAVIS has been actively identified for many years with the interests of Marietta, Washington County, Ohio. He was born in New Trenton, Franklin County, Indiana, in 1844, and came to Marietta in 1869.

Mr. Davis passed the early part of his life on a farm, and was barely 17 years of age when the Civil War began, and President Lin-

1, R. A. M.: Marietta Commandery, No. 50, K. T., of which he is a charter member; Marietta Council, No. 78, R. & S. M.; and Syrian Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., of Cincinnati, Ohio. He is a member of Ohio Commandery of the Loyal Legion of the United States; and Buell Post, No. 178, G. A. R. He has held several important positions and ranks in the Ohio Department of the G. A. R. as a member of the Sons of Veterans. He belongs to Lodge No. 477, B. P. O. E., and is a charter member of Marietta Council, No. 32, of United Commercial Travelers.

EDWARD THOMAS WICKENS, a successful farmer and oil producer of Washington County, Ohio, is among the most enterprising citizens of Aurelius township. Mr. Wickens was born in the vicinity of his present home, July 6, 1852. He is the eldest son of William R. and Sarah (Cadwell) Wickens, and grandson of George and Charlotte (Rowland) Wickens. The great-grandfather on the paternal side was George Wickens, Senior, who was born on the Isle of Wight, England, and spent his entire life there. He was a farmer by occupation. Additional mention is made of the Wickens family, particularly of George and Charlotte (Rowland) Wickens, the grandparents, in the sketches of Henry and William R. Wickens, found elsewhere in this book.

The maternal grandparents of the subject hereof were James and Lucy (Hamilton) Cadwell, of Marietta, Ohio. The beloved mother of Edward Thomas Wickens departed this life April 22, 1902, in her seventieth year. His father still lives in Aurelius township, at an advanced age, and is extensively engaged in farming and oil producing. Four children were born to him and his wife. Of these, Edward T. is the eldest. The others are,—Charles A., Ellis W., and Joseph A. The last-named is also engaged in the oil business, and a sketch of him is given in another part of this volume.

Edward T. Wickens attended the public schools and received but a limited schooling. Upon reaching his majority, he commenced his career as a farmer. He resides upon and owns the original ancestral farm of 85 acres, settled upon by his parents in 1832. The old barn is still standing, a relic of former days, and is in a fair state of preservation. It was built with forty dollars in gold, brought from England by his grandmother.

In addition to the ancestral farm, of which Mr. Wickens is the possessor, he also owns a 120-acre farm in Noble county, and since 1891, has been engaged in the oil producing business. He, in company with others, owns three valuable leases in Aurelius township, where eleven producing wells are in successful operation, yielding to Mr. Wickens, alone, an income of $180 per month.

March 1, 1879, Mr. Wickens was united in marriage with Martha J. Brown, a daughter of Jacob Brown, of Salem township, but originally from Germany. Seven children blessed this union, as follows: Howard E.; Frank E.; Garfield; Chester A.; Mary A.; Hobart McKinley; and Asa. In his political views, Mr. Wickens upholds the principles of the Republican party. Socially, he is a member of Liberty Hill Grange, No. 1027, P. of H. His record as an enterprising and successful business man is worthy of commendation.

EDWARD L. CARSON, a prominent contractor and oil producer, of New Matamoras Washington County, Ohio, was born in Grandview township, November 10, 1866, and is a son of William and Elizabeth (Joly) Carson.

William Carson was born in Ireland, in 1842, and came to the United States when a youth, landing at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, where he followed the trade of a weaver, for one year. He then located in Guernsey County, Ohio, where he resided until the outbreak of the Civil War, when he enlisted in the 43rd Reg. Ohio Vol. Infantry. At the close of the war, he settled in Washington County, and rented a farm, which he afterwards bought. He has lived on this farm, which consists of 160 acres, for the past thirty-six years. He married Elizabeth Joly, who was born in Washington County, Ohio, and died in 1884. They reared two children,—Edward L., the subject of this sketch, and Charles M., who was born March 4, 1868, and is engaged in contracting and farming with his brother. William Carson is a Democrat, in politics. He is a member of the Methodist Church.

Edward L. Carson received his mental training in Washington County, Ohio, and remained in Grand View township until September 9, 1891. He then moved to New Matamoras, where he has since resided. On his farm are eleven oil wells, on which these brothers realize a royalty. They are both very well known in New Matamoras and Washington County, and are closely identified with the growth and prosperity of the place of their residence.

Mr. Carson belongs to the Democratic party. He is a member of Matamoras Lodge, No. 374, of the Masonic order; American Union Chapter, No. 1, of Marietta, Ohio; Mountain State Commandery, of Sistersville, West Virginia; and Osiris Temple of the Mystic Shrine, of Wheeling. Religiously, he is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Mr. Carson was married September 9, 1891, to Effie True, who was born in New Matamoras, and is a daughter of Charles W. True, a prominent merchant of that place. They have two children, namely: Blanche, who was born October 7, 1893; and Beryl, who was born October 11, 1896.

THOMAS T. DUNBAR, a prominent farmer of Washington County, Ohio, and an esteemed and useful citizen of Fairfield township, was born in this township on June 12, 1855, and is a son of David and Matilda (Hull) Dunbar.

David Dunbar was born in Virginia, and his father, Thomas Dunbar, was one of the first settlers in Fairfield township, and lived near Fishtown. In 1860, David Dunbar purchased the farm which is now the property of Thomas T., consisting of 200 acres of very valuable land. Prior to the Civil War, Mr. Dunbar and his brother, Shelton Dunbar, conducted a store, which was the first establishment of its kind at Dunbar Station. At the outbreak of the war, David Dunbar enlisted in a company of the 92nd Reg. Ohio Vol. Inf., in which he was orderly sergeant, and served three years. He suffered a severe wound in the arm at the battle of Chickamauga. After his return from the army, Mr. Dunbar sold his store and resumed farming. He was a very prominent man in his locality, and was called upon to serve in many of the local offices,—being assessor, constable, and member of the school board. He was always interested in public enterprises. His death occurred on October 10, 1900, at the age of 64 years. He was identified with the Republican party. His wife died on February 19, 1893. Mr. Dunbar married for his second wife, Margaret Winn, of Marietta, who now resides in Michigan.

David Dunbar was the father of the following children: Thomas T., who is the subject of this sketch; Leonidas S., who resides at Phoenix, Arizona; Anna L., who is the widow of Mr. Schrader, resides with her brother, Thomas T., and is preparing for the profession of a trained nurse; and Etta Ellen, Ida May and Hester Adell, who died in infancy.

The subject of this sketch was reared and schooled in Fairfield township, and during his father's life, was associated with him on the farm. Since then he has had charge of this large estate and has carried on general farming. He is somewhat prominent in politics, is active in the Republican party, and has served efficiently as township treasurer.

Thomas T. Dunbar was married to Sarah L. T. Carothers, who is a daughter of R. D. Carothers, of Cutler, Ohio. Six children have been born to Mr. Dunbar and his wife, as follows: Carrie Mildred, born on August 8, 1890; Matilda Elizabeth, born on May 23, 1892; David Deane, born on July 6, 1894;

Laura Mertie, born on January 20, 1896; John William Ellis, born on February 6, 1896; and Alice Dorothea, born on March 20, 1902. Mr. Dunbar's fraternal association is with the Knights and Ladies of Security. The family attend the Centenary Methodist Church, near Cutler, in which they are most highly valued.

LEVI W. GREEN, for many years a prominent and prosperous business man, is now living a retired life at New Matamoras, Washington County, Ohio. He was born in Belmont County, Ohio, August 11, 1833, and is a son of Isaac H. and Delilah (Ruble) Green.

Isaac H. Green was born in New York State in 1792. He was a farmer by occupation, and was also engaged in merchandizing many years. He came to Ohio when a young man, and located about twenty miles south of St. Clairsville Belmont County, where he bought a farm. He was a prominent man, and represented his county in the State Legislature of Ohio, for two terms. Religiously, he was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. His death occurred in 1847, while on a business trip to New Orleans, Louisiana. Mr. Green married Delilah Ruble, who was born in Belmont County, Ohio, and they reared the following children: Andrew; James and Samuel, deceased; Charlotte; Levi W.; Benton, deceased; and Susanna, wife of Isaac Young.

Levi W. Green left his native county at the age of 16 years, and has since lived in Washington County, Ohio. He first located on a farm in Lawrence township, and then spent four years in Marietta, learning the trade of a brick-mason. He afterward located in Bloomfield, and in 1857, came to New Matamoras, where he followed his trade for many years. He purchased the old Shannon House in 1891, and established the Green Hotel, which flourished under his management and ownership until 1899, since which time he has leased the building. He also conducted the Central Hotel for a period of three years. He has large real estate interests in New Matamoras, but is now living in retirement, and enjoying the fruits of his early toil.

November 16, 1859, Mr. Green was joined in hymeneal bonds with Margaret Ellis, who was born in Grand View township, Washington County, in 1843, and is a daughter of William M. and Clara (Ankrum) Ellis, both natives of Washington County. Her father was born in 1819, and was a brick and stone mason by trade. Mr. and Mrs. Ellis had five children, namely: Margaret; Rebecca, wife of Robert Williamson; Sibyl, wife of Dr. Richardson; William P.; and Silas H., deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Green became the parents of seven children, namely: Emma C. (Raper), of Wheeling, West Virginia; Thomas B., of New Matamoras; Fanny N. (Fulton), of Wheeling; Sibyl R. (Lydick), of Pittsburg; William R., deceased; F. W., who graduated from Duff's Business College, at Pittsburg, in the class of 1902; and Gwendolyn (Weeter). The subject of this sketch is a Democrat, in politics. He is now serving his sixth consecutive term as councilman, and is also a trustee of Grand View township. Mrs. Green is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

JOSEPH H. GAGE, deceased, who was one of the most prominent and influential residents of Fairfield township, Washington County, Ohio, settled on the farm now owned by his son, Myron W. Gage, as early as 1835.

Joseph H. Gage was born in Salem, Rockingham County, New Hampshire, February 16, 1815. He removed to Washington County, Ohio, in 1835, and settled on a farm in what was then Wesley township, and is now Fairfield township. He was a stone-mason by trade, and was also engaged in stone cutting for Hanford Powers, in and about Waterford, for many years. In religious belief he was a Universalist.

Mr. Gage was united in marriage, November 8, 1838, with Mary Adliza Cook, who was born in Jericho, Chittenden County, Vermont, and was two months old when brought by her parents to this county. She was also a member of the Universalist Church. They had the following children: Caroline E., who was born September 3, 1839, and died August 3, 1845; Lucien Cook, who was born April 20, 1841, and died November 11, 1841; Horace Dunsmoor, who was born March 19, 1843, resides at Patten Mills, Ohio, married Josephine Cody, and has eight children; John Abner, born July 5, 1845; Mary Ann, born October 15, 1847, who is the wife of Waldo Smith, a farmer living near Columbus, Ohio; Flora Theodosia, born December 5, 1849, who is the wife of J. T. Dunbar, of Watertown; Polly Judith, born September 24, 1851, who died August 26, 1852; George Rodney, a resident of Bartlett, and a farmer, of Wesley township, who was born January 10, 1854, and married Emma Selby, a daughter of Marion Selby, of Wesley township; and Myron Wentworth, who was born August 23, 1857. Joseph H. Gage died November 25, 1895, at the age of eighty years, nine months and nine days, after an industrious and well spent life. His widow died January 12, 1898, at the age of eighty-three years, ten months and two days.

H. TRICKLE, M. D. The high standard attained by the medical profession in Washington County, Ohio, is well represented in the person and practice of Dr. E. H. Trickle, whose skill and ability as well as his wide experience have made him known beyond the limits of Cutler, where he has been an important factor ever since his location there.

The birth of Dr. Trickle occurred near Saint Clairsville, in Belmont County, Ohio, on July 1, 1836. His preparatory education was obtained in the common schools of Harrison County, where he began his medical studies, and he later entered Miami Medical College, at Cincinnati, Ohio. The outbreak of the Civil War interrupted his education, his loyalty inducing him to put aside his personal aims in order to become a defender of his country. He enlisted in July, 1861, as a private, in Company E, 4th Reg. West Virginia Vol. Inf., but soon received promotion to the rank of first sergeant of Company I. At Vicksburg, his gallant conduct gained him the rank of lieutenant, and as such he served until October, 1864, when he was mustered out at Harper's Ferry. During the summer of 1861, his regiment was located in the Kanawha Valley in West Virginia, and took part in the campaigns of that section until the winter of 1862, when it was sent to Vicksburg and did gallant service in accomplishing its surrender. After the capture of Jackson, Mississippi, the regiment went to Chattanooga in time to take part in the Battle of Missionary Ridge, under General Sherman, in the 15th Army Corps. It next went to Knoxville to relieve General Burnside, and returned to Larkinsville, Alabama, where it went into winter quarters. In the spring of 1864, Lieutenant Trickle came, with his gallant regiment, back to West Virginia, participated in the Lynchburg raid, and spent the summer fighting and skirmishing through the Shenandoah Valley.

After his return to peaceful pursuits, and his recuperation from the strain of this long service, the subject of this sketch went to Racine, Ohio, in order to resume his medical studies. In the spring of 1868, he settled for preliminary practice, at Parkersburg, West Virginia, and two years later, returned to Miami Medical College, at Cincinnati, where he took his degree. Dr. Trickle was engaged in the successful practice of his profession at Racine, Ohio, until 1879, when he removed to Washington County, on account of failing health. Since February, 1879, he has been a resident of Cutler and has been identified with the town's remarkable growth. He invested heavily in real estate, owns much town property, including an excellent hotel, and but lately has platted an addition to the town.

Dr. Trickle was married in 1857, to Jane Hamilton, who was born in Ireland in 1838.

and came to America with her parents when eight years old. They settled in Athens County, Ohio. Dr. and Mrs. Trickle have a family of three daughters and two sons, one of the latter being engaged in business in California, and the other being connected with the Associated Press, in Colorado. As a physician and surgeon, Dr. Trickle's ability has received flattering recognition. For eight years' he was the examining surgeon of the pension bureau, in Meigs county, and has also served in the same capacity under the administrations of Harrison, McKinley and Roosevelt, in Washington County, covering a period of ten years. He has also been surgeon for different railroad companies, and is a member of the American Academy of Railway Surgeons. He is also a member of the Washington County Medical Society, and the Meigs County Medical Society. He has served as president of the society in Washington County, and sustains the most cordial relations with his brother physicians and surgeons. His fraternal association is with the A. F. & A. M. and the I. O. O. F., both in Racine, Ohio. Dr. Trickle is a member of the Methodist Church in Cutler, and is a liberal supporter of its many lines of benevolent and Christian endeavor.

REV. W. E. ROE, D. D., who has been pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Marietta since 1892, is a native of Cornwall, New York, and was born in 1857. He is a son of James G. Roe, who was a business man, and had three brothers who were ministers. James G. Roe and his father were Presbyterian elders all their lives. W. E. Roe's younger brother, Rev. Walter C. Roe, of the Dutch Reformed Church, is a missionary among the Indians.

Rev. W. E. Roe graduated from Williams College in 1878, and from the Union Theological Seminary, in 1886, having spent four years intervening, in teaching in New York and Pennsylvania. He taught school in Brooklyn, New York, and at the "Hill" school at Pottstown, Pennsylvania.

He was pastor of a church at Jacksonville, Florida, from 1886 to 1887, and had charge of another at King Ferry, New York, from 1887 to 1892. He then accepted the pastorate of the First Presbyterian Church in Marietta, and under his guidance and leadership, it has grown perceptibly each year. He is highly esteemed in Marietta, where his discourses are received with much praise.

Rev. Mr. Roe was married in 1889, to Abby S. Adams, of King Ferry, New York, and they have had three children,—Samuel A., who died January 1, 1898, aged seven years; Caroline Clark, who was born November 19, 1893; and James Adams, who was born December 30, 1899.

Rev. Mr. Roe received the degree of D. D. from Williams College in 1898. He is a nephew of the well-known novelist, E. P. Roe.

DR. CHARLES S. HART. This gentleman stands among the foremost physicians of Marietta, Washington County, Ohio. He was born in Washington County, in 1856, and is a son of Dr. B. F. Hart.

Dr. Charles S. Hart received his primary education in Marietta, and later, took a course of study at Roanoke, Virginia, which he completed in 1875. He entered the Columbus Medical College, in 1875, graduating in 1877, and at once took up the practice of his profession in Marietta, Ohio. He spent thirteen years in Lincoln, Nebraska, returning to Marietta in 1893, when he took up office quarters with his father. In 1896, he entered his finely fitted-up office and home at No. 306 Putnam street. He has a very large practice, which demands his entire time and constant attention. Great confidence is placed in his ability as a physician and surgeon, and his reputation is by no means confined to the limits of his home town.

Dr. Hart married Julia L. Holdren, and they have one son,—James F., who is attending Marietta College. Dr. Hart is a member of the Ohio State Medical Society, and the American Medical Association, and was examiner for the United States recruiting officers, while examinations were held in Marietta. He is a member of the Elks lodge, having served as exalted ruler of that body. He is a Republican, in politics. Religiously, he is a member of the First Congregational Church.

WILLIAM EATON, a highly respected farmer of New Matamoras, Washington County, Ohio, was born in Graysville, Monroe County, Ohio, January 1, 1844, and is a son of Kennard and Rebecca (Phillip) Eaton.

Kennard Eaton was also born in Graysville and followed the occupation of a blacksmith until his death, in 1862. He married Rebecca Phillip, and they reared William, the subject of this sketch; John; Mary Jane, who married Mrs. Flowers, of Washington County; Louisa, who married Thomas Miller, of Washington County; and Nathan. Mrs. Eaton married, for her second husband, Franklin McKnight.

William Eaton, the subject of this biography, has farmed all of his life, and with the exception of eight years spent in Monroe county, has lived in New Matamoras since 1868. On October 18, 1861, he enlisted in Company C, 77th Reg. Ohio Vol. Inf., and served until March 8, 1866. He was in the Battle of Pittsburg Landing, where his regiment lost 700 men, and marched under General Grant from Pittsburg Landing to Memphis, Tennessee, and then to Alton, Illinois. From Alton, the regiment went to the Mississippi River, thence to Little Rock, Arkansas, and later, to Camden, Arkansas, where Mr. Eaton's company undertook to take a supply train to Pine Bluff, and were captured. Mr. Eaton was kept as a prisoner at Fort Tyler for ten months, when he was exchanged, in April, 1864, and sent home on a prisoner's furlough. He reported for duty at New Orleans, Louisiana, going from there to Mobile, Alabama, and thence to Brownsville, Texas, where he was discharged, March 8, 1866. He saw much hard fighting throughout the war in which he bore himself gallantly.

At the close of the war, Mr. Eaton returned home, and devoted himself to farming, which has been his occupation ever since. He owns 154 acres of finely improved land, the most of which he rents. He has several valuable oil wells on his farm in Monroe county. Mr. Eaton thoroughly understands agricultural matters, and is one of the most successful farmers in the county.

The subject of this sketch was married December 20, 1866, to Rebecca Wheeler, who was born in Pennsylvania, in 1847, and they have had eight children, namely: Albert; George W.; Rosetta Ann, who married P. Hall; Kinsey K., deceased; James J.; Mary J.; John O.; and Maggie L. Mr. Eaton and his family attend the First Presbyterian Church of New Matamoras. He is a Democrat, in political views. He is a member of the G. A. R.

CHARLES W. ATHEY, a prominent citizen of Marietta, was born in 1843, in Fearing township, Washington County, Ohio, and is a son of Hezekiah and Mary Ann (Tidd) Athey, the families on both sides belonging to the farming communities of Virginia. Benoni Goldsmith, the father of grandmother Athey, served as a soldier in the Revolution, and was wounded and captured by the British at the Battle of Cowpens, in South Carolina.

Hezekiah Athey was born in Fearing township also, and was a son of Walter Athey, who came to Washington County from Hampshire County, Virginia, and settled along Duck Creek. Like his ancestors, he engaged in farming and stockraising. He spent four years in Marietta, but died on his farm in Fearing township, in 1899. In 1842, he married Mary Ann Field, who died in 1852. They had three children, namely: Charles W., James L. and Annie E. James L. lives in San Francisco, California, and Annie E. is the wife of Joshua P. Doan, of Warren township. The second wife of Mr. Athey was Phebe M. Huggins, who became the mother of four children, namely: Frances E., wife of J. C. Secrist, of Sherrodsville, Ohio; Elizabeth, who resides with her mother on the homestead; R. W., who is a physician of Marietta; and Etta, the wife of George Pfeiffer, of Newport township.

Charles W. Athey was reared in Fearing township and acquired his mental training in the district schools of his locality.

On October 20, 1861, when but 18 years of age, he enlisted in Company B, 77th Reg. Ohio Vol. Inf., and faithfully served through the stormy years until March 26, 1866, participating in the Battle of Shiloh, the Siege of Corinth and the Battle of Fallen Timber. He escaped wounds, but was captured at Marks' Mills, Arkansas, and spent ten of the longest months of his life, as a prisoner at Tyler, Texas. Upon his return home, he followed farming for one year, and was then engaged in mercantile pursuits at West Marietta, for two years. He then carried on the same business at Stanleyville, where he continued until 1897, when failing health warned him to seek a warmer climate. He then went to Florida, although his home is still in Marietta, where he has a large circle of friends.

Mr. Athey was married in Fearing township, to Mary E. Dowling, who was born in 1842, in Fearing township, and is a daughter of Lewis and Elizabeth (Young) Dowling, who were married in 1836. The former was of Scotch-Irish descent, was born in 1810, and came to Washington county, in 1814, with his parents. Mrs. Dowling, who was affectionately known in the community as "Aunt Betsey," and "Mother Dowling," on account of the estimable characteristics which endeared her to all within her influence, was born October 9, 1812, at Path Head, Scotland. She accompanied her parents, John and Mary Young, from Pittsburg, by flatboat, down the Ohio River; to Bull Creek, and married Lewis Dowling, at Caywood. She died in May, 1902, aged 90 years. Her life had been an exemplification of the religion of the Methodist Church, which she professed from girlhood. The family born to Mr. and Mrs. Dowling consisted of the following: James R., born in 1837, a resident of Kentucky; John W., of Fearing township; Lewis W., of Kentucky; Mary E. (Athey); Thomas B., of Marietta; George F., who lives on the homestead farm in Fearing township; Martha J. and Sarah M. (Sheldon), both deceased; and Rose M., the wife of Henry Caywood, of Fearing township. Two children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Athey, namely: May E., who is the wife of S. A. Palmer; and Charles E., a physician of Toledo.

In politics, Mr. Athey is a staunch Republican, and for many years was postmaster at Stanleyville. He has acceptably served as treasurer of Fearing township, and is known as a man of excellent judgment, strict integrity and great worth in positions of responsibility. His fraternal relations are with American Union Lodge, No. 1, A. F. & A. M., and Buell Post, No. 178, G. A. R. He belongs to the Congregational Church, and liberally supports its various religious and charitable undertakings. The residence of Mr. and Mrs. Athey is a pleasant one, at No. 726 5th street, Marietta, where they delight to welcome a large circle of friends.

Charles Edgar Athey, now one of the successful medical practitioners of Toledo, Ohio, the only son of Mr. and Mrs. Athey, served in the Spanish-American War as a member of the 1st Territorial Regiment, New Mexico battalion, having enlisted from Albuquerque, New Mexico. He had previously been a member of the National Guards. His promotion was rapid, and he served until the regiment was discharged, in February, 1899. The young man then went to Cuba, where he accepted a clerkship, for a time, in the custom house. He a graduate of Western Reserve College, at Cleveland, Ohio. From Cuba, he went to New York, where he finished his medical education. He then took a post-graduate course, and settled in Toledo, Ohio.

ELMER E. TROTTER.

DAVID HAYES, who is one of the prominent and substantial farmers of Washington County, as well as one of its oldest and most esteemed citizens, was born in Columbiana County, Ohio, on April 18, 1824, and is a son of Edmund and Sarah (Whittaker) Hayes, natives of Virginia.

The parents of Mr. Hayes came to seek a home in Ohio from Loudoun county, Virginia, about the year 1806, bringing with them their provident habits and keeping to their simple Quaker faith. Edmund Hayes was a mill-tender by trade, and after locating in Columbiana County, he engaged in milling and also in farming. Later, he located on a farm on the Marietta road, in Washington County, and still later, farmed with his son. He died about 1855, at the age of 84 years. His widow survived until 1862, dying at the age of 84 years. Both parents were interred in Wesley township. They reared their family of 11 children to maturity, although David, the youngest, is the only one now living. The others were as follows: Polly, who died when past 80 years; Catherine; Phoebe; Caleb, who lived to reach 85 years; William Oliver Perry; Amanda; Alma; Harriet; and Martha. This was a family of remarkable longevity.

David Hayes started out in life with little capital but health and energy, fortified with the principles of upright living taught by a most estimable mother. His desultory mental training had been acquired in a few terms at the common school in his neighborhood, his youth having been mainly spent in securing a home, in caring for his aged parents through their declining years. He came to Washington County in 1845; and located on section 16, Barlow township. He erected a log house, and through persevering industry, cleared his farm and placed it in such a state of cultivation that it is now valuable and desirable, from any point of view. Mr. Hayes owns 240 acres in section 16, in Barlow township, and 60 acres on the Marietta road. After a number of years, the log shanty was replaced with a commodious and comfortable dwelling, and other buildings of modern style were erected, as needed. The place presents a most attractive appearance, and represents a large money value.

For his wife, Mr. Hayes chose Nancy Haddow, daughter of a neighbor, Robert Haddow, who was formerly an elder in the Presbyterian Church at Barlow. Mrs. Hayes was born near Edinburgh, Scotland, and was one of the estimable wives and mothers for which that country is noted. She passed away December 22, 1901, having been the mother of 10 children, eight of whom still survive, namely: Lewis C.; William, a partner in the firm of Hayes Brothers; Robert, a partner in the same firm; Lizzie, the wife of Charles Palmer, a farmer, of Barlow township; John, who is at home; Jennie, the wife of William Skipton, of Barlow township; and Caleb and Lydia, twins, who are at home with their father.

In religious sentiment, Mr. Hayes is very liberal. His wife belonged to the Presbyterian Church at Barlow. Since the Rebellion, the former has been identified with the Republican party. His standing is high with his fellow-citizens, who feel that when they are dealing with him, it is with a man of principle and integrity.

ELMER E. TROTTER, of Marietta, who since September 10, 1901, has been clerk of the Washington County courts, was born in Washington County, May 17, 1880, and is a son of Orlando and Annie (Drain) Trotter. The father passed from this life on September 10, 1901, and the mother resides in Marietta. Orlando Trotter was also clerk of the Washington County courts.

Elmer E. Trotter was liberally educated at Conference College, Buckhannon, West Virginia, where he graduated in June, 1899, after a three-years course. Upon the death of his father, he was appointed to the office the former had filled, and his efficiency was proved by his election to that same office in the fall of 1901. Mr. Trotter's fraternal connection is with the K. O. T. M. He is a member of the Methodist Church.

The late Orlando Trotter was a man of such estimable character and lived so exemplary a life that it is profitable to recall its years of usefulness and ponder upon its lessons. No better tribute can be placed before the public than the following extract, prepared, in memoriam, by one who knew and loved him well.

"Orlando Trotter was born in Palmer township, Washington County, Ohio, September 24, 1850, and his life was mostly spent in the neighborhood of his birthplace, with the exception of one year spent in the West. He was the son of Richard and Caroline B. Trotter. His mother died June 10, 1891. His father died in October, 1901. Orlando was the oldest of the children in this home, and had two brothers and three sisters. In the order of their ages, they were as follows: Edward G.; Amanda Chadwick; Martha Davis; Henrietta Goddard; and Alsinas F., who died in March, 1899; one child also died in infancy. On May 1, 1878, Orlando Trotter was united in marriage with Annie H. Drain, and two children were born to them--Elmer E. and Ella G., both of whom, with their mother, are living in the family home, and deeply mourn the death of husband and father. For a time in his early life, both before and after his marriage, Mr. Trotter taught school, but the most of his life was spent in farming. He held the high esteem of his neighbors and was well and favorably known throughout the county. In November, 1898, he was elected clerk of the courts of Washington County, and held the office until his death. During the summer of 1901, he was renominated, but later on account of severe illness, withdrew, and his son, Elmer E., who was his deputy, and upon whom the greater part of the work fell, during his father's illness, was named by the executive committee as a candidate instead of his father, and was also appointed to fill out the latter's unexpired term. In contrast with the selfish scramble for office that so frequently characterizes the politics of our country, it is a pleasure to mention the kind, thoughtful and graceful acts that are occasionally done in the political world. It was a fitting tribute to the noble worth of our brother, who has gone from us, and to the high esteem in which he was held in the county, that in a time when his health was so rapidly declining that the tenure of his life was very uncertain his party unanimously honored him with a renomination, and it was likewise a fitting and graceful tribute to his worthy son, that with a like unanimity, he was appointed to fill the unexpired term and to be the standard bearer in the stead of his father, in the approaching campaign.

"Our brother who has finished his work and passed to his rest, was for 25 years, and until his death, a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, at Layman, Ohio. His old friends and neighbors here knew well the worth of his Christian character, and he was also held in very high esteem in Marietta, where he lived for his last two years. His affliction bore upon him for many months, and since March, 1901, he was entirely unable to work. He suffered very greatly and very patiently. He had the most loving and tender care from his wife and children, his sisters, brother and neighbors, but it was not in the province of human love and care to prevent the coming of death. As he brushed the borders of Eternity, he gave his family every assurance of his preparation and his safety. He felt that it was better for him to go, and urged them not to grieve for him. Weary and worn with many months of suffering, with his cause safely anchored in the Redeemer's care, in the afternoon of September 10, 1901, death came to him as the relief messenger of God. As we stood in the presence of our dead, we heard no message from his silent lips to tell us of the mysteries of life or of death. Yet 'Silence is vocal if we listen well'; and these words seemed to be voiced to us out of the silence:

Life, we have been long together,
Through pleasant and through cloudy weather.
'Tis hard to part when friends are dear,
Perhaps 'twill cost a sigh or tear;
Then steal away, give little warning,
Choose thine own time;
Say not Good night, but in some brighter clime, Bid me Good morning.

Mrs. Annie (Drain) Trotter is a daughter of Duncan and Catherine Drain, natives of Argyleshire, Scotland, who are residents of Palmer township, aged, respectively, 85 and 75 years. Their nine children, all born in Washington County, were as follows: Hugh, who is at home; Jeannette, who resides in Athens County, and was the wife of the late Cary Curtis; Annie H., who became Mrs. Trotter; Nancy, deceased, who was the wife of Edward Glenn, who resides on Wolf Creek, in Morgan County; Daniel, who married Mina Arnold, and lives in Palmer township; Mary, who married Marcellus Lawton, and lives in Barlow township; Eliza, who is at home; Margaret, who married James Proctor, and lives in Barlow township; and Rosa, who married Walter Proctor, and also resides in Barlow township. Mrs. Trotter is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

REDERICK A. WHEELER, one of the few remaining pioneer citizens of Marietta, is a man who was, for many years, prominently known in political and business circles. He was born January 27, 1814, near what is now Bridgeport, Fairfield County, Connecticut, and is a son of Samuel and Julia (Odell) Wheeler.

Samuel Wheeler was born on Park Avenue, in the town of Fairfield, Connecticut, in January, 1761. During the Revolutionary War, he served six months in 1778, twelve months in 1781, and eight months in 1782, his last service being as corporal under Captain David Lacey and Colonel Samuel Whitney. January 22, 1792, he married Julia Odell, and died October 27, 1819.

Frederick A. Wheeler was the youngest of eleven children,—seven daughters and four sons,—and is the only one now living. He learned the trade of silver plating at Bridgeport, having served an apprenticeship of six and a half years. He was then engaged in that business for four years, and subsequently embarked in various lines of business, both in Connecticut and in Washington County, Ohio, manufacturing carriages, also tin, sheet-iron, and marble, at different times. He came to Marietta in June, 1839, and has since made his home in that city. He was appointed postmaster of Marietta in 1850, and served as such three years during the Taylor administration. He was then engaged in the marble business for a time, and in 1855, was elected county auditor, in which capacity he served four consecutive terms, or for a period of eight years. Later, he was deputy auditor for a number of years. He was mayor of Marietta four years, and also served as justice of the peace. For a number of years he was infirmiry director, and was one of the first trustees of the Children's Home, in which capacity he acted for nineteen years.

Mr. Wheeler was married in Fairfield County, Connecticut, to Harriet Wheeler, who, although she bore the same name, was not related to him. Their marriage occurred in 1837, and she died in February, 1886. Six children blessed this union, of whom four grew to maturity, as follows: Harriet Frances; Julia A.; Frederick A., Jr.; and Clara.

Harriet Frances Wheeler, deceased, married Judge William B. Loomis, who is also deceased. They left the following children: Frank B., now United States Minister to Portugal; Charles W., deceased, who married Miriam Nye, a daughter of Colonel R. L. Nye; and F. Kent, one of the proprietors of the Paragon, Union, Adelphi.

Julia A. Wheeler is the wife of J. D. Cadwallader, who was born in Mahoning County, Ohio, in 1829, and is a son of Eli Cadwallader, who was born at Redstone, Pennsylvania. He was one of five children, as follows: Jesse, deceased; John, of Indianapolis; J. D.; William, who lives in Iowa; and Mary, who died at the age of ten years. J. D. Cadwallader came to Washington county, Ohio, in 1860, and followed the profession of a photographer until 1890. Since that time he has dealt extensively in real estate, buying and selling, and also building fine homes in the city, which he rents. His parents were Quakers, and although contrary to the religious belief of his sect, his father was drafted into the army for service during the Revolutionary War. J. D. Cadwallader has always adhered to the faith of his fathers. He and his wife have one daughter, Agnes, who is now traveling in Europe, with several young ladies and a chaplaine. They reside at No. 109 Putnam street.

Frederick A. Wheeler, Jr., resides at Mansfield, Ohio, where he is engaged in the drug business. He married Laura, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Owen Franks, and they have a daughter, Constance.

Clara Wheeler married Rufus Putnam, a descendant of Israel Putnam, of Connecticut. She now resides in Marietta, her husband and only child being deceased.

The subject of this sketch is a member of the Episcopal Church, and has taken a deep interest in church work for many years. He resides at No. 109 Putnam street, and has many friends throughout Washington County.

